START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

August 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-068

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library
(August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 05/1996
1461-0341-015-03
CAT 840 3594
34-16

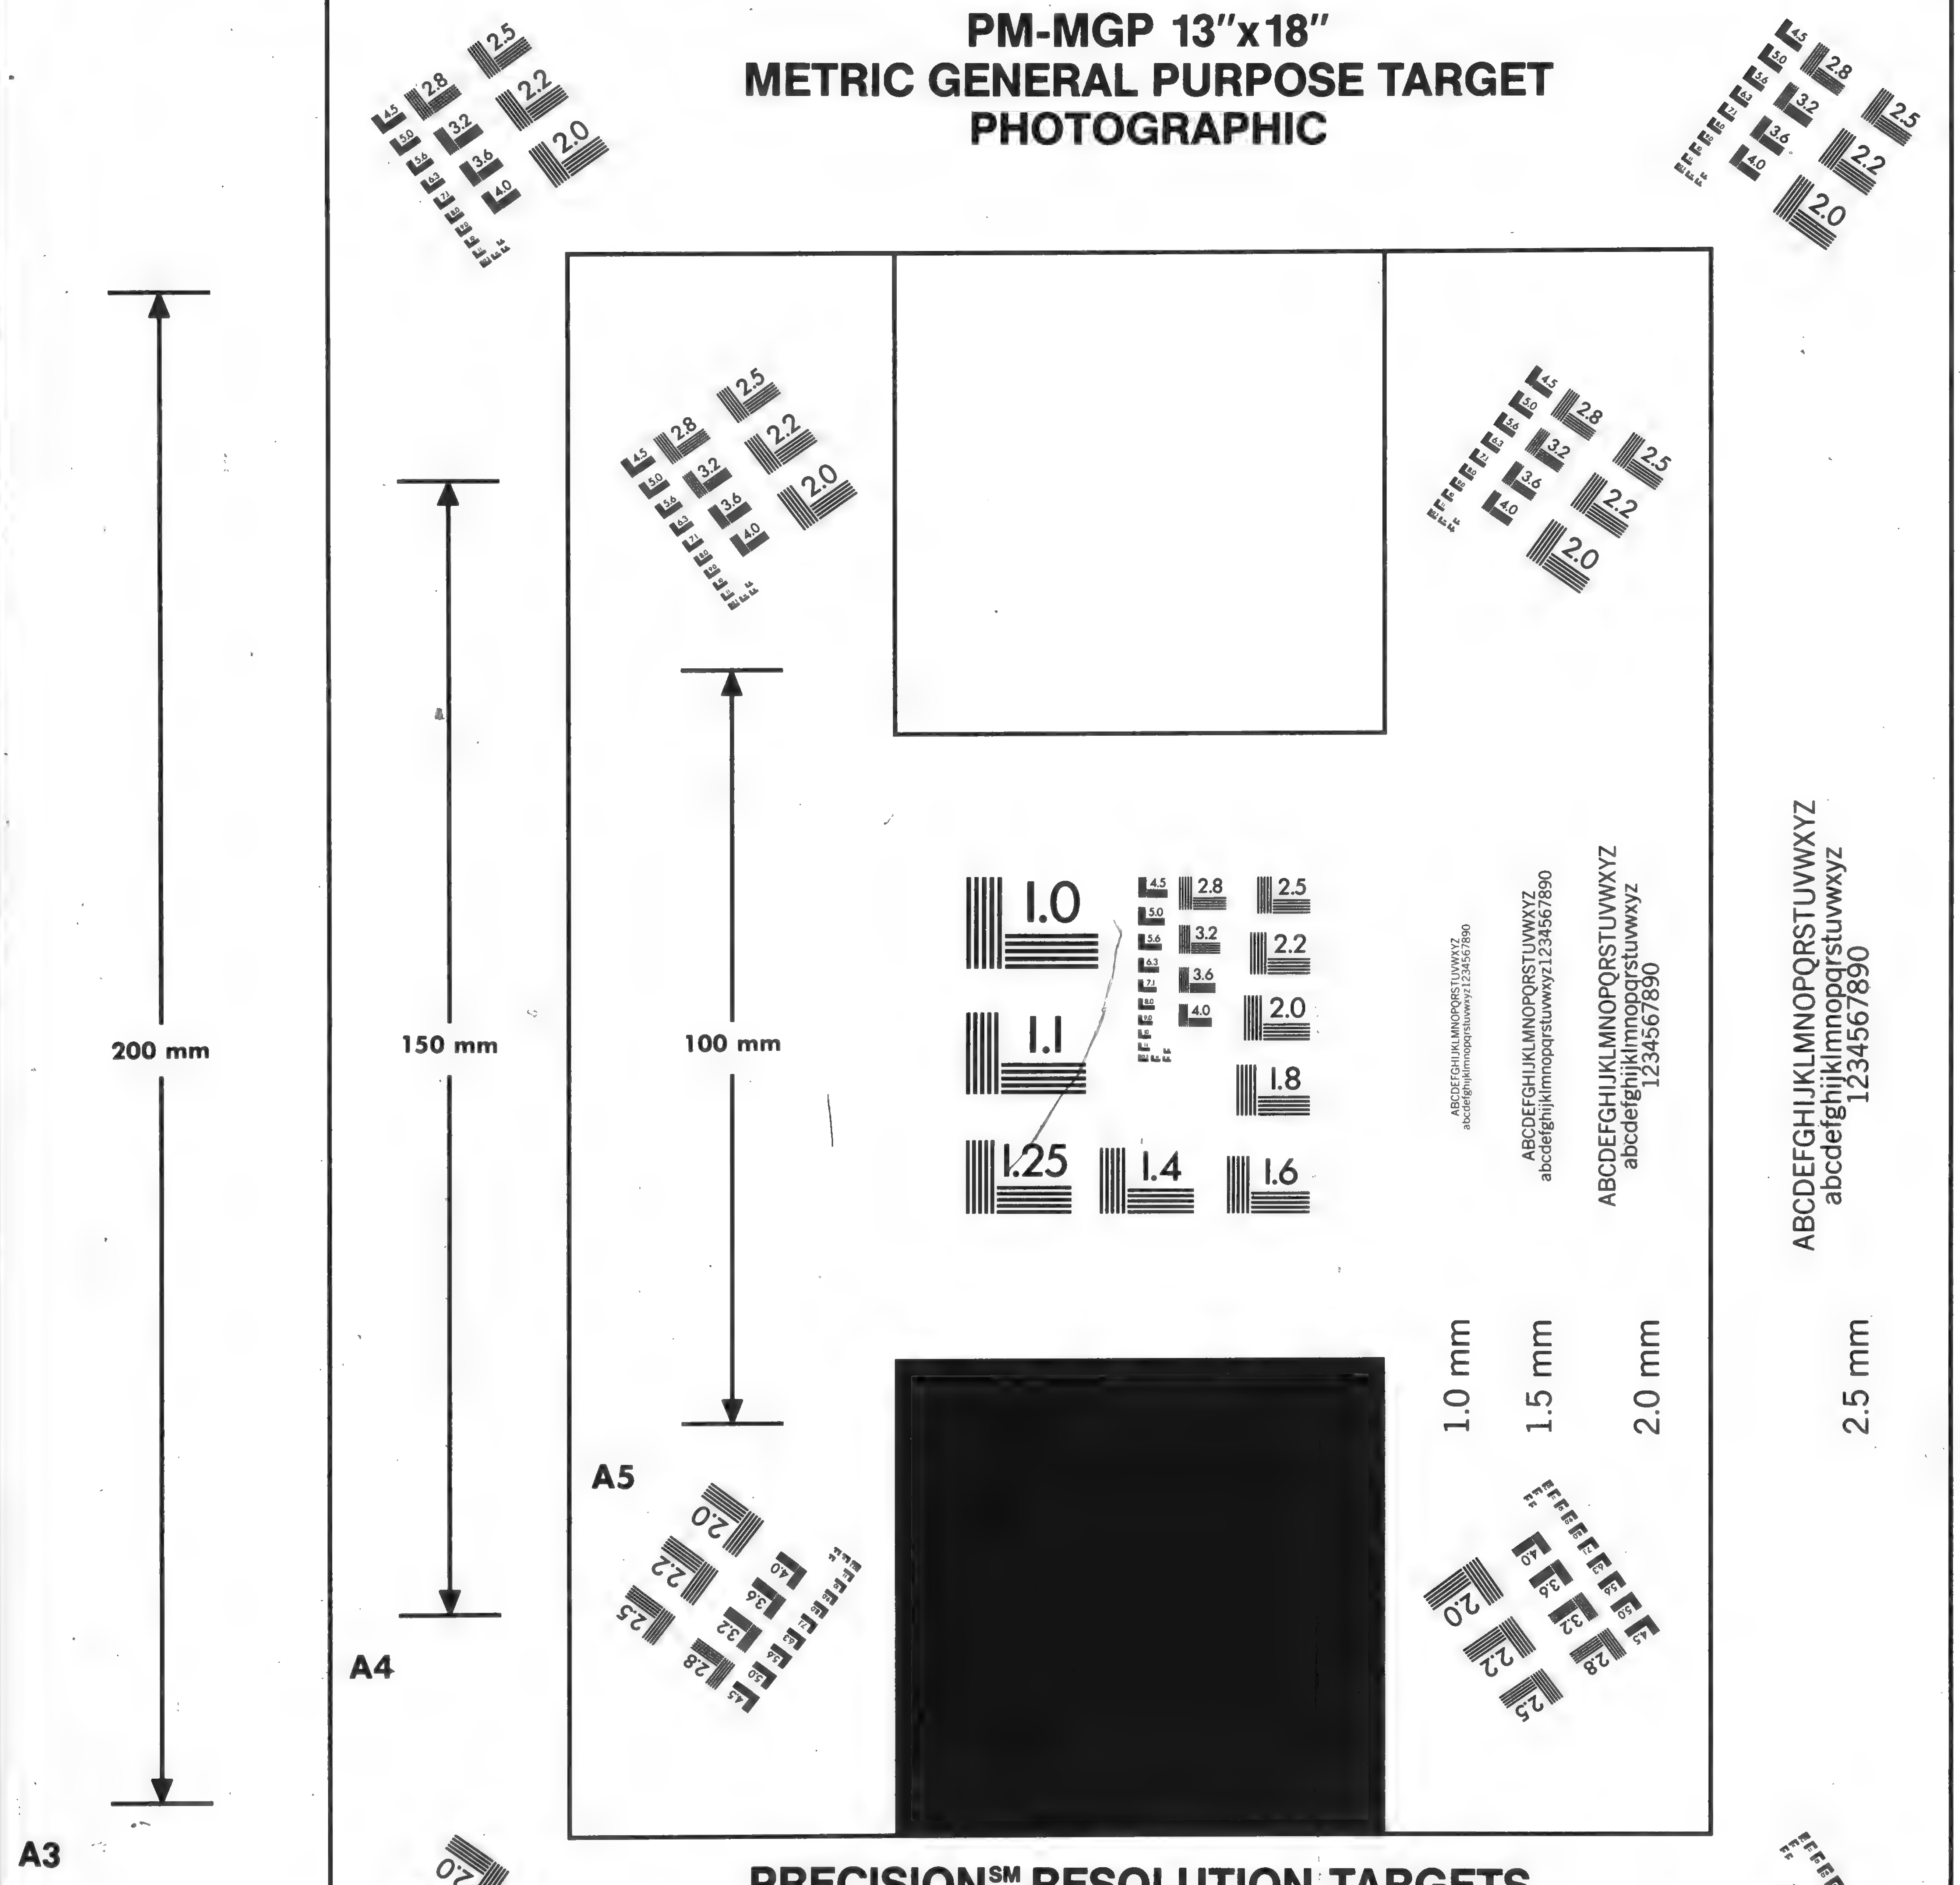
REEL 68

Volumes 111-112

BSO, Pops, Tanglewood

1964-1966

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
3.6
4.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
A5
A4
A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

VOLUME 111

BSO
Pops

1964 - 1966

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

NATIONAL

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER
Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
56-032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
56-033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
56-034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
56-036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
→ 56-041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
56-042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

Made in U.S.A.

INDEX

PRE-SEASON 3
FRI./SAT. 1 7
SUN. 1, TUES. 1, THURS. 1, ... 11
FRI./SAT. 2 12
FRI./SAT. 3....Richard Burgin, cond.......................... 14
PROVIDENCE 1 16
"CAMBRIDGE" 1 16
FRI./SAT. 4......Lili Chookasian,sop....George London, Bass.... 17
TOUR #1.....New York,..Brooklyn...Newark....Storrs........... 20
FRI./SAT...5....John Barbirolli,cond......................... 27
TUES. 2, THURS. 2, ...Barbirolli.................... 30
FRI./SAT. 6.......Barbirolli................................. 30
FRI./SAT. 7......Bethany Beardslee, sop. 33
"CAMBRIDGE" 2 33
SUNDAY 2.........Beardslee................................... 37
TUESDAY 3 37
FRI./SAT. 8 ......Van Cliburn................................ 37
PROVIDENCE 2 40
WEDNESDAY 1 41
FRI./SAT. 9 ....Leonid Kogan, violin....... 41
WASHINGTON 43
TOUR # 2 ......New York....Brooklyn...Carnegie Hall.......... 45
TUES 4 ...FRI./SAT 10 50
PROVIDENCE 3 ....Richard Burgin........ 52
"CAMBRIDGE" 3 53
FRI./SAT 11 ....Silverstein,violin....Eskin , cello.......... 53
SUN. 3..TUES 5.....Burgin.................................... 56
FRI./SAT. 12....Boatwright, sop....Bressler, tenor....Paul, bass.... 57
TUESDAY 6 ....""..................."..............."....... 60
FRI./SAT. 13.......Vanni, sop....Sierra, tenor.....Paul,bass.... 60
PROVIDENCE 4 62
"CAMBRIDGE" 4.......Silverstein......Eskin.................... 63
THURSDAY 3 63
FRI./SAT. 14.....Isaac Stern, violin......................... 63
TOUR # 3.....New Haven......New York........Brooklyn.....Carnegie Hall.... 66
THURSDAY 4.........Silverstein......Kripps.................... 70
WEDNESDAY 2 70

MISCELLANEOUS.. [illegible]

RECORDINGS... 197
OPENING of Pops 230

FRI/SAT. 15.....Silverstein....Kripps.................................... 71

FRI/SAT. 16.....Phyllis Curtin.. 74

TUESDAY 7.....Silverstein....Kripps.. 74

FRI/SAT. 17.....Charles Munch,cond... 77

TUESDAY 8..THURSDAY 5....Munch... 77

FRI/SAT. 18.....Munch.. 81

TOUR # 4 .....Northampton..New York,, Brooklyn..Carnegie Hall..B'more. New Brunswick.. 83

FRI/SAT. 19...Sunday 5...Tuesday 9.....Grant Johannesen ,piano.......... 89

FRI/SAT. 20...Leopold Stokowski,cond...................................... 92

CAMBRIDGE 5.....Johannesen... 92

FRI/SAT. 21......Shirley Verrett, sop...................................... 94

PROVIDENCE 5... 96

FRI/SAT. 22...Leontyne Price, sop.. 97

TOUR # 5...Hartford,...New York....Brooklyn...Carnegie Hall..Springfield. 99

FRI/SAT..23........Sidney Foster, piano 105

TUESDAY 6..SUNDAY 6.....Silverstein.. 108

FRI/SAT. 24..Wednesday...3....Tuesday 10................................... 108

SUMMARY of WORKS PERFORMED... 111

ANNUAL FRIENDS MEETING... 114

AWARDS... 115

BSO MEMBERS ACTIVITIES... 117

CHAMBER PLAYERS.. 129

COUNCIL OF FRIENDS... 137

OPEN REHEARSALS.. 138

ORGAN CONCERTS... 140

OBITUARIES... 139

PENSION FUND CONCERT... 145

RADIO & T.V.. 147

YOUTH CONCERTS... 151

COMPOSER IN RESIDENCE.. 164

MISCELLANEOUS.. 169

RECORDINGS... 197

OPENING of Pops 230

BLANK PAGE

PRE. SEASON.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500

SEP 17 1964

Pre-Symphony Meets To Open Music Season

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening concert on Friday, September 25, the curtain goes up for the official Musical Season in our city.

This date marks also the beginning of the Pre-Symphony Luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn, in their fourth season. Harry Ellis Dickson, prominent Member of the Orchestra, will present a series called "Music of the World — Inside the B.S.O.", with diplomatic representatives of the countries discussed as guests of honor.

G. Wallace Woodworth, known Musicologist and Professor at Harvard University, and Klaus Liepmann, Director and Professor Music at M.I.T., will be the distinguished guest speakers at several luncheons.

The Boston Community Center will co-sponsor again a series of luncheons presenting a roster of such speakers as Cleveland Amoroy, Max Kaplan, Francis W. Hatch and Elliot Norton.

The Chorus Pro-Musica will take over on December 18th, presenting a special Christmas Program.

All in all, it looks like a fascinating season, with fascinating subjects.

As in previous years, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten is Chairman of these Pre-Symphony Luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn. They are open to the public, and the price of $3.75 includes free parking for the entire afternoon.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

[illegible] 64

Pre-Symphony Luncheons to Begin

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening concert on Friday, Sept. 25, marks also the beginning of the Pre-Symphony Luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn, in their fourth season. Harry Ellis Dickson will present a series called "Music of the World — Inside the B.S.O.," with diplomatic representatives of the countries discussed as guests of honor.

G. Wallace Woodworth and Klaus Liepmann will be guest speakers at several luncheons.

The Boston Community Music Center will co-sponsor again [illegible] of luncheons presenting [illegible] speakers as Cleveland [illegible], Max Kaplan, Francis W. Hatch and Elliot Norton.

[illegible] Chorus Pro-Musica will [illegible] over on Dec. 18, presenting [illegible] special holiday program.

[illegible] E. Anthony Kutten is [illegible] of the luncheons. [illegible] open to the public [illegible] price includes free [illegible] for the entire after-

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

SEP 19 1964

Symphony Season Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season with concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his third season as the Orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Leinsdorf will open the program with Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture and will continue with the Symphony No. 1 by Dmitri Shostakovitch. After the intermission the concert will conclude with Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral."

Leinsdorf returns from vacation in Santa Fe, N.M., for first rehearsals of the new season Tuesday. The rehearsals will be the first meeting of the orchestra since the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Subscribers to the Friday afternoon series are reminded that these concerts will continue to begin at 2 o'clock as they did last year. The Sunday afternoon concerts will begin at 3, and all evening concerts will continue to begin at 8:30.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazeta Polonii
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 28,700

SEP 18 1964

Symphony Begins Season Friday, 25th

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season on Friday, Sept. 25. Erich Leinsdorf will begin his third season as music director, and he has invited his predecessor, Charles Munch, to conduct for two weeks in February. Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli and Leopold Stokowski have also been invited to guest conduct this season.

Two pianists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the orchestra. Isaac Stern will be violin soloist. Leinsdorf has also invited three choruses to assist the orchestra: the Handel-Haydn Society which celebrates its 150th anniversary this year; the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus

Nine singers will make appearances during the Winter: Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena and Helen Vanni.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, has announced that its Winter season will consist of 124 performances in Symphony Hall and on tour.

The Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, six Sundays, six Tuesdays in the "Cambridge" series, 10 regular Tuesday evening concerts, six Thursdays (formerly the Monday series), and a series of eight open rehearsals to benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition, a new series of three Wednesday evening concerts for this season was announced this week, for which season tickets have just been made available.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

SEP 19 1964

BSO Adds Three Concerts

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known today that the orchestra will add a one-year three-concert series to its scheduled subscription concerts in Symphony Hall during the 1964-1965 season, the orchestra's 84th year. The new concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings in Symphony Hall and be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director.

Fulfill Need

In announcing the Wednesday series Mr. Perry said: "For the coming season the orchestra has had many more ticket applications for the present six series of concerts in Symphony Hall than we could fill. We are now giving concert series on Fridays Saturdays, Sundays, two series on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Naturally we are delighted at the interest in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In order to accommodate these people and others in the Boston area who desire to hear the orchestra, we have added this new series of three Wednesday concerts. At present we are announcing the new series for this season only."

The Wednesday concerts will be given on Nov. 25, Jan. 27 and April 14. They will bring to a total of 79 the subscription concerts given by the orchestra in Boston during the 31 week season. Subscriptions for the three Wednesday concerts are now available at $13, $11, $9, $6.50, $4.50. Those interested in making applications for these concerts may write directly to the Subscription Office, Box W, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 84th season will begin with a concert conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Sept. 25.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

SEP 22 1964

Symphony

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Erich Leinsdorf is back from vacation in Santa Fe, N.M., for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first rehearsals of the new season today.

The music director begins his third season conducting the Orchestra when the 84th season opens with concerts this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Again this year the Friday afternoon series begins at 2 p.m. Luncheoners at the Midtown Motor Inn's pre-Symphony luncheon have only to walk across the street to Symphony Hall after Harry Ellis Dickson's delightful talks, "Music of the World—Inside the B.S.O."

This Friday the major consuls general, consuls and honorary consuls, with their wives, have been invited to sit at the head table.

Joining them will be President of the Board of Trustees of the Orchestra Henry B. Cabot and Mrs. Cabot. Also Vice President Talcott M. Banks and Mrs. Banks, Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr. and Mrs. Perry and Mme Serge Koussevitsky, widow of the former conductor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
CONCORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,459

SEP 24 1964

The Boston Symphony opens its season tomorrow, September 25. As usual many Concordians will be present. This year something new has been added.

A bus has been chartered for every Friday. It will leave Concord at 11 a.m., in time for those going to the concert to attend the Pre-Symphony luncheons either at the Ritz or the Midtown Motor Inn.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

SEP 21 1964

Season's first

The first pair of Boston Symphony concerts will be held in Symphony Hall, Friday afternoon, Sept. 25, at 2 o'clock, and Saturday evening, Sept. 26, at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a program opening with Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture. The rest of the program will be Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, the "Pastoral."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

SEP 14 1964

Boston Symphony Opens Season Sept. 25

BOSTON, (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season Sept. 25, the third under the directorship of Erich Leinsdorf.

The orchestra will give 124 performances in Symphony Hall and concerts in Northampton and Springfield, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Hartford, New Haven, New London and Storrs, Conn.; New York City; Newark and New Brunswick, N. J.; Baltimore and Washington.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 22 1964

World of Music

Harry Ellis Dickson, member of the Boston Symphony and assistant Pops conductor, will be host and lecturer again at the Pre-Symphony Luncheons beginning Friday at the Midtown Motor Inn.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,500

SEP 17 1964

Pre-Symphony Luncheons

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening concert on Friday, September 25, the curtain goes up for the official musical season.

This date also marks the beginning of the pre-symphony luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn, in their fourth season. Harry Ellis Dickson, prominent member of the orchestra, will present a series called "Music of the World—Inside the B. S. O.," with diplomatic representatives of the countries discussed as guests of honor.

G. Wallace Woodworth, well-known musicologist and professor at Harvard University, and Glaus Liepman, director and professor of Music at M.I.T., will be the distinguished guest speakers at several luncheons.

The Boston Communtiy Music

lx

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Ledger-Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500

1SEP 17 1964

Boston Symphony To Open Season Sept. 25

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its eighty-fourth season on Friday, September 25, in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will begin his third season as Music Director, and he has invited his predecessor, Charles Munch, to conduct for two weeks in February. Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli, and Leopold Stokowski have also been invited to be guest conductors this season.

Two pianists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the Orchestra, and Isaac Stern will be violin soloist. Mr. Leinsdorf has also invited three choruses to assist the Orchestra: the Handel-Haydn Society, which celebrates its 150th Anniversary this year; the Harvard Glee Club - Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Nine singers will make appearances during the winter season; Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena, and Helen Vanni.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra's winter season will consist of 124 performances in Symphony Hall and on tour. The Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, 6 Sundays, 6 Tuesdays in the "Cambridge" series, 10 regular Tuesday evening concerts, 6 Thursdays (formerly the Monday series), and a series of eight Open Rehearsals for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. In addition, a new series of three Wednesday evening concerts for this season was announced this week, for which season tickets have just been made available.

Outside of Boston but in the New England area, the Orchestra will present concerts in Providence, Rhode Island; Northampton and Springfield in Massachusetts; and Hartford, New Haven, New London and Storrs in Connecticut. Other cities to be visited by the Orchestra will be New York City for the 79th consecutive year, Baltimore, Brooklyn, Newark, New Brunswick (N.J.), and Washington. In addition to its five Wednesday and five Friday programs in Philharmonic Hall, New York, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give four concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, as part of the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras.

Mr. Perry also said that at the conclusion of Mr. Leinsdorf's second season with the Orchestra, which ended Augu 23 at Tanglewood, the Musi Director had conducted a tota of 247 performances in his firs two years. Mr. Leinsdorf, wh is now on vacation in Santa Fe New Mexico, was recently ap pointed by President Lyndon B Johnson to an eight-year term as a Trustee of the John F Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington.

At the conclusion of the winter concerts on April 24, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eighty-fourth season will continue with the eightieth season of Boston Pops concerts, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, April 27 - June [illegible], the concerts on the Esplanade, June 28 - July 10; and the eight week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, July 2 - August 22.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

SEP 20 1964

Shostakovitch, Too

Symphony Opens With Two of B's

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season with concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf, who begins his third season as the orchestra's music director, will conduct.

Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with Brahms' "Academic Festical" Overture and will continue with the Symphony No. 1 by Dmitri Shostakovitch. After the intermission the concert will conclude with Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral."

Mr. Leinsdorf returns from vacation in Santa Fe, New Mexico for the orchestra's first rehearsals of the new season Tuesday. Tuesday's rehearsals will be the first meeting of the orchestra since the conclusion on Aug. 23 of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass.

Subscribers to the Friday afternoon series are reminded that these concerts will continue to begin at 2 p.m. as they did last year. The Sunday afternoon concerts will begin at 3 p.m. and all evening concerts will continue to begin at 8:30.

The Symphony's traditional open rehearsals will again be offered this season and series tickets will go on sale at the Symphony Hall Box Office tomorrow morning at 10.

The open rehearsals will take place at Symphony Hall on eight Thursday evenings throughout the season and will provide the audience with an opportunity to hear the orchestra make final preparations for the coming weekend concerts. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct the majority of rehearsals, with Charles Munch, Leopold Stokowski and eminent soloists to be heard. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the first open rehearsal on Oct. 15, and the remaining rehearsals will take place on Nov. 12, Dec. 17, Feb. 4, Feb. 11, March 18, March 25, and April 15. All rehearsals will begin promptly at 7:30 p.m., and the doors will be opened at 6:45 p.m.

Mail orders for a series subscription at $15 for eight open rehearsals may be made by sending a check or money order payable to the Boston Symphony Orchestra with an addressed, stamped return envelope to the Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115. No telephone reservations can be accepted.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Messenger
AVON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,325

SEP 17 1964

SENIOR CLASS INVITED TO SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Members of the Avon High Senior class are again invited to attend a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, as guests of Atty. and Mrs. Leslie Gold.

Students desirous of attending the Tuesday night series are requested to leave their names at the office of the High School principal.

Tickets and transportation are provided to the students without cost.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the famed symphony, will open the orchestra's 84th season Sept. 20. Appearing with the orchestra will be American and European soloists and prominent guest conductors.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 102,435

1SEP 27 1964

Boston Symphony Opens Season

BOSTON (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 84th season Friday afternoon with a former violinist in the first viola chair.

Burton Fine, a Boston Symphony violinist until this season, won the post of principal viola in a competition conducted by director Erich Leinsdorf.

The orchestra also unveiled six other personnel changes at the concert, which featured Beethoven's Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony and contrasting works by Brahms and Shostakovich.

Jules Eskin, formerly of the Cleveland Orchestra, was the new head of the cello section. Another new cellist was Jascha Silberstein, who previously shared the first desk in the Pittsburgh Symphony.

Laurence Thorstenberg, who has played oboe and English horn with the Chicago Symphony was the new English horn principal. New Oboist Hugh Matheny has been principal with the Indianapolis Symphony.

New violinists this year are Michael Vitale, a native of Keene, N.H., and Amnon Levy, a native of Israel and former member of the Minneapolis and Los Angeles orchestras.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

```
BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun.  Circ. 488,105
```

SEP 27 1964

Programs at Symphony

A new work, "Polyphony," by Arthur Berger, will have its first Boston performances at concerts this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the programs Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall.

The concerts will begin with Mozart's Symphony No. 38 in D minor, K. 504, "Prague," and conclude with Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3 in A minor, Op. 56, "Scottish."

Arthur Berger, composer, critic, and recently appointed Walter Naumberg Professor of Music at Brandeis University, was composer in residence this past Summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the orchestra's center for the advanced study of music.

Subscribers to three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series of concerts will hear their first programs this week. Concerts will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3 p.m.; Tuesday evening at 8:30, the first concert of the regular Tuesday Evening Series; and Thursday evening at 8:30, the first concert of what was formerly the Monday Evening Series. Leinsdorf will conduct all three concerts and his program will consist of Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, the Symphony No. 1 by Shostakovitch, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

1SEP 27 1964

Symphony's Week

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced his second weekend program of the 1964-65 season. At the Symphony Hall concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening he will conduct music of Mozart, Mendelssohn and Arthur Berger.

The program will open with Mogart's Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504. Following this the orchestra will give its first performance of "Polyphony" by Arthur Berger. The concert will close with Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

Arthur Berger, composer, critic, and recently appointed Walter Naumberg Professor of Music at Brandeis University, was composer in residence this past summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer center for the advanced study of music.

Subscribers to three of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's shorter series of concerts will hear their first programs this week. Concerts will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3 p.m.; Tuesday evening at 8:30, the first concert of the regular Tuesday Evening Series; and Thursday evening at 8:30, the first concert of what was formerly the Monday Evening Series. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct all three concerts

---

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 831,904 SUN. 1,138,268

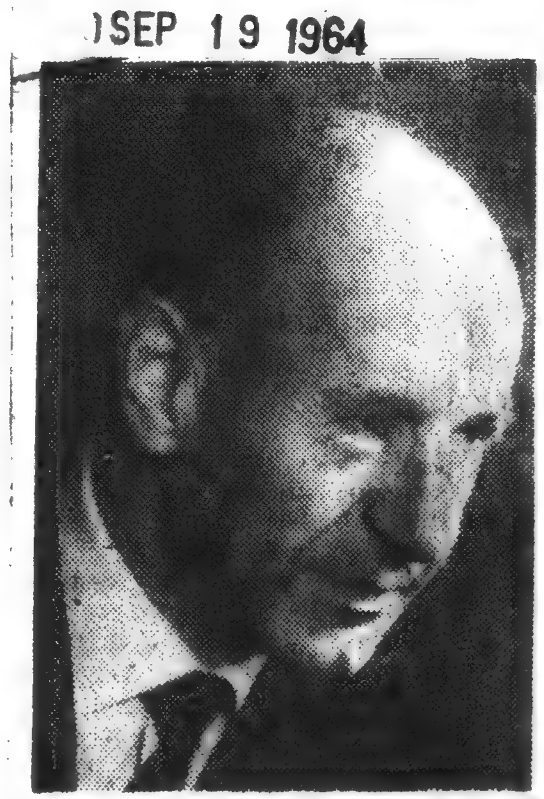
SEP 20 1964

The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 84th season Friday in Symphony hall under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. Guest conductors will include Charles Munch, Sir John Barbirolli, Leopold Stokowski, and Richard Burgin. Two pianists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen; one violinist, Isaac Stern; nine singers, and three choruses will make appearances. The winter season will consist of 124 concerts in Boston and on tour. At the end of his second season with the orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf had conducted a total of 247 performances.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

1SEP 19 1964



THE MAESTRO: Erich Leinsdorf begins his third season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Friday afternoon at a Symphony Hall concert. That performance will be the first of 124 scheduled by the BSO for its 84th season, which stretches all the way to April 24, 1965.

5

The Indianapolis Star
D. 218,762 SUN. 342,005

OCT 4 1964

Market Booms For Symphonies

By DELOS SMITH
New York (UPI)

IF YOU BELIEVE New York accurately mirrors the nation in cultural matters (which could be only a conceit of New Yorkers) then you'll have to believe vast and unprecedented numbers of Americans are plunging knee-deep into music culture all of a sudden.

"It's phenomenal, say musicians and music managers. They can't recall there ever having been such a boom market for their culture. The musicians preen themselves by thinking their art makes the complex world seem more ordered and even beautiful. The managers are too busy with the inflowing tide of demands and cash-on-the-barrelhead to search for the reasons why.

Through this fall and winter and into the spring there will be very few days without at least one symphony concert. The Philadelphia Orchestra gives the first of the 10 it has scheduled for Philharmonic Hall Tuesday night and every one has been sold out.

Tonight the venerable Leopold Stokowski opens the second season of his new American Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. Advance ticket sales for the 10 scheduled concerts have done so well there is doubt that any tickets will be left in a week or so.

Leonard Bernstein's New York Philharmonic gave the first concert of its new season in Philharmonic Hall Thursday evening, and it will play there Thursday and Saturday evenings and Friday and Sunday afternoons through the weekend of May 8.

These concerts would be largely sold out by subscription were it not for the management holding out blocks of orchestra seats for sale at the box office on the days of the concerts. It has also added concerts to the schedule, in another effort to avoid disappointing last-minute customers.

THE NEW YORK Festival Orchestra, of which Thomas Dunn is the music director, has hired Philharmonic Hall for 20 Friday evenings and Carnegie Hall for 20 Wednesday evenings. It is a relatively new orchestra and a "small" one of some 50 players.

The Boston Symphony will play in Philharmonic Hall on five Wednesday evenings and five Friday evenings. In addition both it and the Philadelphia Orchestra are down for four concerts in Carnegie Hall, as a part of that institution's "International Festival of Visiting Orchestras."

Last season this festival spanned 14 concerts. This year there will be 24. Seven of them will be given by European orchestras—the London Symphony, the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic, the Warsaw Philharmonic and the Hague Philharmonic.

Five American orchestras are in the festival, in addition to the Philadelphians and Bostonians. They are the Chicago Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Symphonies of Minneapolis, Pittsburgh and Houston.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

SEP 12 1964

Boston Symphony prospects

For the 1964-65 season the Boston Symphony Orchestra is instituting a new series of Wednesday evening concerts. There will be three, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director, on Nov. 25, Jan. 27, and April 14.

The season will open Friday afternoon, Sept. 25, in Symphony Hall. Guest conductors during the fall and winter include Charles Munch (for two weeks in February), Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli, and Leopold Stokowski.

Two piano soloists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the orchestra, as will Isaac Stern, violin soloist.

Three choruses will sing with the orchestra during the season, the Handel-Haydn Society, the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

In addition nine singers will appear: Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena, and Helen Vanni.

Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, six Sundays, six Tuesday evenings in the so-called Cambridge series, 10 Tuesday evenings, six Thursdays (formerly the Monday series) and eight open rehearsals to benefit the pension fund of the orchestra. Tour engagements will bring the concert total to 124.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

SEP 11 1964

Pre-symphony lunches planned

The fourth season of Pre-Symphony Luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn will begin Friday, Sept. 25. Harry Ellis Dickson will present a series called "Music of the World — Inside the BSO," with diplomatic representatives of the countries discussed, as guests of honor. (BSO stands, of course, for Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

G. Wallace Woodworth and Klaus Liepmann will be guest speakers on several occasions. Cleveland Amory, Max Kaplan, Francis W. Hatch, and Elliot Norton will speak at luncheons cosponsored by the Boston Community Music Center. The Chorus Pho Musica will present a special Christmas program Dec. 18. The public is invited to all luncheons.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT 1964

music and song

Symphony

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, goes into a full schedule this month, the beginning of its 84th season. Concerts at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) are at 2:00 p.m. on Fridays; 8:30 p.m. for evening concerts, and 3:00 p.m. on Sundays. October concerts: Fri.-Sat. Oct. 2-3, 9-10, 16-17, and 30-31. First "Cambridge in Boston" concert on Tues. Oct. 13. The Monday concert series has been changed to Thursday evening, with the opening program on Thurs. Oct. 1.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397

SEP 12 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,087

SEP 12 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

SEP 12 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

SEP 13 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 65,046

SEP 12 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

QUINCY, MASS.
Patriot-Ledger
Eve. Circ. 48,932

SEP 11 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 12 1964

Symphony Begins Season Friday, 25th

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season on Friday, Sept. 25. Erich Leinsdorf will begin his third season as music director, and he has invited his predecessor, Charles Munch, to conduct for two weeks in February. Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli and Leopold Stokowski have also been invited to guest conduct this season.

Two pianists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the orchestra. Isaac Stern will be violin soloist. Leinsdorf has also invited three choruses to assist the orchestra: the Handel-Haydn Society which celebrates its 150th anniversary this year; the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Nine singers will make appearances during the Winter: Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena and Helen Vanni.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, has announced that its Winter season will consist of 124 performances in Symphony Hall and on tour.

The Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, six Sundays, six Tuesdays in the "Cambridge" series, 10 regular Tuesday evening concerts, six Thursdays (formerly the Monday series), and a series of eight open rehearsals to benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition, a new series of three Wednesday evening concerts for this season was announced this week, for which season tickets have just been made available.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 18 1965

Hub Symphony's New Arrangement In Concert Series

Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new arrangement for its winter season concerts in Boston and Providence to begin with the 1965-1966 season.

With the new plan of concert series, the orchestra's schedule will be set in a regular pattern for concerts, rehearsals and free days. Each week of the season except a tour will have concerts Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings and Friday afternoons, necessitating a change of day for three of the current series.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the orchestra, in making the announcement, said:

"In recent years the demands upon the orchestra have increased greatly: new series of concerts have been added, the length of some series has been incrased, and recording activities have required greater amounts of time to the point where it becomes essential in order not to interfere with the highest caliber of performance to regularize the heavy requirements upon the players and conductor.

"The trustees have concluded that to do this it will be necessary to make some changes in the existing concert schedules so that the players may have a regular arrangement of concerts and rehearsals each week with specified days free.

"This results in a schedule," Perry said, "with concerts on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Friday afternoons. The new schedule requires the shift of day for the present Sunday and Wednesday concerts in Boston and the Providence concerts.

"Beginning with the 1965-1966 season, the three Wednesday and five Providence concerts will be shifted to Thursday evenings. The former Wednesday concerts will now be shown as Thursday Series B.

"The Sunday series will be moved to Tuesday evening and be known as Tuesday Series B. At the present time we are polling this audience to determine if they would prefer a 7:30 p.m. starting time rather than the more usual evening hour of 8:30."

The orchestra's other series of concerts in Symphony Hall, the 10 Tuesdays, 6 "Cambridge" concerts, the 6 Thursdays and 24 pairs of Friday-Saturday programs, will be unchanged by the new schedule.

The open rehearsals will continue to be given Thursdays at 7:30 p.m.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 14 1965

Symphony Revises Series

The Boston Symphony next season will give concerts every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evening and every Friday afternoon, except during the orchestra's tours.

Beginning in the 1965-66 season three series will be changed to new days. The present Sunday and Wednesday concerts will be shifted to Thursday evenings. Another Sunday series will be moved to Tuesday evenings, perhaps at the new hour of 7:30.

The new schedule: 10 Tuesdays (Series A), 6 Tuesdays (Series B), 6 Tuesdays ("Cambridge" series), 3 Thursdays (Series A), 6 Thursdays (Series B), 8 Thursdays (Open Rehearsals), 24 pairs of Friday-Saturday concerts.

The orchestra will play its Providence concerts, formerly on Sundays and Wednesdays, now on Thursdays.

The new schedule will allow the orchestra specific days for free time, recording sessions and other commitments.

5

The Indianapolis Star
D. 218,762 SUN. 342,005

OCT 4 1964

Market Booms For Symphonies

By DELOS SMITH
New York (UPI)

IF YOU BELIEVE New York accurately mirrors the nation in cultural matters (which could be only a conceit of New Yorkers) then you'll have to believe vast and unprecedented numbers of Americans are plunging knee-deep into music culture all of a sudden.

"It's phenomenal, say musicians and music managers. They can't recall there ever having been such a boom market for their culture. The musicians preen themselves by thinking their art makes the complex world seem more ordered and even beautiful. The managers are too busy with the inflowing tide of demands and cash-on-the-barrelhead to search for the reasons why.

Through this fall and winter and into the spring there will be very few days without at least one symphony concert. The Philadelphia Orchestra gives the first of the 10 it has scheduled for Philharmonic Hall Tuesday night and every one has been sold out.

Tonight the venerable Leopold Stokowski opens the second season of his new American Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. Advance ticket sales for the 10 scheduled concerts have done so well there is doubt that any tickets will be left in a week or so.

Leonard Bernstein's New York Philharmonic gave the first concert of its new season in Philharmonic Hall Thursday evening, and it will play there Thursday and Saturday evenings and Friday and Sunday afternoons through the weekend of May 8.

These concerts would be largely sold out by subscription were it not for the management holding out blocks of orchestra seats for sale at the box office on the days of the concerts. It has also added concerts to the schedule, in another effort to avoid disappointing last-minute customers.

THE NEW YORK Festival Orchestra, of which Thomas Dunn is the music director, has hired Philharmonic Hall for 20 Friday evenings and Carnegie Hall for 20 Wednesday evenings. It is a relatively new orchestra and a "small" one of some 50 players.

The Boston Symphony will play in Philharmonic Hall on five Wednesday evenings and five Friday evenings. In addition both it and the Philadelphia Orchestra are down for four concerts in Carnegie Hall, as a part of that institution's "International Festival of Visiting Orchestras."

Last season this festival spanned 14 concerts. This year there will be 24. Seven of them will be given by European orchestras—the London Symphony, the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic, the Warsaw Philharmonic and the Hague Philharmonic.

Five American orchestras are in the festival, in addition to the Philadelphians and Bostonians. They are the Chicago Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Symphonies of Minneapolis, Pittsburgh and Houston.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397
SEP 1 2 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,087
SEP 1 2 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182
SEP 1 2 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
SEP 1 3 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 65,046
SEP 1 2 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200
QUINCY, MASS.
Patriot-Ledger
Eve. Circ. 48,932
SEP 11 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
SEP 1 2 1964

Symphony Begins Season Friday, 25th

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 84th season on Friday, Sept. 25. Erich Leinsdorf will begin his third season as music director, and he has invited his predecessor, Charles Munch, to conduct for two weeks in February. Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli and Leopold Stokowski have also been invited to guest conduct this season.

Two pianists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the orchestra. Isaac Stern will be violin soloist. Leinsdorf has also invited three choruses to assist the orchestra: the Handel-Haydn Society which celebrates its 150th anniversary this year; the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Nine singers will make appearances during the Winter: Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena and Helen Vanni.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, has announced that its Winter season will consist of 124 performances in Symphony Hall and on tour.

The Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, six Sundays, six Tuesdays in the "Cambridge" series, 10 regular Tuesday evening concerts, six Thursdays (formerly the Monday series) and a series of eight open rehearsals to benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition, a new series of three Wednesday evening concerts for this season was announced this week, for which season tickets have just been made available.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483
APR 1 8 1965

Hub Symphony's New Arrangement In Concert Series

Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new arrangement for its winter season concerts in Boston and Providence to begin with the 1965-1966 season.

With the new plan of concert series, the orchestra's schedule will be set in a regular pattern for concerts, rehearsals and free days. Each week of the season except a tour will have concerts Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings and Friday afternoons, necessitating a change of day for three of the current series.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the orchestra, in making the announcement, said:

"In recent years the demands upon the orchestra have increased greatly: new series of concerts have been added, the length of some series has been incrased, and recording activities have required greater amounts of time to the point where it becomes essential in order not to interfere with the highest caliber of performance to regularize the heavy requirements upon the players and conductor.

"The trustees have concluded that to do this it will be necessary to make some changes in the existing concert schedules so that the players may have a regular arrangement of concerts and rehearsals each week with specified days free.

"This results in a schedule," Perry said, "with concerts on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Friday afternoons. The new schedule requires the shift of day for the present Sunday and Wednesday concerts in Boston and the Providence concerts.

"Beginning with the 1965-1966 season, the three Wednesday and five Providence concerts will be shifted to Thursday evenings. The former Wednesday concerts will now be shown as Thursday Series B.

"The Sunday series will be moved to Tuesday evening and be known as Tuesday Series B. At the present time we are polling this audience to determine if they would prefer a 7:30 p.m. starting time rather than the more usual evening hour of 8:30."

The orchestra's other series of concerts in Symphony Hall, the 10 Tuesdays, 6 "Cambridge" concerts, the 6 Thursdays and 24 pairs of Friday-Saturday programs, will be unchanged by the new schedule.

The open rehearsals will continue to be given Thursdays at 7:30 p.m.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
SEP 1 2 1964

Boston Symphony prospects

For the 1964-65 season the Boston Symphony Orchestra is instituting a new series of Wednesday evening concerts. There will be three, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director, on Nov. 25, Jan. 27, and April 14.

The season will open Friday afternoon, Sept. 25, in Symphony Hall. Guest conductors during the fall and winter include Charles Munch (for two weeks in February), Richard Burgin, Sir John Barbirolli, and Leopold Stokowski.

Two piano soloists, Van Cliburn and Grant Johannessen, will perform with the orchestra, as will Isaac Stern, violin soloist.

Three choruses will sing with the orchestra during the season, the Handel-Haydn Society, the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

In addition nine singers will appear: Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Lili Chookasian, Phyllis Curtin, George London, Thomas Paul, Leontyne Price, Jerold Siena, and Helen Vanni.

Symphony Hall programs will include 24 Friday afternoons, 24 Saturday evenings, six Sundays, six Tuesday evenings in the so-called Cambridge series, 10 Tuesday evenings, six Thursdays (formerly the Monday series) and eight open rehearsals to benefit the pension fund of the orchestra. Tour engagements will bring the concert total to 124.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
SEP 1 1 1964

Pre-symphony lunches planned

The fourth season of Pre-Symphony Luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn will begin Friday, Sept. 25. Harry Ellis Dickson will present a series called "Music of the World — Inside the BSO," with diplomatic representatives of the countries discussed, as guests of honor. (BSO stands, of course, for Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

G. Wallace Woodworth and Klaus Liepmann will be guest speakers on several occasions. Cleveland Amory, Max. Kaplan, Francis W. Hatch, and Elliot Norton will speak at luncheons cosponsored by the Boston Community Music Center. The Chorus Pho Musica will present a special Christmas program Dec. 18. The public is invited to all luncheons.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

OCT 1964

music and song

Symphony

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, goes into a full schedule this month, the beginning of its 84th season. Concerts at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) are at 2:00 p.m. on Fridays; 8:30 p.m. for evening concerts, and 3:00 p.m. on Sundays. October concerts: Fri.-Sat. Oct. 2-3, 9-10, 16-17, and 30-31. First "Cambridge in Boston" concert on Tues. Oct. 13. The Monday concert series has been changed to Thursday evenings, with the opening program on [illegible]

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
APR 1 4 1965

Symphony Revises Series

The Boston Symphony next season will give concerts every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evening and every Friday afternoon, except during the orchestra's tours.

Beginning in the 1965-66 season three series will be changed to new days. The present Sunday and Wednesday concerts will be shifted to Thursday evenings. Another Sunday series will be moved to Tuesday evenings, perhaps at the new hour of 7:30.

The new schedule: 10 Tuesdays (Series A), 6 Tuesdays (Series B), 6 Tuesdays ("Cambridge" series), 3 Thursdays (Series A), 6 Thursdays (Series B), 8 Thursdays (Open Rehearsals), 24 pairs of Friday-Saturday concerts.

The orchestra will play its Providence concerts, formerly on Sundays and Wednesdays, now on Thursdays.

The new schedule will allow the orchestra specific days for free time, recording sessions and other commitments.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 465,653
SEP 27 1964

Symphony Begins 84th Season

By Marjorie W. Sherman

One of the few social cultures to survive intact three generations of Boston's changing mores, the Symphony is still as much the essence of "the Athens of America" as it was when Henry Lee Higginson established this priceless asset in 1881.

A heritage, handed down from mother to daughter along with the Sargent and Copley portraits, the Paul Revere silver, and the Crown Derby china, a seat at Symphony Hall is often kept at great personal sacrifice, but it is kept.

As the audience within the great familiar hall once again rose to its feet on Friday to salute the beginning of the 84th season, it also acknowledged the valorous battle for survival, in the face of repeated deficits, this splendid orchestra still faces, even though it is the finest of its kind in the world today, and even though its members are playing a record 130 concerts a season, most of them already sold out.

Globe Photos by John Hurley

FRIENDS OF SYMPHONY Mrs. Michael Dukakis, attractive wife of the state representative and daughter of Boston Symphony's Harry Ellis Dickson, and E. Anthony Kutten talk music as the season opens.

SYMBOLIZING SYMPHONY are its conductor Erich Leinsdorf (left), its president Henry Cabot (right), and between them, the portrait of Wilhelm Gericke, who twice served as conductor of the orchestra—from 1884 to 1889, and from 1898 to 1906. The painting was presented by Mr. Gericke's daughter, Miss Kathryn Gericke of Cambridge.

TWO GOOD REASONS for the success of the Symphony luncheon series are Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, executive board director of Symphony's Youth Concerts, and series speakers such as M.I.T.'s eminent director of music and professor of humanities, Klaus Liepmann.

SYMPHONY'S REMARKABLE Harry Ellis Dickson (right), founder and conductor of the Youth Concerts, inaugurated his "World of Music—Inside the B.S.O. series Friday at the Midtown, his listeners including long-time Symphony subscriber, Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham (left).

BOSTON FRI-SAT 1

7

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 25, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ...."Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH ....Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro
III. Lento
IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ....Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country:
Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm:
Allegretto

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

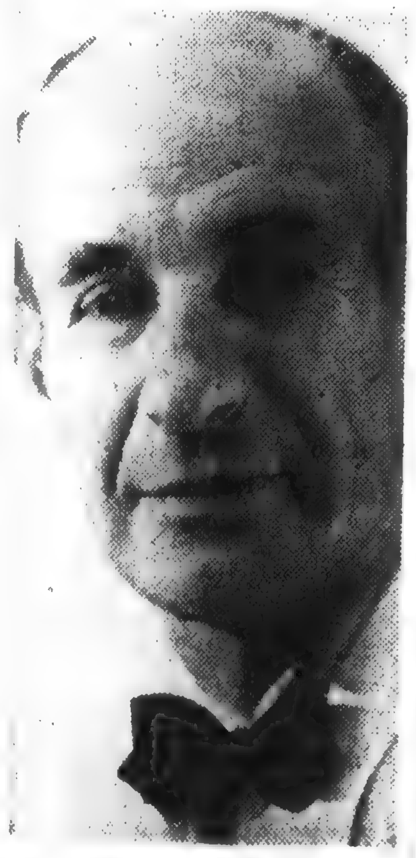
BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 24 1964



His Third Season

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct symphonies of Shostakovitch and Beethoven tomorrow and Saturday as the Boston Symphony enters its 84th year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

SEP 26 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

SEP 26 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,729

SEP 26 1964

Boston Symphony Opens 84th Season

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 8[illegible]h season yesterday at Symphony Hall before a capacity audience of 2,630.

The orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, performed Johannes Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Dimitri Shostakovich's First Symphony and Ludwig von Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.

HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1964

SYMPHONY

Shostakovitch Brightens 'Proper' Season Opener

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, opened its 84th season at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80 .... Brahms
Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 .. Shostakovitch
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral", Op. 68 .... Beethoven

The 84th season of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the third year of Erich Leinsdorf's tenure, opened yesterday in soundly orthodox fashion. It might have been a rather dull and proper occasion —Mr. Leinsdorf's first "Pastoral" in Boston turned out to be a tasteful but excessively deliberate account—were it not for a virile treatment of Shostakovitch's extraordinary First Symphony, furnishing further evidence of the Russian's melancholy later decline as a symphonist.

We can be grateful that Mr. Leinsdorf scheduled the Shostakovitch after its nearly seven years of absence from this series. The music is remarkable, not only as the product of a 19-year-old, but innately, as original musical thought. Here the composer emerges with a style.

His Own Style

The ingredients of his style, the brooding pedal point, mournful woodwind timbres and broad recitative leaping into boisterous climaxes sound familiar to us, not only because Shostakovitch, like many composers, borrows extensively from himself in other works, but because so many of his contemporaries here and abroad paid him the tribute of imitation. When he fell into disgrace with the Soviet authorities, Shostakovitch quite naturally turned to the epic Beethoven manner, the oratorical, the sham heroic. Writing pure music at 19 he attained an eloquence of statement that the national patriotism of his maturity could not sustain.

Mr. Leindorf's vigorous yet urbane pacing allowed the piece to attain youthful urgency under control. The tempo and balance problem inherent in this score, its sudden shifts of mood, could lead either to diffusion or to a nervous, febrile intensity. The opening allegretto exhibited brisk clarity, despite the uncertain transitional passages into the allegro; the performance of the scherzo was deft precise and detailed.

With the lento where the handling of soloists and tuttis invokes Mahler, Mr. Leinsdorf and the various first-deck soloists attained exquisite traceries of muted phrase, while the finale was exuberantly theatrical and accented the rhapsodic lyricism of the melodies. Indeed, the tunes of the score, candidly sentimental, possess a rare charm. The handling of the lines was relaxed: the conductor's sense of tension permitted a graceful flow, and the players responded beautifully to such sympathetic restraint. The work loomed big, modern, cheerful and full of fantastic invention, all qualities intended by the young Skostakovitch.

Too Much Perfection

The "Pastoral" gave me the impression that it had been overrehearsed. Mr. Leinsdorf seemed to be aiming for the perfect adjustment of line, color and weight, and there is no denying that in the process he arrived at magical moments (the poetry of the horns maintaining the octave through the shimmering string texture, the various obbligato tints), yet in the final analysis this interpretation was almost incredibly decorous.

Of course it is exceedingly hard for any conductor to make a bold effect from Beethoven's quiet pastoral evocations. One is glad that Mr. Leinsdorf didn't choose to snatch a typhoon out of a thunderstorm and that his brook didn't purl like Niagara. Everything was in well-trimmed scale, refined in relationship: a classical garden.

Now, the topiary art has much to recommend it for the contemplative, and so did Mr. Leinsdorf's "Pastorale". The sonorities were light and graceful, the fabric of wind and string instruments fastidious. But so leisurely and exact an approach misses the sense of life and movement inherent in the musical landscape (the narrative landscape being meaningless) and thus for all its elegance I found the reading inert.

This was not the case with the "Academic Festival" overture, which opened the season with a bright, brave flourish; and seven changes in personnel also inaugurated the series. The new men are Jules Eskin, first 'cellist, who comes from the Cleveland Orchestra; 'cellist Jascha Silberstein from the Pittsburgh Orchestra; Burton Fine, who has moved up from the violins to become first viola principal; Laurence Thorstenberg, English horn; violinists Michael Vitale and Amnon Levy and Hugh Matheny, oboe.

Next weekend Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Arthur Berger's "Polyphony", Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, in D, and Mendelssohn's "Scottish Symphony, in A minor.

SHOWTHROUGH

BOSTON . FRI - SAT 1

7

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 25, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS .... "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro
III. Lento
IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
III. { Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
IV. { Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 24 1964

His Third Season

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct symphonies of Shostakovitch and Beethoven tomorrow and Saturday as the Boston Symphony enters its 84th year.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

SEP 26 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

SEP 26 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,729

SEP 26 1964

Boston Symphony Opens 84th Season

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its [illegible] season yesterday at Symphony Hall before a capacity audience of 2,630.

The orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, performed Johannes Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Dimitri Shostakovich's First Symphony and Ludwig von Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.

HERALD, SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1964

SYMPHONY

Shostakovitch Brightens 'Proper' Season Opener

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, opened its 84th season at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80 .... Brahms
Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 .. Shostakovitch
Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral", Op. 68 .... Beethoven

The 84th season of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the third year of Erich Leinsdorf's tenure, opened yesterday in soundly orthodox fashion. It might have been a rather dull and proper occasion—Mr. Leinsdorf's first "Pastoral" in Boston turned out to be a tasteful but excessively deliberate account—were it not for a virile treatment of Shostakovitch's extraordinary First Symphony, furnishing further evidence of the Russian's melancholy later decline as a symphonist.

We can be grateful that Mr. Leinsdorf scheduled the Shostakovitch after its nearly seven years of absence from this series. The music is remarkable, not only as the product of a 19-year-old, but innately, as original musical thought. Here the composer emerges with a style.

His Own Style

The ingredients of his style, the brooding pedal point, mournful woodwind timbres and broad recitative leaping into boisterous climaxes sound familiar to us, not only because Shostakovitch, like many composers, borrows extensively from himself in other works, but because so many of his contemporaries here and abroad paid him the tribute of imitation. When he fell into disgrace with the Soviet authorities, Shostakovitch quite naturally turned to the epic Beethoven manner, the oratorical, the sham heroic. Writing pure music at 19 he attained an eloquence of statement that the national patriotism of his maturity could not sustain.

Mr. Leindorf's vigorous yet urbane pacing allowed the piece to attain youthful urgency under control. The tempo and balance problem inherent in this score, its sudden shifts of mood, could lead either to diffusion or to a nervous, febrile intensity. The opening allegretto exhibited brisk clarity; despite the uncertain transitional passages into the allegro; the performance of the scherzo was deft precise and detailed.

With the lento where the handling of soloists and tuttis invokes Mahler, Mr. Leinsdorf and the various first-deck soloists attained exquisite traceries of muted phrase, while the finale was exuberantly theatrical and accented the rhapsodic lyricism of the melodies. Indeed, the tunes of the score, candidly sentimental, possess a rare charm. The handling of the lines was relaxed: the conductor's sense of tension permitted a graceful flow, and the players responded beautifully to such sympathetic restraint. The work loomed big, modern, cheerful and full of fantastic invention, all qualities intended by the young Skostakovitch.

Too Much Perfection

The "Pastoral" gave me the impression that it had been overrehearsed. Mr. Leinsdorf seemed to be aiming for the perfect adjustment of line, color and weight; and there is no denying that in the process he arrived at magical moments (the poetry of the horns maintaining the octave through the shimmering string texture, the various obbligato tints), yet in the final analysis this interpretation was almost incredibly decorous.

Of course it is exceedingly hard for any conductor to make a bold effect from Beethoven's quiet pastoral evocations. One is glad that Mr. Leinsdorf didn't choose to snatch a typhoon out of a thunderstorm and that his brook didn't purl like Niagara. Everything was in well-trimmed scale, refined in relationship: a classical garden.

Now, the topiary art has much to recommend it for the contemplative, and so did Mr. Leinsdorf's "Pastorale". The sonorities were light and graceful, the fabric of wind and string instruments fastidious. But so leisurely and exact an approach misses the sense of life and movement inherent in the musical landscape (the narrative landscape being meaningless) and thus for all its elegance I found the reading inert.

This was not the case with the "Academic Festival" overture, which opened the season with a bright, brave flourish; and seven changes in personnel also inaugurated the series. The new men are Jules Eskin, first 'cellist, who comes from the Cleveland Orchestra; 'cellist Jascha Silberstein from the Pittsburgh Orchestra; Burton Fine, who has moved up from the violins to become first viola principal; Laurence Thorstenberg, English horn; violinists Michael Vitale and Amnon Levy and Hugh Matheny, oboe.

Next weekend Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Arthur Berger's "Polyphony", Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, in D, and Mendelssohn's "Scottish Symphony, in A minor.

8

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

SEP 26 1964

Boston Symphony Opens 84th Season

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The 84th season of Boston Symphony concerts ~~began~~ grayly Friday afternoon, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The program consisted of the Brahms "Academic Festival" Overture, the Symphony No. 1 by Shostakovich, and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony—all of it played to an audience that gave Mr. Leinsdorf about an 85 percent standing greeting, but which was otherwise cold even by Friday matinee standards.

Ever since 1925 when Shostakovich wrote his First Symphony, our relations with the Soviet Union have been continuously interesting, with the result that our perceptions and our criticism of art produced in Russia have always been politically colored. It is good now to forget some of the more embarrassing nonsense written about Shostakovich during the war years, but we are faced at every turn with the legend that his was a great talent destroyed, or at least hampered, by political oppression.

A hearing of the First Symphony, written at 19, makes it perfectly clear that there is no reason to have expected Shostakovich to become a better composer than the one he in fact became. The First Symphony is a work of considerable talent, with much resourceful imitation of Mahler and Prokofiev among others—and there is even a touch sometimes of original invention.

The ARTS

It shows little feeling for architecture. The first movement is ably, in some ways even interestingly, put together. After that, however, there is a succession of ideas Shostakovich was evidently incompetent to compose: the whimsical but unsuccessful coda of the Scherzo, for example; and almost everything about the chaotic finale.

That he could have solved the problem better as an older man is doubtful in view of the devastating evidence of the long-winded later symphonies.

As the music is structurally uncontrolled so it is also undisciplined expressively. When it is serious, it is merely gross. Its derivative mockeries cheapen and degrade that of which they seek to make fun, so that the total effect is one of painfully ugly vulgarity.

It was a pleasure afterwards to be able to hear Beethoven's "Pastoral." It is original in its every sound and silence; above all it is astoundingly modern in the way so much of its discourse is expressed through the subtle manipulation of texture, a process that imparts life to the music even when there is no theme in the conventional sense, and when the harmonies have come to a stand-still.

Neither it nor the Brahms Overture were at all well performed, and for the reasons that often hamper Leinsdorf in the German classics. In the face of the expressive demands of certain kinds of music he becomes extremely inhibited—and he seems to fight off the inhibition with an irresistible desire to interfere with the natural flow of things.

He will ram his way ruthlessly through the first half-dozen pages of the Beethoven, and then suddenly introduce a touch of synthetic articulation by a pointless little hiccup just before the new theme arrives in Measure 67. He will start the Scene by the Brook at a well considered tempo and with nicely phrased accompaniment, but then let much of the Symphony's most remarkable movement go for nothing because of the monotonous and uninflected sound that permitted, among other things, the blotting out of the broken chords for flute and later for violas in the development, which then are so beautifully extended and fulfilled when the recapitulation begins.

Nor did the Storm have any poetic force. There was not a proper pianissimo for those evocative raindrops at the beginning; there was, in fact, not even the technical virtue of precision, because of Mr. Leinsdorf's nervous habit of foreshortening passages that contain only tremolando bass notes, passages he evidently thinks of as those in which nothing is happening.

I would put under the heading of technical as well as musical carelessness the many undigested trumpet blasts in which this movement abounded. Granted Beethoven's instrumentation is awkward, but other conductors and other trumpeters have solved the problem.

And what produced all this, produced a performance of the "Academic Festival" Overture that drove so tensely from one event to the next that nothing had time to breathe or to make its point. The "Gaudeamus" was booted into the hall with unbelievable lack of ceremony. Surely there is something here more relevant than the absence of a specific direction to prepare its glorious arrival!

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

OCT 1 1964

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN Sat. concer

BSO: 1964 CONVOCATION

Something there is that doesn't love an opening program A content analysis of any major symphony's first offerings of the season would, I think, reveal a leaning upon the true, tried and tested, as inoffensive as they are unexciting.

The initial concert at Symphony Hall last weekend was certainly in the proper tradition. It consisted of Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. To be sure, there were new principals ensconced in the viola and cello sections—Burton Fine in place of Joseph de Pasquale, and Jules Eskin in place of Samuel Mayes; and there was again the magnificence of sound, the clarity and control that constitute Mr. Leinsdorf's especial trademark, and which in themselves justify a journey to Symphony Hall. Yet, to garner any really abiding rewards from this first concert, a listener would be obliged to give some second thoughts to the music on hand.

Take Shostakovitch's First Symphony, which was written when the composer was a mere boy—some authorities avow nineteen, others twenty. Its premiere by the Leningrad Philharmonic in 1926 immediately propelled it into the repertoire of orchestras everywhere and caused Shostakovitch to be the dean of Russian composers ever after. This symphony was, as Nicholas Slonimsky has succinctly put it, "sufficiently modern to be interesting and sufficiently academic to be agreeable." There is a lot more than this to be said for the piece, of course. It contains a certain lyricism, exuberance and warmth, as well as inventiveness in many of its passages, that confer upon it an integrity seldom and sometimes never found in the technically more accomplished and better organized published symphonies of the later years. The seeds of Shostakovitch's excesses, like the horse music and comparable bombast, are in this early work too. I for one, however, remain convinced that this earliest of Shostakovitch's symphonies, which really is a work of promise rather than of fulfillment, is still his greatest one.

The pice abounds with solo numbers. The first violin desk, the first cello, flute, oboe, clarinet, piano and even kettle drum all have their big moments. Without naming names, it is fair to say that not all these principal players have yet arrived at mid-season form.

And then there is the redoubtable "Pastoral." The very mention of the name is apt to evoke an impression of naivete, of mellifluous but labored clumsiness in attempting tonal pictures that Strauss and others were subsequently to accomplish so effortlessly. Yet, as always, an attentive listening can only reveal the sweetness and beauty that lies beyond the programmatic content. Surely the second movement, in the spaciousness of its development and fulness of recapitulation, must rank among the noblest of Beethoven slow movements, which is saying a lot. While the radiance and joy of the Coda in the Finale in its understated way commands a unique place in musical literature.

Mr. Leinsdorf's conception was unexceptionable. Excitement there was not, but that is hardly the element that one seeks in the Pastoral.

N SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1964 Arts—Entertainm

On the threshold, we hope...

By Harold Rogers

The physical and tonal face of the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to change. If some listeners are tempted to think in terms of the sensuous Koussevitzky strings or the Munch brilliance, even of Samuel Mayes' cello and Joseph de Pasquale's viola—these same listeners can count the gain: gain in precision and clarity, gain in new blood, yet to be tried but doubtless worthy of the opportunity, gain in Erich Leinsdorf's unfolding career as an orchestral conductor.

Are we whistling in the dark?

We hope not. There was much to commend in Mr. Leinsdorf's opening concert of the orchestra's 84th season Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

♪ ♪ ♪

His first two seasons as music director have not been astonishingly successful, not even impressively so. Yet on occasion routine has given way to verve: he has it in him.

Let us hope that we may count these two years as his shakedown period. Let us hope he is beginning to hit a stride. Let us now look for musicmaking that is equal to the greatness of the orchestra under his control.

His opening concert may be pointing in this direction. Again one was struck by the clarity of the machine as he guided his players through the opening bars of Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture. How smoothly it operates! How well-oiled the gears! Yet Mr. Leinsdorf did not lose sight of the emotional content as he built to the magnificent statement of "Gaudeamus Igitur."

♪ ♪ ♪

So, too, with the fascinatingly contrived First Symphony of Shostakovitch. The spartan score was set forth in crystalline beauty; the youthful melodies sang out strong and sweet. Perhaps more dramatization could have been forthcoming; yet if Mr. Leinsdorf conceived it in Mozartean terms, as well one might, then classical elegance is called for and not 20th-century Russian colorism.

Dramatization was indeed wanting in Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf gave us a pastel "Pastorale" — all well and good in the first two movements. But Beethoven put something of Breughel in the third and fourth sections; Mr. Leinsdorf hardly permitted the jolly country folk to kick up enough dust. Rather were they dancing spun-glass jigs on marble floors.

Joseph Silverstein turned in some beautifully intoned violin solos. We know what he can do. Burton Finc, the new first violist, was given little opportunity to sing out in this program; while Jules Eskin, the new principal cellist, played an extended passage and played it well. A final evaluation of course, will have to wait.

Let us hope that we are on the threshold of one of the most brilliant periods in the history of the Boston Symphony.

Hope, they say, springs . . . well, you know what they say.

9

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

SEP 3 0 1964

The Sound of Music

Tues. Concert

Leinsdorf Topples 'Pastorale' Cliches

By Peter M. Knapp

The Boston Symphony has opened its 84th season with two old staples and a work less often performed.

For the audience at Symphony Hall last night, the old staples were best received in performances by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf and the Symphony.

The familiar works were Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture Opus 80, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, Opus 68, the "Pastorale." Less familiar was the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 1, Opus 10, although it is hardly a newcomer to the Boston scene.

The trouble with well-known works is their familiarity. We begin to develop definite ruts in our concept of them, expecting certain tempi, accents and dynamic patterns as the popular melodies unfold. Yet at the same time, we may be dismayed at the lack of "freshness" on the part of conductors who give us exactly what we have been expecting.

Erich Leindorf is a mold-breaker. He dares to veer out of the ruts which entrench many of his colleagues in conformity. But he doesn't deviate from the norm merely to be different. His conceptions have a logic and a thoroughness that make them valid even if they are different.

Last night he presented a thoroughly fresh reading of Beethoven's "Pastorale," and one that turned out to be completely satisfying.

The usual "Pastorale" might be characterized as gentle and soulful, full of soft romantic musings about the wonders of nature and the joys of the countryside. That rustling motif in the first movement is the unfolding of nature — the movement's title clearly says, "Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country." Obviously, it ought to be "serene," relaxed, reflective. The dynamic level should be kept generally quite low.

This isn't the way Mr. Leindorf sees it. In the performance last night, the first movement actually was rather boisterous, with a tempo that moved right along and a dynamic level consistently about mezzo forte. There was no tender lingering over sweet phrases; the movement marched right along with a crispness that at times seemed almost perfunctory.

Nor was the second movement, "Scene by the brookside," an idle dalliance by rippling waters, set to a tempo most conductors barely keep from dragging. Mr. Leinsdorf found strong rhythmic patterns here, giving an extra nudge to the opening triplets, for example. The accompanying violin trills, too, were given extra accents, imparting an extra sparkle to a movement which ranks with the greatest in the symphonic literature.

The performance was admirably consistent throughout; the tone set in the first movement never substantially varied. The reading had strength, vitality and a crystal clarity that revealed tiny details that often remain tucked away within the symphonic texture. And the orchestra played nobly for their conductor.

The Brahms overture was a warm-up piece, with the musicians having some trouble with their timing and execution. Mr. Leinsdorf at one point marred the flow of the piece by milking a lyrical phrase, but things warmed up toward the end. The sound, though, was magnificent.

The First Symphony of Dmitri Shostakovitch displays his youthful ambitions, his enormous talent and a lack of maturity. There are passages of considerable brilliance and effectiveness, but the main impression is of restlessness — even peevishness. Certainly it was a tour de force for a youth of 20 even to orchestrate a work of this size, let alone orchestrate it with the flair and ingenuity the composer achieved.

Of the four movements, the second has the most to say. It is a quick, nervous scherzo with a contrasting, mournful trio. A bright piano part enlivens the instrumentation here and in the last movement, which is vital and capricious in its several changes of mood.

The first movement is a quirky thing that appears contrived; the third is slow, tense and gloomy.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the Symphony executed the erratic score with precision and sonority, after a shaky opening, but there were better things to come with the "Pastorale."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

1SEP 2 8 1964

Boston Symphony Opens Sunday Concert Series

S. Concert

By EARL J. DIAS •
Standard-Times Music Critic

Erich Leinsdorf and the Bos-on Symphony Orchestra opened heir 1964-65 series of six Sunlay subscription concerts yeserday afternoon in Symphony Hall with a rather traditional program that included works by Brahms, Beethoven and Shostakovitch.

The orchestra, which this season has three new first-chair men — cellist Jules Eskin, violist Burton Fine, and English hornist Laurence Thorstenberg — was in fine fettle. Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," of course, is probably as familar to Mr. Leinsdorf and his players as a Mother Goose rhyme. It is, as almost everyone knows, joyous music, with Brahms never in a more expansive mood. A medley of German university songs (Brahms wrote the work on the occasion of his receiving an honorary degree from the University of Brelau), it is robust and rambunctious, with an air about it of tavern jollity and undergraduate high-jinks. Although Mr. Leinsdorf chose to play the work at a more rapid pace than which it is usually treated, the result was good musical fun. And the final measures shook the venerable rafters of Symphony Hall.

Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1, Opus 10," was written when the Soviet composer was only 19. Although it has neither the drive nor the emotional intensity of his "Symphony No. 5," it does offer conclusive evidence that even in his salad days Shostakovitch had an original musical mind. Particularly effective in the second movement (really a scherzo) which tinkles along at a merry clip, it is also notable for an effective andante movement and for the variations of mood and tempo of the finale. The symphony is somewhat sardonic and dry in tone—but it is a promisingly brilliant work. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading and the orchestra's playing were first-rate.

Concluding the program was Beethoven's "Symphony No. 6 in F Major," the charming "Pastoral," which finds the composer in an unusually serene and light mood. Perhaps more a tone poem than a legitimate symphony, it celebrates the pleasures of rural life and the scenic beauties of the countryside. It is, of course, an ingratiating work—filled with sprightly dance tunes and, except for the famous storm sequences, as bright and gay as a children's birthday party.

Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians kept the musical proceedings on a cheerful plane. There was especially competent work by the entire string section and by the orchestra's first flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Beethoven himself once observed that even a musical ignoramus should be able to picture, when listening to his symphony, the country scenes the composer had in mind. Certainly, in Mr. Leinsdorf's clear and crisp reading, those rural sequences can, indeed, be visualized.

10

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

SEP 26 1964

2630 Supporters Help Symphony Open 84th Season

AUDIENCE, ORCHESTRA APPLAUD AS ERICH LEINSDORF TAKES STAND TO OPEN 84TH SEASON (Bob Dean Photos)

Glamour Opens 84th Symphony Season

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

"It's the only place that still makes me feel I live in Boston" one long-time subscriber whispered to her symphony neighbor Friday as they rose together with 2629 other devotees in the traditional greeting to the conductor as the 84th season began with a rustle of well-being and the familiar pleasures of the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture."

All, certainly, was reassuringly the same—the marble halls both hallowed and hollowed a little by the passing of time and the great of the music world, the punctual ritual of arrival with its ceremonious acknowledgement both of old friends and of symphony neighbors of many year's standing, the intermission visiting upstairs and down, orchestra members out on the steps just off the stage entrance, symphony's able staff busy with welcome, too.

Holding her own reception on her quiet way to her seat, the friends of more than half a century of Symphony years stopping her with affectionate greetings every step of the way, Mrs. Alexander Steinert couldn't get as far as her own family until intermission.

A third generation of Wolcotts and Forbeses and Lymans and Withingtons and many another could be found on all sides. Mrs. Samuel Huntington Wolcott came in with Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, and the Oliver Wolcott Srs. and Jrs., as well as two Wolcott daughters, were there. Mrs. Allan Forbes, slender and handsome in her French brown and black, shared the opening with her daughter, attractive Mrs. Tudor Leland.

The F. Murray Forbeses, the Thomas Proctors, the Edward Tafts, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Harry Coolidge, Harvard's beloved G. Wallace Woodworth and his wife, trustee Henry Laughlin, were others of the hundreds who need no usher (nor indeed a ticket stub) to make their way to locations that have been part of the winter Friday afternoons ever since they can remember. Composer Mabel Daniels, Dr. Francis Rackemann, Mrs. Edwin Cave, Mrs. Robert Daly, Mrs. Sewell Fessenden, Mrs. John Barker, Mrs. Ronald T. Lyman, Mrs. Gerald Holten, Mrs. Cesare Lombroso and Aaron Richmond were also part of the kaleidoscopic pattern of familiar faces mingling into that vast privileged sea of quiet faces as Erich Leinsdorf turned to face the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PAGE ONE

SYMPHONY
Page 4

Academic Festival Overture Guides Them to Their Places

4

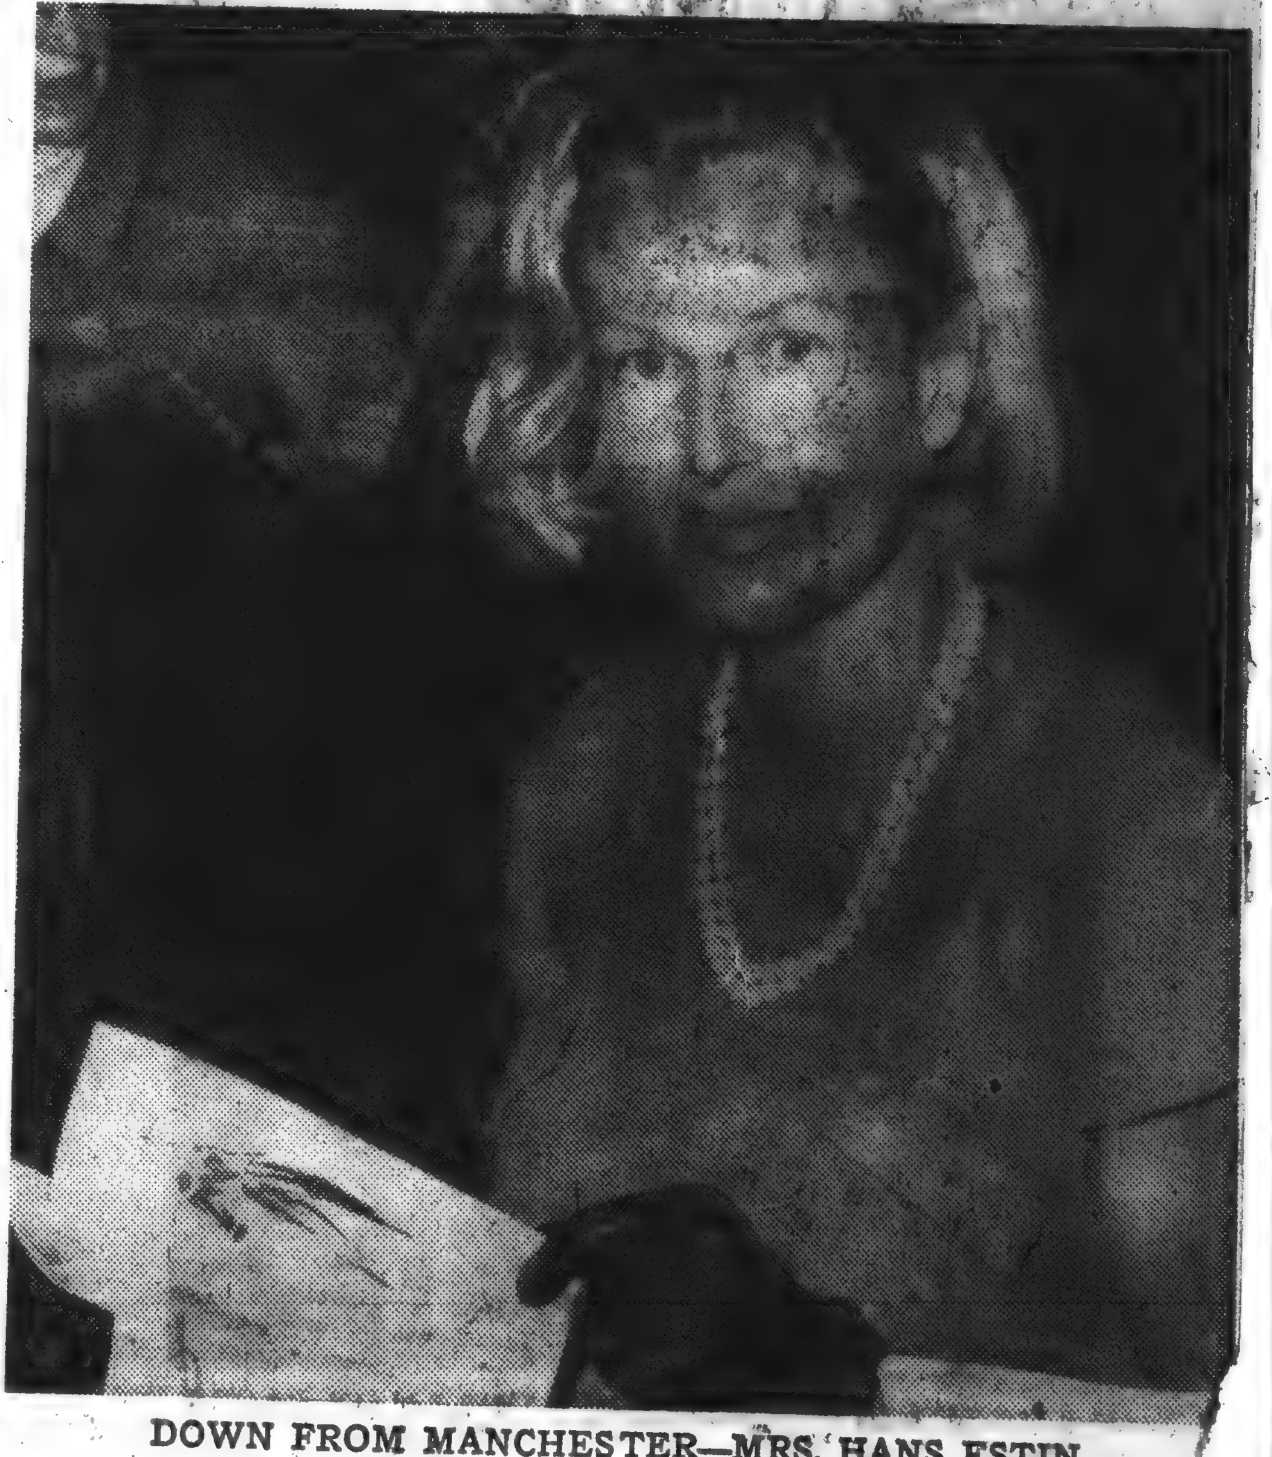
★ SYMPHONY

Continued from Page 1

Pres. Henry Cabot and Vice Pres. Talcott Banks and their wives walked over with the BSO's silver-tongued Harry Dickson from the Midtown, where Harry inaugurated this season's "World of Music—Inside the BSO" Symphony luncheon, sharing a distinguished head table with the consuls of a dozen countries, Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mme. Serge Koussevitzky, and the chairman, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten. Others of the vast audience came on from the Ritz, where the Women's City Club also had a sold-out Symphony luncheon, and Ruby Newman played across the threshold both to these festive tables where Mrs. Sidney Rabb, Mrs. Paul Clark, Mrs. Stephen Casey and Mrs. Harold Davis presided, as well as to the section reserved by the Ritz at one end of the main dining room for those who wished to lunch in solitary splendor, unjoined by friends.

Following the last lovely note of the Beethoven Pastoral Symphony, Symphony's Women's Council headed by Mrs. Louis Cabot and Mrs. Norman Cahners met to plan more luncheons and programs to increase the ranks of the Friends of Symphony who are doing much to close the gap between the hard-working B.S.O. (130 concerts and a new Wednesday series) earnings and the large deficit this wonderful orchestra still faces annually.

MRS. THOMAS PERRY, EDWARD A. TAFT MEET



DOWN FROM MANCHESTER—MRS. HANS ESTIN

SHOWTHROUGH

SUN. I TUES. I THURS. I 11

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 27, at 3:00 o'clock

BRAHMS .... "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS .... "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 1, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS .... "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
[illegible], Boston 02105 - 742-4200

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
Standard-Times
Sun. Circ. 55,328

OCT - 4 1964

Boston Symphony Has New Members

Last Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert, a rather conventional but well-played program that included Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1," and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, made us realize, somewhat sadly, that six familiar faces were missing from the Boston ensemble.

First-cellist Samuel Mayes and first violist Joseph de Pasquale have joined the ranks of Eugene Ormandy's Philadelphia Orchestra as have cellist Winifred Winograd. Moreover, three other players have retired—English hornist Louis Speyer, violinist Vladimir Resnikoff, and oboist Jean de Vergie. Replacing Mr. Mayes as first chair in the cello section is Jules Eskin, with Burton Fine (who has a Ph.D. in chemistry) replacing Mr. de Pasquale and Laurence Thorstenberg, Mr. Speyer.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, however, obviously used wise judgment in selecting from auditions the new members of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony sound is still lush, the musicians play with precision and intelligent response, and there seems to be the same esprit de corps that was so pleasingly in evidence last season.

This, incidentally, will be the orchestra's busiest season with a total of 124 scheduled concerts.

SHOWTHROUGH

SUN. I TUES. I THURS. I

11

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, September 27, at 3:00 o'clock

Brahms . . . . "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

Shostakovitch . . . . Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

Beethoven . . . . Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, September 29, at 8:30 o'clock

Brahms . . . . "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

Shostakovitch . . . . Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

Beethoven . . . . Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

THURSDAY EVENING, October 1, at 8:30 o'clock

Brahms . . . . "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

Shostakovitch . . . . Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

Beethoven . . . . Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
Standard-Times
Sun. Circ. 55,328

OCT -4 1964

Boston Symphony Has New Members

Last Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert, a rather conventional but well-played program that included Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1," and Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, made us realize, somewhat sadly, that six familiar faces were missing from the Boston ensemble.

First-cellist Samuel Mayes and first violist Joseph de Pasouale have joined the ranks of Eugene Ormandy's Philadelphia Orchestra as have cellist Winifred Winograd. Moreover, three other players have retired—English hornist Louis Speyer, violinist Vladimir Resnikoff, and oboist Jean de Vergie. Replacing Mr. Mayes as first chair in the cello section is Jules Eskin, with Burton Fine (who has a Ph.D. in chemistry) replacing Mr. de Pasquale and Laurence Thorstenberg, Mr. Speyer.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, however, obviously used wise judgment in selecting from auditions the new members of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony sound is still lush, the musicians play with precision and intelligent response, and there seems to be the same esprit de corps that was so pleasingly in evidence last season.

This, incidentally, will be the orchestra's busiest season with a total of 124 scheduled concerts.

12 FRI-SAT. 2.

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 2, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 3, at 8:30 o'clock

Mozart . . . . Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504
- I. Adagio; Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Finale: Presto

Berger . . . . Polyphony

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

Mendelssohn . . . *Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56
- I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
- II. Vivace non troppo
- III. Adagio
- IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

A new plan for ticket reservations is announced on page 85.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

OCT 3 1964

At Symphony

A Varied Program

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

On Friday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Mozart's Prague Symphony, Arthur Berger's "Polyphony," and the Mendelssohn Scottish Symphony. The three make a good program, agreeably contrasted as they are on the surface, and yet linked by their common allegiance to classicism.

Mozart's symphony is a product of the high flowering of Viennese classicism, wonderfully enriched by the polyphonic techniques that he had begun to infuse into his work about four years earlier. With Berger, the title calls attention to the importance of polyphonic writing, but the language spoken by his contraputal textures is essentially that of Stravinskian neo-classicism.

And Mendelssohn was, of course, the great classic among the Romantics. The expression of passion in his music is much nearer to the "Sturm und Drang" symphonies of Haydn and Mozart in the 1770's than to Schumann and Chopin. In spite of the programmatic implications of the word "Scottish," the stress on the pictorial element is not pronounced—in fact, Schumann managed on one occasion to mistake the Scottish Symphony for the Italian! Above all, Mendelssohn's architectural sense was thoroughly classical, and he was one of the very few composers in the 19th century to whom classical formal traditions represented a living language rather than an archaism to be revered and imitated.

Arthur Berger wrote "Polyphony" in 1955 on commission from the Louisville Orchestra, and it was the last of his pieces to be very much under the spell of Stravinsky, especially the Stravinsky of "Card Game" and the Symphony in C. "Polyphony" is a single movement for classical orchestra, perhaps 15 minutes long, and divided into four clearly defined but linked selections.

Rhythm and texture are handled in classical fashion. There are plenty of cross-accents and syncopations, but the meter is an unbroken 4/4. The very effective scoring is transparent, with no suggestion of Romantic filler or Impressionist haze, in a word again, classical. And like everything in "Polyphony" it is understated.

In assuming along with the rest of the neo-classic tradition a certain kind of dead-pan expression, Berger assumed a great risk. The activity in "Polyphony" is to me very absorbing, but it is difficult to write in a way that is absorbing to many people if the style is one that eschews dramatic contrasts of pace, timbre, and dynamics.

In "Polyphony," Berger has used his language with beautiful musicality and with the most fastidious taste. Now and again something breaks through the rather impersonal surface, for example, the superb last pages in which tiny motivic fragments are projected across a menacing, approaching and withdrawing, tremolando of low strings. And it is pleasant to know that all the ability and the refined selectivity so evident in "Polyphony" were later put to use in the vigorously creative way that produced, for example, the String Quartet of 1958.

Leinsdorf's performance o "Polyphony" was adequate i the sense that it was extreme ly clear, but compared to th recorded performance by th Louisville Orchestra unde Robert Whitney, the only othe I have heard, it lacked charr and, more surprisingly, refine ment.

There was no lack of refine ment in the Prague Symphon which was elegantly done i the intelligent and rather in personal manner of Leinsdorf best Mozart performances. Th only bad musical flaw was th uncontrolled rushing of th woodwinds whenever the played alone in the final

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

OCT 3 1964

Chaos in order

By Harold Rogers

"Do you know what the Berger made me think of?" she asked.

"No," I said. "What?"

"Well," she said, "it's like when you give a dinner party for eight people, and all of a sudden you find you're late for the theater, so you all talk at once as you mill around putting on your hats and coats, and then you rush out of the door, only somebody has forgotten something and has to go back, and finally when you get to the theater, it's all over."

It was intermission at the Friday afternoon concert, and she was referring to the first performance by the Boston Symphony of Arthur Berger's "Polyphony."

I had to admit that her description was apt, yet it was also evident that Mr. Berger's piece is not actually chaotic at all. It is extremely ordered. It just sounds chaotic to the ear that is not trained to listen to this particular kind of order.

* * *

Back in 1954 Charles Munch conducted Mr. Berger's "Ideas of Order," which had a far more disorderly effect on listeners than does his "Polyphony," composed a year later. It was reported that during rehearsals Dr. Munch was so exercised by the "Ideas of Order" that he permitted himself to mention several unmentionable French words.

But Mr. Berger's "Polyphony" is, in its way, rather ingratiating stuff. It finds its base in the neo-classical tradition and reaches forth into the 12-tonal tradition, where Mr. Berger spends most of his time today.

His "Polyphony" is not polyphonic as most people understand polyphony; it is rather, to use his own words, the "practice of using linear elements as compositional determinants." He then goes on to explain this professorial statement by saying that he uses certain intervals linearly to produce a kind of basic cell, and from this cell he produces the piece, both melodically and chordally.

Interesting to the musicologist. Not so interesting to the concertgoing ear. Solo instruments sing out briefly. Tempos vary. But the expostulation continues throughout as does the general instrumental coloring. The early charm wears thin as the work proceeds along its hiccoughing path. Its embodiment of intellectual skill is impressive. Its emotional message is negligible.

* * *

The emotional elements were not in the ascendant from the outset of Erich Leinsdorf's program on this occasion. He opened with an antiseptic reading of Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, taking all repeats so as to extend the work to almost 40 minutes. Mr. Leinsdorf has given us some magnificent Mozart at Tanglewood, but 40 minutes of sterilized Mozart was, on this occasion, tedious and soporific.

He closed with Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony, with all i's dotted, all t's crossed—flawless, in fact, if you wish to measure performance in terms of organized sound. It is interesting how Mr. Leinsdorf can get so much beautiful sound out of the Boston Symphony and so little emotion.

SHOWTHROUGH

12 FRI - SAT. 2.

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 2, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 3, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART . . . . Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504
- I. Adagio; Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Finale: Presto

BERGER . . . . Polyphony

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN . . . . *Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56
- I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
- II. Vivace non troppo
- III. Adagio
- IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

A new plan for ticket reservations is announced on page 85.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

OCT 3 1964

Chaos in order

By Harold Rogers

"Do you know what the Berger made me think of?" she asked.

"No," I said. "What?"

"Well," she said, "it's like when you give a dinner party for eight people, and all of a sudden you find you're late for the theater, so you all talk at once as you mill around putting on your hats and coats, and then you rush out of the door, only somebody has forgotten something and has to go back, and finally when you get to the theater, it's all over."

It was intermission at the Friday afternoon concert, and she was referring to the first performance by the Boston Symphony of Arthur Berger's "Polyphony."

I had to admit that her description was apt, yet it was also evident that Mr. Berger's piece is not actually chaotic at all. It is extremely ordered. It just sounds chaotic to the ear that is not trained to listen to this particular kind of order.

* * *

Back in 1954 Charles Munch conducted Mr. Berger's "Ideas of Order," which had a far more disorderly effect on listeners than does his "Polyphony," composed a year later. It was reported that during rehearsals Dr. Munch was so exercised by the "Ideas of Order" that he permitted himself to mention several unmentionable French words.

But Mr. Berger's "Polyphony" is, in its way, rather ingratiating stuff. It finds its base in the neo-classical tradition and reaches forth into the 12-tonal tradition, where Mr. Berger spends most of his time today.

His "Polyphony" is not polyphonic as most people understand polyphony; it is rather, to use his own words, the "practice of using linear elements as compositional determinants." He then goes on to explain this professorial statement by saying that he uses certain intervals linearly to produce a kind of basic cell, and from this cell he produces the piece, both melodically and chordally.

Interesting to the musicologist. Not so interesting to the concertgoing ear. Solo instruments sing out briefly. Tempos vary. But the expostulation continues throughout as does the general instrumental coloring. The early charm wears thin as the work proceeds along its hiccoughing path. Its embodiment of intellectual skill is impressive. Its emotional message is negligible.

* * *

The emotional elements were not in the ascendant from the outset of Erich Leinsdorf's program on this occasion. He opened with an antiseptic reading of Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, taking all repeats so as to extend the work to almost 40 minutes. Mr. Leinsdorf has given us some magnificent Mozart at Tanglewood, but 40 minutes of sterilized Mozart was, on this occasion, tedious and soporific.

He closed with Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony, with all i's dotted, all t's crossed—flawless, in fact, if you wish to measure performance in terms of organized sound. It is interesting how Mr. Leinsdorf can get so much beautiful sound out of the Boston Symphony and so little [illegible]

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 – 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

OCT 3 1964

At Symphony

A Varied Program

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

On Friday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in Mozart's Prague Symphony, Arthur Berger's "Polyphony," and the Mendelssohn Scottish Symphony. The three make a good program, agreeably contrasted as they are on the surface, and yet linked by their common allegiance to classicism.

Mozart's symphony is a product of the high flowering of Viennese classicism, wonderfully enriched by the polyphonic techniques that he had begun to infuse into his work about four years earlier. With Berger, the title calls attention to the importance of polyphonic writing, but the language spoken by his contraputal textures is essentially that of Stravinskian neo-classicism.

And Mendelssohn was, of course, the great classic among the Romantics. The expression of passion in his music is much nearer to the "Sturm und Drang" symphonies of Haydn and Mozart in the 1770's than to Schumann and Chopin. In spite of the programmatic implications of the word "Scottish," the stress on the pictorial element is not pronounced—in fact, Schumann managed on one occasion to mistake the Scottish Symphony for the Italian! Above all, Mendelssohn's architectural sense was thoroughly classical, and he was one of the very few composers in the 19th century to whom classical formal traditions represented a living language rather than an archaism to be revered and imitated.

Arthur Berger wrote "Polyphony" in 1955 on commission from the Louisville Orchestra, and it was the last of his pieces to be very much under the spell of Stravinsky, especially the Stravinsky of "Card Game" and the Symphony in C. "Polyphony" is a single movement for classical orchestra, perhaps 15 minutes long, and divided into four clearly defined but linked selections.

Rhythm and texture are handled in classical fashion. There are plenty of cross-accents and syncopations, but the meter is an unbroken 4/4. The very effective scoring is transparent, with no suggestion of Romantic filler or Impressionist haze, in a word again, classical. And like everything in "Polyphony" it is understated.

In assuming along with the rest of the neo-classic tradition a certain kind of dead-pan expression, Berger assumed a great risk. The activity in "Polyphony" is to me very absorbing, but it is difficult to write in a way that is absorbing to many people if the style is one that eschews dramatic contrasts of pace, timbre, and dynamics.

In "Polyphony," Berger has used his language with beautiful musicality and with the most fastidious taste. Now and again something breaks through the rather impersonal surface, for example, the superb last pages in which tiny motivic fragments are projected across a menacing, approaching and withdrawing, tremolando of low strings. And it is pleasant to know that all the ability and the refined selectivity so evident in "Polyphony" were later put to use in the vigorously creative way that produced, for example, the String Quartet of 1958.

Leinsdorf's performance o "Polyphony" was adequate i the sense that it was extremely clear, but compared to th recorded performance by th Louisville Orchestra unde Robert Whitney, the only othe I have heard, it lacked charr and, more surprisingly, refinement.

There was no lack of refinement in the Prague Symphon which was elegantly done the intelligent and rather i personal manner of Leinsdorf best Mozart performances. Th only bad musical flaw was th uncontrolled rushing of th woodwinds whenever th played alone in the final

13

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

3 1964

SYMPHONY: 'Scottish' Is Surprise

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Arthur Berger's Polyphony, a modest amiable yet tenuous [illegible] was heard for the first [illegible] Friday-Saturday series [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, but the surprise of [illegible] concert turned out to be Erich Leinsdorf's resplendent treatment of Mendelssohn's "Scottish" symphony.

[illegible] craftsmanship distinguishes Polyphony, which was written [illegible] years ago at Cape Cod and Cambridge on commission from the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Berger declares that the title was selected as a [illegible] drawing attention to the [illegible] element of composition; [illegible] the work finished I was [illegible] puzzled, for polyphonic [illegible] in his structure may be, the [illegible] most manifest in his musical discourse is the harmonic element.

Modern Sound

[illegible] this seem unfashionable to [illegible] baroque-minded age, Mr. Berger has further compounded his [illegible] by producing an orthodox, [illegible] score rather than a [illegible] hop exercise. Subtle, civilized, punctuated by reference to historical form, Polyphony retains modern sound. The approach is [illegible]ical, yet the bright instrumental and rhythmic impress [illegible] the lines force and flavor. Furthermore, the work, unlike so many instances of current musical vocabulary, lacks affectation, [illegible] weary shock effects that [illegible]ter new music like obscenities in bad novels.

Mr. Berger is not just manipulating counterpoint; his music communicates shapely emotion. Polyphony has the scrupulous virtue of well-bred conversation. Such conversation is not apt to stir one unduly, however. The low-pitched, temperate flow establishes a monotony of mood; the inflections lack dramatic highs and lows.

Hence, I found the pleasures of the dialogue relatively mild, though distinct, through a lack of dramatic contrast. Mr. Berger had a clear, even statement to make without raising his voice. At [illegible] close the music subsided [illegible]-sentence, and one had the feeling that while he might go on like this indefinitely, the composer had sensibly decided not to [illegible] his audience. He was [illegible] — Mr. Berger, an eminent music critic of times past is now Naumberg Professor of Music at Brandeis — to acknowledge the applause that greeted an orderly, minor production.

In Mendelssohn's "Scottish" [illegible], Mr. Leinsdorf made a [illegible] impression, a noble interpretation of a score too The grace and charm of his tem- esteem far ahead of the driven, tense Munch version last heard here, and the same relaxed songfulness leads me to place it, too, ahead of the rhetorical depiction of Koussevitzky.

Melodic Ease

The performance had an amplitude and weight that stemmed in part from judicious doubling of winds and the inclusion of four bassoons. Mr. Leinsdorf, though, derived scope through floating melodic ease and meticulous emphasis on detail instead of purely textural means.

The result was enchanting, lyrical warmth, a glow that surrounded each section, taken as the composer intended, without pause. There was nothing synthetic or over-elaborated about the performance, no spurious Byronic characterization; Mr. Leinsdorf achieved freedom while retaining full orchestral control. The exceptional dynamic shading of the adagio, beautifully moulded into the long flow of the entire symphony, had all the merit of splendidly articulated, thoughtful restraint. A soaring spontaneity filled Mr. Leinsdorf's utterance, with all its disicipline, and I shall not fault it.

He got some ravishing woodwind balances in the "Prague" Symphony as well, but fastidious adherence to the historical Mozart caused the work to sound thin over-all. There is no reason why a full body of strings shouldn't be used: Mozart himself many times expressed his preference for a larger scale. Furthermore, the dynamics of many violinists are

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the second program of the 84th season yesterday. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony No. 38, in D major,
"Prague," K. 504 .... Mozart
Polyphony .... Berger
Symphony No. 3, in A minor,
"Scottish,' Op. 56 .... Mendelssohn far easier to control than of a scattering.

---

Yesterday's performance sounded diminutive. When you consider that the "Prague" symphony has associations with the thematic proportions of "Don Giovanni," surely it is no occasion for chamber-music filigree-- but the "Scottish" more than compensated for general anemia in the first part of the program.

Next week Richard Burgin conducts Elliot Carter's Variations, Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony No. 4, in C Minor, and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" arranged by Ravel.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

Balanced Concert

MARKS SECOND BSO CONCERT

By PETER DAVISON

The second concert of the new symphony season showed Mr. Leinsdorf in a balanced program, which was characteristic in everything but his usual originality of choice. Two of the three pieces on the program were classical in intention and were performed with a taut, dry degree of control that over-emphasized their classical qualities. The third was romantic and benefited from Mr. Leinsdorf's control and astringent reading.

In the old days of Koussevitsky, Mozart was conducted with a winsome touch of sentiment that added a Russian depth of feeling to the exquisite Austrian quality of the original. Munch conducted Mozart with a careless, sometimes even sloppy, passion that added nothing and detracted much. Leinsdorf is the purist of the three and gave to the Prague Symphony in D Major a germ-free reading that emphasized the formal outlines of the music at, it must be said, the expense of almost everything else. Mr. Leinsdorf, as has often been noted, uses the small classical orchestra and reads Mozart's scores with all the original repeats. The result last Saturday evening was a period piece, slightly out of balance because of the strength of the violins (who did not always make their attacks with perfect intonation). We in the audience were faced with an astringent sound, somewhat lacking in sonority.

Arthur Berger's Polyphone (1955) is a one-movement piece, Stravinskyan in style. It is, like much of Berger's work in that period, very tentative, quasi-technical music, which sounds as though it had been written and performed on tiptoe, with all the timorousness of someone playing an unfamiliar instrument in the dark. There was, except for the very closing measures, little of robustness and vitality in this tightly-controlled music; and the orchestra played it as though they were fearful of straying from the composer's instructions.

The most one can say for this piece, in human terms, is that it contains not a shred of vulgarity; but one almost wished for a lumpish piece of awkwardness to make it sound like music instead of an exercise. Perhaps Mr. Berger's more recent work with tone-rows and electronics machinery will produce more exciting results than this neo-classical academicism.

Mendelsohn's Scotch Symphony was the last, and by far the most successful, work on the program. Perhaps the reason Mendelsohn in recent years has come to seem rather hackneyed is that he is seldom conducted with the care that Mr. Leinsdorf gave the Scotch Symphony. Mendelsohn is usually approached with a hectic flush and the sentiment in the music consequently tends to run away with the performers. Yet sentiment in music must be held in control if the feeling is to make itself known; and the feeling on Saturday night was conveyed as completely and convincingly as I can remember hearing it in Mendelsohn. Mr. Leinsdorf here, as in his masterful direction of Schubert, gave the music just the strictness and virility it needed. The conductor, as it were, reinforced the skeleton, and the symphony provided the musculature for a powerful, affecting and healthy athletic performance. The audience showed its excitement by an extended round of applause.

The third program in this series, on Oct. 9 and 10, will present Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, No. 4 in C Minor; Elliott Carter's Variations (a premiere at these concerts) and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" in the Ravel orchestration.

NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W 24,103

DEC 7 1964

The Berger Polyphony, played in October by the Boston Symphony, is one of those works that ultimately generate a far more powerful originality than the surface initially gives away; this is the fundamentally Stravinskian aspect of the piece, rather than the few details of texture and melody that one may immediately associate with Stravinsky's work. And in any case, the surface itself is so full of striking details of sonority and rhythm, particularly the elastic registral and time-spacing, and such a sensitivity to the qualities of every musical moment that each attack appears vividly differentiated, and seems to require its own special nuance. But underneath its tensile, brittle surface, Polyphony develops a unique synthesis of "diatonic" and "chromatic," in which the juxtaposition of familiar but previously separate elements creates a whole complex of new linear and harmonic relationships. Similarly, the familiar ideas of recurrence and contrast are transformed into a dramatic duality between energy and quiescence; passages of great apparent activity, such as the opening, have an equality of rhythmic accentuation that overtakes them from within with a progressive stasis that eventually engulfs the entire texture; the succeeding "calm" passages are undermined by an inner rhythmic turbulence that drives the texture into activity once again. The climax is in the final section, which repeatedly but unavailingly gropes for the opening; at [illegible] the two ideas are violently juxtaposed as the violins virtually try to tear through the registral roof over an insistent, unvarying one-note tremolo—the ultimate musical activity without real motion—which persists to become the final sound. In the performance, Erich Leinsdorf seemed genuinely to conduct the piece, effectively controlling some of its most difficult rhythmic transitions. Aside from the thrill of hearing, for once, all the components of a chord from bass to glockenspiel attack together, and of hearing a full-bodied mass of strings really produce a single line of sound, the unfair comparison with the recording by the brave but barely professional Louisville Orchestra only proves the necessity of having our important professional ensembles available to perform our important professional music.

14

FRI. - SAT. 3

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT . . . . Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro assai

CARTER . . . . Variations for Orchestra

Introduction — Allegro
Theme — Andante
Variations — Vivace leggero
Pesante
Moderato
Ritardando molto
Allegro misterioso
Accelerando molto
Andante
Allegro giocoso
Andante
Allegro molto

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY . . . . "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

OCT 1 0 1964

Burgin on podium

Carter the inventor

By John Marshall Cuno

When a conductor conveys his deep musical awarenesses and his enjoyment of a work, as well as his directorial authority, the gestures one sees described before an orchestra can be flowing and felt, like meaningful, impassioned sculpture come to life. It is a condition that involves the whole person, not just the official capacities.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is such a ~~man. There are~~ moments when he seems to sense the larger rhythms of man and nature in accord with the universe. One cannot watch him without feeling his dedication and his total commitment to life. Music is a way to convey that commitment. It is hardly an end in itself. Mussorgsky would have agreed.

* * *

His selections Friday afternoon were well chosen in that they included two works from the conventional repertoire representing a range of moods and style—Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony No. 4 in C minor, and Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" (the orchestration by Maurice Ravel) — and a third selection by the contemporary Elliott Carter, Variations for Orchestra.

The "Tragic" symphony provided a serene beauty in its slow movement with the elegant horns lending firm and lyric strength. In the flowing Andante, the reeds were nothing less than persuasive. This movement is like a lingering and poignant farewell, even though a middle portion offers sudden and lively contrast and then blends back again with little notice.

* * *

In Carter's variations, full of rhythmic, subtle nuances, the orchestra was at least alive and freshly spontaneous, if not inspired. Certainly unnumbered images flow into the mind of the listener. The work is even more visual than Mussorgsky's "Pictures." The harp pluckings are like seeds dropping in a pool. There are slow, sweeping sounds involving most of the instruments, vibrating and humming together like a forest alive.

And in juxtaposition with lyrical phrases come the cacophonies of the industrial age, metallic-sounding combinations with many small and sudden surprises and intervals of silence. Delicate linear interchanges are followed by deep, strong chords, enriching the textural fabric and complicating the dynamics.

* * *

The orchestra wrought into a consistently unified pattern and larger shape a remarkably diverse and contrasting assortment of sonorities and images: nonmusical noises have their rhythmic function; percussives and rapid string work, drums and cellos, muted trumpets — all have their voices and their statements.

In spite of the ease with which comes the temptation to enlarge the color of "Pictures at an Exhibition" at the expense of minor subtleties, Mr. Burgin's reading of this work was noteworthy primarily for its enjoyable abandon in the larger themes. He was not afraid to paint with broad strokes.

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 465,653

OCT 4 1964

Programs at Symphony

"Variations," a work by Elliott Carter, will have its first Symphony Hall performances Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 in concerts by the Boston Symphony. Richard Burgin, associate conductor and the orchestra's former concertmaster, will conduct.

The Carter composition was first played in Boston last March at a concert by the New England Conservatory Orchestra under Frederik Prausnitz.

Burgin's programs will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4 in C minor, subtitled "Tragic," and will conclude with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Ravel.

This past Summer Burgin served as head of the Department of Instrumental Music of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. In addition to his full schedule of teaching duties he conducted one concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and two concerts of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf will devote his time this week to a heavy schedule of recording with the orchestra for RCA Victor in Symphony Hall. He will return to conduct the concerts of Oct. 16 and 17. Because of the recording schedule there will be no other Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall this week.

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 1964

CARTER

"It added up to a convincing statement of a very great work," Michael Steinberg of the Boston Globe said, following the October 10 performance of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin, associate director, conducting.

"The variations are a brilliantly imagined piece of virtuoso writing for symphony orchestra," he added. The work, a Louisville commission, "[is] made fascinating by the interaction of simplicity and complexity, the relation of the stunningly simple over-all design and the complex detail with which that design is realized."

"We respond to the finesse of the linear tensions, to the adroitly detailed patterns, to the sense of musical space, to the precise sonorities and weights," Robert Taylor wrote in the Boston Herald. "As an example of modern architecture, Mr. Carter does not build with clinical severity; behind his craft is the presence of a human being."

---

ewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

ecord-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 1 0 19

'Variations' By Carter Top BSO Program

Elliott Carter's "Variations for Orchestra" featured [illegible] season's third Boston Symphony concert here yesterday afternoon. Assoc. Condr. Richard Burgin also presented Schubert's "Tragic" symphony as a curtain-raiser, concluding after the interval with the Musorgski-Ravel "Pictures from an Exhibition."

Dr. Carter's recondite work introduced mordant sonorities projected by orchestral instruments in virtuosic manner. Though his concept is symphonic, the orchestral textures are of almost chamber-music elegance.

His variations are inordinately complex, without the sectional characteristics commonly associated with this form, providing a unified, but exceedingly elaborate network of sound, concentrated and outlandish, yet alluring. Only in the finale did one realize that the so-called "Retreat from Wagner" hasn't gotten very far after all.

NEW AMBITIONS

Schubert's Fourth Symphony revealed new ambitions, for the gifted Austrian lyricist had just discovered Beethoven when, at 19, he composed this minor masterpiece. Indeed, he aimed at nothing less than another "Eroica," calling his own symphony the "Tragic."

It shows increased growth, greater individuality and a marked preoccupation with format and unity, but one feels he had not yet amassed either the knowledge or spiritual maturity sufficient for his needs. Schubert's was a hastily assimilated Beethovan, keen in emulation, but with inadequate grasp. Only the finale shows true originality, but this closing movement was very well played and free of straining for orchestral effects with forthright musicianship and enlivening sympathy. Furthermore, the chromatic interplay of the slow movement elicited gemlike precision.

Serge Kousevitzky's superb feeling for the orchestrated version of Musorgski's episodic tone-poem for piano which he commissioned Maurice Ravel to put into instrumental form has been passed on to his concertmaster, Richard Burgin. Yesterday's performance perhaps was less expansive, but sometimes more exciting.

FASTER FIALE

Burgin's slightly faster tempo for the finale, big climax in "Bydlo" and instrumental virtuosity in "Limoges" were high lights. The brass choir was fine and rich in "Catacombs," where such sonorities are necessary. These solemn brass chords were so impressive that emotional attention was rivited. Ravel's use of the saxophone for the melody in "The Old Castle," perhaps an exceptional example of the French orchestrator's intent to shock listeners, made a spectacular effect.

Rolfe Boswell.

SHOWTHROUGH

14 FRI. - SAT. 3.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 9, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT . . . . Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

- I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
- IV. Allegro assai

CARTER . . . . Variations for Orchestra

Introduction — Allegro
Theme — Andante
Variations — Vivace leggero
Pesante
Moderato
Ritardando molto
Allegro misterioso
Accelerando molto
Andante
Allegro giocoso
Andante
Allegro molto
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY . . . . "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
OCT 1 0 1964

Burgin on podium

Carter the inventor.

By John Marshall Cuno

When a conductor conveys his deep musical awarenesses and his enjoyment of a work, as well as his directorial authority, the gestures one sees described before an orchestra can be flowing and felt, like meaningful, impassioned sculpture come to life. It is a condition that involves the whole person, not just the official capacities.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is such a ~~man. There are~~ moments when he seems to sense the larger rhythms of man and nature in accord with the universe. One cannot watch him without feeling his dedication and his total commitment to life. Music is a way to convey that commitment. It is hardly an end in itself. Mussorgsky would have agreed.

* * *

His selections Friday afternoon were well chosen in that they included two works from the conventional repertoire representing a range of moods and style—Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony No. 4 in C minor, and Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" (the orchestration by Maurice Ravel) — and a third selection by the contemporary Elliott Carter, Variations for Orchestra.

The "Tragic" symphony provided a serene beauty in its slow movement with the elegant horns lending firm and lyric strength. In the flowing Andante, the reeds were nothing less than persuasive. This movement is like a lingering and poignant farewell, even though a middle portion offers sudden and lively contrast and then blends back again with little notice.

* * *

In Carter's variations, full of rhythmic, subtle nuances, the orchestra was at least alive and freshly spontaneous, if not inspired. Certainly unnumbered images flow into the mind of the listener. The work is even more visual than Mussorgsky's "Pictures." The harp pluckings are like seeds dropping in a pool. There are slow, sweeping sounds involving most of the instruments, vibrating and humming together like a forest alive.

And in juxtaposition with lyrical phrases come the cacophonies of the industrial age, metallic-sounding combinations with many small and sudden surprises and intervals of silence. Delicate linear interchanges are followed by deep, strong chords, enriching the textural fabric and complicating the dynamics.

* * *

The orchestra wrought into a consistently unified pattern and larger shape a remarkably diverse and contrasting assortment of sonorities and images: nonmusical noises have their rhythmic function; percussives and rapid string work, drums and cellos, muted trumpets — all have their voices and their statements.

In spite of the ease with which comes the temptation to enlarge the color of "Pictures at an Exhibition" at the expense of minor subtleties, Mr. Burgin's reading of this work was noteworthy primarily for its enjoyable abandon in the larger themes. He was not afraid to paint with broad strokes.

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 465,653
OCT 4 1964

Programs at Symphony

"Variations," a work by Elliott Carter, will have its first Symphony Hall performances Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 in concerts by the Boston Symphony. Richard Burgin, associate conductor and the orchestra's former concertmaster, will conduct.

The Carter composition was first played in Boston last March at a concert by the New England Conservatory Orchestra under Frederik Prausnitz.

Burgin's programs will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4 in C minor, subtitled "Tragic," and will conclude with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Ravel.

This past Summer Burgin served as head of the Department of Instrumental Music of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. In addition to his full schedule of teaching duties he conducted one concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood and two concerts of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf will devote his time this week to a heavy schedule of recording with the orchestra for RCA Victor in Symphony Hall. He will return to conduct the concerts of Oct. 16 and 17. Because of the recording schedule there will be no other Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall this week.

BMI -
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 1964

CARTER

"It added up to a convincing statement of a very great work," Michael Steinberg of the Boston Globe said, following the October 10 performance of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin, associate director, conducting.

"The variations are a brilliantly imagined piece of virtuoso writing for symphony orchestra," he added. The work, a Louisville commission, "[is] made fascinating by the interaction of simplicity and complexity, the relation of the stunningly simple over-all design and the complex detail with which that design is realized."

"We respond to the finesse of the linear tensions, to the adroitly detailed patterns, to the sense of musical space, to the precise sonorities and weights," Robert Taylor wrote in the Boston Herald. "As an example of modern architecture, Mr. Carter does not build with clinical severity; behind his craft is the presence of a human being."

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
ecord-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810
OCT 1 0 1964

'Variations' By Carter Top BSO Program

Elliott Carter's "Variations for Orchestra" featured this season's third Boston Symphony concert here yesterday afternoon. Assoc. Condr. Richard Burgin also presented Schubert's 'Tragic" symphony as a curtain-raiser, concluding after the interval with the Musorgski-Ravel "Pictures from an Exibition."

Dr. Carter's recondite work introduced mordant sonorities projected by orchestral instruments in virtuosic manner. Though his concept is symphonic, the orchestral textures are of almost chamber-music elegance.

His variations are inordinately complex, without the sectional characteristics commonly associated with this form, providing a unified, but exceedingly elaborate network of sound, concentrated and outlandish, yet alluring. Only in the finale did one realize that the so-called "Retreat from Wagner" hasn't gotten very far after all.

NEW AMBITIONS

Schubert's Fourth Symphony revealed new ambitions, for the gifted Austrian lyricist had just discovered Beethoven when, at 19, he composed this minor masterpiece. Indeed, he aimed at nothing less than another "Eroica," calling his own symphony the "Tragic."

It shows increased growth, greater individuality and a marked preoccupation with format and unity, but one feels he had not yet amassed either the knowledge or spiritual maturity sufficient for his needs. Schubert's was a hastily assimilated Beethovan, keen in emulation, but with inadequate grasp. Only the finale shows true originality, but this closing movement was very well played and free of straining for orchestral effects with forthright musicianship and enlivening sympathy. Furthermore, the chromatic interplay of the slow movement elicited gemlike precision.

Serge Kousevitzky's superb feeling for the orchestrated version of Musorgski's episodic tone-poem for piano which he commissioned Maurice Ravel to put into instrumental form has been passed on to his concertmaster, Richard Burgin. Yesterday's performance perhaps was less expansive, but sometimes more exciting.

FASTER FIALE

Burgin's slightly faster tempo for the finale, big climax in "Bydlo" and instrumental virtuosity in "Limoges" were high lights. The brass choir was fine and rich in "Catacombs," where such sonorities are necessary. These solemn brass chords were so impressive that emotional attention was rivited. Ravel"s use of the saxophone for the melody in "The Old Castle," perhaps an exceptional example of the French orchestrator's intent to shock listeners, made a spectacular effect.

Rolfe Boswell.

TIGHT BINDING

15

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

At Symphony

Carter 'Variations' Led by Burgin

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

[illegible] many years as [illegible] ductor of the [illegible] Orchestra, [illegible] always assumed [illegible] responsibility of [illegible] important new music [illegible] likely to appear on [illegible] of the current [illegible] Burgin's pro[illegible] the yearse reflect [illegible] of taste and above [illegible] ordinary sense of [illegible]. Often, while the [illegible] ctor has been ab[illegible] Hanson, Jolivet, and [illegible] Burgin has put [illegible], and Webern on the [illegible] and at Friday after[illegible] cert he added dis[illegible] the Boston Sym[illegible] on by conducting the [illegible] for Orchestra by [illegible] ter.

[illegible] not the first performance [illegible] Boston: that privilege [illegible] glory went to the Symphony Orchestra of the New [illegible] Conservatory, who [illegible] under Frederik Prausnitz [illegible] March. At the time I quoted a pre-concert lecture by the composers Robert Co[illegible] and Pozzi Escot, at which [illegible] was said that the Variations were the most significant orchestral score produced in America during the past decade. After rehearing the Variations in Burgin's performance, which was on the whole effective, I should be inclined to make an even stronger statement [illegible] the importance and [illegible] beauty of the piece.

The Variations are made fa[illegible] by the interaction of simplicity and complexity, the relation of the stunningly simple overall design and the complex detail with which that design is realized. To describe the detail is impossible. To describe the great plan is to come out with something so direct it will hardly be believed: two elements, one fast and one slow, and during the course of the 25-minute work the fast becomes slow and the slow becomes fast.

[illegible] work, then, in which everything is in motion, in detail as well as across the large arc [illegible] word "transformation" per[illegible] conveys the nature of the [illegible] more vividly than "Variation." Everything changes character; everything is brought into association with its opposite. The music is made of a dramatic pitting of slow against fast, static against dynamic, high and low, loud and soft, strings and brass.

The process is most ingeniously summed up in the fourth and sixth variations (the fifth being the central one of the whole set), which are, respectively, a series of retards and a series o accelerations. Even these turn into their opposites: the accelerations, for example, proceed every time to the point where the music is so fast that the notes are perceived as subdivisions of a much slower beat. The music has become slow again, and the cycle must recommence. It is like that moment in watching a propeller when suddenly the blades appear to reverse themselves.

Not least, the Variations are a brilliantly imagined piece of virtuoso writing for symphony orchestra, and it is from the intrinsic virtuosity and authority of the Boston Symphony players that the performance drew much of its strength. Actually the performance was far from note-perfect, and it seemed that for lack of rehearsal time, Burgin was forced into some compromises in matters both of tempo and of balance.

What mattered more, however, than the occasional overemphasis hesitation, or wrong entrance, was a controlling sense for the expressive language of the music and for its brilliance. It added up to a convincing statement of a very great work, and if you have any means of access to a ticket, don't miss the Saturday night performance, or at least listen to its broadcast.

The concert began with a warm performance of Schubert's lovely but preposterously named "Tragic" Symphony. It ended with the Ravel version of Musorgski's "Pictures at an Exhibition," and that was also a performance of a symphonic poem entitled "Great Symphony Orchestra Taking it Easy White the Associate Conductor is in Charge."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

[illegible]4

Burgin Conducts

BSO Performs New Carter Work

BY ALLAN SLY

When Mr. Burgin conducts a BSO concert there are many reasons to rejoice — his easy assurance of manner, his innate musicality, his power to evoke the essence of whatever he presents; also he sets us to recollections of things past. Yet he is very much a man of the present and future. His way with a new score is extraordinary. However complex in structure, unfamiliar in style or mood, he penetrates to its secrets and reveals them to his listeners with clarity and conviction.

So it was last weekend with Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra, the main course for the evening. Anyone who read Mr. Carter's account of his working task — emphasizing definition of character, "continuities" and auditory memory must have sat up straighter, must have turned up the alertness index, and Mr. Burgin was a very sure-handed guide through this very demanding stretch of musical intellection. When the piece had eventually run its course, the audience gave evidence of having stayed with it; their response was very cordial, there were shouts of acclaim. Everett Firth's timpani tour de force near the conclusion was rightfully pinpointed, though every individual in the orchestra surpassed himself.

On a single hearing one cannot be sure of grasping all of the composer's intentions, though one can certainly progress to the point of wanting further hearings. The composer apeared to go beyond manipulations of his material to depicting the nature of today's world — and his report is arresting, provoking, captivating. One can hope fervently for further opportunities to test this notion — it may well need revision. But that is what symphony concerts are for, is it not? — to set the faculties working.

After intermission we reveled in the Moussorgsky "Pictures," courtesy of Ravel's orchestral wizardry. This well-traveled road is still enticing. One can always add to one's knowledge of our remarkable neighbors the Russians. And one can wistfully reflect on the smallness of their world in the '70's — in which they could serenely indulge their fancies and their self-deceptions. But what fun they had doing it! A little untidiness at the edges here and there did not really mar a memorable performance.

If anything marred the evening as a whole it was the early Schubert symphony for a starter. Its delicate charm is undeniable, but the BSO might well leave it for aggregations not in their big-time league. Students or amateurs, under the inspiring leadership of a Mr. Burgin, can strive toward perfection in such a work. The BSO has to make no such effort and one is embarrassed to find it almost condescending, as this attitude has no place in high art. But it requires an effort to recall these impressions, overlaid as they are by the memories of the Carter and Moussorgsky.

Just for the record, the printing of last week's program booklet failed Mr. Burk on page 172, where it credits Koussevitzky with conducting in 1922 a score that, by the previous statement, did not exist until 1923. Koussevitzky was very gifted, but hardly to the point of standing time on its head.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf will introduce to Boston some of the Schonberg Gurre-Lieder and Menotti's "Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" — one of the highlights of last summer at Tanglewood.

[illegible] England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
[illegible] 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 10 1964

Richard Burgin In Happy Return

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A vigorous performance of Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, a diverting though somewhat long-winded series premiere by the contemporary, Elliot Carter, and a dazzling catalogue of "Pictures From an Exhibition, "Ravel's orchestration of Moussorgsky's piano suite, marked Richard Burgin's happy return in his familiar role of guest conductor at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Carter's score is yet another commission from The Louisville Orchestra, from whence flow so many blessings to modern American composers. It sounds, at first hearing, like a distant cousin of Arthur Berger's Polyphony, introduced last week, for the sensibility of the pupils of Nadia Boulanger makes it difficult to immediately separate the individual from the school. We find the same scrupulous abstract ordering, the same shifting accents and textures, the same elaborate cross-rhythms.

Mild Dissonances

Nevertheless, there are differences, distinctly so. The harmonic language of Mr. Carter's Variations for Orchestra (ten in number) is chromatic, dissonances of a mild nature lend contrast of mood, and a bold polyrhythmic counterpoint supplies a robust dynamic design. The composer has wisely refrained from describing his technical devices, since he wants his work to appeal to the emotions as well as the intellect.

The statement depends largely on craft, yet is not without expressivity. We respond to the finesse of the linear tensions, to the adroitly-detailed patterns, to the sense of musical space, to the precise sonorities and weights. As an example of modern architecture, Mr. Carter does not build with clinical severity; behind his craft is the presence of a human being.

One can say this despite the fact that his lyricism is of a sober kind: all is control and balance rather than urgency and ardor. Only toward the end of the sequence of variations does it seem to me that the point is reached where technique finally becomes an end in itself, and we come to admire the deftness of means more than the music itself. But this is common enough in the variation form with its temptations to virtuosity, and the final section rounds off the work with a Wagnerian flourish.

Nervous Reverence

Mr. Burgin's gifts as a conductor, I thought admirably adapted to this particular program. The last time we heard Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in 1961, Thomas Schippers, the guest conductor, treated it with a nervous baroque reverence, the dimensions were too small and the treatment febrile.

With Mr. Burgin we had a broad, humane simplicity that rendered the score in a direct, unaffected manner. It is easy to over-value Beethoven's influence here, and make of the "Tragic" symphony an Olympian drama. To capture the dolce Schubert style is harder.

Mr. Burgin did not over-emphasize the fermatas, and carry over into bogus romanticism, neither did he whip up climaxes. Everything was evenly-sustained, neatly-inflected, the flow of the contrasts most appealing. Save for the minuet where a leisurely approach sacrificed some lightness, this was a solid down-to-earth Schubert of cheerful charm and zest.

Enormous Gain

Similarly, the Moussorgsky-Ravel gained enormously from the conductor. A virtuoso conductor like Koussevitzky saw "Pictures From an Exhibition" as a collection of heroic murals; Dr. Munch may have considered Hartmann influenced by the academy of David; Mr. Leinsdorf, one suspects, might opt for the German Expressionists.

The especial value of Mr. Burgin here was his sensible, pragmatic view. The well-known score would seem to have little to offer repeatedly; and yet the definition of each episode, the clarity of commonsense communication, caused the bright blaze of the episodes to appear with unvarnished radiance; one encountered unexpected felicities throughout. I am told that the original manuscript title translates as "Pictures from," instead of "at", a small but significant point that also makes sense.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf schedules two first Boston performances: Menotti's "Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," with George London and Lillian Chookasian soloists, and The New England Conservatory Chorus; and Schoenberg's Introduction and Wood Dove's Song from "Gurre-Lieder." Respighi's "Church Windows," and Schumann's Overture to "Manfred," Op. 115, will also be heard.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the third program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.
Symphony No. 4 in C minor, "Tragic" .... Schubert
Variations for Orchestra .... Carter
"Pictures from an Exhibition" .... Moussorgsky-Ravel

[illegible]cy, Inc.
[illegible]d 2-4200
[illegible]) (e)

[illegible]64

[illegible]ns'
[illegible] Top
[illegible]ram

Variations
[illegible]ured this
Symphony
[illegible]ay after-
Richard Schubert's a curtain[illegible]r the in-
[illegible]orgski-Ra[illegible]an Exibi-

[illegible]lite work sonorities [illegible]l instrumanner.
[illegible]is symtextures
[illegible]er-music

[illegible]ordinatesection-[illegible]only as-form, exceed[illegible]work of [illegible]and out-
[illegible]ly in the that the [illegible]m Wag-
[illegible]ery far

[illegible]ymphony
[illegible], for the had just [illegible]when, at minor [illegible]e aimed another [illegible]wn sym-growth, and a [illegible]ith for-feels he [illegible]her the [illegible]naturity

[illegible]. Schu-
[illegible]mlated
[illegible]ulation, grasp.
[illegible]ue orig-
move-
[illegible]ed and [illegible]chestral musi-
[illegible] sym-
[illegible] chro-
[illegible]e slow
[illegible]ke pre-superb

[illegible]ed ver-
[illegible]pisodic
[illegible]ich he [illegible]avel to [illegible]rm has [illegible]oncert-Yester-
[illegible]ps was [illegible]etimes tempo

[illegible]max in [illegible] virtu-
[illegible]e high [illegible]as fine where [illegible]essary.
[illegible]s were [illegible]nal at-[illegible]l's use melody [illegible]erhaps of the [illegible]ent to [illegible]pectac-

[illegible]vell.

SHOWTHROUGH

16

PROVIDENCE I

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

OCT 12 1964

Music Yesterday

Boston Symphony Plays 1st Sunday Concert Here

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played its 367th concert in Providence on a Sunday afternoon instead of on a Tuesday evening as they have done for 366 times before yesterday. The usual enthusiastic audience turned out with high hopes for a fine concert and they most certainly had one.

Erich Leinsdorf and his musicians were in excellent form and the opening "Academic Festival" Overture had all the hearty vigor one might find on a bright fall afternoon on the campus. What if the first performance was heard at the University of Breslau in 1881? Aren't young people fundamentally the same and don't they respond to good sturdy tunes in a swinging rhythm? Brahms knew this and what he wrote has delighted many an audience since his day, as it did again yesterday.

If Erich Leinsdorf had ordered a composition to dispaly the expert soloists of his orchestra, he could scarcely have found a better work than the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 1. It has been some time since we have heard this symphony here. There was a freshness about Leinsdorf's reading which brought many a segment of hidden beauty to light. The playing was superb throughout the four movements.

The Lento is still my favorite section. It was entirely fitting that the soloists (all first desk players) flute, horn, tympani, clarinet, trumpet, cello and concertmaster were singled out for applause in two of the several recalls. It is not quite 30 years since we first heard this work in Boston. Its strangeness has mellowed over the years and the promise of greatness which it contained has been fulfilled many times over. This performance of the Shostakovitch Op. 10 was memorable.

As if to take a last look at summer, the orchestra set forth the descriptive music of Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony with artistic simplicity. It is so much more difficult to play obvious and familiar music of this type and to keep it in the realm of a performance which will hold the interest of listeners. Yet, with Leinsdorf, there always seems to be something new. I never before realized what a heavy task Beethoven be sure, it is the tympani which actually plays the thunder but gave his double bass players in the thunder storm episode. To the storm clouds originate in the basses. They were wonderfully threatening yesterday.

The string section of the orchestra seemed to have more than the usual unity and in all directions, it must be reported that the change to Sunday afternoon seems to have been a huge success. I found only one dissenting voice, that of the officer on duty in the lobby. He likes to watch the games on a Sunday afternoon. But he agreed that it must be nice for us music lovers to get home early.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

OCT 12 1964

C.H.L.

oston Symphony roves Enchanting

The Boston Symphony, under ie tone-painting brush strokes f Erich Leinsdorf's conducting, was enchanting in the first rogram of the 1964-65 Providence season Sunday in Veterns Memorial Auditorium. The unday afternoon concerts, an nnovation this season, will be, t is hoped, as popular and as vell attended as the former Tuesday evening ones were. Sunday's audience nearly filled he auditorium, and both musiians and listeners seemed to e thoroughly relaxed and responsive.

Opening with Brahms' "Academic Overture," Leinsdorf captured all the nuances of color, hrasing and dynamics that nade it a gay and beguiling invitation to listen.

Their playing of Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1" was rilliant and exciting with its atchwork patterns of plainive melody, startling dynamics, nd occasional seemingly senseess pauses, like an abstract ainting, difficult to compreend but dazzling with brightess.

It was the Beethoven "Symphony No. 6," the "Pastoral," hat held the audience in rapure as these superior musicians esponded to Leinsdorf's superb nterpretations of soundwrought pictures of woods and ields, of echoes of babbling rooks, the rhythmic rustle of whispering leaves and grasses, the frightening blast of a summer tempest and the joyous mimicry of gentle rain. Here was Beethoven, and the Boston Symphony, at their most sublime.

C.H.L.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

OCT 10 1964

Boston Symphony To Play In Prov.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will open its 1964-65 series of Providence concerts Sunday at 3:30 p.m., at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium. This season's schedule calls for five Sunday afternoon concerts in Providence. In previous seasons the orchestra came to Providence on Tuesday nights.

CAMBRIDGE I

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

- I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro
- III. Lento
- IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

- I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country: Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto
- III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
- IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro
- V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm: Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOWTHROUGH

16

PROVIDENCE I

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

OCT 12 1964

Music Yesterday

Boston Symphony Plays 1st Sunday Concert Here

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played its 367th concert in Providence on a Sunday afternoon instead of on a Tuesday evening as they have done for 366 times before yesterday. The usual enthusiastic audience turned out with high hopes for a fine concert and they most certainly had one.

Erich Leinsdorf and his musicians were in excellent form and the opening "Academic Festival" Overture had all the hearty vigor one might find on a bright fall afternoon on the campus. What if the first performance war heard at the University of Breslau in 1881? Aren't young people fundamentally the same and don't they respond to good sturdy tunes in a swinging rhythm? Brahms knew this and what he wrote has delighted many an audience since his day, as it did again yesterday.

If Erich Leinsdorf had ordered a composition to dispaly the expert soloists of his orchestra, he could scarcely have found a better work than the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 1. It has been some time since we have heard this symphony here. There was a freshness about Leinsdorf's reading which brought many a segment of hidden beauty to light. The playing was superb throughout the four movements.

The Lento is still my favorite section. It was entirely fitting that the soloists (all first desk players) flute, horn, tympani, clarinet, trumpet, cello and concertmaster were singled out for applause in two of the several recalls. It is not quite 30 years since we first heard this work in Boston. Its strangeness has mellowed over the years and the promise of greatness which it contained has been fulfilled many times over. This performance of the Shostakovitch Op. 10 was memorable.

As if to take a last look at summer, the orchestra set forth the descriptive music of Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony with artistic simplicity. It is so much more difficult to play obvious and familiar music of this type and to keep it in the realm of a performance which will hold the interest of listeners. Yet, with Leinsdorf, there always seems to be something new. I never before realized what a heavy task Beethoven gave his double bass players in the thunder storm episode. To be sure, it is the tympani which actually plays the thunder but the storm clouds originate in the basses. They were wonderfully threatening yesterday.

The string section of the orchestra seemed to have more than the usual unity and in all directions, it must be reported that the change to Sunday afternoon seems to have been a huge success. I found only one dissenting voice, that of the officer on duty in the lobby. He likes to watch the games on a Sunday afternoon. But he agreed that it must be nice for us music lovers to get home early.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

OCT 12 1964

C.H.L.

Boston Symphony Proves Enchanting

The Boston Symphony, under the tone-painting brush strokes of Erich Leinsdorf's conducting, was enchanting in the first program of the 1964-65 Providence season Sunday in Veterans Memorial Auditorium. The Sunday afternoon concerts, an innovation this season, will be, it is hoped, as popular and as well attended as the former Tuesday evening ones were. Sunday's audience nearly filled the auditorium, and both musicians and listeners seemed to be thoroughly relaxed and responsive.

Opening with Brahms' "Academic Overture," Leinsdorf captured all the nuances of color, phrasing and dynamics that made it a gay and beguiling invitation to listen.

Their playing of Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 1" was brilliant and exciting with its patchwork patterns of plaintive melody, startling dynamics, and occasional seemingly senseless pauses, like an abstract painting, difficult to comprehend but dazzling with brightness.

It was the Beethoven "Symphony No. 6," the "Pastoral," that held the audience in rapture as these superior musicians responded to Leinsdorf's superb interpretations of sound-wrought pictures of woods and fields, of echoes of babbling brooks, the rhythmic rustle of whispering leaves and grasses, the frightening blast of a summer tempest and the joyous mimicry of gentle rain. Here was Beethoven, and the Boston Symphony, at their most sublime.

C.H.L.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

OCT 10 1964

Boston Symphony To Play In Prov.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will open its 1964-65 series of Providence concerts Sunday at 3:30 p.m., at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium. This season's schedule calls for five Sunday afternoon concerts in Providence. In previous seasons the orchestra came to Providence on Tuesday nights.

CAMBRIDGE I

First Program

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ...."Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80

SHOSTAKOVITCH ....Symphony No. 1, Op. 10

I. Allegretto; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegro
III. Lento
IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN..........Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68

I. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country:
Allegro ma non troppo

II. Scene by the brookside: Andante molto moto

III. Jolly gathering of country folk: Allegro; in tempo d'allegro
IV. Thunderstorm; Tempest: Allegro

V. Shepherd's Song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm:
Allegretto

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SHOWTHROUGH

FRI-SAT 4.

17

SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

ERNOON, October 16, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 17, at 8:30 o'clock

Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder" (Part I)

Lili Chookasian, Mezzo-Soprano

(First performance in Boston)

"Vetrate di Chiesa" ("Church Windows")
Four Impressions for Orchestra

La fuga in Egitto
San Michele Arcangelo
Il mattutino di Santa Chiara
San Gregorio Magno

INTERMISSION

"The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," for Chorus, Children's Chorus, Bass and Soprano Solo and Orchestra

The Bishop: George London, Bass
The Nun: Lili Chookasian, Soprano
Children's Chorus: Members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, Berj Zamkochian, Music Director
The Townspeople: New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Director

(First performance in Boston)

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

[illegible] 1964

einsdorf Returns

Two Boston Firsts In Symphony Week

Erich Leinsdorf returns to duct tne Boston Symphony chestra with guest soloists Lili ookasian and George London at e concerts of this Friday ernoon and Saturday evening. ast week Mr. Leinsdorf conted the orchestra in several cording sessions for RCA Vic. The Friday-Saturday concerts ill consist of works by Schunn, Schoenberg, Respighi and enotti, two of which will be first formances in Boston.

The concert will open with chumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred," Op. 115. Mr. Leinsdorf will follow this with the first oston performance of an excerpt nd the Song of the Wood-Dove rom Part I of Scnoenberg's Gurre-Lieder," with Miss hookasian, mezzo soprano, as oloist. The program will continue ith "Vetrate di Chiesa" "Church Windows"), Four Impressions for Orchestra by Resighi.

After the intermission Mr. einsdorf and the orchestra will resent the first Boston performce of "The Death of the Bisnop of Brindisi" by Menotti. Soloists will be George London, bass, and Miss Chookasian. Tne choruses will consist of the New England onservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director, and a hildren's chorus from the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, Berj Zamkochian, music director.

The first open rehearsal of the current season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. The series of eight Open Rehearsals has been completely sold out and tne proceeds will benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund.

The first Symphony Hall concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place Tuesday evening at 8:30. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the program, which will include Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovitch; and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68. The program will be telecast live by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and broadcast via radio station WGBH-FM.

This afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present the first concert of the 83rd annual series in Providence in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,493

OCT 15 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 15 1964

St. Joseph High Glee Club to Sing With Boston Symphony Orchestra In Boston and New York Concerts

A picked group from the combined Glee Clubs of St. Joseph's High school, Somerville, and Catholic Memorial High school, West Roxbury, will participate in a joint effort with the New England Conservatory and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday. Oct. 16, at 2 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 17, at 8:30 p.m. (There will be an open rehearsal Thursday at 7 p.m.)

Wednesday evening, Oct. 21, the program will be presented in New York at the Lincoln Fine Arts Center at 8:30 o'clock.

In the operetta entitled "The Death of Cardinal Brindisi," by Jan Carl Minotti, known by TV fans for "Amahl and the Night Visitors," the selected school groups will sings the parts of the Children Crusaders; the New England Conservatory Singers will take the parts of the Townspeople, and the two solo parts will portray the Archbishop and the Nun.

The Glee Clubs will be transported by bus to New York where they will dine at the Lincoln Center Motel before going on stage. After the New York performance, the boys and girls will board a jet for the journey home.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

OCT 1

Symphony Then

The fourth pair of Boston Symphony concerts in theseason 50 years ago, 1914-15, included the Symphony No. 4 by Sibelius, Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and his "Egmont" Overture. Dr. Karl Muck conducted, and the soloist was Anton Witek, concertmaster of the orchestra.

The fourth pair of concerts in the season 25 years ago, 1939-40, began with "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture" by Ernst Toch, oward Hanson's Symphony No. 3, Haydn's D major Cello Concerto and "Don Juan" by Strauss. Dr. Hanson conducted his own work. The remainder of the program was led by Asso- program was led by Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, and the soloist was Emanuel Feuermann.

---

wEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

ecord-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 17 1964

BSO Presents Great Cantata By Menotti

Four engaging examples of descriptive music were offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, two being first performances here. These were the introduction and song of the wood-dove from Arnold Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder" and Gian - Carlo Menotti's "Death of the Bishop of Brindisi."

Erich Leinsdorf opened this programmatic panorama with a fervent, well-paced performance of Schumann's "Manfred" overture in which the Bostonians' lush string tone was particularly appropriate to that composer's romantic lyricism. A rich harmonic scheme, with flowing melodies and considerable sighs of despair.

WOOD DOVE SONG

Lili Chookasian's warm mezzo was fluent and well-controlled in projecting the great song of the wood-dove, which followed a long interlude from the augmented orchestra required for this enormous secular cantata. Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder" was well-named "a paroxysm of every romantic exuberance" even though it contributed nothing new or remarkable to bolster Wagner's "flood of endless melody."

The closing pages, descriptive of a monk's funeral knell and inveighing against "Cruel Helwig's falcon that hath slain the dove of Gurre," have a barbaric beauty unexceled even by Wagner.

After that, Ottorino Respighi's "Church Windows," drearily repetitive of his Roman impressionism, was a distinct letdown which might better have remained embalmed on stained glass rather than converted into symphonic sketchwork. The third segment, wherein Saint Clare, gravely ill, laments she could not attend matins, then is miraculously transported to the church at Portiuncula, is the least bombastic of the four tonal episodes.

GREAT MUSIC

After the interval came yesterday's great music, Menotti's minor masterpiece, powerfully scored for chorus, children's chorus, bass and soprano solos and orchestra. The gifted composer based his book for this dolorous cantata upon accounts of the Children's Crusade of 1221, inspired by religious fervor and ending in unmitigated woe.

George London, in fine voice, carried off the Bishop's role with stirring intensity, while Miss Chookasian took the Nun's part with sympathy and aplomb. The children's chorus, prepared by Berj Zamkochian, was comprised of members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, while the Townspeople of Brindisi were portrayed by the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron.

ROLFE BOSWELL.

SHOWTHROUGH

FRI-SAT. 4.

URTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

AFTERNOON, October 16, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 17, at 8:30 o'clock

................Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

................Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder" (Part I)

Lili Chookasian, Mezzo-Soprano

(First performance in Boston)

................"Vetrate di Chiesa" ("Church Windows") Four Impressions for Orchestra

I. La fuga in Egitto
II. San Michele Arcangelo
III. Il mattutino di Santa Chiara
IV. San Gregorio Magno

INTERMISSION

MENOTTI ......"The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," for Chorus, Children's Chorus, Bass and Soprano Solo and Orchestra

The Bishop: George London, Bass
The Nun: Lili Chookasian, Soprano
Children's Chorus: Members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, Berj Zamkochian, Music Director
The Townspeople: New England Conservatory Chorus
Lorna Cooke deVaron, Director

(First performance in Boston)

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

OCT 11 1964

Leinsdorf Returns

Two Boston Firsts In Symphony Week

Erich Leinsdorf returns to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra with guest soloists Lili Chookasian and George London at the concerts of this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Last week Mr. Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra in several recording sessions for RCA Victor. The Friday-Saturday concerts will consist of works by Schumann, Schoenberg, Respighi and Menotti, two of which will be first performances in Boston.

The concert will open with Schumann's Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115. Mr. Leinsdorf will follow this with the first Boston performance of an excerpt and the Song of the Wood-Dove from Part I of Schoenberg's "Gurre-Lieder," with Miss Chookasian, mezzo soprano, as soloist. The program will continue with "Vetrate di Chiesa" ("Church Windows"), Four Impressions for Orchestra by Respighi.

After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present the first Boston performance of "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" by Menotti. Soloists will be George London, bass, and Miss Chookasian. The choruses will consist of the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke deVaron, director, and a children's chorus from the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, Berj Zamkochian, music director.

The first open rehearsal of the current season will take place in Symphony Hall Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. The series of eight Open Rehearsals has been completely sold out and the proceeds will benefit the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund.

The first Symphony Hall concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place Tuesday evening at 8:30. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the program, which will include Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovitch; and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68. The program will be telecast live by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and broadcast via radio station WGBH-FM.

This afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present the first concert of the 83rd annual series in Providence in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,493

OCT 15 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 15 1964

St. Joseph High Glee Club to Sing With Boston Symphony Orchestra In Boston and New York Concerts

A picked group from the combined Glee Clubs of St. Joseph's High school, Somerville, and Catholic Memorial High school, West Roxbury, will participate in a joint effort with the New England Conservatory and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday. Oct. 16, at 2 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 17, at 8:30 p.m. (There will be an open rehearsal Thursday at 7 p.m.)

Wednesday evening, Oct. 21, the program will be presented in New York at the Lincoln Fine Arts Center at 8:30 o'clock.

In the operetta entitled "The Death of Cardinal Brindisi," by Jan Carl Minotti, known by TV fans for "Amahl and the Night Visitors," the selected school groups will sings the parts of the Children Crusaders; the New England Conservatory Singers will take the parts of the Townspeople, and the two solo parts will portray the Archbishop and the Nun.

The Glee Clubs will be transported by bus to New York where they will dine at the Lincoln Center Motel before going on stage. After the New York performance, the boys and girls will board a jet for the journey home.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

OCT 16 1964

Symphony Then

The fourth pair of Boston Symphony concerts in the season 50 years ago, 1914-15, included the Symphony No. 4 by Sibelius, Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and his "Egmont" Overture. Dr Karl Muck conducted, and the soloist was Anton Witek, concertmaster of the orchestra.

The fourth pair of concerts in the season 25 years ago, 1939-40, began with "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture" by Ernst Toch, oward Hanson's Symphony No. 3, Haydn's D major Cello Concerto and "Don Juan" by Strauss. Dr. Hanson conducted his own work. The remainder of the program was led by Asso- program was led by Associate Conductor Richard Burgin, and the soloist was Emanuel Feuermann.

---

wEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

ecord-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 17 1964

BSO Presents Great Cantata By Menotti

Four engaging examples of descriptive music were offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, two being first performances here. These were the introduction and song of the wood-dove from Arnold Schoenberg's "Gurre-lieder" and Gian - Carlo Menotti's "Death of the Bishop of Brindisi."

Erich Leinsdorf opened this programmatic panorama with a fervent, well-paced performance of Schumann's "Manfred" overture in which the Bostonians' lush string tone was particularly appropriate to that composer's romantic lyricism. A rich harmonic scheme, with flowing melodies and considerable sighs of despair.

WOOD DOVE SONG

Lili Chookasian's warm mezzo was fluent and well-controlled in projecting the great song of the wood-dove, which followed a long interlude from the augmented orchestra required for this enormous secular cantata. Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder" was well-named "a paroxysm of every romantic exuberance" even though it contributed nothing new or remarkable to bolster Wagner's "flood of endless melody."

The closing pages, descriptive of a monk's funeral knell and inveighing against "Cruel Helwig's falcon that hath slain the dove of Gurre," have a barbaric beauty unexceled even by Wagner.

After that, Ottorino Respighi's "Church Windows," dreariły repetitive of his Roman impressionism, was a distinct letdown which might better have remained embalmed on stained glass rather than converted into symphonic sketchwork. The third segment, wherein Saint Clare, gravely ill, laments she could not attend matins, then is miraculously transported to the church at Portiuncula, is the least bombastic of the four tonal episodes.

GREAT MUSIC

After the interval came yesterday's great music, Menotti's minor masterpiece, powerfully scored for chorus, children's chorus, bass and soprano solos and orchestra. The gifted composer based his book for this dolorous cantata upon accounts of the Children's Crusade of 1221, inspired by religious fervor and ending in unmitigated woe.

George London, in fine voice, carried off the Bishop's role with stirring intensity, while Miss Chookasian took the Nun's part with sympathy and aplomb. The children's chorus, prepared by Berj Zamkochian, was comprised of members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, while the Townspeople of Brindisi were portrayed by the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke deVaron.

ROLFE BOSWELL

18

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

OCT 17 1964

Leinsdorf in sunburst of musical passion

By Harold Rogers

Music is an emotional language, and like all language it communicates to the degree of its intensity. Musicians who aim to touch the emotions of their listeners must first of all feel the emotion of the music. And if an artist wishes to play upon his listeners' emotions, to move them, sway them, then he must feel these emotions intensely.

Intensity may be thought of as the keynote of musical communication. Merely to think about it is not enough. Merely to sing or to sound the right notes at the right dynamic levels is not enough. Music is far more than the sum total of its parts.

The good musician can fill his mind and soul with the throb of musical feeling; the great musician can achieve this degree of intensity 100 percent of the time. Musicians of this caliber draw their listeners into the same emotional focus they have created for themselves.

* * *

At the Friday afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf achieved—for the first time since taking over the direction of the orchestra—a total and an intense commitment to the music under his guidance. He gave us not only an extraordinary program, but a program infused with emotional excitement. We felt it intensely because he felt it intensely.

In the past Mr. Leinsdorf has given us glimmers of hope, but with this concert he gave us a sunburst. Here is the light that will restore the Boston Symphony to its former radiance. If a musician can do it once, he can do it again.

A certain sense of abandon was immediately to be noted in Schumann's Overture to Byron's "Manfred"; and the musical mood became positively impassioned in the Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from Schoenberg's "Gurre-Lieder," the stunning piece of late-romantic chromaticism turned out by the composer when but 25. Lili Chookasian was the mezzo-soprano soloist, her opulent voice lending a dark fire to the event.

* * *

Mr. Leinsdorf continued with Respighi's impressionistic "Vetrate di Chiesa" (Church Windows) that follows in the same eloquent vein as his "Pines of Rome" and "Fountains of Rome." Here again the conductor let the music sing without let. Gloriously intense!

The pièce de résistance for this program, however, was the first Boston performance of Gian Carlo Menotti's cantata, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi." Composed for chorus, children's chorus, bass and soprano solo, and orchestra, the work depicts the Bishop's remorse while on his death bed for having blessed one of the Children's Crusades, a crusade that ended in shipwreck, slavery, and disillusionment.

Here we find Mr. Menotti at his most ingratiating, having turned out a melodic score underlined with descriptive harmonies of unerring theatrical impact. George London was heard as the Bishop, Miss Chookasian as the nun who waits on him, the New England Conservatory Chorus as the townspeople, and the members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs as the children.

* * *

Mr. London gave poignant expression to the Bishop's torment. Miss Chookasian was lyrically moving as she expressed the nun's consoling remarks. And the choruses were uniformly commendable as trained by Lorna Cooke de Varon and Berj Zamkochian.

Mr. Menotti was on hand to join Mr. Leinsdorf, Mr. London, Miss Chookasian, Mrs. de Varon, and Mr. Zamkochian in receiving the audience's ecstatic applause. The listeners were obviously intense about expressing their gratitude, as well they might. They had just been through an intensely emotional experience.

And all because Mr. Leinsdorf felt it first.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1964

The Symphony

Menotti Cantata Tautly Emotional

By ROBERT TAYLOR

After the bombast of Respighi's "Church Windows," surely one of the most claptrap examples of musical religiosity extant, the benison of Gian Carlo Menotti's cantata, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," lingered on Symphony Hall yesterday.

This was the first Boston performance of the cantata, which was performed at the Berkshire Festival last August 8th, and it struck me as an utterance of sincere and noble gravity. Menotti bases his subject on the Children's Crusade of the year 1212.

On His Deathbed

The Bishop of Brindisi, the prelate who allowed the multitude of innocents to sail to their death and captivity, is depicted, in the composer's version, on his deathbed, attended by a Nun. The scheme of the cantata calls for solo dialogue interspersed by choral episodes serving the function of flashback as the dying man recalls the fatal hour of his terrible decision.

It is a tautly emotional work, passionate and powerful, charged with the tensions of the Bishop's existential struggle to justify his choice. I'm afraid I found the final choral statement anti-climactic ("Nothing is purposeless, nothing"), however laudable as faith or arguable as theology. The section has the air of a moral tacked-on from without, rather than as a view implicit in and springing out of the narrative.

But Menotti has constructed a musico-dramatic statement here, on the whole, expressing a devotional attitude so sensitively ordered and so compassionately accented as to be utterly absorbing. The structure includes some of his past thematic ideas, innocence involved with ambiguous guilt, despair mingling with spiritual conviction, and the composer's sense of climax, contrast and color is as superb as ever.

Singable English

The Bishop, the Nun, the Children and Townspeople are adeptly characterized with a minimum of strokes. Menotti writes an English that is singable, being almost alone in this regard. His language and music have a rare integration. One can point to the harp accompaniment to the Bishop's stanzas, the textural and theatrical balances: as in "Amahl," for instance, ah opera of similar tint though less complex, telling use is made of the timbre of adult and childish voices.

The choral department was generally good, although the stage proved so crowded that performance conditions were scarcely ideal. The New England Conservatory Chorus sang with a fine tonal clarity. As Towns people urging the young Crusaders on, they might have shown more dramatic bite, but they adequately passed the other challenges. The Children's Chorus from Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High was first-rate under the direction of Berg Zamkochian, while the soloists, George London and Lili Chookasian, revealed a vocalism that captured every mood and was innately, as sound, quite beautiful. Mr. Menotti was on hand and was greeted cordially from the stage along with Lorna Cooke deVaron.

The Best Models

The other first Boston performance, from "Gurre-Lieder," was excellent Strauss, Mahler, Wagner et al., and disclosed that the post-romantic young Schoenberg had the good taste to imitate the best models. Miss Chookasian sang again, and again declared the highest standards of production and technique, despite having some of her tones muffled at the start by the accompaniment.

As I've said "Church Windows" is full of sound and fury signifying nothing, but Mr. Leinsdorf led a brilliant performance of the "Manfred" Overture, lean, exact and propulsive, and got some sonoroties worth hearing from Schoenberg. It was a curious program in a way, and yet demonstrated diverse phases of romanticism, German and Italian, rather effectively.

On Oct. 30-31, the Orchestra returns from tour, and guest conductor Sir John Barbirolli has scheduled Vaughan Williams's Symphony No. 6; Sibelius's Symphony No. 2, in D, Op. 43; Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture and the Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet," "The Walk Through the Paradise Gardens," by Delius.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the fourth program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Lili Chookasian, mezzo-soprano, and George London, bass, were the soloists. Berj Zamkochian prepared the Children's Chorus from Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph High School Glee Clubs; and Lorna Cooke deVaron The New England Conservatory Chorus. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115 .... Schumann
Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder" (Part I) .... Schoenberg
"Vetrate di Chiesa," ("Church Windows") .... Respighi
"The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" .... Menotti

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
[illegible], Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
[illegible]r. Circ. 2[illegible],711

OCT 17 1964

At Symphony

Leinsdorf, Chookasian In Fine 'Gorrelieder'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

E[illegible] Leinsdorf was back to [illegible] the Boston Symphony [illegible] afternoon in a pro[illegible] included Schumann's M[illegible] Overture, the Song [illegible] Wood-Dove from [illegible] "Gurrelieder," [illegible] Windows" of Res[illegible] the first Boston per[illegible] Menotti's Cantata, Th[illegible] of the Bishop of [illegible] [illegible] humann went well, [illegible] enberg was better [illegible] anfred" is the most [illegible] of Schumann's or[illegible] pieces, and it general[illegible] rather wildly flung [illegible] conductors. Leinsdorf [illegible] temperature low, and [illegible] hole with good effect. [illegible] ressive gestures are [illegible] ly outlined in the [illegible] itself, and while they [illegible] port more underlining [illegible] insdorf gave them, they [illegible] really need it.

It was a pleasure for once to have the tempo modifications managed according to Schumann's directions and suggestions, and to have rubato stay within the bounds of an intelligible rhythmic framework, and altogether the performance made musical sense to an uncommon degree.

"Gurrelieder" is the enormous secular oratorio Schoenberg worked on between 1900 and 1911. It is based on poems [illegible] Jens Peter Jacobsen, and it is about the 12th century King Waldemar IV and his love for the beautiful Tove. He built the castle of Gurre for her on the isle of Zealand, and there she lived until she was killed at the instance of the jealous Queen Helvig.

The first part of "Gurrelieder" consists of a series of love songs for Waldemar and Tove, and after an orchestral interlude, the Wood-Dove's narration of Tove's death. What Leinsdorf performed was everything from the beginning of the Interlude to the end of Part I, using partly Erwin Stein's reduction of the score from Schoenberg's outsize orchestra (25 woodwinds, for example) to normal large orchestra, and partly his (Leinsdorf's) own. The singer was the mezzo-soprano Lili Chookasian, [illegible] she was marvellous. Schoenberg's narrative technique [illegible] Wagnerian. The Wood-Dove's song resembles a passage like Waltraute's narrative in the first act of "Goetterdaemmerung," though it is on [illegible] scale than any of the comparable places in Wagner. Schoenberg's music is also more lyrical than most of Wagner's, a reminder, among other things, of a certain kinship between the early Schoenberg and Richard Strauss.

The thickness and lushness of much of the writing is also Straussian; not, however, the economy that could produce the spare music of "Den Sarg sah ich auf Koenig's Schultern," nor the simplicity when the narration tells of the monk about to ring evensong and changing suddenly to the funeral toll.

In this portion of "Gurrelieder," Schoenberg does not speak yet with the indivdual's voice that is to be heard, for example, in the Klaus-Narr episode of Part III. Using the common speech of the period he produces something that is not only a superbly apposite setting of a gripping text, but a composition of magnificent rhetorical power and lyric beauty.

Its performance was a valuable and appreciated deed, the more so because it was so good. Chookasian is an exciting singer with a rich voice produced with unruffled power from A below middle C up to high B flat, and possessed in addition of impressive gifts of dramatic and verbal projection. Leinsdorf and the orchestra produced an eloquent splendor of sound beneath and around Chookasian's singing, and for the 20 minutes this music lasted, the concert blossomed into a kind of excitement one rarely experiences at Symphony.

The remainder of the afternoon was as much as anything a demonstration of Leinsdorf's indiscriminate jumbling together of things that infects his program-building. The glossy vulgarity of the first bars of the Respighi were a horrible shock after the end of the Schoenberg. Significant thoughts and religious sentiment are never safe with Respighi, and the effect of the four "Church Windows" is roughly that of a sound-track for a Hollywood spectacular on the Ecumenical Council, done up in the style of the "Lawrence of Arabia" soundtrack.

And after that there was the unnecessary first Boston performance of Menotti's trashy piece of claptrap about the Children's Crusades, with George London and Lili Chookasion as Bishop and Nun, members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High School Glee Clubs prepared by Berj Zamkochian, and the New England Conservatory Chorus prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon.

20 TOUR # I

NEW YORK. 10-21-65

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony On New York Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first out-of-town trip of the season this week, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

In addition to playing concerts in Newark, Oct. 24 and Storrs, Conn., Oct. 25, the orchestra will open its 79th consecutive season of concerts in New York City and its 77th consecutive year of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The Boston Symphony has made regular visits to New York city longer than any other orchestra in the country. The programs in New York city will take place in Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Friday evenings and the Brooklyn Academy of Music concert will be given Thursday evening. The Philharmonic Hall concerts have been sold out by season subscription.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 30 and 31. Sir John Barbirolli, music director of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor, making his first appearances with the orchestra since January 1959.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574

OCT 21 1964

MUSIC NOTES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at Philharmonic Hall at 8:30 tonight. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct, with Lili Chookasian, mezzo-soprano, and George London, bass, as soloists.

Other events today: Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," presented by the Metropolitan Opera, 7:15 P.M.; Pierre Monteux Memorial Concert, London Symphony Orchestra, Pablo Casals and Leopold Stokowski, conductors, with Isaac Stern, violinist, Rudolf Serkin, pianist, Alexander Murray, flutist, Maureen Forrester, contralto, and the Rutgers University Choir, Carnegie Hall, 8:30; Jerome Rose, pianist, Town Hall, 8:30; Caecelian Symphony, Arthur Bloom, conductor, with Howard Lebow, pianist, High School of Fashion Industries, 8:30.

Also, Jack Ossewaarde, organist, St. Bartholomew's Church, 12:10 P.M.; John Upham, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, 12:30; Richard Syracuse, pianist, Kosciuszko Foundation, 5 East 65th Street, 1:45; Walter Baker, organist, Christ Chapel, Riverside Church, 7; Wallace M. Coursen, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, 12:05; Vernon de Tar, organist, Chapel of the Good Shepherd, General Theological Seminary, 8:30; Queens College Faculty String Quartet, Queens College Theater, Flushing, 1.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

OCT 18 1964 Burrelle's

Operas and Concerts for the Week

Whitestone

FIRST OF THE SEASON—Erich Leinsdorf will lead the Boston Symphony in three concerts in the New York area this week, the first on Wednesday night.

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 356,207

OCT 22 1964 Burrelle's

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Open With 'Bishop'

Gian-Carlo Menotti has given a 13th century Italian Bishop a 20th century questioning mind. Menotti's cantata, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," based on a chronicle of a Children's Crusade from Germany had its local premiere last night in Philharmonic Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The work concluded the program, which opened the Bostonians' 79th season here.

Menotti's Bishop is haunted by the fact that, though he tried to prevent the children's leaving Brindisi, at the same time he "blessed them to their doom." Like the Biblical Job, he cries out for answers, and receives only the yawning chasm of doubt. As the brilliant, profound-thinking nun, Sister Jacqueline, of Webster College, (Missouri) puts it in this week's Life magazine . . . ". . . there is no such thing as being absolutely sure."

In the text, Menotti's own, we share the agony of the delirious Bishop on his deathbed. During his guilt-ridden hallucinations, as the helpless children cry out, and the townspeople curse him, he is comforted by a nun. The work takes 30 minutes.

Abjure's Complexity

Menotti's musical style abjure's complexity and austerity, and, altogether, is most convincing when its simplicity is at its most naive, as when the children sing a folk-like tune to the words ". . . I shall free the Holy Land."

When he depicts a storm by obvious, fast chromatics up and down, and drum pummeling, with little else as spurt to the imagination, he is less successful. His jagged melodic line for the Bishop is well contrasted by the unruffled peace of the nun's music. His choral writing, is, as would be expected, skillful, but can't compare in musical inspiration to his choruses in "The Saint of Bleecker Street," an opera on the theme of faith vs. skepticism, produced ten years ago on Broadway.

But though the score reaches neither heights of exaltation nor beauty, nor sears with its tragedy, it is moving in its search and struggle. The music is more compassionate than powerful.

Mendelssohn's Third Symphony, the "Scottish," which preceded the cantata, demonstrated the orchestra's splendid

---

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

OCT 22 1964 Burrelle's

Menotti Score At Philharmonic

Louis Biancolli

A powerful new score by Gian-Carlo Menotti, pulsing with mystic fervor and drama, was performed by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall last night.

The work was a cantata based on the tragic Children's Crusade of the Middle Ages, entitled "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi." Menotti's combined grip of opera and concert idiom is on every page.

The cantata is the flashback of a dying bishop who had failed to stop the young Crusaders in their wild journey from which few returned. Text and music mirror the terror and guilt, the appalling toll and the aimless frenzy.

The performance was masterly in every way. Leinsdorf was always in complete charge, and the music was given the blazing vividness of a large mural or tapestry, with the added illusion of motion.

In tone, diction, and feeling, George London was excellent as the Bishop, and so was Lili Chookasian as the Nun who listens and tries to console. The robust voices of the townspeople were those of the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The by-turns brave, fearful, combined glee clubs of haunted voices of the junior Crusaders were those of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools. Menotti has one more masterpiece to his credit.

Also on the bill—the first by the Bostonians this season in New York—were Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" and Mendelssohn's "Scottish Symphony," which I missed because of the Monteux Memorial at Carnegie Hall.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 15,900

DEC 1964 Burrelle's
BOSTON SYMPHONY

Menotti's cantata "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" was given its New York premiere at Philharmonic Hall October 21 by the Boston Symphony. The text, devised by the composer, pictures a dying bishop attended by a nun. Years ago, the bishop had blessed a group of children about to embark from the port of Brindisi on a crusade to the Holy Land. The crusade ended in death for most of the innocents. Now the bishop is haunted by the memory of his blessing which sent them to their doom, and he dies questioning his faith. At this point, Menotti consoles us by saying that nothing is purposeless and that in death we will receive the "blinding answer."

If the music had one ounce of imagination, let alone an interesting or original idea, it might have been possible to be touched by Menotti's little tale. The composer's muse, however, doggedly adheres to Hollywood religiosity and its whole canon of obvious effects. The emotion of guilt, for example, is a cue for piercing chords from divisi violins. Or, later on, a storm arises, an inevitable mandate for string tremolos and chromatic wind passages. The low point is reached in the music for the doomed children where Menotti has mistaken triviality and sing-song banality for purity and innocence. He could profitably study Britten's music for children to see just how fresh and original one can be and still write in a conservative style.

As for the libretto, Menotti depends on his usual brand of religious sentimentality which, if not as cynically calculating as Samuel Bronston's movie epics, is just as phony. The literary and philosophic worth of lines like "who can trace and kill the Minotaur who haunts the labyrinth of our hearts?" I leave to the admirers of Sara Teasdale.

It is surprising that Erich Leinsdorf would take this all so seriously, but the performance presented the work in the best possible light. George London as the Bishop and Lili Chookasian as the Nun could not be faulted. The New England Conservatory Chorus and members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs contributed fine work.

The program opened with Brahms' Academic Festival Overture where Mr. Leinsdorf's fussy interpretation, for once, fitted the music like a glove. Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony was picked at too carefully, however, and the fragile good spirits of the music were lost in a frenzy of detail. The orchestra sounds as marvelous as ever.

R. D.

20 TOUR # I

NEW YORK. 10-21-65

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony On New York Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its first out-of-town trip of the season this week, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

In addition to playing concerts in Newark, Oct. 24 and Storrs, Conn., Oct. 25, the orchestra will open its 79th consecutive season of concerts in New York City and its 77th consecutive year of concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The Boston Symphony has made regular visits to New York city longer than any other orchestra in the country. The programs in New York city will take place in Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Friday evenings and the Brooklyn Academy of Music concert will be given Thursday evening. The Philharmonic Hall concerts have been sold out by season subscription.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 30 and 31. Sir John Barbirolli, music director of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor, making his first appearances with the orchestra since January 1959.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574

OCT 21 1964

MUSIC NOTES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at Philharmonic Hall at 8:30 tonight. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct, with Lili Chookasian, mezzo-soprano, and George London, bass, as soloists.

Other events today: Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," presented by the Metropolitan Opera, 7:15 P.M.; Pierre Monteux Memorial Concert, London Symphony Orchestra, Pablo Casals and Leopold Stokowski, conductors, with Isaac Stern, violinist, Rudolf Serkin, pianist, Alexander Murray, flutist, Maureen Forrester, contralto, and the Rutgers University Choir, Carnegie Hall, 8:30; Jerome Rose, pianist, Town Hall, 8:30; Caecelian Symphony, Arthur Bloom, conductor, with Howard Lebow, pianist, High School of Fashion Industries, 8:30.

Also, Jack Ossewaarde, organist, St. Bartholomew's Church, 12:10 P.M.; John Upham, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, 12:30; Richard Syracuse, pianist, Kosciuszko Foundation, 5 East 65th Street, 1:45; Walter Baker, organist, Christ Chapel, Riverside Church, 7; Wallace M. Coursen, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, 12:05; Vernon de Tar, organist, Chapel of the Good Shepherd, General Theological Seminary, 8:30; Queens College Faculty String Quartet, Queens College Theater, Flushing, 1.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

OCT 18 1964

Operas and Concerts for the Week

Whitestone

FIRST OF THE SEASON—Erich Leinsdorf will lead the Boston Symphony in three concerts in the New York area this week, the first on Wednesday night.

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250.207

OCT 22 1964

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians Open With 'Bishop'

Gian-Carlo Menotti has given a 13th century Italian Bishop a 20th century questioning mind. Menotti's cantata, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," based on a chronicle of a Children's Crusade from Germany had its local premiere last night in Philharmonic Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The work concluded the program, which opened the Bostonians' 79th season here.

Menotti's Bishop is haunted by the fact that, though he tried to prevent the children's leaving Brindisi, at the same time he "blessed them to their doom." Like the Biblical Job, he cries out for answers, and receives only the yawning chasm of doubt. As the brilliant, profound-thinking nun, Sister Jacqueline, of Webster College, (Missouri) puts it in this week's Life magazine . . . "...there is no such thing as being absolutely sure."

In the text, Menotti's own, we share the agony of the delirious Bishop on his deathbed. During his guilt-ridden hallucinations, as the helpless children cry out, and the townspeople curse him, he is comforted by a nun. The work takes 30 minutes.

Abjure's Complexity

Menotti's musical style abjure's complexity and austerity, and, altogether, is most convincing when its simplicity is at its most naive, as when the children sing a folk-like tune to the words ". . . I shall free the Holy Land."

When he depicts a storm by obvious, fast chromatics up and down, and drum pummeling, with little else as spurt to the imagination, he is less successful. His jagged melodic line for the Bishop is well contrasted by the unruffled peace of the nun's music. His choral writing, is, as would be expected, skillful, but can't compare in musical inspiration to his choruses in "The Saint of Bleecker Street," an opera on the theme of faith vs skepticism, produced ten years ago on Broadway.

But though the score reaches neither heights of exaltation nor beauty, nor sears with its tragedy, it is moving in its search and struggle. The music is more compassionate than powerful.

Mendelssohn's Third Symphony, the "Scottish," which preceded the cantata, demonstrated the orchestra's splendid

---

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

OCT 22 1964

Menotti Score At Philharmonic

A powerful new score by Gian-Carlo Menotti, pulsing with mystic fervor and drama, was performed by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall last night.

The work was a cantata based on the tragic Children's Crusade of the Middle Ages, entitled "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi." Menotti's combined grip of opera and concert idiom is on every page.

The cantata is the flashback of a dying bishop who had failed to stop the young Crusaders in their wild journey from which few returned. Text and music mirror the terror and guilt, the appalling toll and the aimless frenzy.

Louis Biancolli

The performance was masterly in every way. Leinsdorf was always in complete charge, and the music was given the blazing vividness of a large mural or tapestry, with the added illusion of motion.

In tone, diction, and feeling, George London was excellent as the Bishop, and so was Lili Chookasian as the Nun who listens and tries to console. The robust voices of the townspeople were those of the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The by-turns brave, fearful, combined glee clubs of haunted voices of the junior Crusaders were those of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools. Menotti has one more masterpiece to his credit.

Also on the bill—the first by the Bostonians this season in New York—were Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" and Mendelssohn's "Scottish Symphony," which I missed because of the Monteux Memorial at Carnegie Hall.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 15,900

DEC 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Menotti's cantata "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" was given its New York premiere at Philharmonic Hall October 21 by the Boston Symphony. The text, devised by the composer, pictures a dying bishop attended by a nun. Years ago, the bishop had blessed a group of children about to embark from the port of Brindisi on a crusade to the Holy Land. The crusade ended in death for most of the innocents. Now the bishop is haunted by the memory of his blessing which sent them to their doom, and he dies questioning his faith. At this point, Menotti consoles us by saying that nothing is purposeless and that in death we will receive the "blinding answer."

If the music had one ounce of imagination, let alone an interesting or original idea, it might have been possible to be touched by Menotti's little tale. The composer's muse, however, doggedly adheres to Hollywood religiosity and its whole canon of obvious effects. The emotion of guilt, for example, is a cue for piercing chords from divisi violins. Or, later on a storm arises, an inevitable mandate for string tremolos and chromatic wind passages. The low point is reached in the music for the doomed children where Menotti has mistaken triviality and sing-song banality for purity and innocence. He could profitably study Britten's music for children to see just how fresh and original one can be and still write in a conservative style.

As for the libretto, Menotti depends on his usual brand of religious sentimentality which, if not as cynically calculating as Samuel Bronston's movie epics, is just as phony. The literary and philosophic worth of lines like "who can trace and kill the Minotaur who haunts the labyrinth of our hearts?" I leave to the admirers of Sara Teasdale.

It is surprising that Erich Leinsdorf would take this all so seriously, but the performance presented the work in the best possible light. George London as the Bishop and Lili Chookasian as the Nun could not be faulted. The New England Conservatory Chorus and members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs contributed fine work.

The program opened with Brahms' Academic Festival Overture where Mr. Leinsdorf's fussy interpretation, for once, fitted the music like a glove. Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony was picked at too carefully, however, and the fragile good spirits of the music were lost in a frenzy of detail. The orchestra sounds as marvelous as ever.

21

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

T 22 1964

Music: New Choral Work by Menotti

'Bishop of Brindisi' at Philharmonic Hall

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

A recent score by Gian Carlo Menotti, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," received its first New York performance last night at Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony did the honors.

"The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" is a choral work for soprano and baritone solo. Concerning itself as it does with the famous early 13th-century Children's Crusade, the score naturally uses a children's chorus. Some modern composers, Menotti and Britten among them, seem to have fallen in love with the pure, sexless, quivering sound of pre-adolescent voices.

As usual, Menotti has written his own text. It is something along the lines of Robert Browning. Here the Bishop, on his deathbed, asks some eternal questions involving his faith. Why had he sent the children off to death? Why had God mocked him? The chorus answers: "Nothing is purposeless, nothing. Then why should God have given you in life a questioning mind if not to [and] you in death the blinding answer?"

•

The score is typical Menotti — craftsmanlike, well orchestrated, highly conservative, and undistinguished in its musical ideas. Basically it is good background music. There is storm music, and religious music, and in general the music illustrates the text. The melodic content, though, is far from striking. What this bland, slick score lacks is nourishment.

The performance sounded fine. George London sang in a dignified manner, and Lili Chookasian was in fine voice. Utterly delightful was the singing of the children's chorus, a group made up of youngsters from Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools in Boston. Not only was their diction exemplary, but the sweet sounds they produced were firmly on pitch. That is more than could be said of the adult singers of the New England Conservatory. Their diction was mushy.

For the symphonic part of the program, there were Brahms's "Academic Festival" Overture and Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony. The Brahms went along in a peppy manner. But one wondered, when the Mendelssohn had finished, whether or not the performance had primarily been a collection of details rather than a unified conception.

Mr. Leinsdorf can be fussy, and he was very fussy about his Mendelssohn last night. He lavished great care on detail. The choirs were balanced thus and so; and every inner voice, every line, assumed its proper place. That was fine, but the symphony ended up with an overworked feeling that lacked life—as though a skillful anatomist had laid bare every nerve, blood vessel and muscle in a corpse.

•

As is his custom, Mr. Leinsdorf took the first-movement repeat, something very few conductors do. He also had a few slightly unorthodox ideas about tempo. The first allegro, the one that leads into the "assai animato," was paced decidedly slower than is customary, and there was little of the agitated feeling that the composer wanted. The playing itself, throughout the symphony, was of typical Boston Symphony—burnish, but one would have welcomed more sweep and less concern with minutiae.

Whitestone

Erich Leinsdorf, at left, and Gian Carlo Menotti as they studied score of "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi."

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with Lili Chookasian, soprano; George London, bass; members of the chorus of Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph High Schools Glee Clubs; New England Conservatory Chorus.

Academic Festival Overture.......Brahms
Symphony No. 3 ....Mendelssohn
The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi
(1st N. Y. performance) ......Menotti

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN 640,586

OCT 22 1964

AT PHILHARMONIC HALL

A Menotti First Here

By MILES KASTENDIECK

OPENING ITS 79th season here, the Boston Symphony gave the first New York performance of Menotti's "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" in Philharmonic Hall

Erich Leinsdorf prefaced this ~~with Brahms~~' "Academic Festival" and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3.

The orchestra sounded truly Bostonian in the best Apley tradition; that is, very well-bred and well-tailored. Indeed the texture of sound in the first movement of the Mendelssohn had the quality of a chamber music ensemble.

This did not always release the music in the full spirit of the "Scottish" symphony.

There is more Scotch "snap" to the scherzo, for instance, than this performance revealed. For that matter, there is more pomp to the academic Brahms than Mr. Leinsdorf brought forth.

Thus these works emerged in tame interpretations, however beautiful the orchestral sounds.

I had heard the Menotti in Tanglewood last Summer, admiring the score for its sensitive communication of the children's plight which plagued the bishop on his deathbed. It ranks among Menotti's better works.

George London sang the Bishop, Lili Chookasian, the nun, along with the children from the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools glee clubs and the New England Conservatory chorus.

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

OCT 22 1964

LEINSDORF: MENOTTI'S 'DEATH OF BISHOP OF BRINDISI'

PHILHARMONIC HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Soloists: Lili Chookasian, contralto; George London, bass; New England Conservatory Chorus. The following program:
Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80 ... Brahms
Symphony No. 3, Op. 56 .. Mendelssohn
"The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" .... Menotti

By William Bender

A year ago, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony began their season in New York with the first local performance of Benjamin Britten's "War Requiem," and a triumphant occasion it was. Last night they took up the season with another New York premiere—Gian Carlo Menotti's dramatic cantata, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," which tells the story of a 13th century cleric on his deathbed who is tortured with the thought that he might have prevented loss of lives during the Children's Crusades.

It is always a pleasure to welcome Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians back, needless to say, but this sort of welcome programming puts us even more in their debt. It is a fine thing that new works by our major composers should be offered initially in such high style.

As it turned out, the new score is first-rate Menotti but not great music. It is, as one would expect, expertly fashioned, assimilative in style, and prone to the kind of things Menotti usually is prone to—melodramatic orchestral events, literalism in characterization, and the more or less zig-zag melodic writing that too often fails to emphasize the proper words.

Its ultimate theme is one that recurs again and again in Menotti—the loss of faith, or the fear that faith has been swallowed up. We find it in such works as "The Consul" and "The Medium."

As we meet the dying Bishop of Brindisi, he is talking to the nun who is attending him. He cannot get out of his head the memory of the sounds of the children who, years before, came through Brindisi on their way to the Holy Land. The Bishop tried to stop them, but the children would not be dissuaded and the townspeople would not help him. In the end he gave them his blessing, a move that in his eyes implied sanction. On the sea journey two ships were lost, and many of the children who survived the trip aboard other ships were captured by pirates and sold for slaves.

It is not so much his choice that disturbs him, but that God failed him at the moment of decision. "If I must guide your flock, why did you leave me unguided?" asks the Bishop.

The cantata takes the form of a straight musical dialogue between the Bishop and the nun, sung superbly last night by baritone George London and mezzo Lili Chookasian. There are also Hollywood-type flashbacks, in which the children are heard crying, "Give us your ships, give us the sea," and in which the townspeople voice their faith in the children. And at the end there is a chorus of summation in which the Bishop is promised the answer in death. The excellent choruses were the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs of Boston and the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The literalism in characterization referred to is the sort of thing that inevitably gives the Bishop an angular melodic line with string tremolo accompaniment, the nun a more straightforward type of melody (almost hymn-like) with, say, a harp accompaniment, and the children's chorus a pure, direct utterance that seemed a cross between sea chanties and songs for the young.

The use of melodrama is best illustrated by the wallopping of the gong and drums (it could have been right out of "Tosca") after the quiet end of the final chorus and leading to a final orchestral crescendo.

There was no denying the impressiveness of much of the choral writing, such as the Townspeople's "What burning vision," but throughout the work one waited for some emotion one could believe might have come from the soul of one of the characters. It never did.

In contrast to its conclusion, the concert began in a jolly mood—with a rousing reading of Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" which found Mr. Leinsdorf in a surprisingly jocular mood. It was good also to hear the Mendelssohn "Scotch" Symphony, an old favorite that no one seems to have played here much since the days of Dimitri Mitropoulos. Mr. Leinsdorf's performance was full of treasurable details and short on sparkle, but then Mr. Leinsdorf does not seem primarily interested in sparkle. He drew its architecture with clear lines, even repeating the exposition of the first movement. Yet this lighthearted work really isn't the sort of thing that needs architecture. It was the sort of performance that left nothing to chance—and that profited little by inspiration of the moment as a result.

22

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W 468,419

OCT 31 1964

GIAN CARLO MENOTTI's large cantata "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" concerns the deathbed hallucinations of that worthy, who, long before, blessed an army of infants embarking on the Children's Crusade and who, remembering the disasters that followed, holds himself accountable for their tragedy. It was given its New York première by the Boston Symphony last Wednesday night, and I sneaked out of the London Symphony concert early in order to hear it. It requires a bass (in this instance, George London) to sing the role of the Bishop, a soprano (Lili Chookasian) for the role of a nun who is trying to comfort him in his distress, a children's chorus (members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs), which represents the doomed children, and an adult chorus (the New England Conservatory Chorus), representing, first, the enraged townspeople of Brindisi crying for the Bishop's spiritual scalp, and, second, the judgment of Heaven, which absolves him of the crime that is on his conscience. Predictably, this composition turned out to be a deeply sincere and at times somewhat theatrical affair, touching in spots, thunderingly menacing and poetically evocative in others, and written throughout in the simple, communicative style that has made its composer a success with audiences. It poses a typical Menotti dilemma: Is the Bishop's guilt real or merely a figment of his imagination? And it solves this dilemma in a typically mystical manner. To me, it seems one of Menotti's strongest compositions—one in which words and music are beautifully written and beautifully blended, and also one in which simple melody and traditional harmony are, as in all his works, allowed to exert their full emotional appeal.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,580

APR 14 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 45,001

APR 14 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610

APR 14 1964

More Concerts Set

NEW YORK, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make four appearances at Carnegie Hall in an expanded concert schedule for the 1964-65 season, it was announced last night.

The expansion of the schedule will provide for 24 concerts next season. There were 14 concerts last season.

The Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the London Symphony will give four concerts each.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 339,455

NOV 7 1964

GIAN-CARLO MENOTTI'S The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi was a welcome experience at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony's seasonal series in Philharmonic Hall. It shows the manifold gifts of this creator in harmoniously imaginative concord, molding words and music to the exposition of an incident of the historic Children's Crusade of the thirteenth century. In it Menotti has created a kind of choral drama in which the dying Bishop, troubled by memory of the blessing he had given to the journey and the dire results that followed in a storm at sea, relives his judgment in doubt and torment.

Menotti's boldest gambit is to employ the simplest of means to evoke a complex psychological study. He has availed himself of the creator's privilege in surrounding the Bishop with a Nun who is confessor for his sins as well as nurse to his ailment, a children's chorus that reenacts the circumstances of his guilt, and a chorus of townspeople who are only too willing to cast the first stone of second judgment on his action.

It is the very simplicity of means which Menotti has elected to use that performs the paradox of complicating his problem. They serve him well in depicting the faith of the crusading children and evoking the agony of the Bishop at the crisis of his faith; the instrumental-vocal texture is beautifully designed and artfully executed. Conviction begins to depart when he seeks to depict the storm and its tragic results, and it leaves altogether with the climax of the townspeople's denunciatory "Let him walk naked, a man among men" on a rather conventional discord. The need, it would seem, would be for Menotti to find a valid means of extending a musical language that has served him well but no longer yields the variety it once did.

Erich Leinsdorf's attentive direction was of positive value to the best portions of the work, in advancing its effect by artful coloration of its tonal texture. But he was, later on, limited by what there was in the score itself. Both George London as the Bishop and Lili Chookasian as the Nun were vocally in character, allowing for the disadvantage that the present arrangement of the hall's stage canopy imposes on a singing voice. On the second terrace, for example, they sounded as if they were a block away. The choral parts were brilliantly performed by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the children's chorus of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High School Glee Clubs of Boston.

Difference in the starting times of the two events provided an opportunity on the evening of the last London Symphony Concert for attention to a Metropolitan Tosca in which Leonie Rysanek in the title role and Robert Merrill as Scarpia ventured these parts for the first time here. The prognosis was more favorable for him than for her, due in part to a greater supply of suitable sound. At best, Miss Rysanek's production has a woolly, strident quality that bruises rather than caresses Puccini's vocal line, and her best this time was in the range from F up. Below, it was heavy and unlovely. A vivid figure on the stage (and, for once, a "bruna Floria"), Miss Rysanek did not dress this first act appealingly, though something more may be said of the characterization when it can be judged at full length.

In his part of this act, Merrill met every challenge impressively well and suggested a believable likeness of the Roman policeman. It was well plotted dramatically, and skilfully composed to make the most of his trim, if not too imposing, figure. Flaviano Labò was a competent Cavaradossi, Nello Santi's conducting only a shade more than routine.

—IRVING KOLODIN.

BROOKLYN 10-22-65

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN DAILY
Monday, October 19, 1964

CAPITAL ... S BUREAU
NE... PER
C... NGS
COM... YORK
S...

BRO... RIER
Satu... 1964

CAPITAL ... EWS BUREAU
... N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIP... NGS
COM... YORK
ST...

... WS

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

N.Y. JOURNAL AMERICAN
Thursday, October 1 , 1964

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 12,100

OCT 17 1964

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

OCT 15 1964

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 76,558

OCT 19 1964

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy

With Erich Leinsdorf, its Music Director, on the podium, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 77th consecutive Brooklyn season on Thursday evening, October 22nd, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

A fixture of Broklyn's cultural and social life before the turn of the century, the Boston orchestra has enhanced its own reputation and attracted new audiences in recent seasons thru its radio broadcasts, its best-selling RCA-Victor recordings and the vast throngs it has drawn in summer concerts at Tanglewood. The majority of musical connoisseurs frankly rate it as the finest orchestra in the United States and ranking among the best five in the entire world. Under the guidance of Leinsdorf, it has risen to new heights of glory and eminence.

Subscription tickets for the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra series still are available. Box office hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER ®
SUN. 2,949,646

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony Coming Thursday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, familiar to generations of Brooklyn music-lovers, will open its 77th concert series Thursday evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1, the third Symphony (Scottish) of Mendelssohn and Brahms's Academic Festival overture. Other concerts will be given Dec. 3, Jan. 21, Feb. 25 and April 1.

NY 10-23-65

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

OCT 24 1964

Three works, conceived in youth by different composers widely separated by geography and time, formed the substance of last night's concert by the Boston Symphony, under Erich Leinsdorf's direction, at Philharmonic Hall. Shostakovitch's First Symphony, orchestral excerpts and the Song of the Wood-Dove from Schoenberg's "Gurre-Lieder" with Lili Chookasian as soloist, and a repeat from Wednesday of Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony, provided interesting listening in their unusual juxtaposition of periods and styles.

As might be expected, Mr. Leinsdorf led his virtuoso orchestra through Shostakovitch's first largo and adroitly scored effort with exhilarating results. Moods, from bristling to songful, were uttered with an almost mechanical perfection, and if one hadn't known so already, the symphony spoke for itself in a new voice and with implications of revolutionary musical ideas to come.

In contrast, the lush romanticism of the "Gurre-Lieder" excerpts called forth the orchestra's richest sounds, matched by Miss Chookasian in her best voice in the passionate description of death and shattered love.

In conclusion, the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3, was Scotch plaid of brilliant pattern, if heavier than usual material.

LOUIS SNYDER

22

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 468,419

OCT 31 1964 Burrelle's

GIAN CARLO MENOTTI's large cantata "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" concerns the deathbed hallucinations of that worthy, who, long before, blessed an army of infants embarking on the Children's Crusade and, remembering the disasters that followed, holds himself accountable for their tragedy. It was given its New York première by the Boston Symphony last Wednesday night, and I sneaked out of the London Symphony concert early in order to hear it. It requires a bass (in this instance, George London) to sing the role of the Bishop, a soprano (Lili Chookasian) for the role of a nun who is trying to comfort him in his distress, a children's chorus (members of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs), which represents the doomed children, and an adult chorus (the New England Conservatory Chorus), representing, first, the enraged townspeople of Brindisi crying for the Bishop's spiritual scalp, and, second, the judgment of Heaven, which absolves him of the crime that is on his conscience. Predictably, this composition turned out to be a deeply sincere and at times somewhat theatrical affair, touching in spots, thunderingly menacing and poetically evocative in others, and written throughout in the simple, communicative style that has made its composer a success with audiences. It poses a typical Menotti dilemma: Is the Bishop's guilt real or merely a figment of his imagination? And it solves this dilemma in a typically mystical manner. To me, it seems one of Menotti's strongest compositions—one in which words and music are beautifully written and beautifully blended, and also one in which simple melody and traditional harmony are, as in all his works, allowed to exert their full emotional appeal.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,580

APR 14 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 45,001

APR 14 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,610

APR 14 1964

More Concerts Set

NEW YORK, (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make four appearances at Carnegie Hall in an expanded concert schedule for the 1964-65 season, it was announced last night.

The expansion of the schedule will provide for 24 concerts next season. There were 14 concerts last season.

The Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the London Symphony will give four concerts each.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 339,455

NOV. 7 1964 Burrelle's

GIAN-CARLO MENOTTI'S The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi was a welcome experience at the opening concert of the Boston Symphony's seasonal series in Philharmonic Hall. It shows the manifold gifts of this creator in harmoniously imaginative concord, molding words and music to the exposition of an incident of the historic Children's Crusade of the thirteenth century. In it Menotti has created a kind of choral drama in which the dying Bishop, troubled by memory of the blessing he had given to the journey and the dire results that followed in a storm at sea, relives his judgment in doubt and torment.

Menotti's boldest gambit is to employ the simplest of means to evoke a complex psychological study. He has availed himself of the creator's privilege in surrounding the Bishop with a Nun who is confessor for his sins as well as nurse to his ailment, a children's chorus that reenacts the circumstances of his guilt, and a chorus of townspeople who are only too willing to cast the first stone of second judgment on his action.

It is the very simplicity of means which Menotti has elected to use that performs the paradox of complicating his problem. They serve him well in depicting the faith of the crusading children and evoking the agony of the Bishop at the crisis of his faith; the instrumental-vocal texture is beautifully designed and artfully executed. Conviction begins to depart when he seeks to depict the storm and its tragic results, and it leaves altogether with the climax of the townspeople's denunciatory "Let him walk naked, a man among men" on a rather conventional discord. The need, it would seem, would be for Menotti to find a valid means of extending a musical language that has served him well but no longer yields the variety it once did.

Erich Leinsdorf's attentive direction was of positive value to the best portions of the work, in advancing its effect by artful coloration of its tonal texture. But he was, later on, limited by what there was in the score itself. Both George London as the Bishop and Lili Chookasian as the Nun were vocally in character, allowing for the disadvantage that the present arrangement of the hall's stage canopy imposes on a singing voice. On the second terrace, for example, they sounded as if they were a block away. The choral parts were brilliantly performed by the New England Conservatory Chorus and the children's chorus of the Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High School Glee Clubs of Boston.

Difference in the starting times of the two events provided an opportunity on the evening of the last London Symphony Concert for attention to a Metropolitan Tosca in which Leonie Rysanek in the title role and Robert Merrill as Scarpia ventured these parts for the first time here. The prognosis was more favorable for him than for her, due in part to a greater supply of suitable sound. At best, Miss Rysanek's production has a woolly, strident quality that bruises rather than caresses Puccini's vocal line, and her best this time was in the range from F up. Below, it was heavy and unlovely. A vivid figure on the stage (and, for once, a "bruna Floria"), Miss Rysanek did not dress this first act appealingly, though something more may be said of the characterization when it can be judged at full length.

In his part of this act, Merrill met every challenge impressively well and suggested a believable likeness of the Roman policeman. It was well plotted dramatically, and skilfully composed to make the most of his trim, if not too imposing, figure. Flaviano Labò was a competent Cavaradossi, Nello Santi's conducting only a shade more than routine.

—IRVING KOLODIN

BROOKLYN 10-22-65

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
047
BROOKLYN DAILY
Monday, October 19, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
047
BROOKLYN KINGS COURIER
Saturday, October 17, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
047
BROOKLYN BAY NEWS
Saturday, October 17, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
N. Y. JOURNAL AMERICAN
Thursday, October 15, 1964

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 12,100

OCT 17 1964 Burrelle's

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

OCT 15 1964 Burrelle's

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 76,558

OCT 19 1964 Burrelle's

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy

With Erich Leinsdorf, its Music Director, on the podium, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 77th consecutive Brooklyn season on Thursday evening, October 22nd, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

A fixture of Broklyn's cultural and social life before the turn of the century, the Boston orchestra has enhanced its own reputation and attracted new audiences in recent seasons thru its radio broadcasts, its best-selling RCA-Victor recordings and the vast throngs it has drawn to summer concerts at Tanglewood. The majority of musical connoisseurs frankly rate it as the finest orchestra in the United States and ranking among the best five in the entire world. Under the guidance of Leinsdorf, it has risen to new heights of glory and eminence.

Subscription tickets for the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra series still are available. Box office hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 2,949,646

OCT 18 1964 Burrelle's

Boston Symphony Coming Thursday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, familiar to generations of Brooklyn music-lovers, will open its 77th concert series Thursday evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 1, the third Symphony (Scottish) of Mendelssohn and Brahms's Academic Festival overture. Other concerts will be given Dec. 3, Jan. 21, Feb. 25 and April 1.

NY 10-23-65

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

OCT 24 1964 Burrelle's

Three works, conceived in youth by different composers widely separated by geography and time, formed the substance of last night's concert by the Boston Symphony, under Erich Leinsdorf's direction, at Philharmonic Hall. Shostakovitch's First Symphony, orchestral excerpts and the Song of the Wood-Dove from Schoenberg's "Gurre-Lieder" with Lili Chookasian as soloist, and a repeat from Wednesday of Mendelssohn's "Scottish" Symphony, provided interesting listening in their unusual juxtaposition of periods and styles.

As might be expected, Mr. Leinsdorf led his virtuoso orchestra through Shostakovitch's first largo and adroitly scored effort with exhilarating results. Moods, from bristling to songful, were uttered with an almost mechanical perfection, and if one hadn't known so already, the symphony spoke for itself in a new voice and with implications of revolutionary musical ideas to come.

In contrast, the lush romanticism of the "Gurre-Lieder" excerpts called forth the orchestra's richest sounds, matched by Miss Chookasian in her best voice in the passionate description of death and shattered love.

In conclusion, the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3, was Scotch plaid of brilliant pattern, if heavier than usual material.

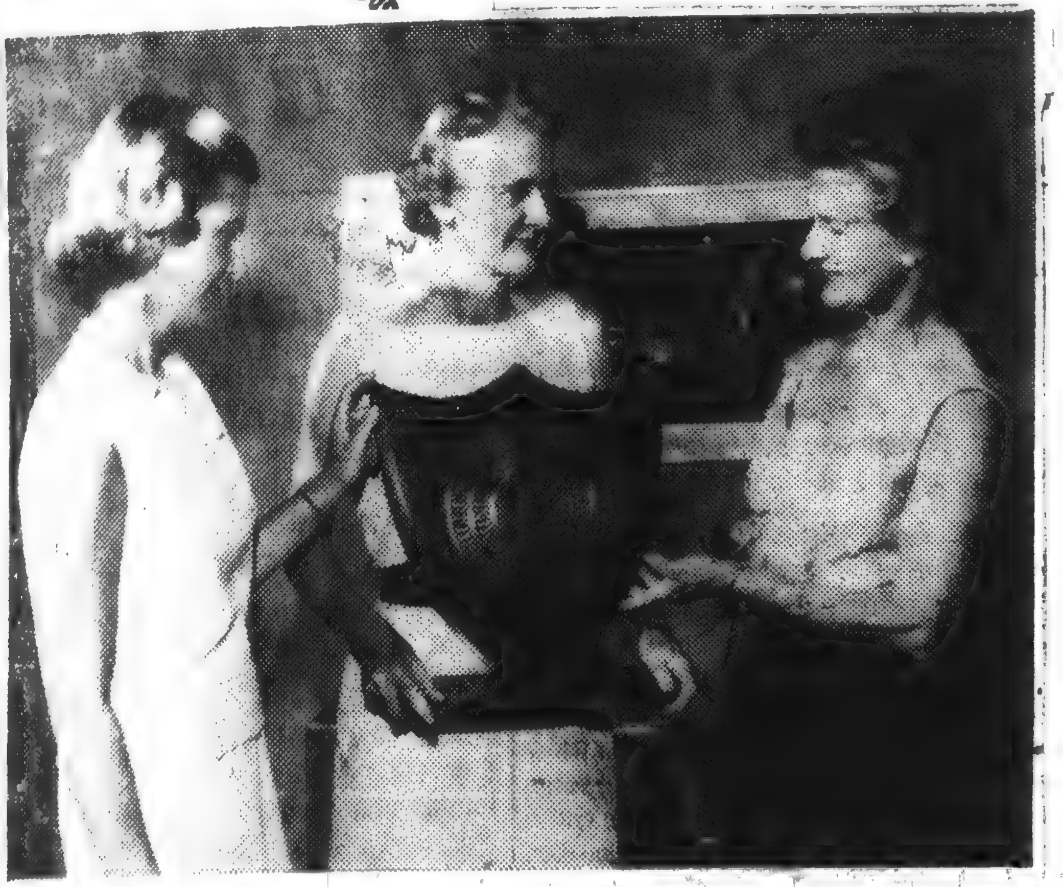
LOUIS SNYDER

NEWARK.

23

WESTFIELD, N. J.
LEADER
W. 6,700

OCT 2 2 1964



PLAN BENEFIT CONCERT—Mrs. Carl W. Peterson of Tuttle Pkwy., (right), chairman of benefit concert being planned by N. J. Wellesley Club, shows the Wellesley College Crest to her cochairmen, Mrs. William R. Vanderbilt, Summit, (left), Mrs. D. A. Kilburn, South Orange, president of the club. The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Saturday evening at the Mosque Theater. The women are wearing gowns by Hahne & Company.

Boston Symphony Plays Saturday For Benefit

The New Jersey Wellesley Club has selected for its 1964-65 benefit project a concert to be given Saturday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf. The date, will also mark the expected completion and grand opening of the Mosque Theatre, Newark, following $200,000's worth of redecorating and acoustical improvements under the direction of Symphony Hall, a recently formed organization of Newark's business, industrial and financial leaders. Proceeds from the concert will benefit the Wellesley College Development Fund.

Co-chairmen of the benefit committee are Mrs. Carl W. Peterson of 310 Tuttle Pkwy, Mrs. William R. Vanderbilt of Summit and Mrs. Don A. Kilburn of South Orange, president of the club and an ex-officio member of the committee. Ticket chairman is Mrs. Benjamin D. Sisson of Summit.

Regional chairmen for Westfield are Mrs. Norman Morash and Mrs. Walter S. Hayward Jr. They will be assisted by junior chairmen Mrs. James Huebner and Mrs. Kenneth L. Yates.

Plans for pre-concert dinner parties or for social gatherings after the program are being made by club officers who include Mrs. E. Alfred Herberich and Mrs. Richard R. Haig of Westfield. Other parties in Westfield will be given by Mrs. Walter S. Hayward Jr. and Mrs. Norman Morash.

ORANGE, N. J.
TRANSCRIPT
W. 4,000

OCT 2 2 1964

WEST ORANGE, N. J.
CHRONICLE
W. 5,300

OCT 2 2 1964

ERICH LEINSDORF will condust the Boston Symphony Orchestra which opens the 1964-65 classical concerts at the Mosque Theatre this Saturday evening. The Mosque is now under the management of Symphony Hall, Inc., a non-profit organization.

THE COURIER-NEWS
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
D. 46,472

OCT 1 9 1964

Symphony Concert Set

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will perform for the New Jersey Wellesley Club's benefit Saturday evening in the Mosque Theater, Newark.

Mrs. Carl W. Peterson of Westfield, co-chairman, said the concert will aid the Wellesley College Development Fund. The event also will mark the grand opening of the theater after extensive renovation, under the direction of Symphony Hall, a recently formed organization of Newark business, industrial and financial leaders.

Among the area residents serving as regional chairmen are Mrs. Kenneth Yates of Plainfield, Mrs. John P. Munn 3rd of Fanwood, and Mrs. Norman Morash, Mrs. Walter S. Hayward Jr. and Mrs. James M. Huebner of Westfield.

State officers who will arrange pre-concert dinner parties or social gatherings after the program are Mrs. E. Alfred Herberich and Mrs. Richard R. Haig of Westfeld.

Mrs. William R. Vanderbilt of Summit is assisting Mrs. Peterson as co-chairman of the benefit committee.

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 278,945 SUN. 417,195

OCT 2 1 1964

Bostonians

Leinsdorf Concert to Show New Mosque

Works by Brahms, Shostakovitch and Beethoven will be featured when the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens the 1964-65 classical concert season at the refurbished Mosque Theater Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra, which will appear here under the auspices of Moe Septee and Felix G. Gerstman.

The concert will begin with the "Academic Festival" Overture by Brahms, followed by the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 1. Beethoven's "Pastorale" will conclude the program.

The concert will mark the opening night for Symphony Hall, Inc., the nonprofit organization that has leased the Mosque from the City of Newark.

DAILY RECORD
MORRISTOWN, N. J.
D. 23,634

OCT 5 1964

Mrs. Steven Fulda of Glenwild Road, Mrs. Henry van Dam of Rosemont Avenue, and Mrs. R. M. Braunstein of Green Avenue, are working on preparations for the concert to be sponsored by the Wellesley College Club Oct. 24, at the Mosque Theatre in Newark. Famed Conductor Erich Leinsdorf will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at this concert which will begin at 8:30 p.m. Other area residents working on concert plans are Mrs. Clinton Curtis of Morristown and Mrs. Benjamin D. Sisson of Summit.

GLEN RIDGE, N. J.
PAPER
W. 1,600

OCT 2 2 1964

WELLESLEY CLUB TO HEAR CONCERT

The New Jersey Wellesley Club will hold its annual benefit this Saturday at the Mosque Theater in Newark at 8:30 p.m. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf will present the following program: Brahms, Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80; Shostakovich, Symphony No. 1 in F. Op. 10; Beethoven's 6th Pastoral.

Ticket holders among the Alumnae from Glen Ridge are: Mrs. Donald Anderson, Mrs. Karl E. Clough, Mrs. Edward Prescott Hooper, Jr., Mrs. R. Milford Kime, Mrs. David H. Poverman, Mrs. Frederick G Rapp.

NEWARK, N. J.
JEWISH NEWS
W. 24,500

OCT 2 3 1964

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the opening of the 1964-65 classical concert season at the Mosque Theater tomorhow night. The Mosque is now under the management of Symphony Hall, Inc.

WEST ORANGE, N. J.
CHRONICLE
W. 5,300

OCT 8 1964

Wellesley Club To Sponsor Concert

The New Jersey Wellesley Club has selected for its 1964-1965 project a concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf. The date, Saturday evening, October 24 will also mark the expected completion and grand opening of the Mosque Theatre in Newark, following $200,000's worth of redecorating and acoustical improvements under the direction of Symphony Hall, a recently formed organization of Newark's business, professional, industrial and financial leaders. Proceeds from the concert will benefit the Wellesley College Development Fund.

Co-chairmen of the benefit committee are Mrs. Carl W. Peterson, Westfield, and Mrs. William R. Vanderbilt of Summit. Also assisting with arrangements is Mrs. Ralph Hjelm of East Orange.

ORANGE, N. J.
TRANSCRIPT
W. 4,000

OCT 8 1964

Wellesley Club To Sponsor Concert

The New Jersey Wellesley Club has selected for its 1964-1965 project a concert to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf. The date, Saturday evening, October 24 will also mark the expected completion and grand opening of the Mosque Theatre in Newark, following $200,000's worth of redecorating and acoustical improvements under the direction of Symphony Hall, a recently formed organization of Newark's business, professional, industrial and financial leaders. Proceeds from the concert will benefit the Wellesley College Development Fund.

Co-chairmen of the benefit committee are Mrs. Carl W. Peterson, Westfield, and Mrs. William R. Vanderbilt of Summit. Also assisting with arrangements is Mrs. Ralph Hjelm of East Orange.

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 278,945 SUN. 417,195

OCT 2 6 1964

A New Mosque

Bostonians In Concert

By ALAN BRANIGAN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and a newly decorated Mosque Theater burst simultaneously upon a capacity audience Saturday night. The occasion was the first major concert given in the hall since it was bought by the City of Newark, and placed under the direction of Symphony Hall, Inc., a body of culture-minded citizens. It was an unqualified success on all counts.

The symphony has changed personnel considerably since days when it came here under the successive batons of Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch. Leadership also has changed hands and now the most treasured possession of the proper Bostonians is led by Erich Leinsdorf, a dapper, expressive dynamo of a man who always seems to be in complete control of the situation.

There are some other important changes. Joseph Silverstein, a phenomenal young violinist, is the new concertmaster and it would be hard to match his authority in orchestral matters and his silvery tone in the solos. As to the other important newcomer, Jules Eskin, first cellist, we'll have to wait until he has some important solos to do. Meanwhile, he was seen exerting responsible leadership in his section.

The program offered no rude shocks and, oddly enough in these days of double-whammy program numbers, no real explosions of sound. Most of the novelty was contained in the Symphony No. 1 of Dmitri Shostakovich, Russian composer of immense stature in modern music.

Wry in Humor

This work is a fine compendium of his early styles—now acrid and wryly humorous, now sentimental in almost a treacly fashion and eventually sturdy and marchlike in the mode that can only be called proletarian. It is a handsomely wrought work, especially in the scherzo's flying figures, and the orchestra whipped through it with the utmost suavity of tone and command of its strange idioms.

The program's opener was Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture, an overly-familiar mixture of lively old German school songs. One could have wished for something more adventurous from the Romantic school.

A full scale examination of Leinsdorf's exquisite Beethoven technique was presented in the Symphony No. 6, the ineffable "Pastorale". Except for a section that sounded somewhat scrambled in the slow movement, titled "Scenes by the Brook," the lovely work with its sounds of nature proceeded with great majesty. One could marvel at the crisp flying staccatos of the violins, at the first flute's liquid passages, the nostalgic sound of the horns.

It was all quite beautiful, in fact, and a good match for the wonders that are emerging from the decorators' hands in fixing up the old auditorium.

Many of the chairs in the orchestra are reupholstered in gold, a great golden curtain has been put into place and the stage is framed in gray drapes at the sides and a tricky hanging at the rear. The huge chandelier was a charming sight, the red carpets were a big improvement. Altogether, it was a sight to make the heart rejoice and a sign of Newark's continuing progress.

Newark Star-Ledger
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 230,698 SUN. 377,132

OCT 2 6 1964

Conductor Erich Leindorf, right chats, with orchestra's personal manager, Rosario Mazzeo

Patrons take refreshments at intermission

Glittering Mosque greets its audience

Alex Bennett Kahn, who redesigned Mosque Theater, escorts Mrs. Moe Septee, wife of producer

A well-dressed capacity audience of music lovers from all parts of New Jersey, who turned out Saturday night to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the new season at Newark's Mosque Theatre, got a treat for their eyes along with one for their ears.

Along with the music, they eijoyed the Mosque's new Venetian Red carpeting, its new glittering gold metallic stage curtain and decorator touches of off-white, gold and bronze in the lobby to enhance the 39-year-old theater's priceless gold leaf trim.

The improvements were the first in a planned program which will eventually find Symphony Hall, Inc., new lessees of the Mosque, spending a total of $750,000 to make the house a showplace of elegance.

Less than a month ago the city of Newark purchased the Mosque from private owners and leased it to Symphony Hall, a group of business and civic leaders.

The Boston Symphony, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, ushered in the new regime.

The occasion brought some members of the audience out in formal dress.

Alex Bennett Khan, well known theatrical decorator hired to plan the Mosque's face lifting, hopes to have even more physical surprises ready for the audience which will arrive on Nov. 7 to hear Marian Anderson. Miss Anderson, who plans to retire from the concert stage next year, has selected Newark as one of the stops on her farewell tour.

With Saturday night's concert beginning at 8:30, workmen were busy up until 5 p.m.

STORRS

8

Newark Sunday News

OCT 2 5 1964

Newark News Photos

MUSIC TIME—Melvin Wallerstein, Newark attorney, and wife await curtain at Mosque concert.

New Glitter At Mosque

Boston Symphony and Decor on Display at Opening

By ALAN BRANIGAN

Music and interior decoration shared the attention of the huge audience which attended last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Mosque Theater. The occasion offered concertgoers, many of them in evening clothes, their first view of improvements made in the 3,400 seat auditorium since it was taken over Oct. 5 by the City of Newark, with Symphony Hall, Inc., as the lessee.

Most prominent among many and startling renovations in the theater was the vast chandelier, on which 5,000 crystals twinkled minus the grime of decades which had formerly obscured their beauty. Competing for attention was a dazzling new metallic curtain in gold to replace the dingy drape of yore.

The decoration of the interior of the hall, still only partly completed, was done in a blending of gold, red and white. Much of the original gold leaf of the theater was still in place, but in a newly polished state.

Seats Re-Done

Hundreds of seats had been re-upholstered in gold as part of a long and much-needed job. The halls, lobbies and lounges saw similar improvement in painting and polishing.

The Boston orchestra, one of the world's outstanding musical organizations, was conducted by its musical director, Erich Leinsdorf. The program provided established classics, Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, the "Pastorale," and a modern work from Russia Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1.

The concert marked the opening of the concert presentation season of Moe Septee and Felix G. Gerstman. Septee also is the newly appointed managing director of the Mosque.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

ARTFORD, CONN.
unday Courant
an. Circ. 168,428

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony Opens UConn Series Oct. 25

STORRS (Special) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which launched the University of Connecticut Concert Series nine years ago, returns to the Jorgensen Auditorium Oct. 25 at 3 p.m. to help launch the UofC's 10th season of musical events.

The 1964 appearance of the Boston Symphony marks the 10th successive season that the Bay State ensemble has been scheduled at the UofC. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, is making his second appearance as music director. Leinsdorf has chosen to open with Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," and conclude with Beethoven's "Sixth Symphony." In between, the orchestra will perform Shostakovich's "First Symphony."

In the University's 10th season of concerts will be: Pianist Rudolf Serkin, Dec. 3 at 8;15 p.m.; the Goldovsky Grand Opera, Jan. 14 at 8:15 p.m.; the Cleveland Orchestra, Feb. 14 at 3 p.m.; the Houston Symphony, March 10 at 8:15 p.m.; and Soprano Mildred Miller of the Metropolitan, April 8 at 8:15 p.m.

THE BRIDGEPORT POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
D. 83,128 S. 76,612

OCT 2 5 1964

The Hartford Courant
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 124,441 SUN. 168,428

OCT 1 8 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

OCT 1 4 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,868

OCT 2 4 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 128,545

OCT 1 9 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Windham County
Observer
PUTNAM, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4,165

OCT 2 1 1964

Boston Symphony Concert Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which launched the University of Connecticut Concert Series nine years ago, returns to the Jorgensen Auditorium, Storrs, Sunday, October 25, at 3 p.m., to help launch the U of C's tenth season of major musical events.

The 1964 appearance of the Boston Symphony marks the tenth successive season that the distinguished Bay State ensemble has been scheduled at the U of C. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the BSO, is making his second appearance as music director. Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen a rich program of the masters, opening with Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" and concluding with Beethoven's "Sixth (or 'Pastoral') Symphony."

In between, the Boston Orchestra will perform Shostakoich's "First Symphony," considered by critics the most remarkable work composed by the Soviet musician. The symphony, composed when Shostakovich was but 19 years old, is said to have set the music world of the day afire. On its merits he was welcomed as a new Beethoven—"or at least a new Brahms."

When the Boston Symphony appears at the U of C Oct. 25, the audience will be seeing one of the busiest, if not the greatest, symphonies in the world. The BSO now claims to have the longest concert season of any privately-supported orchestra in the world.

During its eighty-second year (1962-63) it made 227 appearances, including its second transcontinental tour of the U. S. The BSO was the first orchestra to visit the Soviet Union and is the only orchestra to conduct its own summer festival on its own land and operate its own school of music.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN
D. 29,000 S. 24,600

SEP 2 7 1964

UConn Concert Series Opens With Boston Symphony

The University of Connecticut's 1964-65 schedule of events prom- a diverse program of music, ter and films.

The school's concert series will Oct. 25 with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Pianist Rudolf Serkin will Dec. 3. The Goldovsky Grand Opera will present Mozart's Don Giovanni on Jan. 14.

The Cleveland Orchestra, under the direction of George Szell, will perform Feb. 14. Edith Peinemann will be violin soloist. On March 10, Sir John Barbirolli will conduct the Houston symphony. Mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller of the Metropolitan Opera will conclude the series on April 8. All concerts will be in the Albert N. Jorgensen auditorium.

The chamber music series in von der Mehden Recital hall open Oct. 15 with the Societa Corelli, followed by The Festival Winds on Nov. 23. The Hungarian Quartet will play Dec. 14; the Pasquier Trio on Feb. 10. The concluding performance will be on March 22 by the Vegh Quartet.

The off-Broadway show, Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad, will be presented Nov. 6 through 14 in the Harriet S. Jorgensen theatre. The film, Suddenly Last Summer, will be shown Nov. 15. Other presentations in the theater series are: The Merchant of Venice, Dec. 4-12; All The Way Home, March 12-20; Oedipus Rex, March 26-April 3; Henry V (film) April 4; and The Importance of Being Earnest, May 7-15.

Tickets for all events are available at the Jorgensen auditorium box office, Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

FLORENCE, ALA.
TIMES
D. 11,700 S. 11,200

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

OCT 1 9 1964

Boston Symphony Here Sun. Ticket Sales Overwhelming

BY ALICE ROCKWELL

Ticket sales for the University Concert Series scheduled to open Sunday, October 25th with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been overwhelming. Mr. Michael Brotman, Auditorium Manager, has announced that on a subscription basis, over 2800 tickets have already been sold.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, presently consists of 101 men and 3 women. It has the largest concert series of any privately supported orchestra in the world which consisted of 227 concerts in the 1962-63 season. Concerts have been given in Paris, The Hague, Berlin, London, and Vienna as well as Australia and Japan. In 1956, it was the first western orchestra to perform in Leningrad and Moscow.

With Aaron Copland serving as

Cont. to pg. 6, col. 1.

The program for the evening will include three selections, Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Opus 80, Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1, Opus 10, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral". According to Mr. Brotman, tickets for the first balcony at $10 and a few floor seats at $7.50 are available on a subscription basis. There are also season tickets available in the student unreserved section. Single student tickets for this section will be on sale Thursday and Friday, Oct. 22nd and 23rd and on Sunday. The box office opens at 2 P.M.

STORRS

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
417

OCT 2 5 1964

Newark News Photos

MUSIC TIME—Melvin Wallerstein, Newark attorney, and wife await curtain at Mosque concert.

New Glitter At Mosque

Boston Symphony and Decor on Display at Opening

By ALAN BRANIGAN

Music and interior decoration shared the attention of the huge audience which attended last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Mosque Theater. The occasion offered concertgoers, many of them in evening clothes, their first view of improvements made in the 3,400 seat auditorium since it was taken over Oct. 5 by the City of Newark, with Symphony Hall, Inc., as the lessee.

Most prominent among many and startling renovations in the theater was the vast chandelier, on which 5,000 crystals twinkled minus the grime of decades which had formerly obscured their beauty. Competing for attention was a dazzling new metallic curtain in gold to replace the dingy drape of yore.

The decoration of the interior of the hall, still only partly completed, was done in a blending of gold, red and white. Much of the original gold leaf of the theater was still in place, but in a newly polished state.

Seats Re-Done

Hundreds of seats had been re-upholstered in gold as part of a long and much-needed job. The halls, lobbies and lounges saw similar improvement in painting and polishing.

The Boston orchestra, one of the world's outstanding mu organizations, was con by its musical director Leinsdorf. The pro vided established Brahms' "Acade Overture and B phony No. 6 and a m Russia phony

The ope ti

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

ARTFORD, CONN.
unday Courant
in. Circ. 168,428

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony Opens UConn Series Oct. 25

STORRS (Special) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which launched the University of Connecticut Concert Series nine years ago, returns to the Jorgensen Auditorium Oct. 25 at 3 p.m. to help launch the UofC's 10th season of musical events.

The 1964 appearance of the Boston Symphony marks the 10th successive season that the Bay State ensemble has been scheduled at the UofC. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, is making his second appearance as music director. Leinsdorf has chosen to open with Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," and conclude with Beethoven's "Sixth Symphony." In between, the orchestra will perform Shostakovich's "First Symphony."

In the University's 10th season of concerts will be: Pianist Rudolf Serkin, Dec. 3 at 8:15 p.m.; the Goldovsky Grand Opera, Jan. 14 at 8:15 p.m.; the Cleveland Orchestra, Feb. 14 at 3 p.m.; the Houston Symphony, March 10 at 8:15 p.m.; and Soprano Mildred Miller of the Metropolitan, April 8 at 8:15 p.m.

THE BRIDGEPORT POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
D. 83,128 S. 76,612

OCT 2 5 1964

The Hartford Courant
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 124,441 SUN. 168,428

OCT 1 8 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

OCT 1 4 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,868

OCT 2 4 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 128,545

OCT 1 9 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Windham County
Observer
PUTNAM, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 4,165

OCT 2 1 1964

Boston Symphony Concert Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which launched the University of Connecticut Concert Series nine years ago, returns to the Jorgensen Auditorium, Storrs, Sunday, October 25, at 3 p.m., to help launch the U of C's tenth season of major musical events.

The 1964 appearance of the Boston Symphony marks the tenth successive season that the distinguished Bay State ensemble has been scheduled at the U of C. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the BSO, is making his second appearance as music director. Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen a rich program of the masters, opening with Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" and concluding with Beethoven's "Sixth (or 'Pastoral') Symphony."

In between, the Boston Orchestra will perform Shostakovich's "First Symphony," considered by critics the most remarkable work composed by the Soviet musician. The symphony, composed when Shostakovich was but 19 years old, is said to have set the music world of the day afire. On its merits he was welcomed as a new Beethoven—"or at least a new Brahms."

When the Boston Symphony appears at the U of C Oct. 25, the audience will be seeing one of the busiest, if not the greatest, symphonies in the world. The BSO now claims to have the longest concert season of any privately-supported orchestra in the world.

During its eighty-second year (1962-63) it made 227 appearances, including its second transcontinental tour of the U. S. The BSO was the first orchestra to visit the Soviet Union and is the only orchestra to conduct its own summer festival on its own land and operate its own school of music.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN
D. 29,000 S. 24,600

SEP 2 7 1964

UConn Concert Series Opens With Boston Symphony

The University of Connecticut's 1964-65 schedule of events promises a diverse program of music, theater and films.

The school's concert series will open Oct. 25 with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Pianist Rudolf Serkin will appear Dec. 3. The Goldovsky Grand Opera will present Mozart's Don Giovanni on Jan. 14.

The Cleveland Orchestra, under the direction of George Szell, will perform Feb. 14. Edith Peinemann will be violin soloist. On March 10, Sir John Barbirolli will conduct the Houston symphony. Mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller of the Metropolitan Opera will conclude the series on April 8. All concerts will be in the Albert N. Jorgensen auditorium.

The chamber music series in von der Mehden Recital hall open Oct. 15 with the Societa Corelli, followed by The Festival Winds on Nov. 23. The Hungarian Quartet will play Dec. 14; the Pasquier Trio on Feb. 10. The concluding performance will be on March 22 by the Vegh Quartet.

The off-Broadway show, Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad, will be presented Nov. 6 through 14 in the Harriet S. Jorgensen theatre. The film, Suddenly Last Summer, will be shown Nov. 15. Other presentations in the theater series are: The Merchant of Venice, Dec. 4-12; All The Way Home, March 12-20; Oedipus Rex, March 26-April 3; Henry V (film) April 4; and The Importance of Being Earnest, May 7-15.

Tickets for all events are available at the Jorgensen auditorium box office, Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Symphony

Cont. from pg. 1 col. 5.

Chairman of the Faculty, the Orchestra owns and operates the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Each year the Berkshire Festival is held here for a period of eight weeks. The Music Center is in session concurrent with the Festival and concerts and lectures are offered to those enrolled in the Friends of Berkshire Music Center.

The open rehearsal policy of the Symphony has been a popular innovation. The final rehearsals of the five series in Boston are open to the public for a coin.

The program for the evening will include three selections, Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Opus 80, Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1, Opus 10, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral". According to Mr. Brotman, tickets for the first balcony at $10 and a few floor seats at $7.50 are available on a subscription basis. There are also season tickets available in the student unreserved section. Single student tickets for this section will be on sale Thursday and Friday, Oct. 22nd and 23rd and on Sunday. The box office opens at 2 P.M.

70

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 31,919

NOV 2 1964

—Yesterday's Concert—

Sir John Barbirolli Leads Boston Symphony

By WILLIAM MEREDITH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, regularly the highlight of the Connecticut College Concert Series, opened the current season yesterday afternoon when Sir John Barbirolli conducted a program of his very special kind. This great orchestra seems if anything to have grown more brilliant under the recent guidance of Eric Leinsdorf, and the English conductor yesterday lived up to the reputation he has accumulated at home for fastidious interpretation of the big, untidy works of post-romanticism.

If the audience had misgivings about the program, these were lost in the experience of an afternoon of virtuoso conducting and playing.

As if to disarm his hearers, Barbirolli opened the program with one of Berlioz' showiest and most bewitching scores, the Roman Carnival Overture. He led it with a bright, nervous energy and the piece did what Berlioz records of an early performance of it in Vienna (so the program tells us), "it exploded like a mass of fireworks." It also set standards of musical organization which put the next two works at distinct disadvantage.

Reviewer, Audience Disagree

Frederick Delius is perhaps the dullest of all English composers — not a title that goes by default — and the best that one can say for The Walk to The Paradise Garden is that it is shorter and less pretentious than many of his works, though still not very short or very unpretentious. This reviewer must dutifully reports that the audience seemed to like it better than he did, but perhaps their applause was only for the gentle, lucid reading it received.

The first half of the program was concluded with Ralph Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6, a work of fierce, overblown energy, more successful than would seem possible for its repetitious, essentially unmusical content. Under Barbirolli's masterful control, the insistent rhythmic meaning of the work over-rode a banality that an inferior performance might expose. The percussion section is allowed to cool down during a long pianissimo Epilogue where Vaughan Williams' sense of musical structure is surer than elsewhere, a section that resolves the work with great eloquence. It is work one is glad to have heard and would not want to hear soon or often again.

The final work was Sibelius' Second Symphony. Ordinarily you would not use this, or any work of the effusive Finn, as a yardstick for elegance or economy, but following Vaughan Williams' piece this symphony seemed conspicuously logical and organic in its movement, as though Sibelius had mastered a secret of improvisation that his English contemporary didn't know.

Barbirolli's Gift

Sir John's logic and vigor were equal to the task. The symphony was given as brilliant a surface as it is ever likely to get. The third and final movements restored a quality of pure musical delight that had been absent since the Roman Carnival, making one realize that there had been a good deal of austere British uplift in the afternoon's work.

But the skillful, turbulent music heard at Palmer Auditorium demonstrated Barbirolli's gift for finding order in dissonance and the chaotic phrase. His program asserted his primary concern with these problems.

When he left the New York Philharmonic 21 years ago, at the age of 44, the rumor was that his prediliction for this kind of music was making him, and the orchestra that he had taken over from Toscanini, unpopular. If he plays yesterday's program in New York this season, Philharmonic audiences may feel they acted hastily when they let him go back to England all those years ago.

(William Meredith, an occasional music critic for The Day and other journals, is a poet who teaches at Connecticut College).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 13,230

OCT 2 6 1964

Full House For Concert

By JOHN GRUBER

Not a seat was vacant in the huge Jorgenson Auditorium as the Boston Symphony opened the 1964-65 season of the UConn Concert Series. With the parking lots full many missed the opening selection after hunting parking space elsewhere and walking back to the hall. I was among them, but since I've heard Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture" times without number, I didn't mind too badly.

Actually, everything on the program was thoroughly well-known. The Shostakovitch Symphony No. 1 which followed next has been around for thirty-five years or more and receives frequent performances. As for Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, that's been around for about a century and a half, and everybody knows it, too.

Thus Mr. Leinsdorf, who conducted, had assembled a program in which we could expect no note of novelty, and to tell the truth there was none. There was, however, superlative playing by the orchestra, which is what people went to hear. There is no question that Mr. Leinsdorf has retored the group to its highest standards of performance, from which it had slipped a notch or two under his predecesser.

In short, it was a conservatively chosen program, perhaps suited to a Sunday afternoon, which it was, but hardly very exciting. Even Beethoven's thunderstorm is not exciting. True, he wrote in 1809 when nobody had heard the storms portrayed by Wagner, Rimsky-Korsakov, et al. But only a very few years later, Rossini quite surpassed him with the brief tempest in "Barber."

Yet Beethoven was supposed to be a great nature lover; and Rossini was a sybarite who never even got out of bed if he could avoid it, and wouldn't think of taking a walk in the country when city streets were available. Everybody seems to rave about Beethoven, but poor Rossini gets shunted off. (H wrote another storm in "William Tell" that is even bette known, too).

There is, of course, the littl expedition into ornitholog wherein Mr. Beethoven gets cuckoo, a nightingale and quail to sing in concert, bu the fact remains that the "Pastorale" Symphony of Beethoven is more than a little old fashioned. Mr. Leinsdorf managed to keep Beethoven's broo flowing along at reasonabl speed when some conductor chose a tempo that reminds on of a sluggish stream meandering through a swamp, so really have no complaint. I fact the performance was exemplary.

Beethoven's bedside book fo many years was the Lehr un Erbauungs Buch by Sturm an in it he underlined a passag which, in translation, reads a follows:

"Nature can be justly calle the school of the heart; i shows us beyond all doubt ou duty to God and our Neighbor I wish therefore to become disciple of this school, and offe my heart to it . . . I wish t arrive at the knowledge of God and in this knowledge I shal find a foretaste of celestia joys."

Apparently this is what nature meant to Beethoven, an his "Pastorale" Symphony says much the same thing in music Decidedly it is quite appropriate for a Sunday afternoon, an the audience loved it.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 7,116

OCT 2 6 1964

Boston Symphony Opens UC Series

The Boston Symphony opened the season's series in the University of Connecticut Auditorium on Sunday afternoon. In the orchestra there were a number of new faces, particularly in the principal chair positions, along with, of course, the many familiar faces known so well to local attendants.

The program opened with the Brahms Academic Festival Overture, Opus 80, a most appropriate beginning for the new academic year. Although Brahms was first offered an honorary Doctorate by Cambridge University, it was not until two years later that a degree was conferred upon him by the University of Breslau.

Brahms wrote a postcard to his friend, Bernard Scholz, conductor at Breslau, asking that his friend express Brahms' appreciation to the authorities of the University. Scholz, however, was quick to point out that something more was expected of Brahms in the form of a new symphony or a "festive song." Finally Brahms bestirred himself to that end and the result was the composition of the Academic Festival Overture.

In its writter form, the Doctorate spoke of Brahms as a composer of "serious music." Aware of this, and undoubtedly with tongue in cheek, Brahms prepared a "potpourri" on student songs. The masterful command of structure on the part of the composer is seen in the manner in which he wove together the various student songs and ended with the full orchestra playing the famous Gaudeamus Igitur. The long robed and bearded professors at Breslau must have been quite shocked with the "doctor's thesis" of the serious musician, Herr Brahms.

Following the Overture, the orchestra performed the Shostakovich Symphony No. 1, Opus 10. This is a somewhat dry and sardonic work and yet, at the same time, quite a brilliant composition, particularly for a first symphony. This was very well done by Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston musicians, especially the slow movement with its tonal colors.

The program concluded, following the intermission, with the major offering of the afternoon, Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F major, the "Pastoral." Beethoven did not attempt to depict a landscape in music as might have been attempted in a tone-poem by Liszt or Richard Strauss, but as the composer stated, it is "more an expression of feeling than tone painting."

The symphony was first performed in Vienna in 1808 and the movements were entitled: "Cheerful impressions awakened by arrival in the country; Scene by the brook; Merry gathering of country folk; Thunderstorm, tempest; and Shepherd's song, glad and grateful feelings after the storm."

The Boston Symphony is one of the greatest of orchestras and any concert is a pleasant experience to attend. However, even great orchestras are not always at their best and such was the case in both the Brahms Overture and the Beethoven Symphony. It took some time for the orchestra to find its stride in the Overture, but then all went well and continued well through the Shostakovich. In the Beethoven, however, the cheerful impressions were lacking and the gathering of the country folk was really not very "merry."

It was in the thunderstorm, however, where the lack of inspiration was particularly to be noticed. The "thunderstorm" was merely a rain shower passing by some distance away. An outstanding performance of this movement can be an overwhelming experience with the basses creating a whirlwind, the trombones bursting forth the power of the storm, and the thunder of the timpani doubling the fury. Such was not the case in this performance, and it is no pleasure to so report it. Negative critical comment is not easy to make, particularly of an organization of the stature of the Boston Symphony. Perhaps this isn't criticism — just disappointment.

The next musical program is in the Chamber Music Series wi.. the Festival Winds scheduled for Von der Mehden Hall on November 23.

SHOWTHROUGH

27

FRI.-SAT 5

ASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

FTERNOON, OCTOBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

HAN WILLIAMS . . . . .Symphony No. 6

I. Allegro
II. Moderato
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS . . . . .Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

I. Allegretto
II. Tempo andante ma rubato
III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The Houston Post
D. 224,649 SUN. 250,301

OCT 25 1964

A Status Established: The Sound of Great Orchestral Position

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

AFTER Tuesday night's concert of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, Sir John Barbirolli will be leaving these scenes for about two weeks, which he will spend as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the nation's oldest and most famous musical organizations. His next appearances here will be on Nov 16 and 17. While he is gone, the orchestra will be serving the Houston Grand Opera Association, which opens its season with productions of Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" on Nov 5 and 7, will play an Austin engagement with that organization, and give a number of student performances.

Roussel

All this is a pretty reflection of Houston's musical good health today. It is a pleasure to think of the operatic event, which will signal the 10th anniversary of our very able and successful producing company, a natural concomitant of the orchestra movement. And it is a deep gratification to consider the orchestra's present position and outlook.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,580

OCT 31 1964

Barbirolli Is Cheered In Boston

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

BOSTON — Symphony Hall rang with cheers yesterday afternoon for Sir John Barbirolli, making his third visit to Boston. The first was in 1941, when the pint-size conductor was leading the New York Philharmonic, as successor to Toscanini. The last time he guest conducted the Boston Symphony in 1959, I enjoyed watching his intuitive control of the players, his intense devotion to the music. Then as now, his body revealed the ravages of being worked far beyond normal limits.

Barbirolli is conducting here for two weeks while Erich Leinsdorf is deep in details of a Boston Symphony recording session for RCA.

Comes Here March 9

I was eager to see him again, because on March 9, 1965, he will bring to Worcester his beloved and distinguished Houston Symphony Orchestra as the third event in the Community Concerts series. Barbirolli returned to England in 1943, in war-times, to rebuild the Manchester Halle Orchestra. He still conducts a long season of concerts for them, and guest conducts on the continent. But in recent years he has taken on the Houston assignment and is working under a three-year contract.

He tells me that musical audiences are much the same in Houston, London, and Boston. They all love the same music, he claims. He remained smilingly silent when I asked him about the furore recently aroused by an interview reported in "Musical America," in which he said he would no longer program music "written today," but stick to "the best." He is no opponent of the 20th century, however, as he does a great deal of Elgar, Delius, Vaughan Williams, Sibelius and Shostakovich.

On the tour which will bring him to Worcester in March, he said some of the available items will be the Sibelius Fifth, the Elgar "Enigma Variations" and the Shostakovich First.

Ingenious Gestures

I enjoyed the Napoleonic leader yesterday in three roles: rehearsal master, chatting affably with the press, and conducting a splendid concert. His face glowed in all three tasks. The Boston players had little trouble. For minutes on end, his ingenious gestures, few shouted words and subtly imparted wishes kept things letter-perfect Pauses for repairs were few.

Barbirolli told with great pride of the work he has done in Finland, winning last season one of the nation's highest decorations. He will conduct the Helsinki City Symphony in part of its European tour next year, honoring the Sibelius 100th anniversary. He also conducts the Berlin Philharmonic several times each season.

Yesterday he brought to Boston fare not too often played here. The Vaughan Williams Sixth was a strong, sometimes stark portrayal of war thoughts set off against dreams of peace. Delius' "The Walk to the Paradise Garden" was repeated from 1959 by request. Sibelius' Second was the marvelous work which aroused the final furore. Never have I heard the Boston brasses, in fact the whole orchestra, do such sustained full-voiced playing for such a long and exciting climax.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

OCT 31 1964

BOSTON (AP) — Sir John Barbirolli, conductor of the Houston, Tex., Symphony and the Halle Orchestra in Manchester, England, was guest conductor Friday at the Boston Symphony. When he wound up his program with the second symphony of Sibelius he came back on stage three times in response to applause.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 27 1964

City Host To British Conductor

Music circles in Boston are playing host to a distinguished conductor, Sir John Barbirolli, who will take over the baton of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks. Appropriately, "Music of Britain" will be the topic at the Pre-Symphony Luncheon this Fuiday at the Midtown Motor Inn and John N. O. Curle, Her Majesty's consul general, will be guest of honor. Harry Ellis Dickson will trace the musical history of Great Britain, which is one of the longest in Europe.

Ivited to join Mr. and Mrs. Curle at the head table are Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Dr. and Mrs. Edward W. Eames, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Bemis, Mr. and Mrs. F. Bemis, Mr. and Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. Martin K. Bovey, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Anker-Simmons, Mrs and Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Diggory Venn and Andrew Rayburn.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

OCT 25 1964

Barbirolli to Conduct

Sir John Barbirolli, music director of the Houston Symphony, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks.

He will make his first appearance Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, after an absence of five years, at the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf will be engaged in a heavy schedule of recording with the orchestra in Symphony Hall, a schedule which falls unusually early in the season this year.

The concert will open with Berlioz' Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9, and will continue with "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Delius. Sir John will then conduct the Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6. After an intermission the program will conclude with the Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43, by Sibelius.

For the past several years Sir John has been music director of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, and early this Fall he and the orchestra received high critical acclaim during a visit to New York city. He continues as conductor and music director of the Halle Orchestra, Manchester, Eng., which he built to world-wide prominence.

Barbirolli was born in London, and both his father and grandfather were musicians. In 1936 he succeeded Toscanini as conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony in New York. Until his appearance in Symphony Hall in 1959 as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his only previous appearance in the Hall was with the Philharmonic-Symphony in 1941.

SHOWTHROUGH

FRI.-SAT 5

27

FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS . . . . Symphony No. 6

- I. Allegro
- II. Moderato
- III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
- IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43

- I. Allegretto
- II. Tempo andante ma rubato
- III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
- IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The Houston Post
D. 224,649 SUN. 250,301

OCT 2 5 1964

A Status Established: The Sound of Great Orchestral Position

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

AFTER Tuesday night's concert of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, Sir John Barbirolli will be leaving these scenes for about two weeks, which he will spend as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the nation's oldest and most famous musical organizations. His next appearances here will be on Nov 16 and 17. While he is gone, the orchestra will be serving the Houston Grand Opera Association, which opens its season with productions of Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" on Nov 5 and 7, will play an Austin engagement with that organization, and give a number of student performances.

Roussel

All this is a pretty reflection of Houston's musical good health today. It is a pleasure to think of the operatic event, which will signal the 10th anniversary of our very able and successful producing company, a natural concomitant of the orchestra movement. And it is a deep gratification to consider the orchestra's present position and outlook.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 93,580

OCT 3 1 1964

Barbirolli Is Cheered In Boston

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

BOSTON — Symphony Hall rang with cheers yesterday afternoon for Sir John Barbirolli, making his third visit to Boston. The first was in 1941, when the pint-size conductor was leading the New York Philharmonic, as successor to Toscanini. The last time he guest conducted the Boston Symphony in 1959, I enjoyed watching his intuitive control of the players, his intense devotion to the music. Then as now, his body revealed the ravages of being worked far beyond normal limits.

Barbirolli is conducting here for two weeks while Erich Leinsdorf is deep in details of a Boston Symphony recording session for RCA.

Comes Here March 9

I was eager to see him again, because on March 9, 1965, he will bring to Worcester his beloved and distinguished Houston Symphony Orchestra as the third event in the Community Concerts series. Barbirolli returned to England in 1943, in war-times, to rebuild the Manchester Halle Orchestra. He still conducts a long season of concerts for them, and guest conducts on the continent. But in recent years he has taken on the Houston assignment and is working under a three-year contract.

He tells me that musical audiences are much the same in Houston, London, and Boston. They all love the same music, he claims. He remained smilingly silent when I asked him about the furore recently aroused by an interview reported in "Musical America," in which he said he would no longer program music "written today," but stick to "the best." He is no opponent of the 20th century, however, as he does a great deal of Elgar, Delius, Vaughan Williams, Sibelius and Shostakovich.

On the tour which will bring him to Worcester in March, he said some of the available items will be the Sibelius Fifth, the Elgar "Enigma Variations" and the Shostakovich First.

Ingenious Gestures

I enjoyed the Napoleonic leader yesterday in three roles: rehearsal master, chatting affably with the press, and conducting a splendid concert. His face glowed in all three tasks. The Boston players had little trouble. For minutes on end, his ingenious gestures, few shouted words and subtly imparted wishes kept things letter-perfect Pauses for repairs were few.

Barbirolli told with great pride of the work he has done in Finland, winning last season one of the nation's highest decorations. He will conduct the Helsinki City Symphony in part of its European tour next year, honoring the Sibelius 100th anniversary. He also conducts the Berlin Philharmonic several times each season.

Yesterday he brought to Boston fare not too often played here. The Vaughan Williams Sixth was a strong, sometimes stark portrayal of war thoughts set off against dreams of peace. Delius' "The Walk to the Paradise Garden" was repeated from 1959 by request. Sibelius' Second was the marvelous work which aroused the final furore. Never have I heard the Boston brasses, in fact the whole orchestra, do such sustained full-voiced playing for such a long and exciting climax.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

OCT 3 1 1964

BOSTON (AP) — Sir John Barbirolli, conductor of the Houston, Tex., Symphony and the Halle Orchestra in Manchester, England, was guest conductor Friday at the Boston Symphony. When he wound up his program with the second symphony of Sibelius he came back on stage three times in response to applause.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 2 7 1964

City Host To British Conductor

Music circles in Boston are playing host to a distinguished conductor, Sir John Barbirolli, who will take over the baton of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks. Appropriately, "Music of Britain" will be the topic at the Pre-Symphony Luncheon this Fuiday at the Midtown Motor Inn and John N. O. Curle, Her Majesty's consul general, will be guest of honor. Harry Ellis Dickson will trace the musical history of Great Britain, which is one of the longest in Europe.

Ivited to join Mr. and Mrs. Curle at the head table are Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Dr. and Mrs. Edward W. Eames, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Bemis, Mr. and Mrs. F. Bemis, Mr. and Mrs. F. Murray Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. Martin K. Bovey, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Anker-Simmons, Mrs and Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Diggory Venn and Andrew Rayburn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

OCT 2 5 1964

Barbirolli to Conduct

Sir John Barbirolli, music director of the Houston Symphony, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks.

He will make his first appearance Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, after an absence of five years, at the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf will be engaged in a heavy schedule of recording with the orchestra in Symphony Hall, a schedule which falls unusually early in the season this year.

The concert will open with Berlioz' Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9, and will continue with "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Delius. Sir John will then conduct the Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6. After an intermission the program will conclude with the Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43, by Sibelius.

For the past several years Sir John has been music director of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, and early this Fall he and the orchestra received high critical acclaim during a visit to New York city. He continues as conductor and music director of the Halle Orchestra, Manchester, Eng., which he built to world-wide prominence.

Barbirolli was born in London, and both his father and grandfather were musicians. In 1936 he succeeded Toscanini as conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony in New York. Until his appearance in Symphony Hall in 1959 as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his only previous appearance in the Hall was with the Philharmonic-Symphony in 1941.

28

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
OCT 30 1964

Sir John Barbirolli will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts of Oct. 30-31 and Nov. 6-7.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
OCT 25 1964

Sir John Barbirolli Is Guest

Sir John Barbirolli, music director of the Houston Symphony, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks. He will make his first appearance next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, after an absence of five years, at the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf.

Leinsdorf once again will be engaged in a heavy schedule of recording with the orchestra in Symphony Hall for RCA Victor, a schedule which falls unusually early in the season this year.

Sir John has chosen a program of Berlioz, Delius, Vaughan Williams and Sibelius. The concert will open with Berlioz' Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9, and will continue with "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Delius. Sir John will then conduct the orchestra in Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6. After an intermission the program will conclude with the Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43, by Sibelius.

For the past several years Sir John has been music director of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, and early this fall he and the orchestra received high critical acclaim during a visit to New York City. He also holds positions of conductor and music director of the Halle Orchestra, Manchester, England, which he built to world-wide prominence.

He was born in London, and both his father and grandfather were professional orchestra musicians. His first training was as a violinist and cellist, but he also undertook his conducting activities at an early age, gained a considerable reputation as both a symphonic and operatic conductor, and in 193[illegible] succeeded Toscanini as conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony in New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

OCT 31 1964

Barbirolli Guides BSO In Magnificent Music

Magnificent music was elicited from the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Sir John Barbirolli, yesterday's guest conductor. Spectacularly outstanding was Ralph Vaughan Williams' sixth symphony, unheard here in 15 years.

Curtain-raisers were two intermezzi: "Roman Carnival," by Hector Berlioz, from his "Benvenuto Cellini" flopera, and "The Walk to the Paradise Garden" from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Frederick Delius. The latter music-drama updated English village life in much the same way Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story" transplanted Shakespeare's "star-crossed lovers" to the sidewalks of New York.

The Berlioz "overture" was heard in a superbly polished performance, drawing out all the excitement derivable from this much-played orchestral warhorse, but there was real music there, too. Sir John managed to combine the Bostonians' instrumental virtuosity and the composer's cascading sonorities with many subtleties of phrasing, projecting the delicious counter-melodies which are the historic hallmark of Berlioz's coloristic orchestration.

Delius, on the other hand, was no master of musical format. Indeed, many passages of his music would retain their charm were all traces of melodic line to be removed. Unfortunately his lush exoticism and harmonic subtleties too greatly resemble the tawdry effects of the late romantic composers who were so busily burying symphonic structure with regretful swansongs. For those who treasure every Delian measure, however, Sir John saw they got them in the essential high style.

TWO SYMPHONIES

Both symphonies performed yesterday were composed by shaggy giants, England's Vaughan Williams and Finland's Jan Sibelius. Here was great and comprehending music by two splendid symphonists who were uncompromisingly convinced that this Beethoven-bred form was not dead, not buried by the musical miniaturists.

The Englishman's massive creation, sixth of his nine symphonies, was nurtured by World War II; an editorial symphony, perhaps, a musician's commentary on unbridled hatred and senseless destruction. It is brilliantly scored: there are syncopated strings, hot-lick trumpetings, even a saxophone, mournfully jazzy.

Its American premiere 15 years ago with Leopold Stokowski conducting the New York Philharmonic evoked spine-tingling responses. Its impact yesterday was even more compelling.

The last movement, one long pianissimo, brought recollection of T. S. Eliot's lines: "This is the way the world ends; not with a bang but a whimper."

GRAND SIBELIUS

Sibelius' symphony, his second of seven after the interval gave earthier impressions, though this Nordic pastoral has its bleak moments, as well. The opening movement of Sibelius' second symphony differs from any preceding symphonic movement from any composer anywhere in that structural continuity and formalistic balances are not disclosed until the closing measures of this opening segment.

A skein of apparently loosely knit episodes does not become comprehensible until the symphonic development ends. Only then does the opening pattern become apparent.

Though the second movement is spacious and picturesque, there appears to have been little innovation there; however, the outburst of burnished brass is spectacular. The remaining two movements, though vigorous, are more conventional, harking back to the overtones of Tchaikovsky and Borodin noted in the Finnish giant's earlier works.

Readers are urged to tune in on broadcasts scheduled for tonight. They can trust their own ears better than they can depend on another's. Music reporters cannot put melodies into words any better than culinary writers can tell how a gourmet dinner tastes.

ROLFE BOSWELL

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 31 1964

SYMPHONY

Patrician Refinement, Taste In Barbirolli's Conducting

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Sir John Barbirolli, returning as guest after five years, offered a program at Symphony yesterday less imaginative than the one he chose for his debut in Boston, which included Walton's Partita and a Barbirolli transcription of airs from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. It afforded, however, the not inconsiderable delight of a distinguished conductor still in the prime of his powers.

Now with the Houston as well as the Hallo, Sir John brings a wealth of experience and sensitivity to his second engagement here. Not all the experience has been happy. He invokes the tumultuous New York Philharmonic years when he had the misfortune to succeed Toscanini. Critical fashion held then that a young man of talent had followed an old lion of genius; but this opinion has been tempered by the years on both counts.

Not Confined

Fortunately, Sir John has survived the U. S. decade when the virtuoso romantic 19th century conductor was considered the ultimate, still, of the art; and increasingly, his own qualities of patrician refinement and taste, of scrupulous orchestral control, sympathetic detachment and poise, have come to be appreciated. He is associated, of course, with English music; but the English style in conductors is cosmopolitan, and so he is not narrowly confined by school or prejudice.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sir John Barbirolli conducting, presented the fifth program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9	Berlioz
"The Walk to the Paradise Garden" Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"	Delius
Symphony No. 6	Vaughan Williams
Symphony No. 2, in D Major, Op. 43	Sibelius

This was immediately indicated by a performance of "The Roman Carnival" overture that could only suggest Toscanini in its crackling energy and whiplash tempi. The score doesn't call for inhibition, and at the climax there were seemingly enough tambourines for a gypsy jamboree. Theatrical excitement alone did not account for Mr. Barbirolli's success here; he had very carefully prepared the English horn solo and the melting love song, modeling the rhythmic structure toward a proper emphasis upon the breathless saltarello.

I'm afraid I found the opulent harmonic intervals of "A Village Romeo and Juliet" soporific. Mr. Barbirolli did the same score five years ago; I did not like it then, and find no reason to alter my views of the Delius as derivative and saccharine Impressionism. Vaughan William's Sixth Symphony, though, the most impressive work of this program, proved a laudable revival, a powerful, personal statement remarkable in many ways, if long-winded and densely-textured until its Epilogue.

Reaction to War

Completed in the composer's 75th year, its pages suggest a symphonic corrolary to the final Verdi operas. The work evidently comprises a reaction to the war period, with tragic string lamentation, ominous and persistent rhythms, punctuations of a forlorn and introspective instrumental character flickering through the first three movements. The coloring is dark melancholy episodes abound; the voice of the mournful saxophone keens like a troubador in the shell of a ruined castle. The opening movements seem to me inordinately diffuse, sacrificing tension; but the scherzo's tantalizing melodies and the pianissimo Epilogue for strings senza vibrato constitute expression of the most profound order.

To control the strings as Mr. Barbirolli did, represented a dazzling instance of orchestral discipline, and he gave us the heroic structure, meticulously assessing weight and phrase. I found the score in general both moving and protracted, combining eloquence with longeurs. In the phrase of Warren Smith's review some years ago: "Mr. Williams Sees It Through."

The Sibelius Second for the second time in a year, coming on the heels of a fine performance by Mr. Leinsdorf, struck me as unnecessary. Mr. Barbirolli upset this foreboding completely, however, by producing a superb interpretation. The work is episodic, and many conductors tend to overstate the exposition, having little in reserve for the recapitulation. The inexorable, exact logic of the reading held a vigor and majesty that proved stunning. Mr. Barbirolli eschewed melodrama, but gave us a totally convincing and inspired architectural sweep, rousing in its clarity.

Next week he has scheduled his arrangement of a suite from Purcell's Dramatick Music, Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony in G Major, No. 92, and Elgar's Symphony No. 2, in E-flat, Op. 63.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 30 1964

Symphony Then

The fifth pair of Boston Symphony concerts in the season 50 years ago, 1914-15, began with "Aus Italien" by Richard Strauss and continued with two pieces by Dvorak for cello and orchestra, "Waldesruhe" and the Rondo, Opus 94. The soloist was Heinrich Warnke, the orchestra's principal cellist. The concert continued with Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" and concluded with a work by Scheinpflug: "Overture to a Comedy of Shakespeare (with use of an old English melody of the 16th century) for full orchestra," Opus 15. Dr. Karl Muck conducted.

At the corresponding pair of concerts in the season 25 years ago, 1939-40, Beethoven's First and Brahms' Fourth Symphonies were played. Between them came the Concertino by Walter Piston with Jesus Maria Sanroma as piano soloist. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

29

'The music I really love'

Barbirolli proves his point

By Harold Rogers

...e done my share of con- ...y music," said Sir Barbirolli in the July ... Musical America, ... I feel it's my duty ...n only the best in ...he music I really ...is no great or- ...l music being written ... At my time of life, ... I deserve the reward ...ing only things of

...n the September issue ...cal America came the ... from Elliott Carter, Roger Sessions, Henry Cowell, and Walter Piston, et al.

Said Mr. Sessions: "With due apologies to Shakespeare, I gather that age has withered Mr. Barbirolli, and custom staled his infinite variety."

Said Mr. Cowell: "Houston should have someone else who believes in the great music of this century."

Said Mr. Carter: "This old ham is beyond curing."

Today's composers are naturally going to fight back. They have offspring to protect. They have names to defend.

* * *

But I feel that it's better for a conductor to play well what he likes than to play badly what he dislikes. Sir John is evidently content to move within the framework in which he feels comfortable. He has taken an honest position. And no one can truly take issue with an honest position.

Sir John—who is the regular conductor of two orchestras, the Hallé and the Houston—has come to Boston for two weeks of guest appearances with the Boston Symphony. At his Symphony Hall concert Friday afternoon he proved his position. He conducted the composers he likes—Berlioz, Delius, Vaughan Williams, Sibelius.

And the results?

Music, pure music! How much better for a listener to revel in the pure music made by an artist who is temperamentally attuned to the composers of his choice! There are many conductors today who find themselves at home with contemporary scores. Let us then listen to modern music made by those who love the moderns. Thus we as listeners would stand a far better chance of reveling in the music of our day.

* * *

As for Sir John, let him pursue his conservative policies—if such policies permit him to achieve the glowing results he achieved Friday. "The Roman Carnival" Overture, for instance—what clarity and precision, what a glorious singing line! Immediately one was swept into the heart of the music.

And the delicious loveliness of "The Walk to the Paradise Garden" by Delius. As he caressed the music it came forth as shimmering poesy.

* * *

The Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6 had its dull patches, yet by and large one was impressed by its vigor and power, its integrity and the sheer beauty of its Epilogue, played almost beyond the range of hearing.

The Sibelius Second, of course, is an impassioned work that always wins when a conductor knows how to maintain the tension and let it breathe when it needs to breathe. This Sir John indeed knows how to do. Ecstatic cheers followed.

Said one lady afterward: "It's the kind of a concert that just makes you want to go out and do something nice for somebody."

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 31 1964

Guest at Symphony

Barbirolli Discusses Composer-Conductors

By MARGO MILLER

Sir John Barbirolli has a special interest in the symphonies of Ralph Vaughan Williams. The Eighth was written for him and he helped the English composer with revisions of many of the others. No. 6 is having its first Boston performances during Barbirolli's two-week engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Friday morning the conductor, music director of the Houston and Halle Orchestras, put the finishing touches on the Vaughan Williams and during the orchestra's rehearsal intermission talked about composers and conductors.

Barbirolli, now 64 and marking his 50th year in music, wore a loose blue rehearsal shirt. Rationing out two borrowed cigarettes which he lit with his own gold lighter, he darted in conversation from anecdote to opinion, occasionally drumming ... long elegant fingers.

"Vaughan Williams was never satisfied. The alterations were on dynamics, doublings of instruments. He wanted to make sure the thematic material came through," said Barbirolli. "You know he was quite deaf. I used to say to him, V.W., you've got to trust me. If you score it so you can hear it, you'll ruin everything."

By Vaughan Williams' admission he was not much of a conductor. "He had a charming sense of humor," Barbirolli continued. "He would apologize to the orchestra. 'My friends, straight away I will tell you I have a shocking habit. When I want the music to go faster I beat slower.'"

Barbirolli, of whom the mos bulky object is his luxurian gray forelock, explained tha his friend was a large man, and like all large men urging or such a delicate business a tempos, was likely to expen energy vocally without muc of it reaching his baton.

"Conducting," Barbiroll maintains, "has nothing to d with knowledge of scores." H recalls a reluctant Manuel d Falla being dragged to re hearsal of his "Three-Cornere Hat." The famous dancer Di aghilev had him by one arm Barbirolli was watching fron his seat among the cellos. " can't do it," Falla protested and within 10 minutes ha handed the stick to someon else. "He had written thos rhythms—the cross accent stopped him every time—bu he couldn't beat them," recalle Barbirolli.

The hand, the eye, the ear for an ideal sound for each composer are what conductors must have. Barbirolli thinks further explanation pointless, indeed useless, when talking of an art. To musicians he speaks directly, wanting something at such and such a bar. Discipline is by indirect as an amused bassoon player was happy to relate.

It seemed that at a rehearsal earlier this week, the Boston second fiddles were tuning while Barbirolli was talking to the orchestra. "Gentlemen," the conductor said, "I don't have time to hear you all at this moment. Please apply for an audition after the rehearsal.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 30,240

OCT 29 1964

Boston Symphony At Conn. College

NEW LONDON—Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, for the 24th time since the Connecticut College Concert Series began in 1939, the Boston Symphony orchestra will perform in Palmer auditorium.

Under its guest conductor, Sir John Barbirolli, the orchestra will perform two symphonies and two shorter selections.

The program will open with Berlioz' "Roman Carnival Overture," which will be followed by he Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Delius. The first half of the program will conclude with Vaughn-Williams' Symphony No. 6.

A performance of Symphony No. 2 in D major by Sibelius will ll the second half of the program.

30 TUES. 2. THURS 2. FRI-SAT 6

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ.................Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

DELIUS............"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS...............................Symphony No. 6
- I. Allegro
- II. Moderato
- III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
- IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS.....................Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43
- I. Allegretto
- II. Tempo andante ma rubato
- III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
- IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 6, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

PURCELL Suite from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell (Arranged by Barbirolli)
- I. Andante maestoso — Allegro
- II. Tempo di minuetto
- III. Andantino
- IV. Allegretto giocoso
- V. Largo
- VI. Allegro

1 3

(First performance in Boston)

HAYDN ....Symphony in G major, "Oxford," No. 92
- I. Adagio; Allegro spiritoso
- II. Adagio
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Presto

28

INTERMISSION

ELGAR Symphony No. 2 in E-flat, Op. 63
- I. Allegro vivace e nobilmente
- II. Larghetto
- III. Rondo: Presto
- IV. Finale: Moderato e maestoso

52

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Second Program

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ.................Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

DELIUS............"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS...............................Symphony No. 6
- I. Allegro
- II. Moderato
- III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
- IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS.....................Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43
- I. Allegretto
- II. Tempo andante ma rubato
- III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
- IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 29 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 31 1964

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, music director of the Houston Symphony and Halle Orchestra of England, is guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight and next week.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

OCT 23 1964

ONLY SIR JOHN Barbirolli will have no competition when he conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra here the afternoon of Nov. 6. That evening Liberace will be modeling his wardrobe at Symphony Hall, Josh White will be around the corner at Jordan Hall and Peter, Paul and Mary will be up the street at the Back Bay Theater. Barbirolli, incidentally, has programmed Sir Edward Elgar's Second Symphony which was written as a lament for Edward VII of England. Sir Edward was another quick-wit who outtwitted Bernard Shaw on as least one occasion. Shaw, who happened to be a music critic at the time, caught the premiere performance of Elgar's "Cockaigne Overture." "Why Cockaigne?" Shaw asked, obviously making a play on the word for the narcotic drug, cocaine. "Why not the Chloroform Overture?" "Ether," Sir Edward riposted swiftly. "will do."

Elgar also figured in an anecdote involving Edward VII's successor, George V. On the occasion of the latter's coronation in 1911, he bestowed the Order of Merit on Elgar. Several years later, during World War I, George heard that Elgar's country estate had been robbed of a case of scotch. "I didn't ake him a Hoarder of Merit for nothing," George said. George took a dram now and then himself.

30 TUES. 2. THURS 2. FRI-SAT 6

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ..................Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

DELIUS............"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS..............................Symphony No. 6
- I. Allegro
- II. Moderato
- III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
- IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS.....................Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43
- I. Allegretto
- II. Tempo andante ma rubato
- III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
- IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 6, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

PURCELL...........Suite from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell (Arranged by Barbirolli)
- I. Andante maestoso — Allegro
- II. Tempo di minuetto
- III. Andantino
- IV. Allegretto giocoso
- V. Largo
- VI. Allegro

13

(First performance in Boston)

HAYDN..................Symphony in G major, "Oxford," No. 92
- I. Adagio; Allegro spiritoso
- II. Adagio
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Presto

28

INTERMISSION

ELGAR..............................Symphony No. 2 in E-flat, Op. 63
- I. Allegro vivace e nobilmente
- II. Larghetto
- III. Rondo: Presto
- IV. Finale: Moderato e maestoso

52

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Second Program

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, at 8:30 o'clock

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ..................Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9

DELIUS............"The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS..............................Symphony No. 6
- I. Allegro
- II. Moderato
- III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
- IV. Epilogue

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS.....................Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43
- I. Allegretto
- II. Tempo andante ma rubato
- III. Vivacissimo; Lento e suave
- IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 29 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 31 1964

SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI, musi director of the Houston Symphony and Halle Orchestra o England, is guest conducto with the Boston Symphony Orch estra tonight and next week.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

OCT 23 1964

ONLY SIR JOHN Barbirolli will have no competition when he conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra here the afternoon of Nov. 6. That evening Liberace will be modeling his wardrobe at Symphony Hall, Josh White will be around the corner at Jordan Hall and Peter, Paul and Mary will be up the street at the Back Bay Theater. Barbirolli, incidentally, has programmed Sir Edward Elgar's Second Symphony, which was written as a lament for Edward VII of England. Sir Edward was another quick-wit who outtwitted Bernard Shaw on as least one occasion. Shaw, who happened to be a music critic at the time, caught the premiere performance of Elgar's "Cockaigne Overture." "Why Cockaigne?" Shaw asked, obviously making a play on the word for the narcotic drug, cocaine. "Why not the Chloroform Overture?" "Ether," Sir Edward riposted swiftly. "will do."

Elgar also figured in an anecdote involving Edward VII's successor, George V. On the occasion of the latter's coronation in 1911, he bestowed the Order of Merit on Elgar. Several years later, during World War I, George heard that Elgar's country estate had been robbed of a case of scotch. "I didn't ake him a Hoarder of Merit for nothing," George said. George took a dram now and then himself.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

…v. 1 1964

Symphony a Sell Out

Five Barbirolli Concerts Slated

Sir John Barbirolli will begin his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~this week~~ conducting four concerts in Symphony Hall and one at the Connecticut College for Women in New London, Conn.

He will conduct concerts in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening and Thursday evening. [illegible] final appearances will be [illegible] afternoon and Saturday evening. Sir John now holds permanent [illegible] as conductor of the Houston Symphony and the Hallé Orchestra of Manchester, England.

For the second concert of the Tuesday evening series and the second concert of the Thursday evening series Sir John's program will open with Berlioz's Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 92, and continue with "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" by Delius, be followed by the Symphony No. 6 of Vaughan Williams. The program will conclude with Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 43.

At his final concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Sir John will begin his program with the first Boston performance of his arrangement for orchestra of a Suite from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell, followed by Haydn's Symphony in G major, "Oxford," Op. 92. The program will close with Elgar's Symphony No. 2 in E-flat, Op. 63.

MEANWHILE, Thomas D. Perry, Jr. orchestra manager, announced that the symphony has sold all available seats to seven different series in Symphony Hall including its open rehearsals, and its two series of five concerts each in Philharmonic Hall, New York. Approximately 22,700 individual subscribers will hear the orchestra regularly this year (17,417 in Boston 5,316 in New York).

Perry cited the continuing loyalty and support of the people of Boston and the orchestra's patrons in New York. "The people of Boston have always shown an extraordinary sense of pride in their orchestra, combined with the sense of obligation and duty toward its support. This, along with similar support from its New York patron, has enabled the Orchestra to maintain its standards of excellence through eighty-four years in Boston, and to present concerts in New York for seventy-nine consecutive years, the longest term for any visiting orchestra in the country."

THE MANAGER also pointed out that the Orchestra announced an eighth series this fall, three Wednesday evening concerts which will take place Nov. 25, Jan. 27, and April 14. A few good subscription seats are still available for the new "Wednesday series," and this offers the last opportunity to secure season tickets for any of the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall. Applications may be obtained at the Subscription Office Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

…v 12 1964

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BARBIROLLI AT SYMPHONY

Sir John Barbirolli has completed his fortnight's stint in town, during which he once again demonstrated that few are the conductors who can produce so much from an …ra.

…t how he does it is hard for one to say who is not privy … rehearsal, but by concert time the results speak most … for themselves, and the listener is unmistakably …re that the sparks are not only present but have ignited … whole performance.

The program was decidedly of a British cast, incorporating … did the works of England's two foremost native musicians, …ell and Elgar. It commenced with Sir John's own arrange… from the operas and incidental stage music, called the … from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell and con…ed with Elgar's Second Symphony in E-Flat. In between … the work of a Viennese interloper, Josef Haydn, whose … perhaps in the interest of nationalistic consistency, was … "Oxford" Symphony, No. 92.

The Elgar symphony was the item of unusual interest. It … quite widely considered to be the composer's masterpiece … not played a tithe as often as the Enigma Variations. … weekend was only its third performance here at all and …st in almost thirty years. Completed in 1911, the Second …phony really harkens back to the late 19th century sym… tradition. It is a work that has to be taken on its own … which incorporates both spaciousness and structural … From its very size—it runs nearly an hour—one …ts the great climaxes of a Bruckner, the alluring …rations of a Mahler or the introspective organization …ns. Instead, one finds Elgar's own very special vocab… treatment, which actually is rather austere even …porting to be light-hearted. In the wrong hands this …phony which could easily bog down in sloughs of …m and elaborate exposition. With Sir John, however, … stood out as a very live and pulsating matter indeed, for its strength of line and clarity of detail.

… most exciting portion of the concert turned out to be …xford" Symphony, which followed up a truly silken … of the Purcell Suite. The strings were wondrously … and live, the control of dynamics was hairline and the …sk players in the orchestra comported themselves in the … of their phrases and the beveling of their entrances …shion that would have been outstanding in a performance … newly formed Chamber Players. Here was jewel-like …tral playing.

The audience plainly so thought, and likewise, I suspect … rigorous judges, the members of the orchestra.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 7 1964

At Symphony Hall

Barbirolli Conducts Music of England

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

For his second week with the Boston Symphony, Sir John Barbirolli chose a program of music associated with England. First, there was a suite from the dramatic music of Henry Purcell arranged by Barbirolli, the symphony Haydn conducted at Oxford when he received an honorary doctorate there, and Symphony No. 2 in E-flat by Elgar.

Given Sir John's strengths and limitations, it meant that the concert began badly and ended well. The Purcell suite departs from the good intention of acquainting modern audiences with some vivid music, but the plan is frustrated by the stylistic ignorance and the tastelessness that characterizes both the arrangement and the performance.

Except for the fairly lively playing of the finale, Haydn's Oxford Symphony was given a performance that was drab, uninflected, unwitty, if not outright witless. It was the kind of performance that explained Haydn's 19th century reputation as a composer who had some charm but whose music was essentially rather trivial.

But after the deadly miseries of these excursions into what Sir John turned into dusty history, everything came grandly to life with the Elgar symphony. Completed early in 1911, it is really one of the last of the 19th century symphonies in the big, affirmative manner. Intended as a tribute to King Edward VII, it was dedicated eventually to his memory, and it is perhaps the most complete embodiment of that side of Elgar's art that is expressive of the spacious comforts and the grand illusions of the Edwardian era.

It is full of themes marked "nobilmente" and climaxes marked "grandioso." There are hugely sonorous passages for brass, lush multiple divisions of strings. The form is expansive with ample repetitions and elaborate sequences.

Elgar's musical language is a kind of amalgam of Brahms and Wagner, and many of the rhetorical gestures, the harmonies, even the sounds themselves, are reminiscent of those two masters. To draw on both Brahms and Wagner was not so common then, and I was surprised to be reminded occasionally of another and very different piece that acknowledges the same double ancestry, namely Schoenberg's "Gurrelieder."

Though all this is true, Elgar speaks with an individual and unmistakable voice. No one else could have written the opening measures, for example, and he manages to be original even when he is most obviously derivative. The really striking and personal passage in the finale is also one of those closest to their models.

And the Scherzo is a surprise altogether. Mercurial in mood, adventurous in its treatment of harmony, of rhythm at least in detail, and of orchestration, it reveals an unsuspected mood in the composer much as the trio in the Bruckner Ninth does in that work.

In general, the themes are not distinguished, and occasionally some of the crucial dramatic points misfire, for instance the lead back to the first movement's recapitulation. But when Elgar is not so concerned with the grand rhetoric, he composes some breathtakingly beautiful music. That is what happens in the scherzo, and it happens most beautifully in the first movement's quiet development, with those mysterious sequences in which the bass moves by tritones.

Not least, Elgar composed a successful finale, something that few authors of symphonies in that period managed. This one is nicely poised, free from strain, and it settles with perfect timing into lovely and tranquil coda.

There are conductors which emphasize a certain Brahmsian inhibition in Elgar's music, who give what might be described as a very English performance. Sir Adrian Boult, who led this piece at a Boston Symphony concert in 1935, is a distinguished example. Barbirolli's approach is different. He plays with emphasis on flexibility of pace, and on the brightness and richness as well as the magnificence of the scoring.

He brings out an element of sensuality that is a definite, if repressed, part of Elgar's music. The price for this is an occasional vulgarity, and clarity may be sacrificed for it. But the approach is effective, it is certainly legitimate, and on these terms Barbirolli's performance was a tremendous and beautiful achievement. Once again, Sir John was warmly greeted by the audience, and there was an almost ostentatious demonstration of enthusiasm from the orchestra.

…w England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
…x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
…eekly Circ. 35,304

NOV 5 1964

…erformances closing Dec. 2.

For Fifth Program

Sir John Barbirolli Conducts BSO

By ALLAN SLY

The most interesting feature of the BSO's fifth program, for a lot of people, was the guest conductor, ~~Sir John~~ Barbirolli, here for a two-week stay. Since he is established in Houston these days he is one of the neighbors and we hope to see him often. He brings an inner exaltation with him—the music glows. Some people may think this is his Italian and French parentage shining through; but those who know musical London will recognize also an English propensity to cause every element in the orchestra to sing eloquently.

This characteristic has been especially noticeable in modern times, as if something had caused a throwback to Tudor style, if not further. It has affected composers, performers and audiences, and may go part way to explain the polite distance maintained between England and the continent in matters musical. The distance is not always polite, as when Sir John recently admitted his low opinion of today's composers and one of them called him an old ham. It may be better not to get into this crossfire, but one would be the poorer who remained unacquainted with Sir John's vibrant and glowing personality or with the repertoire he articulates with such inevitability.

Here is one Boston listener who has waited many long years to hear Vaughan William's sixth symphony — live. When the BSO sang it for Sir John last week one discovered doors opening to a world of experience both new and old. It is new when musical utterances seem somehow typical of people rather than of their art; it is old, or familiar, to observe the dramatic interplay between the elements. By the time the symphony had run its course, one had somehow heard the voice of humanity and for me it continued during intermission, a persistent reverberation, as it were.

Many will reject this description and I admit it's not very precise, but neither was Vaughan Williams. He has been described as a vast, ungainly porpoise, wallowing in the sea of his ideas, and that's not very precise either. We have it from him that as a student he was told repeatedly that his compositions were "pure rot." And yet his compatriots have rallied to sing and play and dance his many-sided output with singular devotion throughout his long career and ever since his passing. As delivered by Sir John, his sixth symphony, for me, achieved heights of revelations, vistas of comprehension, depths of feelings and much joyous fulfillment.

The Sibelius second also glowed in its own irresistible way. While its idiom is not really native to us, by adoption and familiarity it has come so close that we have all but forgotten the distinction. Sir John paid the BSO the compliment of giving it plenty of elbow room, of letting it breathe freely, of finding itself, and it did. In the Vaughan Williams he had shortened the rein. In lengthening it during the Sibelius he almost overdid his old trick of turning to the violins and letting the cellos shift for themselves—but they managed.

We had started out merrily with the Berlioz Roman Carnival and then had had our private reflections during the Delius "Walk to the Paradise Garden" — exquisite, precious, tragic, like those far off days before Sarajevo, before, as Churchill once wrote, Europe was ruined. What he meant by Europe, of course, is where Delius begins. You cannot begin Delius from where we now are.

In fact, the subjective was predominant in this Barbirolli program, as it will be next week in the Elgar second. People readily sort themselves out as accessible, or inaccessible, to this sort of communication. The inaccessible find ways to be articulate about it, sometimes in print; the accessible don't bother; they just keep coming, like Sir John. (He also will present Purcell and Haydn.)

…o com…
…mphony
…evening
…ymphony
… Jordan
…treet at
…lly, has
…nphony,
… VII of
…ho out…
… Shaw,
… caught
…e Over…
…oviously
…rug, co…
…"Ether,"

…ard VII's
…nation in
…ral years
… country
…ke him a
…k a dram

SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1964

Sir John's heart; Sir Edward's score

By Harold Rogers

Until now it has been my rather limited opinion that Elgar wrote only one true masterpiece, the "Enigma" Variations. A limited opinion, perforce, because here in Boston we hear so little of Sir Edward's ample output. But we have wearied our way through "The Dream of Gerontius," and once we were nearly driven from the hall by the tedium of his E minor Concerto for Cello.

One could therefore be forgiven for approaching his Symphony No. 2 with a jaundiced ear. But approach it we did, and with wondrous surprise when Sir Barbirolli conducted it at his second weekend of concerts with the Boston Symphony. Sir Edward's Second Symphony may not be a true masterwork, but it is masterfully composed.

It is a conductor's symphony as much as it is a listener's symphony. In a sense it is like the Saint-Saëns Third and the Franck D minor. Pierre Monteux once told me that he knew the critics didn't care much for the Saint-Saëns Third, but that it was such a satisfying piece to conduct.

* * *

And this must be something of how Sir John must feel about Sir Edward's Second. It has everything in it a conductor could wish for. It's an exceedingly busy score; Sir Edward lays on the colors with a thick British impasto, thus keeping the whole gang working.

Every now and then it has a great sunburst of tonal glory that rises up majestically from a sea of seething sound. It has counter melodies in the cellos that grip you by the heart. It is filled with stately marches, as if Sir Edward were forever striding off to a coronation. Questions in one choir are given answers by another. Sequences weave their silken way through the orchestral fabric. The whole thing has a great lyrical sweep.

Of course it is not so much the music itself as the conductor's love for the music that puts it across. And it was obvious that Sir John has an impassioned love for this score. His heart rode the crest of its mighty waves. His players were with him every measure of the roaring way.

A conservative program? Yes, indeed—a program more conservative would be difficult to construct. Yet who can truly carp if this be the music Sir John loves?

He opened with his own arrangement of music from the dramatic works of Henry Purcell, fashioned into a six-part suite. Nearly everyone must have recognized the Largo—"When I am laid in earth," Dido's noted lament.

And sandwiched between the Purcell and the Elgar was Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony in G major, No. 92. Sir John set forth the Menuetto with a gladsome swing, the final skittering Presto with much élan.

His Purcell suite was a first performance for Boston. And the Elgar Second was last heard here in 1935. Conservative music, yes, but refreshing, invigorating, satisfying.

A good team they are—Sir John and Sir Edward. . . .

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 7 1964

Program

Symphony: Barbirolli British

Yesterday's Boston Symphony program, the second of Sir John Barbirolli's fortnight as guest conductor, may be summarized as stodgy Purcell, scintillating Haydn and hearts-of-oak Elgar.

It was a British program through, in its strengths and frailties, and if its finest contribution came as the result of foreign association, well, such is the case very often with nations. One is glad that Sir John selected the Oxford' Symphony, not so much for its university overtonts, however, as for the fact that it is a splendid work seldom repeated. The last Symphony performance was an inadequate reading over six years ago by Robert Shaw.

Theater Music

Taking the program in sequence, Sir John's arrangement of Purcell's theater music seem to me valid enough, since, with the single exception of "Dido and Aneas," all the composer's writing for the stage consisted of incidental passages. His relationships to dramatists were not those of composer to librettist, for the ballad opera of his day did not correspond to opera, the wedding of drama to musical techniques, as we understand the word today.

Hence, we feel none of the sense that a vital element is missing as in, say, Mr. Leinsdorf's compilations of a Wagnerian music-drama. Mr. Barbirolli employed an orchestra that would have astonished Purcell, happily so, but I'm afraid the magnification of string colorations resulted in a bloated emotional line, like a cameo enlarged to Cinerama dimensions.

The reading had a great deal of thrust and polyphonic vigor, especially in the robust anthems from King Arthur; when it came to the plangent and intense airs, despite fine solo work from Mr. Thorstenberg, the suite stayed on the surface. Dimitri Mitropoulos used to offer Purcell to advantage and, strangely enough, excelled among modern conductors in giving an emotional character to music for the masque.

Brilliant Score

The "Oxford" Symphony, contrastingly, was a joy, filled with dynamic variation and stury articulation. Tempi were on the slow side, the performance building a strong, clear curve. Although Sir John preferred terseness of phrase his conducting brought out the brilliance of the score and the pizzicati punctuations of the minuet illustrated his self-effacing way with it.

The temptation to make of this wonderfully witty and captivating work (the finale alone would justify repeated attention) which is flecked by matchless song, a virtuosic exhibit of urbanity must surely be keen.

Tht Barbirolli performance was rhythmically precise in its outer movements, the generally careful detail in no way restricting the clarity of accent. He let it flow, and flow it did, in this restrained, engaging account. I preferred tht clean directness of his approach to the score to an interpretation that might have imposed a broader scale, talic poignance and tumbling energy. This had sparkle, extreme honesty and the dramatic contrasts of understatement.

Elgar Symphony

I also liked his treatment of Elgar's Symphony No. 2, revived after a lapse of nearly 30 years. The musical idiom of Elgar offers no problems in a way, and one is reminded of the idealized portrait of the Edwardian age as the golden time of tradition. Nostalgia, though, is a simplistic emotion, and there are perplexities in the score, as many as in the seemingly bluff character of the playboy prince.

Elgar knew how to make an orchestra sound; his knowledge of the instrumental capacities was profound. Yet how does one account for the grotesque transformations that occur in the radio? The age was one in which the maintenance of form had become more important than the meaning that inspires form. One could pursue this point.

Next week finds Mr. Leinsdorf returning. He has scheduled the world premiere of Huggler's 'Sculptures," with Bethany

---

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 31 1964

At Symphony

Sir John Barbirolli Is Guest Conductor

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Sir John Barbirolli, who started a two-week visit with the Boston Symphony on Friday afternoon, is a superbly effective conductor in the right repertory. He conducted this time a program made of things that are definitely Barbirolli specialties: the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture, "The Walk to the Paradise Garden" by Delius, Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony, and the Second Sibelius.

Sir John is not subtle, but he is very much alive. Everything had captivating rhythmic vitality, and the more expansive melodies were phrased with operatic freedom and eloquence. That effect was particularly telling in the slow introduction of the Berlioz: I have rarely heard an orchestra come so close to seemingly speaking and singing syllables and words.

No bones are made about the desirability of turning a concert into a dramatic and emotional occasion. Sir John's gestures as he conducts, his rapport with his audience, all this is quite theatrical. It is a studied, deliberate and effective performance in an old-fashioned grand manner that is slowly passing from reality into history. But it all works. His involvement in what he is doing is intensively communicative, and that not only to the audience, because the orchestra was clearly playing with enthusiasm and enjoyment. And as I left the hall, Sir John was returning to the stage for his fourth round of loud bravos.

On the whole I got more pleasure from the performances than from the music. Those two symphonies are problematic. Vaughan Williams had some gripping ideas, and both the three-note ostinato that dominates the second movement, and the Epilogue with its nine minutes of sustained pianissimo, are effective as rhetoric.

On the other hand, many of the ideas are undistinguished, the rhythm is mechanical, the orchestration overloaded and monotonous. There is a lot of parody of cheap music, saxophone and all, but Vaughan Williams lacked the sharp observation the parodist needs. What he comes up with is often more like unsuccessful imitation. And near the end of the first movement there is a disconcerting moment when there seems to be parody in the manner of Bartok's "Interrupted Intermezzo": the sudden appearance of a broad melody, orchestrated in Telephone Hour style with great luscious dollops of harp tone, quite funny, but evidently meant to be serious after all.

There are, then, effective moments, but Vaughan Williams was really too amateurish to compose his ideas out properly. The Sibelius also has some attractive passages of unaffected lyricism, but in general the tone, both esthetic and moral, is that of a campaign speech. Seasonal perhaps, but as music preposterous, this bloated windbag of mannerisms.

But Barbirolli is much worth hearing. He returns next week with another specialty of his, the Second Symphony of Elgar.

FRI. - SAT 7.

33

CAMBRIDGE 2.

N • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Seventh Program

NOON, NOVEMBER 13, at 2:00 o'clock

RDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 14, at 8:30 o'clock

........................."Sculptures," Op. 39

ngs)

BETHANY BEARDSLEE, Soprano
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

..................Symphony No. 6, in A minor

Allegro energico, ma non troppo
Scherzo (Wuchtig)
Andante
Finale (Allegro moderato)
(First performance at these concerts)

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

* The fourth movement is a setting for Soprano and Orchestra of Robinson Jeffers' Poem, "Rock and Hawk."

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART...........Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504
- I. Adagio; Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Finale: Presto

BERGER ....Polyphc
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN....*Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56
- I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
- II. Vivace non troppo
- III. Adagio
- IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

1964

◆ ◆ ◆ Personals ◆ ◆ ◆

By CECILLE A. MARKELL

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will perform "Polyphony for Orchestra" by ARTHUR BERGER, Walter W. Naumberg Professor of Music at Brandeis University, on Tuesday, Nov. 10. The performance, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be televised on WGBH-TV, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

"Polyphony," a one-movement work for orchestra, was composed in 1955 under a Louisville Orchestra commission in connection with a Rockefeller Foundation grant. Prof. Berger has had other compositions performed by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Much.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 8 1964

Programs at Symphony

The world premiere of "Sculptures," a work for orchestra with soprano soloist by John Huggler, will take place at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Huggler is spending a year as composer?in?residence with the orchestra under a pilot program of the Rockefeller Foundation. Under the provisions of the grant, the composer is attending orchestra rehearsals and concerts and is consulting with individual players to gain an acquaintance with rehearsal and performance practices.

The concerts, Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday at 8:30, will begin with "Sculptures." Bethany Beardslee will be the soprano soloist. Also on the program is Mahler's Symphny No. 6.

The week-end program will receive its final rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30 at the second open rehearsal of the season. The open rehearsal series is sold out, and proceeds go to the orchestra's pension fund.

The second concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place Tuesday evening at 8:30 and will be telecast as usual by WGBH-TV, Ch. 2 Leinsdorf will open the program with Mozart's Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Uhague," K. 504, and will continue with "Polyphony" by Arthur Berger. The concert will close with Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
NOV 12 1964

Bethany Beardslee will be soprano soloist in the world première of John Huggler's 'Sculptures,' to be presented at the week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

FRI.-SAT 7.

SON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-SIXTY-FIVE

Seventh Program

NOON, NOVEMBER 13, at 2:00 o'clock

URDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 14, at 8:30 o'clock

........................"Sculptures," Op. 39

ind Songs)

BETHANY BEARDSLEE, Soprano
(First performance)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ....Symphony No. 6, in A minor

- I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
- II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
- III. Andante
- IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

(First performance at these concerts)

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

* The fourth movement is a setting for Soprano and Orchestra of Robinson Jeffers' Poem, "Rock and Hawk."

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

CAMBRIDGE 2.

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART..........Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504

- I. Adagio; Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Finale: Presto

BERGER ....Polyphc

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN....*Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56

- I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
- II. Vivace non troppo
- III. Adagio
- IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

NOV 5 1964

◆◆◆ Personals ◆◆◆

By CECILLE A. MARKELL

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will perform "Polyphony for Orchestra" by ARTHUR BERGER, Walter W. Naumberg Professor of Music at Brandeis University, on Tuesday, Nov. 10. The performance, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be televised on WGBH-TV, beginning at 8:30 p.m.

"Polyphony," a one-movement work for orchestra, was composed in 1955 under a Louisville Orchestra commission in connection with a Rockefeller Foundation grant. Prof. Berger has had other compositions performed by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Much.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 8 1964

Programs at Symphony

The world premiere of "Sculptures," a work for orchestra with soprano soloist by John Huggler, will take place at the Boston Symphony concerts on Friday and Saturday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Huggler is spending a year as composer?in?residence with the orchestra under a pilot program of the Rockefeller Foundation. Under the provisions of the grant, the composer is attending orchestra rehearsals and concerts and is consulting with individual players to gain an acquaintance with rehearsal and performance practices.

The concerts, Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday at 8:30, will begin with "Sculptures." Bethany Beardslee will be the soprano soloist. Also on the program is Mahler's Symphny No. 6.

The week-end program will receive its final rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30 at the second open rehearsal of the season. The open rehearsal series is sold out, and proceeds go to the orchestra's pension fund.

The second concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place Tuesday evening at 8:30 and will be telecast as usual by WGBH-TV, Ch. 2 Leinsdorf will open the program with Mozart's Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Uhague," K. 504, and will continue with "Polyphony" by Arthur Berger. The concert will close with Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
NOV 12 1964

Bethany Beardslee will be soprano soloist in the world première of John Huggler's 'Sculptures,' to be presented at the week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

13x

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 8 1964

The Boston Sunda

'Sculptures' to Premiere This Week

B.S.O.'s First Composer Quiet About Own Works

By MARGO MILLER

MILLER

Though John Huggler says "a citizen of the music world should cherish his own voice," the Boston Symphony's first composer in residence makes little noise about his compositions.

"Sculptures," a 15-minute work for orchestra with soprano, will have its first performances this week in Symphony Hall.

Huggler arrived in Boston in late September with "Sculptures," begun in 1960, completed and ready for rehearsal with Erich Leinsdorf, soloist Bethany Beardslee and the orchestra. The rest of the year he will listen to the orchestra as a repository of sound to draw on for future use.

This musical credit is the investment of the Rockefeller Foundation. The foundation awarded the Boston Symphony a grant and gave Huggler a chance to take a vacation from writing chamber music.

Clarinetist

Huggler (rhymes with bugler) is no stranger to orchestras. A musicologist by schooling, at Eastman and the University of Chicago, he played E-flat clarinet for four years in the Oklahoma City Orchestra, though he has yet to write a concerto for his instrument.

There are five Huggler symphonies which the composer has withdrawn from performance.

His other works include eight string quartets, three string quintets and a brass quintet, violin and viola concertos, a cantata on a verse of Yeats, and a piece called "Ecce Homo," which Huggler says fixes on the drama of the Crucifixion rather than its theological meaning.

Huggler talks a good deal about "meaningful poetic symbols." The text for the fourth movement of "Sculptures" is Robinson Jeffers' poem, "Rock and Hawk."

Not Program

Not to be taken as program music, "Sculptures" is concerned with durability, substance and longevity. The poem is the extra-musical idea which serves as a funnel for the musical idea.

What interests Huggler at the moment are the primary colors of orchestral instruments. He likes, for example, the idea of four horns massed to get a horn sound.

The opening movement of "Sculptures" has a brass section of 16 pieces, four horns and four trombones flanked by two brass quartets of three trumpets and a trombone. The second movement adds flutes and strings, the third, clarinets, the fourth, voice, and the last is a "solution for orchestra."

How this scheme says durability may be revealed in the concerts Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Huggler confesses his "total failure in words to articulate what (he's) trying to do."

He's more talkative about the sociology of music. "Sculptures," he says, "celebrates the vision of the lone artist" in its dedication to Carl Ruggles and as a work in memoriam Wallingford Riegger, two American composers who wrote music against considerable odds — years of indifference by the public and performers.

Selection Is Mystery

How Huggler was selected by the Rockefeller Foundation is still a mystery to him. There was no open competition for this first Rockefeller grant to an American orchestra.

Huggler was notified b ya telephone call to Ithaca, N.Y., where he was a graduate assistant in the Cornell music department the year following his 1962 Guggenheim Fellowship in Rome. Nor does he know his next address.

Huggler's schedule at Symphony Hall is his own. He attends the orchestra's first rehearsal each week. He talks to the players with no spespecific end in mind. "I don't bring in what I wrote the night before and get an opinion."

Nor does the Rockefeller Foundation expect a score right away. Huggler says the grant is a vote of confidence that something will come out of his year and that it will be in his own voice.

A foundation like Chicagoan Paul Fromm's has, in Huggler's opinion, a special interest in extending the Viennese tradition of Webern and Schoenberg.

Huggler's decision to become a composer came after studying the music of Bartok with Otto Gambosi at the University of Chicago.

"It's very unfashionable to like Bartok these days. Bartok's a zero, people say, but what a zero!" says Huggler.

Cardsharp

Alain Delon looks over the action, in "Joy House," suspense film co-starring Jane Fonda, at the Paramount.

Globe 11/13/64

An Introductory Note On the Mahler Sixth

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

For a major work 60 years old, by a composer now well established, the Mahler Sixth is an amazing rarity. To most of the public in his own day, Mahler was a man whose compositions were tolerated because he was the greatest conductor of his time.

He once said, "My time will yet come." It has, and to a degree that would have seemed dreamlike and improbable even 20 years ago. Still, of the central group of the three purely instrumental symphonies, Nos. 5, 6, and 7, only the Fifth has yet entered the repertory.

In two respects No. 6 is "normal" in ways that at the same time make it not quite typical of Mahler: it uses instruments only (in common with five others of the 10), and its plan is one of four movemnets in a fairly conventional order.

In its early performances, Mahler used the subtitle, "Tragic." As always, he changed his mind later, and preferred to have the music speak in its own language alone. Alma Mahler, the composer's widow, says that "no work of his flowed so directly from the heart as this one. We both wept much then."

Some of its quasi-programmatic detail is more or less private in nature. For example, the attempt, as Mahler said, "to capture" Alma in the first movement's soaringly vigorous second theme. Mrs. Mahler says further that the scherzo portrays "the arhythmic playing" of two small children toddling through the sand. If so, given the mood in which that movement ends, it is an appalling tragic vision, related to the "Songs of the Death of Children" which Mahler was completing at the time.

As aways, Mahler used a vocabulary derived from the most [illegible] musical stock, the military idom in the first movement, popular dances in the second, and melody almost folklike and hauntingly familiar in the andante. But as always the most important thing is not that the vocabulary would not exist were it not for cliches, but the intensely personal, wholly unpredictable transformation of those cliches into the language so individual that it is instantly recognizable as Gustav Mahler's and his alone.

The evidence is in those opening marches; it is present perhaps most vividly in that "familiar" melody of the slow movement, that is at once given so strange a twist with the unexpected flattening of its seventh note.

All this leads to the finale, which is the largest portion of the work and its center of gravity. This rather special distribution of weight is a good thing for the listener to be aware of. The essence of the symphony is that finale with its hammerblows that fell the hero (Mahler's own words).

From his letters and remarks, we can learn that Mahler was especially concerned that the spiritual and psychological import of his music be understood. This is not just any symphony. Its world is a special one that expresses, among other things, Mahler's disillusionment with the kind of symphony that Elgar, for example, could still write seven years later.

Mahler wanted this music heard as a searingly direct expression of human tragedy, an idea of the use of music that is no longer very fashionable. But it is necessary to surrender to this assumption in order to understand anything at all, and in listening to realize also that a concert that includes Mahler's Sixth is one of the most special of events.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Herald
Sun. Circ. 281,586

NOV 8 1964

Composer-in-Residence

Symphony to Play Huggler's Music

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will ~~return to~~ the podium this week to conduct concerts on Tuesday, Friday-Saturday and next Sunday (Nov. 15), as well as an open rehearsal Thursday.

At the weekend concerts he will present the world premiere of a work for soprano and orchestra by John Huggler, who is currently spending a year as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony under a pilot program of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Under the provisions of the Rockefeller grant, Mr. Huggler is attending many of the orchestra's rehearsals and concerts and consulting with the individual players, in order to gain an intimate acquaintance with rehearsal and performance practices.

THE CONCERTS of Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and next Sunday afternoon will begin with Mr. Huggler's work "Sculptures," for Soprano and Orchestra, Op. 39, written in 1959-60. Bethany Beardslee will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchester as guest soloist. Mr. Huggler will assist in the preparation of the performance. After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Symphony No. 6 of Gustav Mahler.

The weekend program will receive its final rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30 at the second open rehearsal of the season. The open rehearsal series is sold out, and proceeds go to the orchestra's pension fund.

The second concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place Tuesday evening at 8:30 and will be telecast as usual by WGBH-TV, Channel 2. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with Mozart's Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504, and will continue with "Polyphony" by Arthur Berger. The concert will close with Mendelsshon's Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

35

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

A dynamic Mahler Sixth

By Harold Rogers

[illegible] Sym- [illegible] at last [illegible] Shar- [illegible] Boston [illegible] concert [illegible] but [illegible] 70- [illegible] came [illegible] power [illegible] Leinsdorf's dy- [illegible].

[illegible] from mem- [illegible] Leinsdorf deline- [illegible] sheep of [illegible] dock" (to quote [illegible] Storey Smith) in [illegible] to remove a [illegible] the blackness. [illegible] winsome [illegible] Mahler's earlier [illegible] The impasto is [illegible] It is an extremely [illegible]. And yet all this [illegible] activity does not [illegible] those magnificent [illegible] melodies and coun- [illegible], Mahler's stock [illegible] It may be turbu- [illegible] turbing, filled with [illegible] late-romantic Sturm [illegible], yet serene pas- [illegible] repose occur just [illegible] enough to bring us a [illegible] of lyrical release.

* * *

Many conductors, of course, could not bring it off at all. In the hands of a lesser artist than Mr. Leinsdorf [illegible] forces could quick- [illegible] ate into chaos. Mr. Leinsdorf's ability to seek out [illegible] and to maintain it [illegible] much to the success of this performance.

Yet more than order is [illegible], and it was Mr. Leinsdorf's impassioned handling of these forces that made the music speak in strong emotional terms. If there were [illegible] attention [illegible] fault may [illegible] as much in the [illegible] the conductor.

[illegible] work on this program [illegible] a world pre- [illegible] of John Huggler's "Sculptures," Op. 39.

Mr. Huggler is in Boston this season while on a Rockefeller grant as composer in residence for the Boston Symphony.

Composed in 1959-60, this shortish five-movement piece includes a setting for soprano of Robinson Jeffers' "Rock and Hawk," and the "bright power, dark peace," found in the verses, apparently give us the key to the mood of the entire work.

* * *

Perhaps Mr. Huggler's method may be loosely described as "a juxtaposition of sonorities," to use a term provided by George Smith from the early days of criticism in connection with contemporary scores. Sonorities there certainly were—mostly great massive brass ones, ringing in plangent tones. Though these vital statements may be fragmentary, yet an overriding poetic unity draws the disparate elements into a whole.

The entire piece has a grand spaciousness about it. At times the writing is linear, polyphonic. Scurrying figures appear in the strings. At other times there are long, sustained chords, expressive of natural forces in momentary suspension.

The setting of the Jeffers verses calls for wide-leaping intervals in true contemporary fashion, and no less of an artist than Bethany Beardslee could have successfully brought it off.

Miss Beardslee has built her reputation on her ability to sing modern scores. Whether it is the sprechstimme of Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire" or an obbligato to some horrendous concoction for tape recorder, you name it and she can sing it. If she has to leap a 13th to a high B flat, she'll be there.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 14 1964

Symphony

Huggler Clashes, Mahler Inadequate

By ROBERT TAYLOR

What might Mahler have thought about yesterday's bizarre BSO programming? It was disturbingly reminiscent of circumstances arising at the premiere of the Sixth Symphony, in Essen when after the dress rehearsa Strauss burst upon a distraught composer in the green room, calling: "I say, Mahler, tomorrow you must conduct a funeral overture, or some such thing, before the Sixth Symphony—the mayor here just died! That's the custom here—why, what's the matter with you? What seems to be the trouble? Oh well."

If there is anything designed to place an unfamiliar masterpiece in a poor light—or conversely, a new and abstract score by a young analytical composer—it consists in precisely the sort of juxtaposition that occurred yesterday. The works cancel each other out; the need for congenial contrast and balance is severely felt.

Only Experimental

I forbear, not being a mind-reader, to speculate upon the reactions of John Huggler at discovering the first performance of his subjective "Sculptures" beside the soaring Mahler. "Sculptures" strikes me as the sort of work a young composer-in-residence should produce, though not necessarily for the edification of the public: a perfectly respectable exploration of orchestral dynamic, of interesting forms and textures, a necessary part of the individual's development, but representing only the experimental working materials of his talent.

Alongside the Mahler, alas, it suggests a Constructivist assemblage of steel and aluminum next to a Michelangelo. One does not imply that Mr. Huggler should fabricate bogus Michelangelos as a 20th Century man, but he is simply overwhelmed. The incompleteness of his statement is experienced, because his absorption with technical problems for their own sake becomes an end not leading to a greater sensibility.

They lead, instead, back to themselves. What movement, stability, color and contrast might be attained by a certain emphasis or assymetry? Mr. Huggler uses an unusual combination to discover his answers, offstage strings, augmented brass and a reduced body of woodwinds; but it seems to me that while his experimentation is valid and involves a lively musical intellect, the various contemporary devices don't add up to anything. Bethany Beardslee, the soprano, sang the section devoted to a setting of "Rock and Hawk," a lovely poem by Robinson Jeffers, and met the fearsome challenges of the high line, song-speech and a musically ungrateful text (imagine singing the word 'disinterestedness'!) with praiseworthy elegance, and the composer was on hand for a stage bow.

Yesterday marked the initial Boston hearing of the Mahler Sixth, and my advance enthusiasm at encountering the grand work live for the first time was considerably dampened by an inadequate performance. Mr. Leinsdorf observed the sequence of the movements as restored by Mahler (reservations about the thematic likeness of the opening and the scherzo impelled the composer to shuffle the order before returning to his original aims), and thus differed in his procedure from the only prior American performance by Mitropoulos. Unfortunately, the first movement needed more rehearsal.

Between the false horn entrances and the scrambling of the strings it was exceedingly difficult to make coherent sense of the opening segment. The scherzo was also treated indecisively, the movement calling for a more angular, stabbing pattern. The adagio presented few problems, as the orchestra took hold, and the most formidable movement of all, the heroic 30-minute allegro energico with its sonata-like reintroduction of themes in reverse order, rute birch brush, reiterated cowbells and "hammer-blows", acquired a spacious sonority and monumental inflection.

Plainly, Mr. Leinsdorf's approach, as in his previous Mahler, is concerned less with impassioned phrase than with articulation. The tragic intensity derives from the objective accent on architecture. It is an impressive way to offer a score in which major and minor contend before the triumph of darkness; and it seems to me to project enormous power because of its disciplined control and understatement rather than theatrical identification. There is nothing exaggerated here and the symphony gains from it, but there must be a more forcefully delineated response within the orchestra proper. Despite its defects the offering is one I would a thousand times rather hear than Elgar's worthy but convention-burdened language of last week.

Next week Van Cliburn will be the soloist in the A Major and E-flat Major Piano concerti of Lizst; and Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled the Kodaly variations of a Hungarian folk song, "The Peacock," and Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the seventh program of the 84th season yesterday. Bethany Beardslee, soprano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.
"Sculptures," Op. 39 . . . . Huggler
Symphony No. 6, in A Minor . . . . Mahler

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

NOV 19 1964

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO FEATURES MAHLER'S SIXTH

Usually items of more than passing interest coming to Symphony are well publicized far in advance whether through feature articles, program notes, radio commentary, word of mouth oh what not. People, for example, had worked up all sorts of anticipation for the forthcoming performances of Britten's "War Requiem" and Bernstein's "Kaddish" Symphony last year. Yet, what is by all odds one of the most significant occurrences of Erich Leinsdorf's tenure here to date, the mounting of Gustav Mahler's Sixth Symphony, took place with little more forewarning than if the piece in question were Brahms' Third.

The only previous renditions of the Sixth Symphony in this country were by the New York Philharmonic in 1947 and 1955 under Dmitri Mitropoulos. Moreover, the piece is rarely played even in Europe. Few indeed are those either here or abroad who can claim familiarity or even nodding acquaintance with it. Yet Mahler himself, as his correspondence with Bruno Walter reveals, regarded this Symphony as one of his greatest achievements. It is a truism that if, in due course, a work of art has failed to make its way in the public domain, the failure can be accounted for in its basic inferiority. True quality, that is, will out in the gamut of time. But a truism is not an eternal verity, and the Sixth Symphony can only be put down as one of those exceptions that prove the rule.

The bases of its obscurity are not difficult to divine. For one thing it is nearly an hour and a quarter long. For another the scoring is stupendous, necessitating the trouble and expense of recruiting more than a dozen extra orchestral players. For a third, the post-World War II Mahler revival had only minimal effect because the orchestral parts were destroyed in the bombing of Leipzig and scores to copy from were almost non-existent. Finally, and most important, although the first three movements are traditional in structure, standard in length and readily accessible to a listener, the last movement really requires a listener to come out and meet it for every measure of its hour and a half duration — a circumstance with which few conductors and audienes are willing to grapple. Had Mahler taken a cue from Beethoven and substituted a short finale for the last movement, just as Beethoven substituted the allegro for the Grand Fugue in his B flat Quartet, Opus 130, the chances are that the Sixth would long since have assumed a regular place in the concert repertory.

And so Mr. Leinsdorf demonstrated considerable imagination and daring in braving the judgment of history as well as an unprepared Boston audience in reviving the work. He also demonstrated stupendous diligence, for he conducted the score from memory.

The results proved an experience that audience and performer alike will not soon forget. As I say, the first three movements are immediately appealing. They are filled with the elements that make Mahler what he is, but here one is encountering a particular evocation of them for the first time: the marvelous military marches and bird calls; the unexpected and very moving theme clusters; the sardonic twists and savage parodies; scoring that here is eerie and there lace-like in its delicacy. The slow movement is a particularly astonishing example of Mahler's penchant for setting out a melody as vulgar as the most obvious dance hall serenade, reworking it through the instrumental sections over and over, with each reworking undergoing a new and subtle harmonic treatment, until there is a transfiguration of shattering impact. One recalls the lander-like trio of the Scherzo, so joyously reminiscient of the slow movement of his Second Symphony, that suddenly emerges and reemerges from its dark and menacing surroundings.

It is the gigantic last movement that is the poser. Many of Mahler's last movements strive toward the apocalyptic, but this one really achieves it. The form is impossible to discern on a single listening, though I suspect that greater familiarity will reveal it to be a sonata with an extended development, employing both themes from its earlier movements and introducing new material. This is troubled music but somehow uncannily compelling. The audience, perforce strangers to the work, seemed to me unusually attentive and involved, and particularly moved by the quiet close and the final great chord. This is obviously a movement that will not make full sense for many, many hearings to come.

Mr. Leinsdorf has twice previously here revealed a deep affinity for Mahler's music in his readings of the First and Fifth Symphonies. So too with the Sixth. What stands out most saliently is his capacity to maintain the integrity and shape of the main lines without being overwhelmed by the incredible mass of detail. The inner voices, even in the first performance, could be clearly apprehended through the greatest climaxes. I am reliably informed, moreover, that with each successive performance of the Symphony on Saturday, Sunday and Tuesday, the readings became more so, which is as it should be.

The program opened with the first performance of John Huggler's "Sculptures", Opus 39. This was the initial presentation under the Resident Composer program recently instituted at the BSO under a Rockfeller grant. Though unfortunately I arrived too late to hear the piece, I cannot but feel that it was a disservice to the composer and to the Rockfeller program to couple this first performance with something so gigantic as the M[illegible]. The same thing happened two years ago when Leon Kirchner's Piano Concerto was paired with Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. If contemporary music is going am will rehearsal 30 at the of the rehearsal proceeds pension of the vill take at 8:30 usual by 2. Mr. program

---

y No. 38,
K. 504,
"Polyp-
ger. The Mendels-
3, in A
56.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 14 1964

At Symphony Hall

BSO Plays Mahler; It's Overwhelming

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The Mahler Sixth, which Erich Leinsdorf conducted on Friday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert, is a masterpiece of tremendous stature, and to hear it again in concert was an even more overwhelming experience than many weeks of preparatory study had led me to anticipate.

For one thing, and this is in part the measure of the success of the performance, it seemed now impossible to understand why it has been played so rarely. Actually three other orchestras will be taking it up this season, but its American premier took place only in 1947 when Mitropoulos did it in New York, and it's been done since only in 1955, again by Mitropoulos.

The Sixth is curiously proportioned in that its finale is about one third of the whole work in length, and even more than that in importance. It is not, however, especially long as Mahler's symphonies go, running about 72 minutes in Leinsdorf's well-paced reading. What seemed most striking was that within its length it was remarkably concise, more so in many respects than the more popular Fifth, and the movement that takes the greatest risks, the finale, is formally the most successful of all.

Both the first and last movement are essentially marches, and one difference between the Sixth and Mahler's others is that it tends to be more aggressively loud. Even so, the orchestral writing is a miracle of inventiveness, as indeed on every level the work represents imagination and composition of powerful originality.

Hardly anything surpasses the mystery of those harmonically veiled passages in the first and last movements, in which strange successions of chords are crowded and blurred by the tonal mist of distant cowbells.

And there is real terror in those nightmare evocations in the finale, for instance at the very beginning, when violins outline their anguished melodies against other such successions of muted and unpredictable harmonies. The very end, with its final frightening explosion, is the most drastically tragic of Mahler's farewells.

The performance was convincing and powerful. It was not as good as it presumably will be with repetition. Not all of the remarkable timbral values were completely realized yet. There was not enough made of those miraculous low harp parts, and the deep bells were not audible enough.

On the other hand, the cowbells made an effect of magic and mystery that was exactly right, and the two hammer blows in the last movement were terrific in their impact and in the exactness of their realization of what Mahler wanted. Most of the orchestral playing made a very good effect, and there was some marvelous high trumpet playing.

Leinsdorf's interpretation was painstaking, judicious, and energetic. He blunted a few of Mahler's points by occasionally making the playing blander than the piece. For example, a sudden tempo shift might be prepared by a slight acceleration. Often Mahler specified that the transition be made suddenly or gradually, and it is curious conductors seem reluctant to achieve the one, or how difficult they find the other. Also, in common with most Mahler performances, the violence of the dynamic fifths was a little underplayed. Still, the admirable and effective things in the performance were of dominant importance, and the occasion was one for deep gratitude to Leinsdorf for the preparation and realization of a difficult and very necessary task.

The Mahler made such an impact that it almost blotted out the recollection of the impression made by the opening work, "Sculptures," by John Huggler, composed in residence to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is probable, however, that even with less overpowering competition, "Sculptures" might not have been too impressive. It is a series of five short movements, of which the fourth is a setting of "Rock and Hawk" by Robinson Jeffers.

The choice of poem as well as the double dedication to Carl Ruggles and Wallingford Riegger, suggested that the composer had intended an effect of rough, rocklike strength. The harmonic idiom consists typically of consonant triands with a dissonant note added, something that can make a good effect, as in the opening brass chord, but which turns out not to be a language rich is resources and possibilities, at least not as used by Huggler. There are some effective moments in the piece, for example the good pacing of the disintegration at the end of the third movement. On the whole, the impression was that of a string of sound effects, and of a piece that was essentially thin and unsubstantial. The shrilly monotonous setting of the Jeffers poem was effectively sung by the soprano Bethany Beardslee.

SUNDAY 2. TUES 3. FRI. SAT 8 37

• NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

cond Program

RNOON, NOVEMBER 15, at 3:00 o'clock

H ...."Sculptures," Op. 39

BETHANY BEARDSLEE, Soprano
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ....Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
III. Andante
IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

(First performance in this series)

* The fourth movement is a setting for Soprano and Orchestra of Robinson Jeffers' Poem, "Rock and Hawk."

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN..................Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER................................Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
III. Andante
IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

(First performance in this series)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 20, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 21, at 8:30 o'clock

Ko Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"

In roduction: Moderato n brio nissimo te (appassionato)
o calmato
te appassionato mato o vivo

IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

(First performance at these concerts).

Li ....Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2

INTERMISSION

S ....Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

ntike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
bstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
leiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
ie Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
rabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
in Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
astorale

...... Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1

SOLOIST
VAN CLIBURN
Mr. CLIBURN plays the Steinway Piano concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

WIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

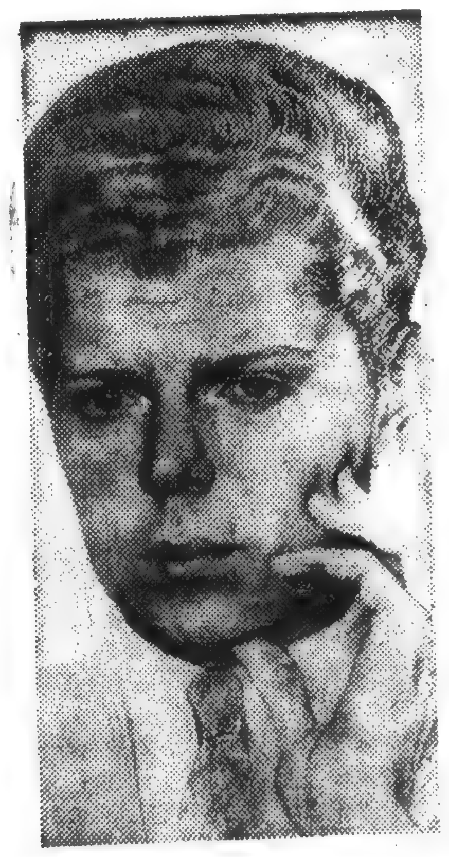
NOV 14 1964

VAN CLIBURN, distinguished young American pianist, who will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 20 and 21, performing the First and Second Piano Concerti by Franz Liszt.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02166 - 742-4200

OSTON, MASS.
orning Globe
orn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 1



Piano Soloist

Van Cliburn, sketched above by Boris Chaliapin, will play both Liszt Concertos with the Boston Symphony Friday and Saturday under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 15 1964

C Sharp

James Pappoutsakis will play the "Arabian Village" off-stage solo when the Boston symphony repeats Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

SUNDAY 2. TUES 3. FRI. SAT 8

EIG N • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

econd Program

ERNOON, NOVEMBER 15, at 3:00 o'clock

HUGGLER .... "Sculptures," Op. 39

I. II

III Songs)

IV.* V

BETHANY BEARDSLEE, Soprano

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER .... Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo

II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)

III. Andante

IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

(First performance in this series)

* The fourth movement is a setting for Soprano and Orchestra of Robinson Jeffers' Poem, "Rock and Hawk."

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN .... Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER .... Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo

II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)

III. Andante

IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

(First performance in this series)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 20, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 21, at 8:30 o'clock

Kod .... Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"

Introduction: Moderato
Con brio
Pianissimo
Forte (appassionato)
Poco calmato
Forte appassionato
Calmato
Vivo
Più vivo

IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

(First performance at these concerts)

Li .... Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2

INTERMISSION

Sc .... Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

ntike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
bstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
leiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
ie Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
rabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
in Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
astorale

.... Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1

SOLOIST

VAN CLIBURN

Mr. CLIBURN plays the Steinway Piano

ese concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

WIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

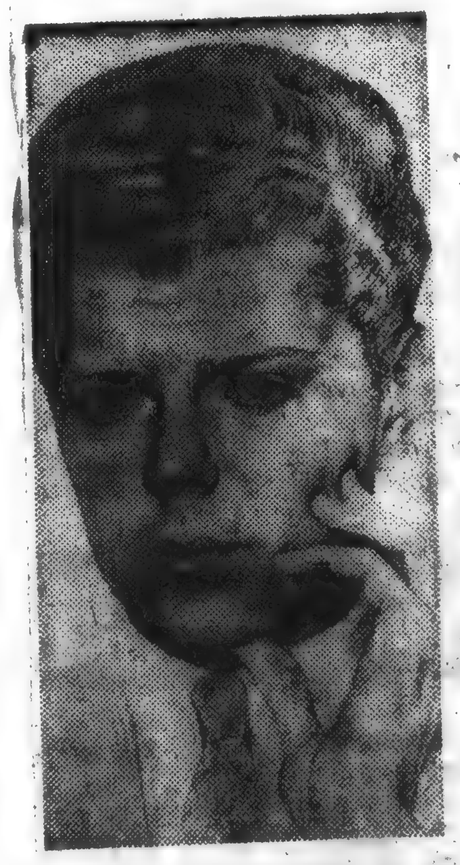
NOV 14 1964

VAN CLIBURN, distinguished young American pianist, who will be soloist with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 20 and 21, performing the First and Second Piano Concerti by Franz Liszt.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 1



Piano Soloist

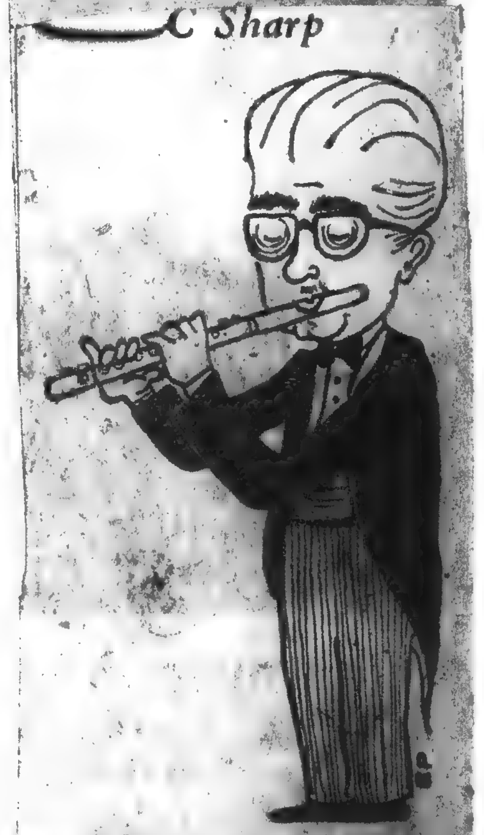
Van Cliburn, sketched above by Boris Chaliapin, will play both Liszt Concertos with the Boston Symphony Friday and Saturday under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 15 1964

C Sharp



James Pappoutsakis will play the "Arabian Village" off-stage solo when the Boston symphony repeats Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

NOV 20 1964

Symphony soloist

Van Cliburn will be soloist in the First and Second Piano Concertos of Liszt with the Boston Symphony on Friday afternoon and Saturday night at Symphony Hall.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

NOV 14 1964

SYMPHONY SOLOIST: Pianist Van Cliburn will perform two works by Franz Liszt Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Symphony Hall program.

Record – American
Nov 21 - 1965

Cliburn, BSO In Concerti By Liszt

Van Cliburn performed both Liszt piano concerti with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, playing with superb tone and magnificent aplomb. This young Texan is a virtuoso in the grand manner with a great bravura style. Erich Leinsdorf, himself a pianist, guided his Bostonians with steady control, maintaining deft balances between keyboard and orchestra.

The soloist presented the two Liszt works in chronological order of composition, rather than according to publication numbers, a valid approach both musically and historically. Thus he played the so-called second concerto (A major) before the interval. In one movement only, as is the succeeding one, it has been well described as a symphonic poem for piano and orchestra, or "The Life and Adventures of a Melody." Van Cliburn's tremendous power and remarkable resources of technical facility and good taste were of greater interest than the music it contains — indeed, Harold C. Schonberg once pointed to its "rolling pomposity" in a Musical Digest article.

Contrary to popular, Hollywood-twisted beliefs, Liszt played his own piano works with a delicacy and subtlety exactly the opposite of the general misconception of the great Hungarian pianist as a general speed-merchant and grand-piano bruiser.

'TRIANGLE CONCERTO'

Van Cliburn kept facile, superficial display to the minimum even in smashing chords and sweeping arpeggios. Emphasis on musicianship was manifest also in the concluding "Triangle Concerto," so-called because of the prominence of that tinkly orchestral gadget in Liszt's score. The composer himself was wont to sing the resounding opening theme to the words "Das versteht ihr alle nicht" ("This is a mystery to you all"), but Cliburn managed to make this musical riddle Lisztenable.

Curtain-raiser was Zoltan Kodaly's "Variations on a Hungarian Folksong, 'the Peacock'" (Felszallot at Pava), dating from 1938. The folklorish work is laid out in a manner which is, broadly speaking, that of the classical and romantic variation cycles. The introduction first presents the "Fly, Peacock, Fly" theme in the lower strings and principal oboe, followed by a sequence of 16 variations, culminating in a broadly laid-out finale, all being presented without interruption. Certain resemblances to some Sibelian tone-poems are attributable to the common ethnic origin of the Magyars and the Finns. Yesterday's first Boston hearing confirmed that Kodaly is quite as gifted an orchestrator as Sibelius was.

ROLFE BOSWELL

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Herald
Morn. Circ. 176,483

NOV 21 1964

Lyric Style

Symphony: Liszt Presented

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It is the popular misconception that Liszt's fustian mannerisms say everything about the composer. Van Cliburn refuted that notion yesterday by playing the A major and E-flat major Concertos, not as they are usually done in the style of the theater of the absurd, but as lyricism of a high order.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf ~~conducting, presented~~ the eighth program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Van Cliburn, piano, was the soloist.

Variations on a Hungarian folk song, "The Peacock"	Kodaly
Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2	Liszt
Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee	Schuller
Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1	Liszt

The only other occasion on which these scores were presented together in modern times at Symphony occurred in March, 1961, when Byron Janis was the soloist; and Mr. Janis revived the A major then for the first time in the series since November, 1923, when Mitya Nikisch, son of the conductor, Arthur Nikisch, performed it. Although I find that I liked Mr. Janis's technical resource, in retrospect his slam-bang, steely-fingered approach seems comparatively exaggerated beside the Cliburn version.

For the problems of Liszt's scores are musical rather than technical. The difficult passages linger with the performer, and once part of his repertoire can be recalled easily. In fact, as soon as a musician has assimilated the mechanical issues, formidable as these may be, he is hard put not to show off; and nine times out of ten, the pitfalls of a Liszt concerto concern skittish tempos and rubato regardless of Shaw's evaluation of the composer "of whom even hostile critics can say no worse that he has failed only by aiming too high."

I was most taken with Mr. Cliburn's treatment of the A major, which succeeds for the identical reason that his Brahms fails—the work requires a pensive but clear cantabile outline rather than forceful phrasing. The elaborate passagework was delicately articulated; there was enough octave brilliance to prevent sogginess; and in the dialogue with the solo 'cello the refined utterance of phrase expressed grace. Liszt's exploitation of the emotional upper harmonicas of the cellist's A string was nobly offered by Jules Eskin.

Obvious Glissandi

The marziale with its obvious glissandi proved the weak point in the performance: it usually is in a tasteful interpretation. Here Liszt succumbed to showmanship, but Mr. Cliburn did not, and in an effort to sustain his attack, slowed somewhat. This enabled him to finish without vulgarizing the piece, but the effect was tapered instead of grandiose.

The integration of soloist and orchestra imposed a few adjustments; the problems were more strenuous in the E-flat major. Mr. Leinsdorf handled them admirably, I thought, and in this work only the trombone entries proved a trifle conspicuous. Once again Mr. Cliburn achieved his total command over the inner sections, especially the quasi adagio, which received a wonderfully legato treatment. The tonal coloration and control of touch combined limpid fluency with sufficient vigor; the curving of phrase never inflated a sensational arabesque; while the fastidious and steady playing carried through [illegible] burn to an evocative poetic climax. This kind of plastic understatement, lyric rather than brilliant, represents Liszt with more power than abandoned zeal.

Seven Klee Studies

What is one to make of the swift reappearance of Schuller's Seven Klee Studies, done in April and at Tanglewood this summer? (A recording commitment suggests itself.) I didn't enjoy it very much in April, I loved it even less in November. As before, it struck me as a bogus 'contemporary' score, varnishing narrative tone painting of the Rimsky school with an overlay of Webern. The orchestra (Mr. Moleux isolated among the horns) twittered, tweedled, plunked and boomed, and poor Kleo, a painter of robust invention who preferred small scale, was translated into terms of coy superficiality.

The Kodaly Variations were also of minor consequence, but this score, heard for the first time in the series, has the advantage of bright, open scoring, Magyar folk sources, melodic felicity and a conservative yet cheerfully organized musical language. The 26 Variations reveal imagination, directness and simplicity; and if the idiom is that of the 19th century it makes no pretences to being anything more, and is the better for it.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled three first Boston performances: Haydn's Symphony No. 21, in A, the Dvorak Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 10, and Shostakovitch's Concerto for Violin, Op. 99, Leonid Kogan soloist.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
NOV 21 1964

Van Cliburn Playing With BSO Nov. 20, 21

BOSTON — Pianist Van Cliburn will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon, Nov. 20 and Saturday evening, Nov. 21, it has been announced by Erich Leinsdorf, music director. Cliburn will play two Liszt concertos, the second on Friday and the first on Saturday.

ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Boston 02106 - 742-4200
, MASS.
ing Globe
, Circ. 2[illegible],711

NOV 21 1964

At Symphony

Cliburn Plays Liszt; Schuller 'Klee' Repeated

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Erich Leinsdorf conducted, Van Cliburn was the piano [illegible] in the curiously put together program which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played on Friday afternoon. The music was Kodaly's "Peacock" Variations, Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," and both Liszt piano concertos.

It was a program that lacked focus and, in a certain sense, variety as well. All the music was flashy, and with the exception of the Liszt A major Concerto, none of it was much more than that. In any case, putting both the Liszt Concertos on the same program is not a good idea, and I suppose it was to have been a sacrifice upon the altar of the Radio Corporation of America.

One thinks of the two works as being very different, of the A major as being more poetic and less brash, but when they are served up in such close proximity, it becomes obvious how much they repeat one another's tricks, especially in piano writing. Having heard one, one does not terribly want to do the other right away; even the pianistic brilliance of the E flat was dimmed by the reecnt memory of the brilliance of the A major. This seemed to get across to the audience. Something certainly seemed wrong: not that Cliburn's reception was anything other than friendly, but considering that Van Cliburn had just been playing Liszt, the applause was not much.

Cliburn himself seemed a little constrained during most of his afternoon's work. In the A major Concerto, which he played first, one was certainly aware of his uniquely handsome tone and of the taste and musicality that inform his playing and that put him so many miles ahead of all the Brownings and Janises. On the other hand, he was technically not really at ease, and there was little evidence of his temperament that seemed so inflammatory at one time, and which Liszt's music needs so badly.

In the slow movement and the finale of the E flat Concerto, the lyric cantilena of the one and the declamatory recitatives of the other, did Cliburn give us the kind of playing that makes him not merely less vulgar than most of his contemporaries, but one of the really splendid players of our time. There was a little covering of the piano in the tutti, but other than that, and with the exception of the rhythmically unclear triangle solo in the E flat Concerto, the orchestral contribution was very good.

Schuller's Klee Studies were played at Symphony as recently as last April. The performance was much better this time, doubtless in part because the orchestra had played the music under the composer's direction at Tanglewood, though even this time the interpretation had not the flair of Schuller's own. Also, the audience responded much more this time than seven months ago, again, doubtless in part because the performance itself was more persuasive. Those are perhaps justifications for the surprisingly early repeat, but if education by repetition is Leinsdorf's aim, then it must be said that there are many works, very many indeed, that stand in more urgent need of his attention. Schuller's music, clever though it is, revealed few compelling reasons for anyone's need to know it that well.

The Kodaly "Peacock" is at any given moment very pretty, but being an assembly of only the most obvious and predictable variation procedures, it is also quite monotonous. The performance was as professional and as uninteresting as the music itself.

It was a notably good afternoon for orchestral playing, and the program provided quite a few occasions for distiguished solo work. Among them were the piccolo-flute duet in the Kodaly, beautifully played by Mr. Madsen and especially by Mrs. Dwyer; Mr. Ghitalla's trumpet solo in Schuller's "Little Blue Devil" and a little later the offstage flute solo in "Arabian Town" as played by Mr. Pappoutsakis; and Mr. Eskin's cello solo in the Liszt E flat.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 15 1964

Cliburn at Symphony

Van Cliburn will play both Piano Concertos of Franz Liszt at Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, will conduct.

The program will include Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," a work which entered the orchestra's repertoire last season.

A work new to the orchestra's concerts will be the Kodaly Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock." It will open the programs. The Second Liszt Concerto will follow. After intermission will come the Schuller and the First Liszt Concerto.

This afternoon at 3 Leinsdorf will open the second program of the Sunday Afternoon Series with the new work by John Huggler, "Sculptures," Op. 39, with Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist. Huggler is spending the year as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under a Rockefeller Foundation project. His work received its world premiere on Friday afternoon. Leinsdorf will conclude the Sunday concert with the first performance in this series of the Mahler Symphony No. 6.

The third program of the Tuesday Evening Series will take place this Tuesday at 8:30. Leinsdorf will conduct an orchestral program of Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115, and the first performance in this series of Mahler's Symphony No. 6.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 21 1964

A 'twofer' by Cliburn

Lisztian oratory

By Harold Rogers

In the theater world whenever two tickets are sold for the price of one, the transaction is called a "twofer." Something like this is happening at the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend. Van Cliburn is here to give us two concertos by Liszt in one concert.

And the "twofer" on this occasion are the Concerto in A major, No. 2 (which is really No. 1 in order of composition) and the Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1 (which is really No. 2). Erich Leinsdorf properly programed them in chronological order, placing the No. 2 before the intermission, and the No. 1 as the finale.

As for the No. 2, it amounts to considerable Lisztian oratory with doubtful syntax. Its form is somewhat amorphous; it has elements of being a pastiche; the piano at times is relegated to an obbligato role. Some of Mr. Cliburn's attacks were foggy; one knew not whether to blame him or the composer. Let's blame the Abbé Liszt.

⁂

The No. 1, of course, is the perennial favorite, and there are many obvious reasons why. The syntax is clear as crystal. No problems of form are encountered; the themes are instantly appealing; the piano is always the center of attention. A soloist could wish little more by way of trappings for launching himself in the public ear.

But Mr. Cliburn chose not to take the obvious way—the razzle-dazzle of scintillating elocution. His approach is artistic; at times he spoke quietly, fervently; again grandly, airily. And the clean, crisp accelerated run and arabesque were also there to be enjoyed.

⁂

Mr. Leinsdorf has been doing some appealing things with his programs thus far this season. On this occasion he opened with the first performance at these concerts of Zoltán Kodály's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock."

It's a richly wrought score. Mr. Leinsdorf dug deeply into its emotional content and brought forth some eloquent passages for the cellos, to be balanced with equally winsome answers from the fiddles. The piece as a whole is thoroughly entertaining, its theme somewhat reminiscent of an American Negro spiritual.

And entertainment is the stock in trade of Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies of Themes by Paul Klee, held over by Mr. Leinsdorf as a repeat from last season's repertoire. (The orchestra is probably working it up for a recording session, an honor the work definitely deserves).

Again we were titillated by "The Twittering Machine" (which runs down in the middle and then suddenly leaps again into action), by the "Little Blue Devil" that plays his jazzy pranks on a concertino of a combo, by the undulations of Little Egypt in "Arabian Town," and by things that go bump in the night in "An Eerie Moment."

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200
BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Herald
Sun. Circ. 231,586

NOV 15 1964

Symphony This Week

Orchestra's Guest Is Van Cliburn

Enrich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Van Cliburn, pianist, to be quest artist of Friday and Saturday. Cliburn will be heard in performances of the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2 and the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 This will be Cliburn's third engagement with the orchestra in Boston.

Leinsdorf will open the weekend program with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," which has not been performed previously by the orchestra. Cliburn will then join the orchestra for the second Liszt Concerto. After the intermission Leinsdorf will conduct Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee." The concert will conclude with Mr. Cliburn's performance of the first Liszt Concerto.

THIS AFTERNOON at 3 o'clock Leinsdorf will open the second program of the Sunday afternoon series with the new work by John Huggler, "Sculptures," Op. 39, with Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist.

This work received its world premiere on Friday afternoon. Leinsdorf will conclude the Sunday concert with the first performance in this series of the Mahler Symphony No. 6.

The third program of the Tuesday evening series will take place this Tuesday. Leinsdorf will conduct an orchestral program of Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115, and the first performance in this series of Mahler's Symphony No. 6.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

NOV 14 1964

VAN CLIBURN BSO SOLOIST FRI. AND SAT.

Pianist Van Cliburn, at the nvitation of Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to be guest artist at the orchestra's concerts Friday at 2 p.m. and next Saturday at 8:30. He will be heard in performances of the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2 and the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 in his third appearance with the orchestra in Boston.

Mr. Leinsdorf will open the second program of the Sunday Afternoon Series tomorrow at 3 o'clock with the new work by John Huggler, "Sculptures," Op. 39, with Bethany Beardslee as soprano soloist. Mr. Huggler is spending the year as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under a Rockefeller Foundation project. This work received its world premiere on Friday afternoon. Mr. Leinsdorf will conclude the Sunday concert with the first performance in this series of the Mahler Symphony No. 6.

40

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

2 6 1964

Van Cliburn Soloist With BSO

By ALLAN SLY

Last week's B.S.O. program, the season's eighth, bridged America and Central Europe, this century and the last. Mr. Leinsdorf pulled things together tautly and every moment counted. The Koday Peacock variations, never played here before, showed the wide range of Hungarian wit—evidently aimed topically for the composer's compatriots, but not shutting us out from enjoying its inventiveness, its ingenious orchestration, its high spirits, sustained throughout a lengthy and complex, if episodic, work. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from memory.

Van Cliburn then addressed himself to the Liszt A major concerto, riding the solo part with aplomb and matching Mr. Leinsdorf's disposition to hold its banalities in check. To be sure a juicier reading can be conceived, but it probably would not be good for us today and would only lose face for the mid-nineteenth century and Liszt's avoidance, or failure to achieve, commitment to any detectable national school or style.

It is Van Cliburn's inescapable lot, at least for the present, to remind his hearers of the all-American type, and he carries this destiny with distinction and grace. Liszt benefited.

Mr. Leinsdorf's program continued its fine focus and concentration with another traversal of Gunther Schuller's Paul Klee studies. The audience reaction on Saturday was one of puzzlement and possibly of reservation. But for me this unique tour de force remains utterly captivating. Neither Schuller nor Klee seem to need literary assistance, yet I vaguely recall a phrase of Mathew Arnold's — something about the still, sad music of humanity—that might apply.

Mr. Van Cliburn's other Liszt concerto (the E Flat) gave no suggestion of redundancy—it was fresh and totally beguiling, and in its way, highly entertaining—as indeed had been the whole evening.

The next program — Haydn No. 21, Dvorak No. 3 and the Shostakovitch violin concerto (Leonid Kogan) — consists entirely of first Boston performances, and the following one keeps this up for three out of four works. Mr. Leinsdorf's planning, like his performances, shows strength brought to a high degee of effectiveness. It is bracing to the audience, as it is to the orchestra, and for this observer, very improving.

PROVIDENCE 2

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

NOV 2 3 1964

Music Yesterday

Boston Symphony, Spanish Guitarist in Programs

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra preached a convincing gospel of beauty and harmony yesterday at Veterans Memorial Auditorium at the second of the Sunday afternoon concerts. The program of music by Schumann, Kodaly and Mendelssohn was a reassuring demonstration of how perfection of control can keep music of the romantic school on a high intellectual plane without undue sentimentality, yet bring all of its intimate content to each listener with special enjoyment.

The musicians played magnificently. Every graceful phrase of Schumann's Overture to "Manfred" was set forth with artistry. This seldom played work made a fine opening choice. The strings never sounded better. The muted brass was excellent and this was truly Schumann at his best.

The Kodaly Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock" was a delightful surprise. Usually his name on a program means the old favorite, his "Hary Janos" Suite. These variations were as colorful as the iridescence of the bird they portrayed. The strong rhythmic skeleton of the Magyar folk song was durable framework for the sixteen sections. Several opportunities came for solo work of distinction. The whole piece was a beautiful mosaic. Leinsdorf's expert direction made many images for his listeners. It might have been a travel poster, or a colorful pageant. Its return to the basic song theme, however, kept it at all times a work directly related to people. Its pulse was strong.

The "Scotch" Symphony by Mendelssohn was the final offering on the program. This composer was my first love among the romantic composers. I was twelve when I had my first Peters Edition of the "Lieder ohne Worte." I went through the whole forty-nine of them with a zeal which has stamped the Mendelssohn idiom indelibly in my musical heritage. The contour of his pure melodies, the balance of his symphonic form and the color of his orchestration stood out with brilliance in this interpretation.

Leinsdorf made of the beautiful Adagio something which fitted admirably into this sad day of remembrance and more than one listener noted the devotion and simplicity of the interpretation which spoke eloquently of the sorrow the country still feels when John Fitzgerald Kennedy's name is mentioned. There was no mention of the occasion on the program. The music spoke louder than any printed words might have done. This is the way with great music played by great musicians.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 194,795

NOV 2 2 1964

MUSIC

TODAY

A CONCERT by Narciso Yepes, Spanish guitarist, will be presented at 3 p.m. in Edwards Hall at the University of Rhode Island. It is open to the public without charge.

Yepes, who invented his own instrument, a 10-string guitar, will play Sanz's Spanish Suite, Bacarisse's Suite for Guitar, Bach's Chaconne in D Minor and Turina's Fandanguillo among others. His program is being sponsored by the URI Arts Council.

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra's second Providence concert of the season will be held at 3:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct a program which includes Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115, Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock" and Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3 in A Minor, Op. 56. The latter, it is said, was inspired during a visit to Scotland by the composer. But the question seems still unanswered as to just what Scottish material exists in the symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

NOV 2 3 1964

Boston Symphony Well Received

The Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Erich Leinsdorf again filled the Veterans Memorial Auditorium with an enthusiastic Sunday - afternoon audience for the second concert of its current series yesterday.

Opening with Schumann's "Overture to Byron's 'Manfred' ", the orchestra conveyed all the color and expressiveness of the moods of the poem that Leinsdorf requested. Then, as though to deny the audience the quiet contentment, almost lassitude, that Schumann's lyrical sorcery induced, the orchestra played with brilliance and fire, and contrasting somberness and pathos, the sixteen "Variations of a Hungarian Folksong (The Peacock)" by Kodaly.

The major work came after intermission, Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 3 in A-Minor (Scottish)" Here was the descriptive grandeur of the hills and firths and islands of Scotland in the opening movement; the dances and ballads in the second; the adagio of the third movement with its ceremonious beat and pace, almost like a marche funebre was never a dirge. In Leinsdorf's interpretation with its measured dignity, it was a proud and glorious procession at the burial of a great hero. The finale was in two parts: allegro vivacissimo wherein you could almost hear the clash of claymores and the twang of bowstrings and the allegro maestoso assai was reverent and jubilant as though it were an ode to victory.

C. H. L.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency.Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 2 9 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 2 9 1964

Boston Symphony On Second Tour

The Boston Symphony will be out of town this week on its second tour of the season. The orchestra will give concerts in Washington Monday and Tuesday, in New York's Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday and Friday, in Brooklyn's Academy of Music on Thursday and in Carnegie Hall Saturday.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct all but the Brooklyn concert, which will be under the direction of Richard Burgin. Guest soloists on the tour will be Bethany Beardslee, soprano; Van Cliburn, pianist; and Leonid Kogan, violinist.

The newly-formed Boston Symphony Camber Players will make their New York debut Monday, Dec. 7, in the Hunter College Playhouse. They will repeat the program heard here in Sanders Theater

The orchestra will give its next concert in Symphony Hall on Dec. 8, the fourth program of the Tuesday Evening Series. Leinsdorf will conduct. The next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will take place Dec. 11 and 12, with Leontyne Price, soprano, as guest soloist.

WEDNESDAY I · FRI-SAT. 9·

41

• NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

First Program

EVENING, NOVEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

...ations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"

...tion: Moderato
...io
...simo
... appassionato)
...almato
... appassionato
...nato
...
...vivo

IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

SCHUL... Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

I ...ntike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
II Abstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
III Kleiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
IV Die Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
V. Arabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
VI Ein Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
VII Pastorale

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN *Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56

I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
II. Vivace non troppo
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 27, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 28, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN .... Symphony No. 21, in A major

I. Adagio
II. Presto
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

DVOŘÁK .... Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio molto, tempo di marcia
III. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99

I. Nocturne
II. Scherzo
III. Passacaglia
IV. Burlesque

(First performance in Boston)

SOLOIST

LEONID KOGAN

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

LOWEL SUN

Saturday-Nov. 21, 1964

INITIAL PROGRAM of the new Wednesday evening series will take place next Wednesday evening in Symphony hall. Dr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program consisting of Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"; Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee", and concluding the program will be the Symphony No. 3 by Mendelssohn.

Tomorrow afternoon the orchestra will present the second event of the Providence, R. I., series. The concert will be held in the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. The renowned Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kadoly, will be composer-in-residence at Dartmouth College Hopkins Center next summer. Mario di Bonaventura, director of music at the Hopkins Center, said that Mr. Kodaly will present a series of lectures and supervise four concerts of his music during the third of Dartmouth's "Congregation of the Arts."

...W ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
..., Boston 02105 - 742-4200

...OSTON, MASS.
...unday Globe
... Circ. 482,105

...OV 22 1964

Violinist at Symphony

Leonid Kogan, noted Russian violinist, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be guest artist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon at 2 and Sa[illegible] evening [illegible]:30 concerts in Symphony Hall. Kogan made his United States debut with the orchestra in 1958, and his only subsequent appearance with the orchestra in 1960. Leinsdorf will present a program of three works, all of which will be performed for the first time in Boston.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 21, in A major, and will continue with the Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 10, of Dvorak. After the intermission Kogan will join the orchestra in a performance of the Shostakovitch Violin Concerto, Op. 99.

The first concert of the new Wednesday Evening Series will take place this Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct an orchestra program which will begin with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," continue with Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" and conclude with the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3.

This afternoon Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present their second concert of the season in Providence, at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 25 1964

Soloist

The Russian virtuoso Leonid Kogan will be heard in the first Boston performances of the Shostakovitch Concerto Friday and Saturday with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 22 1964

The Symphony's Week

Russian Violinist Orchestra's Guest

Leonid Kogan, noted Russian violinist, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be guest artist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts in Symphony Hall.

Kogan made his United States debut with the orchestra in 1958, and his only subsequent appearance with the orchestra was in 1960. Mr. Leinsdorf will present a program of three works, all of which will be performed for the first time in Boston.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Haydn's Symphon No. 21 in A major, and will continue with the Symphony No 3, in E -flat major, Op. 10, of Dvorak. After the intermission Mr. Kogan will join the orchestra in a performance of the Shostakovich Violin Concerto, Op. 99.

The first concert of the new Wednesday Evening Series will take place this Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Leinsdorf will cnnduct an orchestral program which will begin with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," continue with Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" and conclude with the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3.

LEONID KOGAN

This afternoon, Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present their second concert of the season in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

WEDNESDAY I. FRI-SAT. 9.

4.

EIC SON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-~~SIXTY-FIVE~~

First Program

Y EVENING, NOVEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

KODÁL riations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock" duction: Moderato

n brio
ianissimo
Forte (appassionato)
IV Poco calmato
V Forte appassionato
VI Calmato
VII. Vivo
VIII. Più vivo
IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

SCHULLER .... Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee ?

I. Antike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
II. Abstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
III. Kleiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
IV. Die Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
V. Arabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
VI. Ein Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
VII. Pastorale

INTERMISSION

MENDELSSOHN .... *Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56

I. Andante con moto; Allegro un poco agitato
II. Vivace non troppo
III. Adagio
IV. Allegro vivacissimo; Allegro maestoso assai

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-SIXTY-FIVE

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 27, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 28, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN .... Symphony No. 21, in A major

I. Adagio
II. Presto
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

(First performance in Boston)

DVOŘÁK .... Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio molto, tempo di marcia
III. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99

I. Nocturne
II. Scherzo
III. Passacaglia
IV. Burlesque

(First performance in Boston)

SOLOIST
LEONID KOGAN

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

LOWEL SUN

Saturday-Nov. 21, 1964

INITIAL PROGRAM of the new Wednesday evening series will take place next Wednesday evening in Symphony hall. Dr. Leinsdorf will conduct a program consisting of Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"; Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee", and concluding the program will be the Symphony No. 3 by Mendelssohn.

Tomorrow afternoon the orchestra will present the second event of the Providence, R. I., series. The concert will be held in the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium. The renowned Hungarian composer, Zoltan Kadoly, will be composer-in-residence at Dartmouth College Hopkins Center next summer. Mario di Bonaventura, director of music at the Hopkins Center, said that Mr. Kodaly will present a series of lectures and supervise four concerts of his music during the third of Dartmouth's "Congregation of the Arts."

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun. Circ. 482,105

NOV 22 1964

Violinist at Symphony

Leonid Kogan, noted Russian violinist, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be guest artist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 concerts in Symphony Hall. Kogan made his United States debut with the orchestra in 1958, and his only subsequent appearance with the orchestra in 1960. Leinsdorf will present a program of three works, all of which will be performed for the first time in Boston.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 21, in A major, and will continue with the Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 10, of Dvorak. After the intermission Kogan will join the orchestra in a performance of the Shostakovitch Violin Concerto, Op. 99.

The first concert of the new Wednesday Evening Series will take place this Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct an orchestra program which will begin with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," continue with Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" and conclude with the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3.

This afternoon Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present their second concert of the season in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 25 1964

Soloist

The Russian virtuoso Leonid Kogan will be heard in the first Boston performances of the Shostakovitch Concerto Friday and Saturday with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's direction.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 22 1964

The Symphony's Week

Russian Violinist Orchestra's Guest

Leonid Kogan, noted Russian violinist, has been invited by Erich Leinsdorf to be guest artist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts in Symphony Hall.

Kogan made his United States debut with the orchestra in 1958, and his only subsequent appearance with the orchestra was in 1960. Mr. Leinsdorf will present a program of three works, all of which will be performed for the first time in Boston.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Haydn's Symphon No. 21 in A major, and will continue with the Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 10, of Dvorak. After the intermission Mr. Kogan will join the orchestra in a performance of the Shostakovich Violin Concerto, Op. 99.

The first concert of the new Wednesday Evening Series will take place this Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Symphony Hall, Leinsdorf will cnnduct an orchestral program which will begin with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," continue with

LEONID KOGAN

Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" and conclude with the Mendelssohn Symphony No. 3.

This afternoon, Leinsdorf and the orchestra will present their second concert of the season in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

NOV 28 1964

At Symphony

Three Local Premieres Played by Leinsdorf

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

At the Boston Symphony concert on Friday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf introduced three works to the Boston public, Haydn's Symphony No. 21 in A major, Dvorak's Symphony No. 3 in E flat, Opus 10, and the Shostakovich Violin Concerto, in which Leonid Kogan was the excellent soloist.

The Haydn Symphony was written in 1764, which makes it about 30 years older than the London symphonies we most commonly hear. The distribution of movements is one Haydn used in a few symphonies of the 60's: a slow movement first, followed by a ripid movement, a menuet, and a quick finale. Symphony No. 21 is an engaging piece, and the Adagio, with its harmonic changes and expressive suspensions, is very moving.

The performance was at its best in the crisply played Presto and Allegro. The Adagio was under-articulated in the upper parts, and the bass was not phrased at all. It was a little slow besides, as was the Menuet.

Leinsdorf conducted from the harpsichord, with deplorable effect. He plays when he should not (there should be no chords from the keyboard when there are no bass notes in the orchestra); at other times he becomes distracted by conducting so that the figured bass is missing for bars at a time. The registration is too light, which means the instrument cannot do its job of filling out texture and harmoney because what it does is not sufficiently audible. In the Menuet Trio, the choice both of figuration and of registration was in bad taste. Leinsdorf is, of course, right in using a harpsichord in early Haydn. It is needed. It has a function, but Leinsdorf's pseudo-learned exhibitionism is not it.

Dvorak's E flat Symphony is also unusual in its layout. There are only three movements, of which the first is singularly lovely and successful. The other two, a solemn cortege and a bright finale, are full of attractive things, but both are over-extended. Dvorak's later, and more familiar, music is inclined to be Brahmsian, but this Symphony is full of early Wagner and of reminiscences even of Berlioz. It comes surprisingly close to the Liszt-influenced Smetana side of the Czech school. One understands Dvorak's original rejection of the piece as something a little jejune, but also his delight on rediscovering the good things in it as the end of his life. It was a welcome revival.

Leinsdorf subjected the score to some editorial revision. He made considerable cuts in the finale. I regret the loss of the E major episode, and in general it may be that Dvorak's unhibited rambling would have been no less agreeable than the gratuitous repeats that were taken in the Haydn. There were also some slight changes of orchestration, and a rather vulgar recomposition of the final four bars. In general the performance was effective, though a little rough.

The Shostakovich Violin Concerto starts promisingly with a Nocturne whose simple melodic writing can at worst be acused of a certain shapelessness. But what follows, a routine version of one of those grimacing sour-cute Shostakovich scherzos, a pompously pretentious Passacaglia, and a Burlesque that would be shockingly cheap even from Kabalevsky, all this represents the composer at his frim worst. Fluency joined to complete lack of self-criticism is not an endearing combination.

Kogan inclines towards elegance more than to drama, and he can play with a variety of touch, color, and mood, that adds up to something considerably more interesting than the relentless throbbing espressivo that is rapidly turning into the sole resource of most of our violinists. He dealt with the Shostakovich in a relaxed casual sort of way, that is in striking contrast to the high-powered job Oistrakh does on the piece in his recordings.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 3 1964

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

VIOLINIST KOGAN WITH BSO

The program during the week that was consisted of three first Boston performances: Haydn's Symphony No. 21 in A major; Dvorak's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Opus 10; and Shostakovitch's Violin Concerto.

The soloist in the Shostakovitch Concerto was the Soviet violinist, Leonid Kogan. In 1958 and in 1960, when he performed the Brahms and the Beethoven Concertos, Mr. Kogan had little trouble in convincing a good many of us that the violinists are few indeed who can touch him. If anything he has improved. His tone is absolutely pure in all registers, his control over dynamics is hairline. His bowing is impeccable and the phrasing he draws from it highly expressive and of the utmost declicacy of texture. Beneath a great deal of outward restraint he conceals stupendous virtuosity.

What a pity, than, to squander so awesome an inventory on such a vehicle. I thought this four-movement concerto to be pretty boring, even by late Shostakovitch standards, when I heard David Oistrakh do it on a New York Philharmonic broadcast seven years ago. Now at first hand it sounds even more bombastic and shallow, full of broad melodies that do not sustain in the first and slow movements, and of rhythmic figures that degenerate into something perilously close to horse music in the other two. There is, though, an extended cadenza attached to the Scherzo that is a corker and what magnificent treatment it got from the soloist.

Of the other two pieces, the advent of the Third Dvorak Symphony was, in a much reduced way, reminiscent of the revelations of the Mahler Sixth Symphony of a fortnight ago. This early work may be uneven and in the last of its three movements overlarded with a great deal of the pompier, but it has a certain freshness, robustness, melodic inventiveness, instrumental sparkle and sturdiness of form that defy whatever explanation there may be to account for its obscurity to date. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading was technically sound, though not possessed of the warmth and vivacity that so fragrant a score clearly merits.

The other resurrection on the program, the Haydn Symphony 21, unlike the Dvorak, has constituted no particular disservice to the listening public by its absence from the repertory. When he composed this Symphony, Haydn had been in the Esterhazy establishment only a short while and was obviously still absorbed in emulating Mannheim models, whose wooden correctness this work certainly recaptures. Only in a stray bar here and there does the master-to-come reveal himself but too fleetingly to provide very much by way of a tangible reward. The rendition, all told, was rather a more expert presentation of the sort of thing that the late Erwin Bodkey delighted in his day. For all that, for one time, I found it more absorbing than I might have found in yet another performance of the Symphony No. 88, the "Surprise, or "Military", or "Drum Roll" Symphonies, or what-have-you.

This week the orchestra is on tour. When it returns, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a series of Strauss numbers with Leontyne Price as soloist, together with Schuman's Rhenish Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 28 1964

Three Boston premières

Leonid Kogan soloist

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf has given us three Boston premières for the weekend Boston Symphony concerts—another example of his imaginative programing. In this instance it was two-thirds successful.

The one-third that failed was the Dvořák Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major, Op. 10. Composed when he was 31—a period obviously eclectic for Dvořák—the work abounds in echoes from Wagner and Berlioz. The Adagio is bombastic. The final Allgro Vivace at times sounds like a mild ride of the Valkyries, at others like the Meistersingers cavorting in a Roman carnival.

⁂

Mr. Leinsdorf sent word to the press that he was cutting the final movement owing to its eccessive length. His decision was a benediction. One wonders not so much why he chose to perform it—the work did have a certain novelty value—but why he expended so much effort to commit it to memory. It would have been no less dull had he conducted it from the score.

But the other two works—Haydn's Symphony No. 21 in A major, and Shostakovitch's Violin Concerto—more than made up for the fiasco. For the Haydn, Mr. Leinsdorf officiated in a dual capacity—as conductor and as clavecinist. Though we heard an occasional tinkle from the harpsichord, it was visually pleasant to see the conductor seated center stage, his hands neatly striking the soundless keys or setting the time like butterfly wings.

And the Haydn itself is a little gem. Perhaps there are a few dozen others like it that Mr. Leinsdorf can honor with a first Boston performance.

⁂

Leonid Kogan, the noted Soviet violinist, came forward as soloist for Shostakovitch's only Concerto for Violin, Op. 99. Composed in 1955, its four movements carry titles that tell the listeners exactly what he is going to hear — Nocturne, Scherzo, Passacaglia, and Burlesque. One need only translate Shostakovitch's familiar style into these forms, and he will be able to guess almost exactly what the result will be.

Of course the work abounds with colorful writing, not only for the violin but for the orchestra. And the composer has been careful to display the solo instrument at its best—either through the singing style or through brilliant double-stopping.

⁂

But the piece indeed took an original turn when the Passacaglia ended with a cadenza—a magnificent tour de force — which led directly into the final Burlesque. Mr. Kogan again displayed the accuracy, the vibrant tone, the skillful bowing for which he is noted. And for his superlative musicianship he was rewarded with a cheering response that called him again and again to stage center to accept the applause.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 28 1964

Boston Symphony: Three Firsts for

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Haydn's Symphony No. 21, in A, was cause for belated thanksgiving at yesterday's concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra; Dvorak's semi-delectable Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, inspired modified rejoicing; and Shostakovitch's Violin Concerto, with the excellent Leonid Kogan as soloist, proved there is a certain tang even to warmed-over turkey.

Three first Boston performances; each score held aspects of interest, although the Haydn was the sole unqualified triumph, and the program declined chronologically from the baroque to the modern. One can be grateful to Mr. Leinsdorf, since these are facets of the composers involved, facets of importance, facets that merit inspection.

Sparkling Score

When Haydn composed his Symphony No. 21 he was then 35, his first symphony only five years behind him. The A major belongs to his early Esterhazy period when Stamitz and C.P.E. Bach formed his major influences; already, however, the individual voice has sounded, and it is heard in this case in various ways: the so-called "church-sonata" order with its opening adagio has a virility quite unorthodox; there is a Rossini-ian gusto to the accelerandi of the presto and finale, and while it is true there is very little development in a later sense, the score sparkles and the writing for winds is brilliantly executed.

With Mr. Leinsdorf playing e harpsichord continuo and nducting from the bench, the nall court orchestra offered an resistible treatment. The dimensions of performance here iited the music entirely, the ring doublings reinforcing the oes, and the balance preserv-g a light and crisp accent. The sonority was the sonority of Haydn's time and place and superbly scaled to the conditions of Symphony Hall. Every moment was unalloyed delight.

Dvorak Work

The Dovorak Symphony has three movements and, published posthumously, assumes its rightful place in the sequence of the nine, with the orchestral emendations of Simrock edited into the present shape — which is faithful to Dvorak's last revision—by Frantisek Bartos. I think it demonstrates the traditional view is correct: Dvorak was a minor master, transcending himself on certain occasions, but, on the whole rather undistinguished and superficial.

The opening movement of the E-flat major is admirable, combining a waltz-like lyricism, melodic dignity and character and amplitude of scale into tender and passionate statement. From this point the symphony disintegrates into a flurry of late 19th century mannerisms, and while the Rhine music at the close of the adagio has a reminiscent touch of Wagner, the long movement alternating obvious contrasts, is [illegible] Dvorak, wafted on the shallows of sentiment.

Mr. Leinsdorf made cuts in the finale, judiciously so, as he might have in the middle movement, but again, this section despite its folkish rhythms and persistent triangle, is merely professorial high spirits, reminding one of lamentable figure cut by an academic when he indulges in the dances of the people. To [illegible] Dvorak is best when he is [illegible] least "Bohemian," and most himself; cultivating a slender [illegible] vein as in the opening.

Mr. Leinsdorf gave us a [illegible]ciously-phrased performance, and in the Shostakovitch concerto [illegible] served a good balance between soloist and tutti, which Shostakovitch tries to abet by omitting trumpets and trombones while hampering the conductor in almost every other dynamic respect. The concerto suffers from the similarity of its scherzo [illegible] burlesque, and nocturne and passacaglia. The angular scherzo represents Shostakovitch at satirical and acrid best, and the extended cadenza and high harmonics of the quieter passages are not without charm.

After returning from tour, on Dec. 11-12, Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Schumann's Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97; the Awakening Scene from "The Egyptian Helen," Prelude and Waltz Sequence from "Rosenkavalier," Interlude and Final Scene from "Salome," by Strauss. Leontyne Price, soprano, will be the soloist.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the ninth program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Leonid Kogan, violin, was the soloist.

Symphony No. 21, in A major . . Haydn
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10) . . . Dvorak
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99 . . . Shostakovich

WASHINGTON.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 422,706 SUN. 511,457

DEC 1 1964

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE
D. 13,800

DATELINE...Social Side

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Erich Leinsdorf will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert tonight at 8:30 in Constitution Hall.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
COURIER
W. 8,170

NOV 2[illegible] 1964

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scheduled To Perform Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of its distinguished music director and conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, will perform its only Washington concerts Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 at 8:30 p.m. in Constitution Hall. The concerts are on the National Symphony's subscription series.

The Monday program will include Mahler's Symphony No. 6 and Haydn's Symphony No. 21. On Tuesday, the Boston Orchestra will perform Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, Dvorak's Symphony No. 3 and "Sculptures" by Huggler. Soprano Bethany Beardslee will perform as soloist for the Huggler work. Miss Beardslee has studied at Michigan State University and at the Juilliard School of Music. She has performed with the New York Pro Musica, the Boston Symphony and the Alexander Schneider Chamber Orchestra. Last season she was awarded the Ford Foundation Grant for Concert Soloists.

Erich Leinsdorf was named Music Director of the Boston Symphony at the beginning of the 1962-63 season, during which he also conducted two performances on the National Symphony series in Washington. Born in Vienna, Mr. Leinsdorf at 22 became assistant to Bruno Walter at the Salzburg Festival.

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 200,516 S. 160,166

NOV 27 1964

Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Mahler Symphony No. 6 and Haydn Symphony No. 21 at Constitution Hall Monday at 8:30 p.m. On Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Mozart "Prague" Symphony, Huggler's Sculptures, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 3.

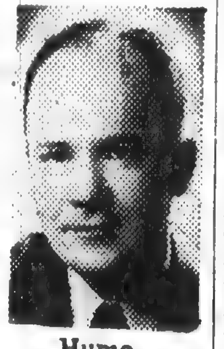
The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D.C.
D. 422,706 SUN. 511,457

DEC 2 1964

Postlude

Unfamiliar Works Feature Boston Symphony Offering

By Paul Hume



Hume

Having fascinated his Monday night audience in Constitution Hall with a program of two unfamiliar works, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony there last night and again proved his wide-ranging mastery of both new and familiar music.

The evening's greatest work was uncontestably the Prague Symphony of Mozart. Its opening movement is one of the finest of Mozart's achievements in its solemn beginning and the increasing virtuosity with which its material is handled. Hindsight makes it easy to recall "The Marriage of Figaro," which preceded it, and the "Don Giovanni" soon to follow.

Leinsdorf, who has long performed all of the Mozart symphonies, and who should be encouraged to do the same for us with those of Haydn, used a perfectly balanced orchestra of chamber proportions. There was refinement of phrasing but a robust spirit in the virile rapid movements. The slow movement, which approaches the splendor of those of the great piano concertos, was one long song.

A new work by John Huggler, called Sculptures, followed. Scored for very large orchestra, it calls for soprano solo in its middle movement. This was sung by Bethany Beardslee whose ardent manner belied its many difficulties. The dominant influence in Huggler's work is the Schoenberg of the Five Orchestral Pieces and post-Pierrot Lunaire. His vocal line is declamatory rather than lyric, the text being Robinson Jeffers's Rock and Hawk.

In the main, Sculptures is a matter of immense planes of sonority which are often of extreme opposites in volume and color. Huggler explores with a keen ear, but the territory has often been traveled and we miss any sense of new discovery.

Huggler is this year enjoying a Rockefeller grant as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony. It is an unusual arrangement with no obligation to the orchestra to perform any of his music or to the composer to write anything. Sculptures was written before the term of the grant began. But the year can hardly fail to have signal significance for the 36-year-old composer.

Though it may seem strange, a symphony by Dvorak was the evening's other novelty. It was his third, in E Flat, written when the composer was in his early thirties. The music is strangely unidentifiable for long stretches, occupying itself with busy passages that have an old-fashioned rhetorical flavor but add up to little.

There are sudden stretches of beauty, chiefly inspired by Wagner. The one occurring in the D Flat Major march in the second movement is so reminiscent of Lohengrin that it would not have been surprising to see Elsa processing toward the Minister.

In his two evenings in Constitution Hall Erich Leinsdorf has brought Washington music it has seldom heard, even with the inclusion of the Prague Symphony which has not been a frequent visitor. His orchestra responded marvelously to his direct but eloquent commands. We are sorry the Bostonians visit us so infrequently.

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 283,075 SUN. 339,766

DEC 1 1964

NEWS OF MUSIC

Program of Contrast Offered by Boston

By IRVING LOWENS
Music Critic of The Star

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Program: Symphony No. 21 in A, Haydn; Symphony No. 6 in A minor (Tragic), Mahler.

For the first of two Constitution Hall concerts this week, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered Washingtonians a very remarkable program indeed, unfortunately, the Bostonians do not return again this season.

The names of the two composers whose music was played last night were familiar, but the pieces were not, and it would have been difficult to find two symphonies more sharply contrasted in almost every respect than the tiny Haydn A major and the gigantic Mahler A minor.

The 15-minute-long Haydn—an utter delight—was written before Mozart was nine years old, and before the form of the classical symphony (as we know it from the time of early Beethoven) had crystallized. Thus, there was the rather piquant touch of an opening in which the slow movement preceded the presto. The whole work had an insouciant brevity about it that proved most fetching.

The symphony is scored for strings with oboes and horns in pairs, and the conductor provided it with a neat but unobstrusive continuo at the harpsichord, skillfully leading the little orchestra from his seat at the keyboard. The total effect was one of ethereal grace and delicacy.

Than came the intermission — at approximately 8:55 p.m. — and after it the Mahler, which ran about five times the length of the Haydn, and used more than five times the number of instruments.

The Mahler Sixth is perhaps the least known and the most enigmatic of all the symphonies written by this composer. Mahler was, of course, the last of the great Viennese romantics; most of his work was conceived on the grandest scale. He used a vast canvas for his music, and it is quite a wrench for most of us to adjust to a scale of time-values in which an individual movement is almost as long as a full classical symphony.

Because of this, I think that listening to the Mahler was made even more difficult by the programming of the Haydn before it. FamiliarMahler might stand such treatment, but not the Sixth.

The work is touched now and then by typically Mahleresque emotional expansiveness and poignancy of melodic line, but for the most part the hypnotic dark moods were lacking. Instead, there was a sort of macabre, grandiose pomp. This was occasionally effective — especially when emphasized by exotic instrumentation — but only occasionally.

Leinsdorf did his best for the Sixth, and good as that was, it was not good enough. It left me cold, and I willingly confess myself a Mahler enthusiast.

I certainly would not want to subject myself to the burden shouldered by the intrepid music critic of the Boston Globe, Michael Steinberg, who is accompaning the BSO on tour. He will have heard the Mahler Sixth 11 times before he returns home. Steinberg volunteered for the assignment to see what would happen; I hope he survives in good health.

Tonight's subscribers get a completely different program — the Mozart Symphony No. 38, the Dvorak Symphony No. 3 in E flat (virtually never played), and a first performance of a work for soprano and orchestra called "Sculptures" by John Huggler, composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony, thanks to a Rockefeller Foundation grant.

I should say that even if you are not a subscriber, you should have little difficulty in buying a choice single seat. Washington is one of the few places where the BSO plays to anything less than a full house, While yesterday's affair drew a bit better than the average NSO subscription concert, there was still plenty of room in Constitution Hall.

44

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 200,516 S. 160,166

DEC 1 1964

Leinsdorf Scores With Mahler

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony not only gave a superb concert at Constitution Hall last night but set something of a record. The pre-intermission part of the program was the shortest within memory.

The opening Haydn Symphony No. 21 in A Major, with Mr. Leinsdorf conducting from the harpsichord, ran 19 minutes and the intermission which followed, 18 minutes.

But it could not have been programmed by any other way. The second work, Mahler's Symphony No. 6 ("Tragic") in Minor, took an hour and 17 minutes to unfold. And it was thoroly absorbing all the way.

Mr. Leinsdorf perceptively probed every facet of this richly romantic work, with its unusual percussive effects, and the Boston Symphony, as always, responded brilliantly.

The Mahler 6th has its banal moments but it has a serenely beautiful Andante movement and a powerfully dramatic finale which Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra set forth in unusually moving fashion.

A storm of applause from the relatively small audience followed.

The Boston Symphony returns to Constitution Hall tonight at 8:30 p.m. to perform the Mozart Symphony No. 38 ("Prague") in D Major, John Hugglers "Sculptures" with soprano Bethany Beardslee and the Dvorak Symphony No. 3.

MILTON BERLINER

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 283,075 SUN. 339,766

DEC 2 1964

NEWS OF MUSIC

Boston Symphony Proves Persuasive

By JOHN HASKINS
Contributiing Critic

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Soloist: Bethany Beardslee, soprano. At Constitution Hall. Program: Symphony No. 38 (Prague) in D. K. 504, Mozart; Sculptures, Op. 39, Huggler; Symphony No. 3 in E-Flat, Op. 10 Dvorak.

For its second performance of the week in Constitution Hall, its last of this season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra set out a program of something old and dependable, something new and a little on the iffy side, and something indifferent which is not frequently performed for obvious reasons.

The old dependable was Mozart, with orchestra reduced to some 35 strings and a corporal's guard of winds. Under Erich Leinsdorf's meticulous but exceedingly economical direction the "Prague" symphony never sounded better. There was a dryness in the strings, though they were immaculately clean in execution, and in the slow second movement they sounded like an octet, no mean feat in this age of large and pulpy sound. It was a performance beautifully paced.

The new work, premiered in Boston last month, was John Huggler's "Sculptures." It calls for a soprano soloist in the fourth of its five movements, and contains some interesting orchestral textures said to be inspired by the rocky coast of Maine, but it does not leave much of an impression after a single hearing or a re-reading of the program note. The composer is enjoying a year of residence with the Boston Symphony, and as though he were accustomed to such riches, his Straussian score calls for four flutes, six trumpets, six trombones, and so on.

Soprano soloist Bethany Beardslee is called upon in the fourth movement for the thankless task of projecting Huggler's setting of Rock and Hawk, a poem by Robinson Jeffers. The setting suffers the prevailing contemporary fault of being unkind, if not downright cruel, to the voice as well as the poem. Yet to one who suspects that Robinson Jeffers isn't even read anymore, much less set, there is some comfort in seeing this brief poem rendered in music.

The Dvorak symphony, a windy affair that we do not often hear these days, brought an expectedly different sound from the orchestra. Gone was the dry quality, almost astringent, the strings had shown in Mozart, but the aural edifice was built with the same meticulous care, and what could be done with the work Leinsdorf and his matchless instrument did.

Filing out of the hall one could reflect that it did not really matter what the Boston Symphony played, so persuasive is their performance, so dependably do they react to sensitive direction. It is almost worth moving to Boston to have an orchestra of this kind available on a regular basis, though they say the season there is over-subscribed. No wonder; Constitution Hall was filled twice this week to hear them.

45

TOUR # 2.

NEW YORK, WED. DEC 2ND

PROMENADE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY [illegible]

DE[illegible] 1964 Burrelles

[illegible] music director of the [illegible] conducts this month at Carnegie [illegible] Philharmonic Halls

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly [illegible] Amusements

[illegible] 2 1964

BOSTON SYMPH ON OUT-OF-TOWN TOUR

Boston, Dec. 1.

Hub Symphony Orch is on an out of ~~town swing~~ this week, its second tour of the season, with two concerts in Washington, Monday and Tuesday (30-1); in New York's Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Friday nights (2-4); in the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday (3), and in Carnegie Hall Saturday (5).

Richard Burgin conducts the Brooklyn concert Thursday and Erich Leinsdorf conducts the remaining five. Guest soloists will be Bethany Beardslee, soprano; Van Cliburn, pianist; and Leonid Kogan, violinist.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

DEC 2 1964 Burrelles

MUSIC NOTES

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

DEC 4 1964 Burrelles

Music: Concert by Boston Symphony

Leinsdorf Conducts at Philharmonic Hall

The Program

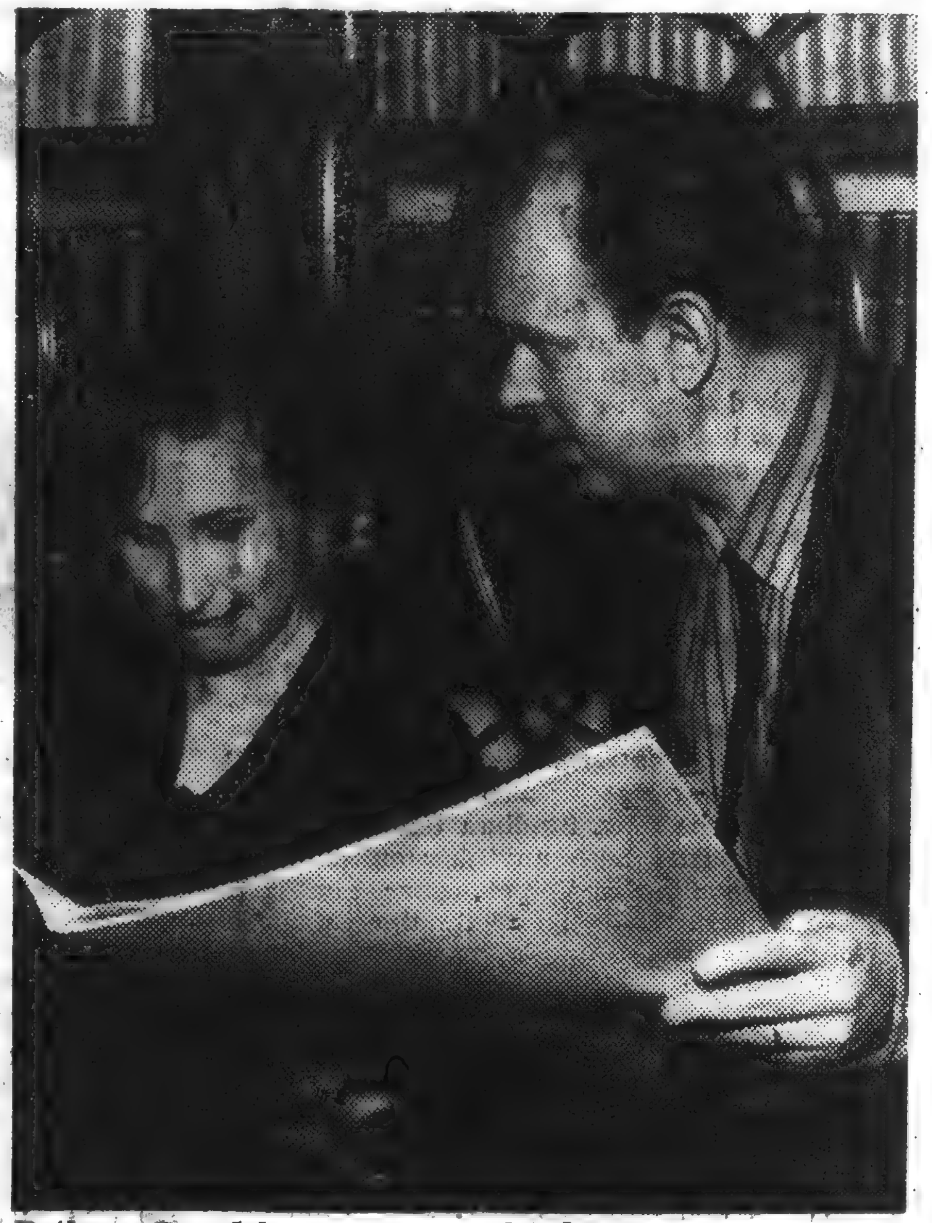
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with Bethany Beardslee, soprano. At Philharmonic Hall.
Sculptures for soprano and orchestra (first N. Y. performance)..John Huggler
Symphony No. 6.....................Mahler

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THERE were only two works on Wednesday night's concert of the Boston Symphony, in Philharmonic Hall, but one of them went on forever. That was Mahler's Sixth Symphony. The other was a 12-minute work, John Huggler's "Sculptures," for which Bethany Beardslee was the soprano soloist.

Mr. Huggler, 36 years old and originally from Rochester, is resident composer of the Boston Symphony under a Rockefeller Foundation appointment. His "Sculptures," which received its first New York performance, is a work in several short movements that uses some modern textures but is basically tonal. It is one of those compromises that does not come off very well, being neither good traditional music nor good contemporary music.

●



Bethany Beardslee, soprano, and John Huggler, composer

Some composers can make the best of both worlds, but Mr. Huggler is not one of them. The fourth movement, a setting of Robinson Jeffers's "Rock and Hawk," has a Schoenbergian vocal line, and Miss Beardslee, that eminent specialist in the idiom, was called in. She sang most beautifully and, one guesses, accurately. And Erich Leinsdorf appeared in full command of the score.

The Mahler Sixth Symphony, in A minor, is one of the least played of the composer's nine. Its last movement is supposed to be the jewel of the symphony, some kind of tragic utterance in which Fate goes around rapping. But it is hard to see how anybody can take this kind of fustian seriously today. The chief interest of this music is technical in nature. Mahler did use some clashing dissonances that must have disturbed the conservatives in 1906. And the orchestration, what with eight horns and all the trimmings, does create a mightily imposing racket.

But the movement is an orgy of everything wrong with the postromantic period and very little right. It is swollen, turgid, full of self-pitying yawps: Mahler at his uncontrolled worst. Compared to this, Tchaikovsky is lean and classic.

The previous movements do not have much more to offer. The march sections in the first movement look back to the First Symphony. Much the same sardonic quality is present. The scherzo is routine Mahler, though without the emotional vulgarity of the finale. In the slow movement Mahler writes one of those self-conscious examples of simplicity that makes one want to scream: the Poet, walking amid Nature and touched by Beauty.

But that is Mahler, the composer who could also write the ineffable vision of the finale of the Ninth Symphony, the adorable melodies of the Fourth, the prophesy of "Das Lied von der Erde." At his worst he was capable of what amounts to sheer musical neuroticism, all sound without substance. And so he came up with the Sixth Symphony.

●

Mr. Leinsdorf, conducting without score, led a hard, driving performance. One could, and did, admire the way he went about organizing the music, with optimum results from his obedient players. But also typical of his work was the unrelaxed quality, plus rhythmic patterns that were all but metronomic. It would be most pleasant if Mr. Leinsdorf loosened up a bit.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JAN 1965 Burrelles

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered a controversial program at Philharmonic Hall, Dec. 2. Huggler's "Sculptures" (first N. Y. performance) is short (12 min.), fresh, crisp, mostly tonal with clear structure—a skilled professional job. The extremists won't be pleased with its moderation; however agreement can be expected about its soloist. The purity and loveliness of soprano Bethany Beardslee's singing was the highlight of the evening. The other work was Mahler's seldom heard Symphony No. 6, in A minor, poetic interpretations of which have proliferated. Melody and color are attractive, but as a whole this composition lacks inevitability. The overlong last movement makes one think of the playwright whose story is finished, but who can't figure out how to get his actors off the stage. Mr. Leinsdorf's meticulous direction (without score) and the orchestra's responsiveness were praiseworthy.—R M

(Continued on page 22)

Herald Tribune NEW YORK
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

DEC 3 1964 Burrelles

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, talks with Bethany Beardslee, soprano, and John Huggler, composer.

The Boston's Composer

PHILHARMONIC HALL

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor; Erich Leinsdorf. Soloist: Bethany Beardlee, soprano. The following program:
"Sculptures" ....Huggler
Symphony No. 6 ....Mahler

By Alan Rich

Last spring the Rockefeller Foundation announced a plan to finance composers-in-residence with a number of symphony orchestras, presumably to compose music for the orchestra and to teach the players something about 20th Century techniques. John Huggler, a 36-year-old native of Rochester, was chosen for the Boston Symphony this season, and last night the orchestra began its Philharmonic Hall concert with one of Mr. Huggler's works, "Sculptures," which was finished just before he took the post.

Mr. Huggler took his bow at the end of the piece wearing faded corduroy slacks and desert boots, which might be a testimonial to the new spirit in Boston, except that there wasn't very much new about the work itself. It is a 15-minute chunk of everybody's twelve-tone music these days, full of points made for coloristic purposes, attractive blocks of shifting harmony, a song for soprano in one movement that alternates long repetitions of one disjunct interval with passages on a monotone. Terribly old hat it was, and rather black tie; Mr. Huggler was wearing the wrong costume.

If, however, the stylish and alert playing by the orchestra and its conductor Erich Leinsdorf is Mr. Huggler's doing, the Rockefeller project already makes sense. Certainly some of our orchestras need help in understanding some of today's intense and coloristic writing, although Mr. Leinsdorf himself has shown in the past that he is a man of broad sympathies. The soloist, the young soprano Bethany Beardslee, certainly needed no help;; she is, and has long been, a fiend in this kind of music, and she sang her short but difficult solo extremely well.

The remainder of the program consisted of Mahler's Sixth Symphony, one of the least-played of the series and one of the hardest to unravel. Mahler's "middle" symphonies (Nos. 5, 6 and 7) come out of a particularly tortured and neurotic phase of his style. He himself regarded them as autobiographical to some extent, although he kept changing his mind on this point.

Despite many passages of extreme, almost painful beauty—the long slow movement, for example, which has a melodic power that seems strangely slavic at times—this is not a completely successful work. Seldom in his works does Mahler give one the impression that he could have said what was on his mind in less time, but the Sixth is one work that seems unseemly protracted for its length. Overwritten, overscored and overemotional, it falters mightily at crucial points.

The performance under Leinsdorf was an extremely fine argument for the work's considerable merit. The conductor, who led from memory, worked himself and the orchestra into a powerful frenzy which was, at the same time, masterfully controlled. There was no wasted emotion, but rather a taut, spirited reading that kept a remarkably straight path through the dense underbrush. The sounds made by the orchestra were bright and miraculously balanced.

Let us hope the performance is being recorded; it would fill a gap in the catalogues. The Sixth is not one of Mahler's masterpieces, but any work by so important a composer is worth our attention, and it has been well worth Mr. Leinsdorf's while to revive it for us.

TOUR # 2.

NEW YORK, WED. DEC 2nd

PROMENADE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 140,300

DEC 1964

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts this month at Carnegie and Philharmonic Halls

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

DEC 2 1964

BOSTON SYMPH ON OUT-OF-TOWN TOUR

Boston, Dec. 1.

Hub Symphony Orch is on an out of town swing this week, its second tour of the season, with two concerts in Washington, Monday and Tuesday (30-1); in New York's Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Friday nights (2-4); in the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday (3), and in Carnegie Hall Saturday (5).

Richard Burgin conducts the Brooklyn concert Thursday and Erich Leinsdorf conducts the remaining five. Guest soloists will be Bethany Beardslee, soprano; Van Cliburn, pianist; and Leonid Kogan, violinist.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

DEC 2 1964

MUSIC NOTES

ie Boston Symphony Orcheswill play at Philharmonic l tonight at 8:30. Erich isdorf will conduct, with hany Beardslee, soprano, as oloist.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

DEC 4 1964

Music: Concert by Boston Symphony

Leinsdorf Conducts at Philharmonic Hall

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with Bethany Beardslee, soprano. At Philharmonic Hall.
Sculptures for soprano and orchestra (first N. Y. performance)..John Huggler
Symphony No. 6..................Mahler

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THERE were only two works on Wednesday night's concert of the Boston Symphony, in Philharmonic Hall, but one of them went on forever. That was Mahler's Sixth Symphony. The other was a 12-minute work, John Huggler's "Sculptures," for which Bethany Beardslee was the soprano soloist.

Mr. Huggler, 36 years old and originally from Rochester, is resident composer of the Boston Symphony under a Rockefeller Foundation appointment. His "Sculptures," which received its first New York performance, is a work in several short movements that uses some modern textures but is basically tonal. It is one of those compromises that does not come off very well, being neither good traditional music nor good contemporary music.

Bethany Beardslee, soprano, and John Huggler, composer

Some composers can make the best of both worlds, but Mr. Huggler is not one of them. The fourth movement, a setting of Robinson Jeffers's "Rock and Hawk," has a Schoenbergian vocal line, and Miss Beardslee, that eminent specialist in the idiom, was called in. She sang most beautifully and, one guesses, accurately. And Erich Leinsdorf appeared in full command of the score.

The Mahler Sixth Symphony, in A minor, is one of the least played of the composer's nine. Its last movement is supposed to be the jewel of the symphony, some kind of tragic utterance in which Fate goes around rapping. But it is hard to see how anybody can take this kind of fustian seriously today. The chief interest of this music is technical in nature. Mahler did use some clashing dissonances that must have disturbed the conservatives in 1906. And the orchestration, what with eight horns and all the trimmings, does create a mightily imposing racket.

But the movement is an orgy of everything wrong with the postromantic period and very little right. It is swollen, turgid, full of self-pitying yawps: Mahler at his uncontrolled worst. Compared to this, Tchaikovsky is lean and classic.

The previous movements do not have much more to offer. The march sections in the first movement look back to the First Symphony. Much the same sardonic quality is present. The scherzo is routine Mahler, though without the emotional vulgarity of the finale. In the slow movement Mahler writes one of those self-conscious examples of simplicity that makes one want to scream: the Poet, walking amid Nature and touched by Beauty.

But that is Mahler, the composer who could also write the ineffable vision of the finale of the Ninth Symphony, the adorable melodies of the Fourth, the prophesy of "Das Lied von der Erde." At his worst he was capable of what amounts to sheer musical neuroticism, all sound without substance. And so he came up with the Sixth Symphony.

Mr. Leinsdorf, conducting without score, led a hard, driving performance. One could, and did, admire the way he went about organizing the music, with optimum results from his obedient players. But also typical of his work was the unrelaxed quality, plus rhythmic patterns that were all but metronomic. It would be most pleasant if Mr. Leinsdorf loosened up a bit.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JAN 1965

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered a controversial program at Philharmonic Hall, Dec. 2. Huggler's "Sculptures" (first N. Y. performance) is short (12 min.), fresh, crisp, mostly tonal with clear structure—a skilled professional job. The extremists won't be pleased with its moderation; however agreement can be expected about its soloist. The purity and loveliness of soprano Bethany Beardslee's singing was the highlight of the evening. The other work was Mahler's seldom heard Symphony No. 6, in A minor, poetic interpretations of which have proliferated. Melody and color are attractive, but as a whole this composition lacks inevitability. The overlong last movement makes one think of the playwright whose story is finished, but who can't figure out how to get his actors off the stage. Mr. Leinsdorf's meticulous direction (without score) and the orchestra's responsiveness were praiseworthy.—R M

(Continued on page 22)

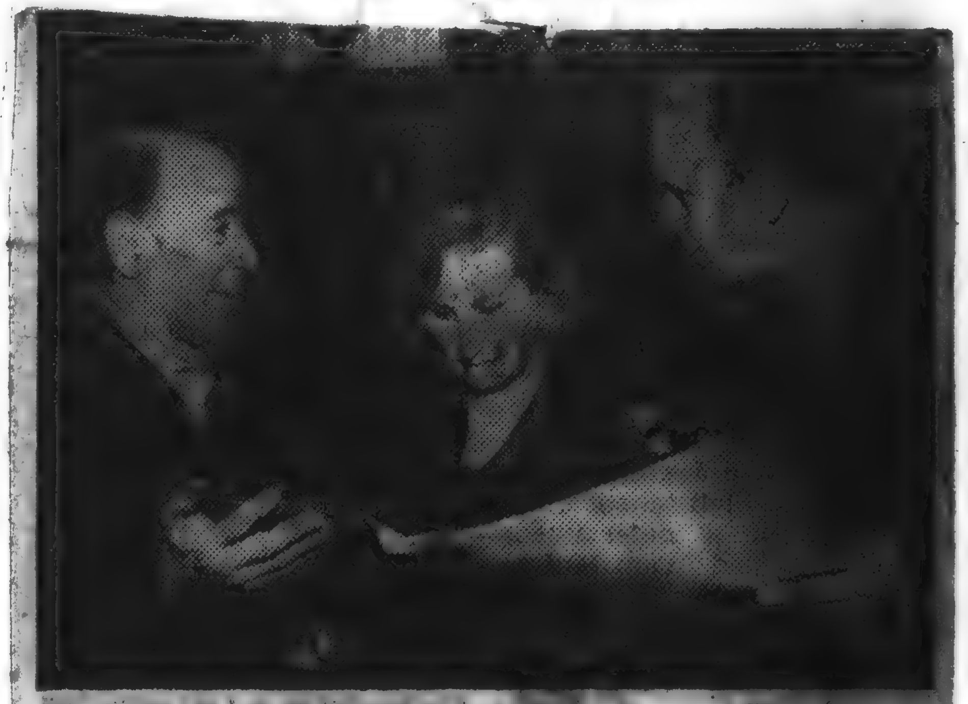
New York Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 383,384

DEC 3 1964



Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, talks with Bethany Beardslee, soprano, and John Huggler, composer.

The Boston's Composer

PHILHARMONIC HALL

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor: Erich Leinsdorf. Soloist: Bethany Beardslee, soprano. The following program:
"Sculptures" ....Huggler
Symphony No. 6 ....Mahler

By Alan Rich

Last spring the Rockefeller Foundation announced a plan to finance composers-in-residence with a number of symphony orchestras, presumably to compose music for the orchestra and to teach the players something about 20th Century techniques. John Huggler, a 36-year-old native of Rochester, was chosen for the Boston Symphony this season, and last night the orchestra began its Philharmonic Hall concert with one of Mr. Huggler's works, "Sculptures," which was finished just before he took the post.

Mr. Huggler took his bow at the end of the piece wearing faded corduroy slacks and desert boots, which might be a testimonial to the new spirit in Boston, except that there wasn't very much new about the work itself. It is a 15-minute chunk of everybody's twelve-tone music these days, full of points made for coloristic purposes, attractive blocks of shifting harmony, a song for soprano in one movement that alternates long repetitions of one disjunct interval with passages on a monotone. Terribly old hat it was, and rather black tie; Mr. Huggler was wearing the wrong costume.

If, however, the stylish and alert playing by the orchestra and its conductor Erich Leinsdorf is Mr. Huggler's doing, the Rockefeller project already makes sense. Certainly some of our orchestras need help in understanding some of today's intense and coloristic writing, although Mr. Leinsdorf himself has shown in the past that he is a man of broad sympathies. The soloist, the young soprano Bethany Beardslee, certainly needed no help;; she is, and has long been, a fiend in this kind of music, and she sang her short but difficult solo extremely well.

The remainder of the program consisted of Mahler's Sixth Symphony, one of the least-played of the series and one of the hardest to unravel. Mahler's "middle" symphonies (Nos. 5, 6 and 7) come out of a particularly tortured and neurotic phase of his style. He himself regarded them as autobiographical to some extent, although he kept changing his mind on this point.

Despite many passages of extreme, almost painful beauty—the long slow movement, for example, which has a melodic power that seems strangely slavic at times—this is not a completely successful work. Seldom in his works does Mahler give one the impression that he could have said what was on his mind in less time, but the Sixth is one work that seems unseemly protracted for its length. Overwritten, overscored and overemotional, it falters mightily at crucial points.

The performance under Leinsdorf was an extremely fine argument for the work's considerable merit. The conductor, who led from memory, worked himself and the orchestra into a powerful frenzy which was, at the same time, masterfully controlled. There was no wasted emotion, but rather a taut, spirited reading that kept a remarkably straight path through the dense underbrush. The sounds made by the orchestra were bright and miraculously balanced.

Let us hope the performance is being recorded; it would fill a gap in the catalogues. The Sixth is not one of Mahler's masterpieces, but any work by so important a composer is worth our attention, and it has been well worth Mr. Leinsdorf's while to revive it for us.

1 Wo

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

DEC 3 1964

Music

Leinsdorf Conducts A Thrilling Mahler

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI
Of the World-Telegram Staff

Another Mahler triumph awaited Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall last night. This time the arena was the problematic Sixth.

Louis Biancolli

For Mahlerites and Brucknerites this is scarcely a winter of discontent. Performances have been of a high order and they have been frequent. Some of the symphonies, like the Sixth, are being heard twice.

The Sixth will probably be the last of Mahler's symphonies to sink in properly. This is because of the strange and ambivalent first two movements. The remaining two stand among the greatest.

There Mahler gives us an Adagio the only word for which is saintly, and an Allegro that in ghostly mystery and contrapuntal impact is an overpowering experience.

Leinsdorf was master of all he surveyed last night, and there was much to survey—the hurtling rhythmic power of the first section, the blithe colloquy of woodwinds in the Adagio, the flood-force of the Finale.

The orchestra gave him every cooperation. Individual solos were the work of first-class artists. "Virtuosi di Boston" might be a good name for these players. The sweep and breadth were all Leinsdorf asked.

Such fine masters of their instruments were they that they made every bar of a rather static novelty by John Huggler sound like a bar of gold. That it wasn't quite that was not their fault.

The Rochester-born composer is now resident composer of the Boston Symphony, on a Rockefeller grant. His score, called "Sculptures," is a study in resonances and intensifications. Texture is important here.

A sort of switch is pulled and impulses run through the orchestra like current, widening and thinning out. Surfaces gleam and sputter and then flatten out. Beneath is a complex plan of change and renewal.

In the fourth of the five "Sculptures," Bethany Beardslee gave a partly sung and partly chanted reading, all very skillful, of Robinson Jeffers' poem, "Rock and Hawk." The end was quite good—like deceptively arrested sound.

But the news was Mahler's Sixth, a rare enough visitor in this part of the world. The time will come when Mahler will no longer be news. He will be a classic.

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

DEC 3 1964

★

ANY PERFORMANCE of the 60-year-old Mahler Symphony No. 6 is still news these days. Erich Leinsdorf made it the feature of the Boston Symphony's second visit to Philharmonic Hall last night.

While he presented it with notable clarity, he let his brasses and sometimes his woodwinds play too loud. More significantly he proceeded too efficiently to let the music flow freely.

Thus the turbulence of Mahler's inner world did not culminate with the tragic impact expected in so romantic an outpouring.

Toward the end of the adagio the strings began to glow, but however lovely their tone, it did not sound lovingly unfolded. Yet Mahler remains one of the most subjective of composers and needs such treatment.

I had to miss the first N. Y. performance of John Huggler's "sculptures" dedicated to Carl Ruggles and in memory of Wallingford Riegger, because of conflicting engagements.

BROOKLYN. THUR. DEC 3rd

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, November 26, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

LONG ISLAND DAILY PRESS
Sunday, November 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Monday, November 23, 1964

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
CANARSIE DIGEST
W. 15,325

NOV 30 1964

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 12,100

NOV 28 1964

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,200

NOV 28 1964

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

DEC 2 1964

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 12,100

NOV 27 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT ACADEMY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance of the 1964-65 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening December 3rd, at 8:30 p.m. This "aristocrat of orchestras," now performing for the 77th consecutive season in Brooklyn, will be conducted by Richard Burgin, one of the most respected and enterprising maestros on the American music scene.

Although Mr. Burgin is appearing by invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Bostonians, he could hardly be called a "guest" He was a youthful member of the Orchestra before Leinsdorf was a teenager. In fact, Leinsdorf probably had not even heard of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the time that Burgin already was its distinguished concertmaster.

In his student days, Burgin was a pupil of two-legendary pedagogues of the violin, Joseph Joachim and Leopold Auer. Joachim had been a close associate of Mendelssohn, Schumann and Brahms, while Auer, of course, was the teacher of Heifetz, Elman, Zimbalist, Milstein and numerous other virtuosi trained in pre-Revolutionary Russia. Burgin's Boston career spans that of four conductors: Pierre Monteux, who brought him to Boston as concertmaster; Serge Koussevitzky, who appointed him Associate Conductor, Charles Munch and Leindorf. The long service with a single orchestra is unique and a mark of the esteem in which he is held.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK POST
Thursday, December 3, 1964

Music Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Len Leinsdorf conducting, Bethany Beardslee, soprano; works by Dvorak, Huggler, Kodaly, Wagner, Brooklyn Academy of Music, 8:30.

r. Dec 3rd

NEW YORK, ~~FRI.~~ DEC 4th

47

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D 603,574 - SUN. 1,283,785

DEC 5 1964

CLIBURN SOLOIST WITH LEINSDORF

Pianist Plays Liszt Works in Boston Symphony Concert

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Erich Leinsdorf put together one of his artful programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearance in Philharmonic Hall last night. Van Cliburn was the soloist in the two Liszt piano concertos, playing No. 2 in A (actually the first in order of composition) at the end of the first half of the program and No. 1 in E flat at the end of the second half.

Before each concerto came a work that depended for its effect on a skillful use of orchestral color, and yet the works differed from each other to a great degree. The first was Kodály's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock."

This looks backward in compositional terms; it is richly scored, harmonically plush—and conventional. It just barely avoids the banal at points, but the work has sufficient integrity to win out as a handsome, colorful, atmospheric composition.

The other work was Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. The composition, completed in 1959, is only 20 years older than the "Peacock" Variations; yet its musical language is up-to-date, even avant-garde. But as a clever evocation of and commentary on some Klee paintings, it makes remarkable use of the orchestral instruments and melodic and rhythmic ideas as well. These gained it as much favor last night as the Kodály piece met with.

Mr. Schuller's work is beginning to find its way into the repertory of more than just the major orchestras, and for all he knows, he may have created for the future another "Pictures at an Exhibition," with possibilities for similar popularity.

Mr. Cliburn's performances of the Liszt concertos had considerable grandeur and beauty. The pianist makes so much light of the technical difficulties involved, that the way he rolls out octave passages or littering cadenzas is not so much exciting as olympian. For this reason the more brilliant E flat Concerto found the pianist making a better impression.

The A flat Concerto is less obvious in its inspiration and more lyrical, and demands more intimacy of approach than the pianist seemed willing to give it. Still, the playing glistened tonally, had a natural flow and the aforementioned technical ease, which lifted his performances out of the routine.

Needless to say, the Bostonians and Mr. Leinsdorf played expertly throughout the evening.

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

DEC 5 1964

Music

Van Cliburn Triumphs As a Second Franz Liszt

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI
Of the World-Telegram Staff

The tall Texan at Philharmonic Hall last night—also a winner of votes—was Van Cliburn. As always, he was a sensation.

Louis Biancolli

In fact he was a double sensation — appearing as soloist with the Boston Sypmphony, not in one concerto, but in two, both of them by Franz Liszt, and either one of them a man-size job for one evening.

With Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Cliburn gave both concertos new life. That is his way. Give him a century-old score, and he will fill it with the bustling vitality and fervor one forgot was there.

This was the case with the A Major Concerto, which he played on the first half of the bill. It was even more the case with the E Flat Major which closed the program. By then, Van Cliburn was a second Liszt.

* * *

What was refreshing about the reading, apart from the technical power and tonal beauty, was the way Cliburn remained at all times within the symphonic frame of the concertos. He was soloist, but he wasn't stealing the show. The show being the whole performance.

There was a place for himself, one for Leinsdore, another for the orchestra. And the largest of all for Liszt, who conceived his concertos as integrated units.

Cliburn was the greater artist, and the greater Lisztean for performing the scores as he did. There was no theatricalism, no hogging of the spotlight. He enhanced the performance and the performance enhanced him. It was a two-way deal.

The crowd gave him a spectacular ovation after each concerto. Of his generation of American pianists, he is still first in the hearts of his countrymen. He is an exciting and mature 30, complete master of his medium.

* * *

The program opened with a brilliant performance of Kodaly's "Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song." Most of this music is claptrap. Some of it pleasant, unctuous-sounding claptrap. The rest is ingenious, even beautiful.

One variation seems to come right out of Sibelius, complete with sinuouss strings and woodwinds; another out of "The Mikado." Much of it indeed, is strange chinoiserie for a Hungarian.

The trouble with Kodaly, as with so many Hungarian composers, not excepting Liszt and Bartok, is that they wrote so fast they seldom, if ever, rewrote. Three of the 16 variations are still fresh; the others are a baker's dozen—all stale.

Far more arresting were the "Seven Studies on Themes of Klee" by our own Gunther Schuller, a composer who gravitates between jazz and so-called serious music, making him a sort of thirfd force who keeps both camps envious.

The deceptively childish, but disturbingly symbolic paintings of the Swiss master are caught in music of fitful images that flash like fireflies and move like darts.

The performance was a credit to the Boston Symphony, that performed it in one burst of virtuosity after another — including an exalted jam session—and to the master-musician on the podium.

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

DEC 5 1964

AT PHILHARMONIC HALL

Leinsdorf-Cliburn Score

5454

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ERICH LEINSDORF, Van Cliburn, and the Boston Symphony collaborated on Liszt concertos in Philharmonic Hall last night in the best of virtuoso tradition.

They vied with two contemporary works by Kodaly and Schuller, however, which had equal entertainment value.

Kodaly's variations on a Hungarian folk song, "The Peacock" represented the conservative tradition a quarter century ago. Schuller "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" may be consolidating a modern tradition.

What immediately catches attention in the Kodaly is his use of the pentatonic scale. That accounts for the seemingly Oriental flavor of certain variations, but interestingly it reflects a Hungarian predelection.

The work as a whole makes pleasant listening, identified as such by the almost musical comedy style of the finale. Its strength is its melodic invention.

★

THE SCHULLER fascinates as aural projection of either the mood or the scheme of Klee's paintings. His sense of reality in both impulses is startlingly realistic or literal.

He has such a keen orchestral ear that at times his studies in sound parallel remarkably the line and color of the paintings. This qualifies as imaginative as well as inspired craftsmanship.

Kodaly found rapport with orchestra and conductor. Schuller asked something more in modern feeling that either had completely mastered.

The "Little Blue Devil" study, for instance, demanded more idiomatic ally defined syncopation than Mr. Leinsdorf could conjure, and "The Twittering Machine" called for more humor.

Some of the other pieces would have profited by more abandon in performance. Nonetheless they won the audience's fancy.

★

VAN CLIBURN plays Liszt most naturally. His big hands are such a pianistic asset in themselves that he can play all the tinsel measures with consummate ease and control tone all the more strategically.

He appears somewhat self-conscious in expressing the romantic quality of the works (he was guilty of some sentimental phrasing) but he gave a masterly account of the decorative elements.

As sheer virtuoso playing his runs and octaves created excitement. He knew how to apply the glitter without making it too brittle and how to turn a phrase for real effectiveness.

He wisely played the A Major (No. 2) first, for E Flat (No. 1) is still the better outlet for his gifts.

When it comes to brilliant pianism, he continues to enhance his reputation, the touch of poetry remains at his fingertips instead of deep into the keys.

Mr. Leinsdorf seemed to enjoy letting the Bostonians shine in resplendent virtuosity.

1 A8

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

DEC 6 1964 Burrelle's

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Paul Klee With Van Cliburn

When Van Cliburn played Franz Liszt's A Major, and E Flat Major Piano Concertos Friday night in Philharmonic Hall, he was unlike the flamboyant Hungarian both as pianist and composer. Yet he gave superb performances of the two compositions in which he, conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were a closely knit unit.

Times have changed since Liszt "at one stroke changed piano performance from a refined dissertation into a grandiose oration," as Ralph Leonard puts it in "The Stream of Music." And the overblown aspects of Liszt's piano pieces — their extravagance, ornate virtuosity, languishing melodies—all are exploited to their detriment when blatantly exposed at the keyboard.

But many young artists are not so musically wise, nor have Cliburn's big hand and immense equipment, to be able, for instance, to play the glittering final section of the "E Flat" with the clean crispness of a diamond cluster. In each concerto, the pianist performed the Byronic melodies with proud, cool romanticism—that is with ardor, but without sentimentality.

He alerted the music to its vitality through swift, incisive thrust and flourish. He gave its design transparency by sparse use of the pedal. He was always in control through the thunder. In short, his performances were patrician, expressing an aristocratic power that comes to those who are truly well born to the keyboard.

Schuller's 'Paul Klee'

Between each portion of the Liszt-Cliburn partnership, Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" intrigued the audience for 25 minutes.

Schuller, who at 39 is an old, retired Metropolitan Opera horn player, understands the expressive scope of his instruments as well as a physician knows the function of his blood pressure gage.

In his "Studies" he has achieved an aural psyche with each piece that acutely evokes a provocative image of what it means, at least, to him. The work, like Klee's suggestion-packed paintings, is a fascinating, telescoped metamorphosis of various ideas.

Each of the musical miniatures has its special pungency. "Arabian Town" not only evokes the mood but the specifics of a characteristically Eastern blend of sound, magically brought to life by Schuller's combination of instrumental intuition and knowledge.

"Twittering Machine had most of the audience spontaneously chuckling, no mean tribute.

Leinsdorf, apparently able to adapt himself to any musical situation with authority, was guileless in his subtle know-how with the jazzy "Little Blue Devil." His beat and knee bends would have made it at the Five Spot Cafe, but they fit Philharmonic Hall too. A miracle man.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W 468,419

DEC 12 1964 Burrelle's

FRIDAY night's concert by the Bost… Symphony in the same auditoriu… brought forth Van Cliburn as soloist i… both of Liszt's piano concertos, whic… he played brilliantly; a rather tiresom… work by Kodály called Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song ("The Peacock"), which it seemed to me might as well have been called "The Pines of Budapest;" and a work by Gunther Schuller, "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which I found enormously amusing, at least. Mr. Schuller has a keen ear for orchestral sound. His style in this work ranges from massed pianissimo tone clusters and jazz idioms to various buzzes and rattles and an amazingly accurate reproduction of Arab music produced by combining harp, oboe, and solo viola. The work does not, thank heaven, take itself very seriously, and is obviously meant to be enjoyed. —WINTHROP SARGEANT

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 228,833 SUN. 255,955

DEC 8 1964 Burrelle's

NEW YORK REPORT:

Cliburn Skill Glows With Liszt

Van Cliburn . . . A Liszt "toss off" with Boston Symphony and Leinsdorf.

By JOHN ROSENFIELD
Amusements Critic of The News

NEW YORK — A pre-Moscow conviction that Van Cliburn's musical stature preceded and did not follow Moscow was substantiated when he played at Philharmonic Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf. The question of celebrity and the size of fees are other matters but there is, happily, a basic Van Cliburn who expands musically.

The appearance in Philharmonic Hall here featured two concertos, the Liszt No. 2 in A Major, first in time of composition, and the more fashionable E Flat Major familiarly No. 1 but actually the second.

With the young composer's ostentatious addiction to keyboard bluster, contrived color effects (remember the tinkling triangle of the E Flat!), both concertos often are cartoons of show-offism.

Conductors with Hungarian consanguinity argue that the Liszt "cheapness" is what non-Hungarians bring to it as performers or listeners; that honest Liszt uses dazzling bravura as a means to a legitimate end of spirited nationalism, ardent and universal messages. Be this as it may, there is a Lisztian formula that superior intelligences can apply, that virtuoso prowess can toss off and not show off.

THE A MAJOR and E. Flat Major sounded as if they had it at Philharmonic Hall in Cliburn's subtle design and phenomenal finger span; in Leinsdorf's consonant thinking and control of one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony.

Cliburn was all present in flashy dexterity, prismatic tone and detailed meaningfulness of each phrase. If Liszt had something to say, soloist and conductor made it sound as sincere and emotionally urgent as possible. To most, it was a musical revelation and a triumph of pyrotechnics that concealed artifice. It is not outside the bounds of inference that Cliburn and Leinsdorf plan to record both concertos as a "package" which should rank as the models of discography. They may, hopefully, drive most other Liszt concertos from the market.

Leinsdorf, always more impressive at the head of an orchestra than in opera, conducted his superb contingent through Kodaly's "Peacock" Variations and Gunther Klee's "Seven Studies on the Themes of Paul Klee.'.' Oddly, both works were introduced by Antal Dorati, the Kodaly in Dallas and the Paul Klee in Minneapolis.

DORATI MIGHT have heard the performances here but didn't. Instead, he was busy serving as one of the judges in the annual International Mitropoulos Competition for Conductors, taking place at Hunter College. From its six prize-winners, three will be chosen by Leonard Bernstein as assistants next season with the New York Philharmonic.

Although Dorati is tied up six hours a day with the auditions, he found time to reinvigorate his list of recordings, second longest in the disc world, and to set up touring dates next year in America. He will plunge into Texas as one of the guests for the San Antonio Symphony. He has no plans at this time to revisit the city of his symphonic start, Dallas from 1945 to 1949. His planned tour in a few months with his own B.B.C. Symphony from London will be limited to the Eastern seaboard.

A meeting of major symphony orchestra managers found Alan Watrous of Dallas in town. Purely local problems were wrangled at the meeting, it was said. The managers, though, did find time to discuss soloist and guest conductor possibilities for next season.

The opening opera on the metropolitan tour next May will be the novelty, Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Last Savage" for strategic and logistic reasons. The "Manons" and "Rigolettos" will follow.

A8

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Paul Klee With Van Cliburn

When Van Cliburn played Franz Liszt's A Major, and E Flat Major Piano Concertos Friday night in Philharmonic Hall, he was unlike the flamboyant Hungarian both as pianist and composer. Yet he gave superb performances of the two compositions in which he, conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony were a closely knit unit.

Times have changed since Liszt "at one stroke changed piano performance from a refined dissertation into a grandiose oration," as Ralph Leonard puts it in "The Stream of Music." And the overblown aspects of Liszt's piano pieces — their extravagance, ornate virtuosity, languishing melodies—all are exploited to their detriment when blatantly exposed at the keyboard.

But many young artists are not so musically wise, nor have Cliburn's big hand and immense equipment, to be able, for instance, to play the glittering final section of the "E Flat" with the clean crispness of a diamond cluster. In each concerto, the pianist performed the Byronic melodies with proud, cool romanticism—that is with ardor, but without sentimentality.

He alerted the music to its vitality through swift, incisive thrust and flourish. He gave its design transparency by sparse use of the pedal. He was always in control through the thunder. In short, his performances were patrician, expressing an aristocratic power that comes to those who are truly well born to the keyboard.

Schuller's 'Paul Klee'

Between each portion of the Liszt-Cliburn partnership, Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" intrigued the audience for 25 minutes.

Schuller, who at 39 is an old, retired Metropolitan Opera horn player, understands the expressive scope of his instruments as well as a physician knows the function of his blood pressure gage.

In his "Studies" he has achieved an aural psyche with each piece that acutely evokes a provocative image of what it means, at least, to him. The work, like Klee's suggestion-packed paintings, is a fascinating, telescoped metamorphosis of various ideas.

Each of the musical miniatures has its special pungency. "Arabian Town" not only evokes the mood but the specifics of a characteristically Eastern blend of sound, magically brought to life by Schuller's combination of instrumental intuition and knowledge.

"Twittering Machine had most of the audience spontaneously chuckling, no mean tribute.

Leinsdorf, apparently able to adapt himself to any musical situation with authority, was guileless in his subtle know-how with the jazzy "Little Blue Devil." His beat and knee bends would have made it at the Five Spot Cafe, but they fit Philharmonic Hall too. A miracle man.

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

DEC 6 1964

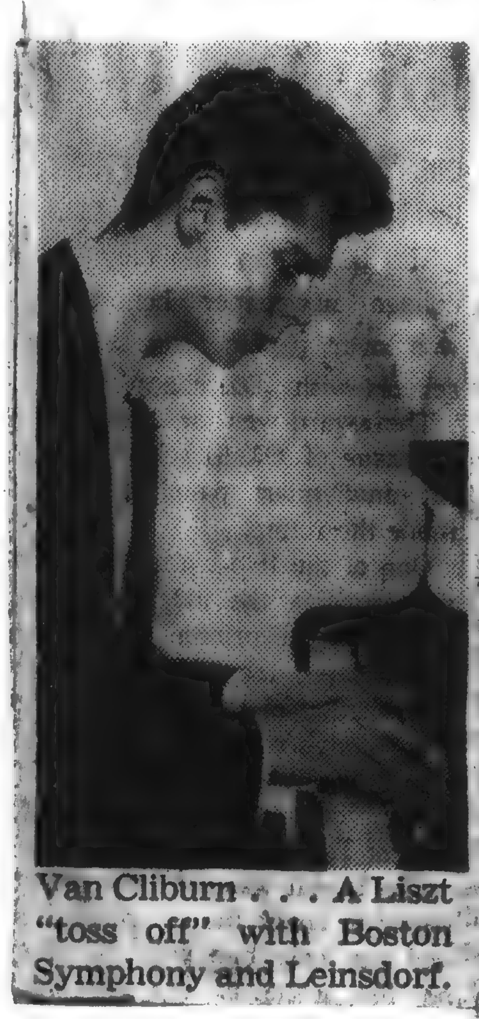
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 468,419

DEC 12 1964

FRIDAY night's concert by the Boston Symphony in the same auditorium brought forth Van Cliburn as soloist in both of Liszt's piano concertos, which he played brilliantly; a rather tiresome work by Kodály called Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song ("The Peacock"), which it seemed to me might as well have been called "The Pines of Budapest;" and a work by Gunther Schuller, "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which I found enormously amusing, at least. Mr. Schuller has a keen ear for orchestral sound. His style in this work ranges from massed pianissimo tone clusters and jazz idioms to various buzzes and rattles and an amazingly accurate reproduction of Arab music produced by combining harp, oboe, and solo viola. The work does not, thank heaven, take itself very seriously, and is obviously meant to be enjoyed. —WINTHROP SARGEANT

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 228,833 SUN. 255,955

DEC 8 1964



Van Cliburn . . . A Liszt "toss off" with Boston Symphony and Leinsdorf.

NEW YORK REPORT:

Cliburn Skill Glows With Liszt

By JOHN ROSENFIELD
Amusements Critic of The News

NEW YORK — A pre-Moscow conviction that Van Cliburn's musical stature preceded and did not follow Moscow was substantiated when he played at Philharmonic Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf. The question of celebrity and the size of fees are other matters but there is, happily, a basic Van Cliburn who expands musically.

The appearance in Philharmonic Hall here featured two concertos, the Liszt No. 2 in A Major, first in time of composition, and the more fashionable E Flat Major familiarly No. 1 but actually the second.

With the young composer's ostentatious addiction to keyboard bluster, contrived color effects (remember the tinkling triangle of the E Flat!), both concertos often are cartoons of show-offism.

Conductors with Hungarian consanguinity argue that the Liszt "cheapness" is what non-Hungarians bring to it as performers or listeners; that honest Liszt uses dazzling bravura as a means to a legitimate end of spirited nationalism, ardent and universal messages. Be this as it may, there is a Lisztian formula that superior intelligences can apply, that virtuoso prowess can toss off and not show off.

THE A MAJOR and E Flat Major sounded as if they had it at Philharmonic Hall in Cliburn's subtle design and phenomenal finger span; in Leinsdorf's consonant thinking and control of one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony.

Cliburn was all present in flashy dexterity, prismatic tone and detailed meaningfulness of each phrase. If Liszt had something to say, soloist and conductor made it sound as sincere and emotionally urgent as possible. To most, it was a musical revelation and a triumph of pyrotechnics that concealed artifice. It is not outside the bounds of inference that Cliburn and Leinsdorf plan to record both concertos as a "package" which should rank as the models of discography. They may, hopefully, drive most other Liszt concertos from the market.

Leinsdorf, always more impressive at the head of an orchestra than in opera, conducted his superb contingent through Kodaly's "Peacock" Variations and Gunther Klee's "Seven Studies on the Themes of Paul Klee." Oddly, both works were introduced by Antal Dorati, the Kodaly in Dallas and the Paul Klee in Minneapolis.

DORATI MIGHT have heard the performances here but didn't. Instead, he was busy serving as one of the judges in the annual International Mitropoulos Competition for Conductors, taking place at Hunter College. From its six prize-winners, three will be chosen by Leonard Bernstein as assistants next season with the New York Philharmonic.

Although Dorati is tied up six hours a day with the auditions, he found time to reinvigorate his list of recordings, second longest in the disc world, and to set up touring dates next year in America. He will plunge into Texas as one of the guests for the San Antonio Symphony. He has no plans at this time to revisit the city of his symphonic start, Dallas from 1945 to 1949. His planned tour in a few months with his own B.B.C. Symphony from London will be limited to the Eastern seaboard.

A meeting of major symphony orchestra managers found Alan Watrous of Dallas in town. Purely local problems were wrangled at the meeting, it was said. The managers, though, did find time to discuss soloist and guest conductor possibilities for next season.

The opening opera on the metropolitan tour next May will be the novelty, Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Last Savage" for strategic and logistic reasons. The "Manons" and "Rigolettos" will follow.

CARNEGIE HALL. SAT. DEC 5th.

49

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

DEC 7 1964
N Y TRIB 12/7/64

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening, as part of the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras.

Dvorak's Third Symphony, Op. 10, a rarely performed but beautiful and dramatic work, was brilliantly interpreted and stunningly played. The same was true of the performance of Shostakovich's Violin Concerto that followed, to which Leonid Kogan lent his violinistic perfection as soloist.

The program opened with a careful reading of Haydn's twenty-first Symphony, with Mr. Leinsdorf presiding, Haydn-like, at the harpsichord.

P. T.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574

DEC 7 1964

Leinsdorf and His Bostonians Play Haydn in Style of Period

Erich Leinsdorf went the purists one better Saturday night at Carnegie Hall when he led Haydn's early Symphony in A, No. 21, while seated at a harpsichord. The tendency in recent years has been to reduce symphonic string sections to approximate the small proportions of 18th-century ensembles, but no conductor in recent memory has gone all the way and conducted while playing, which was a practise in Haydn's time.

The orchestra played well, with Mr. Leinsdorf occasionally cueing with his hands, but more frequently with nods of the head. And the pleasant rattle of the one-manual Herz added greatly to the effect of the whole. It gave the music a spicy tang, even in Mr. Leinsdorf's simple chording.

Then followed Dvorak's Wagnerian Symphony No. 3 in E flat. The rest of the musicians joined in on this, and the performance was a shining affair. Written in 1872, it is not often heard, but is a beauty. The first movement is a song; the second a slow march with brasses sounding in one spot like the entrance of the Gods into Prague, and the brilliant close owing some spirit to "Tannhaüser."

The orchestra sparkled in the performance, and the capacity audience responded heartily. But it was not like the clamor that followed Leonid Kogan's playing of the Shostakovich Violin Concerto.

The Concerto was written for David Oistrakh nine years ago and was first played here by him in 1955 with the late Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Mr. Kogan, one of the world's supreme violinists, gave it the kind of performance that immediately endears an unfamiliar work to its listener. Its four movements are not difficult to follow. The opening Nocturne is somber, the Scherzo frenzied but good-humored, the Pasacaglia murky and the Burlesque pure fun. It is very taxing music, but Mr. Kogan is the kind of player for whom intricacies are made. The Soviet violinist can and does do anything with his bow. High, low, fast, drawn-out, silken raucous, — he merely has to think of it to do it. And his thinking was always musical.

Mr. Leinsdorf provided a solid frame of reference for him and both shared the eight minutes of cheering and clapping at the end. This was another in Carnegie Hall's invaluable International Festival of Visiting Orchestras series, one which is quietly exerting a very positive cultural force in this city.

HOWARD KLEIN.

CHI. ILL.
MUSICAL LEADER. JAN. 65

On Dec. 5, the Bostonians, again under their Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, made the first of their four scheduled appearances in this season's Carnegie Hall Festival of Visiting Orchestras. The story of this concert is the story of the incredible virtuosity of Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, the soloist in the Shostakovich Violin Concerto. Here was virtuosity in its highest sense: brilliant, controlled precision, pure intonation, a tone which glowed at all dynamic levels, and the evident application of all these toward musical ends. For this technical wizard consistently took the time to shape his phrases, to make every statement of the music an expression of personal conviction, and to integrate the trickiest ensemble sections perfectly with the immaculate accompaniment. This 1955 work is a very good one, though the magic-filled performance here may have made it sound better than it is. It boasts an exquisite opening Nocturne, some appealingly characteristic coloring, and a deft scoring touch which ideally supports and offsets the dominant solo violin. Two symphonies, Haydn's No. 21 and the Dvorak Third, opened the program. The former, led by Mr. Leinsdorf from the harpsichord, proved to be one of those delightful early Haydn gems in which the emergent classic idiom is pervaded by Baroque echoes; the latter, (which would have gained from a more lushly romantic reading) was a bombastic, rambling opus whose moments of individual character were lost in reminiscences of Wagner, Schumann and Brahms.—H.F. . . . Rounding out a busy New York visit, the Boston Symphony's leading instrumentalists journeyed to the Hunter College Playhouse Dec. 7 for the New York debut of the newly constituted Boston Symphony Chamber Players. A lovely program of Mozart and Beethoven chamber works ppointingly reminded us that great technicians playing to-ether do not necessarily produce great chamber performances. ne ensemble rapport rarely lifted the readings above a petence level, with the wooden, insensitive playing of the key string soloists in glaring contrast to the musicianly flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer and oboist Ralph berg. H.F.

Symphony News: Erich Leinsdorf was sworn in by ohnson as a Trustee of the John F. Kennedy Cen- erforming Arts at Dec. 2 White House ceremonies nnounced that pianist Claude Frank would join 's newly formed Chamber Players.

CARNEGIE HALL. SAT. DEC 5th.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

DEC 7 1964 R.H.N. S.
N Y TRIB 12/7/64

Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening, as part of the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras.

Dvorak's Third Symphony, Op. 10, a rarely performed but beautiful and dramatic work, was brilliantly interpreted and stunningly played. The same was true of the performance of Shostakovich's Violin Concerto that followed, to which Leonid Kogan lent his violinistic perfection as soloist.

The program opened with a careful reading of Haydn's Twenty-first Symphony, with Mr. Leinsdorf presiding, Haydn-like, at the harpsichord.

P. T.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574
DEC 7 1964

Leinsdorf and His Bostonians Play Haydn in Style of Period

Erich Leinsdorf went the purists one better Saturday night at Carnegie Hall when he led Haydn's early Symphony in A, No. 21, while seated at a harpsichord. The tendency in recent years has been to reduce symphonic string sections to approximate the small proportions of 18th-century ensembles, but no conductor in recent memory has gone all the way and conducted while playing, which was a practise in Haydn's time.

The orchestra played well, with Mr. Leinsdorf occasionally cueing with his hands, but more frequently with nods of the head. And the pleasant rattle of the one-manual Herz added greatly to the effect of the whole. It gave the music a spicy tang, even in Mr. Leinsdorf's simple chording.

Then followed Dvorak's Wagnerian Symphony No. 3 in E flat. The rest of the musicians joined in on this, and the performance was a shining affair. Written in 1872, it is not often heard, but is a beauty. The first movement is a song; the second a slow march with brasses sounding in one spot like the entrance of the Gods into Prague, and the brilliant close owing some spirit to "Tannhaüser."

The orchestra sparkled in the performance, and the capacity audience responded heartily. But it was not like the clamor that followed Leonid Kogan's playing of the Shostakovich Violin Concerto.

The Concerto was written for David Oistrakh nine years ago and was first played here by him in 1955 with the late Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Mr. Kogan, one of the world's supreme violinists, gave it the kind of performance that immediately endears an unfamiliar work to its listener. Its four movements are not difficult to follow. The opening Nocturne is somber, the Scherzo frenzied but good-humored, the Pasacaglia murky and the Burlesque pure fun. It is very taxing music, but Mr. Kogan is the kind of player for whom intricacies are made. The Soviet violinist can and does do anything with his bow. High, low, fast, drawn-out, silken, raucous, — he merely has to think of it to do it. And his thinking was always musical.

Mr. Leinsdorf provided a solid frame of reference for him and both shared the eight minutes of cheering and clapping at the end. This was another in Carnegie Hall's invaluable International Festival of Visiting Orchestras series, one which is quietly exerting a very positive cultural force in this city.

HOWARD KLEIN.

CHI. ILL.
MUSICAL LEADER. JAN. 65

On Dec. 5, the Bostonians, again under their Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, made the first of their four scheduled appearances in this season's Carnegie Hall Festival of Visiting Orchestras. The story of this concert is the story of the incredible virtuosity of Soviet violinist Leonid Kogan, the soloist in the Shostakovich Violin Concerto. Here was virtuosity in its highest sense: brilliant, controlled precision, pure intonation, a tone which glowed at all dynamic levels, and the evident application of all these toward musical ends. For this technical wizard consistently took the time to shape his phrases, to make every statement of the music an expression of personal conviction, and to integrate the trickiest ensemble sections perfectly with the immaculate accompaniment. This 1955 work is a very good one, though the magic-filled performance here may have made it sound better than it is. It boasts an exquisite opening Nocturne, some appealingly characteristic coloring, and a deft scoring touch which ideally supports and offsets the dominant solo violin. Two symphonies, Haydn's No. 21 and the Dvorak Third, opened the program. The former, led by Mr. Leinsdorf from the harpsichord, proved to be one of those delightful early Haydn gems in which the emergent classic idiom is pervaded by Baroque echoes; the latter, (which would have gained from a more lushly romantic reading) was a bombastic, rambling opus whose moments of individual character were lost in reminiscences of Wagner, Schumann and Brahms.—H.F. . . . Rounding out a busy New York visit, the Boston Symphony's leading instrumentalists journeyed to the Hunter College Playhouse Dec. 7 for the New York debut of the newly constituted Boston Symphony Chamber Players. A lovely program of Mozart and Beethoven chamber works disappointingly reminded us that great technicians playing together do not necessarily produce great chamber performances. True ensemble rapport rarely lifted the readings above a competence level, with the wooden, insensitive playing of the two key string soloists in glaring contrast to the musicianly phrasing of flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer and oboist Ralph Gomberg.—H.F.

Boston Symphony News: Erich Leinsdorf was sworn in by President Johnson as a Trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts at Dec. 2 White House ceremonies It was announced that pianist Claude Frank would join Orchestra's newly formed Chamber Players.

1 50

TUES. 4. FRI- SAT. 10.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

KODÁLY . . Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"

Introduction: Moderato
I. Con brio
II. Pianissimo
III. Forte (appassionato)
IV. Poco calmato
V. Forte appassionato
VI. Calmato
VII. Vivo
VIII. Più vivo
IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

(First performance in this series)

SCHULLER . . . . Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

I. Antike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
II. Abstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
III. Kleiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
IV. Die Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
V. Arabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
VI. Ein Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
VII. Pastorale

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK . . . . Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio molto, tempo di marcia
III. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance in this series)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 11, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART . . . . Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319

I. Allegro assai
II. Andante moderato
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro assai

(First performance at these concerts)

LEWIS . . . . "Designs for Orchestra"

I. Passacaglia — Adagio
II. Allegro

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
IV. Allegro con spirito

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 6 1964

Symphony This Week

Strauss Excerpts By Leontyne Price

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return from its second tour of the season this weekend and present three concerts in Symphony Hall this week. In addition to the tenth pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra will be heard in the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series this Tuesday at 8:30. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct all three concerts.

The Tuesday evening program will open with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," and will continue with "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller. After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Dvorak's Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10).

Leontyne Price, soprano, will be guest soloist with Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra at the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Miss Price last appeared with the orchestra in December, 1958. She will be heard in the Awakening Scene from Richard Strauss' opera "The Egyptian Helen" and the Final Scene from Strauss' "Salome."

Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the orchestra in Schumann's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97; the Prelude and Waltz Sequence from "Der Rosenkavalier" by Strauss; and an orchestral interlude from "Salome" which will precede the Final Scene.

LEONTYNE PRICE

The Scene from "The Egyptian Helen" will be performed for the first time in Boston and the portions from "Salome" will be heard for the first time at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

DEC 5 1964

SOPRANO SOLOIST: Leontyne Price will emote operatically under Erich Leinsdorf's baton in BSO concerts next Friday ~~and Satur~~day in Symphony Hall, She'll rouse herself in the Awakening Scene from Strauss' "The Egyptian Helen," then suffer in the Final Scene of Strauss' "Salome."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

DEC 9 1964

Leontyne Price Ill, Orchestra Changes Program

Soprano Leontyne Price who was to have been soloist with the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday has been taken ill.

The orchestra's programs, Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. will now be made up of Bach's Suite No. 1 in C major, the first Boston performance of Robert Hall Lewis' Designs for Orchestra, and the Brahms Second Symphony. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Lewis, a native of Portland, Or., studied at the Eastman School of Music and at Vienna Academy of Music, was a Fulbright Fellow in 1955. He teaches theory and composition at Goucher College in Baltimore. Lewis has been lecturer in American music for the United States Information Agency.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
DEC

Symphony change

The Boston Symphony has announced a change in its weekend program, owing to Leontyne Price's cancellation for reasons of health.

On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the orchestra will perform Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B-flat (K. 319), Robert Hall Lewis's "Designs for Orchestra" (first Boston performance), and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Mr. Lewis teaches theory and composition at Goucher College in Baltimore.

90

TUES. 4. FRI.- SAT. 10.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

KODÁLY ...... Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"

Introduction: Moderato
I. Con brio
II. Pianissimo
III. Forte (appassionato)
IV. Poco calmato
V. Forte appassionato
VI. Calmato
VII. Vivo
VIII. Più vivo
IX. Piano
X. Molto vivo
XI. Andante espressivo
XII. Adagio
XIII. Tempo di marcia funebre
XIV. Andante — poco rubato
XV. Allegro giocoso
XVI. Maestoso
Finale — Vivace

(First performance in this series)

SCHULLER .... Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

I. Antike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
II. Abstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
III. Kleiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
IV. Die Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
V. Arabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
VI. Ein Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
VII. Pastorale

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK .... Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio molto, tempo di marcia
III. Finale: Allegro vivace

(First performance in this series)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 11, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART .... Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319

I. Allegro assai
II. Andante moderato
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Allegro assai

(First performance at these concerts)

LEWIS .... "Designs for Orchestra"

I. Passacaglia — Adagio
II. Allegro

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
IV. Allegro con spirito

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
DEC 6 1964

Symphony This Week

Strauss Excerpts By Leontyne Price

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return from its second tour of the season this weekend and present three concerts in Symphony Hall this week. In addition to the tenth pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra will be heard in the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series this Tuesday at 8:30. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct all three concerts.

The Tuesday evening program will open with Kodaly's Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock," and will continue with "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller. After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Dvorak's Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10).

Leontyne Price, soprano, will be guest soloist with Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra at the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Miss Price last appeared with the orchestra in December, 1958. She will be heard in the Awakening Scene from Richard Strauss' opera "The Egyptian Helen" and the Final Scene from Strauss' "Salome."

Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct the orchestra in Schumann's Symphony No. 3, in E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97; the Prelude and Waltz Sequence from "Der Rosenkavalier" by Strauss; and an orchestral interlude from "Salome" which will precede the Final Scene.

LEONTYNE PRICE

The Scene from "The Egyptian Helen" will be performed for the first time in Boston and the portions from "Salome" will be heard for the first time at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932
DEC 5 1964

SOPRANO SOLOIST: Leontyne Price will emote operatically under Erich Leinsdorf's baton in BSO concerts next Friday ~~and Satur~~day in Symphony Hall, She'll rouse herself in the Awakening Scene from Strauss' "The Egyptian Helen," then suffer in the Final Scene of Strauss' "Salome."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855
DEC 9 1964

Leontyne Price Ill, Orchestra Changes Program

Soprano Leontyne Price who was to have been soloist with the Boston Symphony on Friday and Saturday has been taken ill.

The orchestra's programs, Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. will now be made up of Bach's Suite No. 1 in C major, the first Boston performance of Robert Hall Lewis' Designs for Orchestra, and the Brahms Second Symphony. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Lewis, a native of Portland, Or., studied at the Eastman School of Music and at Vienna Academy of Music, was a Fulbright Fellow in 1955. He teaches theory and composition at Goucher College in Baltimore. Lewis has been lecturer in American music for the United States Information Agency.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
DEC 9 1964

Symphony change

The Boston Symphony has announced a change in its weekend program, owing to Leontyne Price's cancellation for reasons of health.

On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the orchestra will perform Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B-flat (K. 319), Robert Hall Lewis's "Designs for Orchestra" (first Boston performance), and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Mr. Lewis teaches theory and composition at Goucher College in Baltimore.

51

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

Symphony

'Designs for Orchestra' Proves A Dull, Ponderous Abstraction

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A singularly dull and ponderous abstraction, Robert Hall Lewis's "Designs for Orchestra," which received a first Boston hearing at this weekend's concerts of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, illustrates the banality of the contemporary academic advance guard.

The banality resides in the fact that ability to compose in any idiom is no guarantee of a gift for making music. Schonberg possessed both, and so do many of his aesthetic progeny, but breaking the trance of the keynote and Wagner's potent spell, the atonalists have developed a rigid a category of style as any in history. Mr. Lewis, unfortunately, is one of its doctrinaire casualties.

His "Designs" discloses a skill in handling orchestral timbres —which is not the same thing as the communication of an idea or an emotion. Everything in this music is form; we are required to regard content as an irrelevant vulgarity. This would be entirely valid if the form had a significance that one could consider as a striking insight into the nature of musical speech, like Elliot Carter's "Variations for Orchestra," played earlier this season, or conveyed an idiosyncratic character, like Stravinsky's sacred ballad, "Abraham and Isaac" heard in Symphony Hall on Wednesday night.

In fact, however, "Designs" does not live up to the promise implicit in the program notes, which suggest that the composer has wedded atonality to traditional procedures in order to advance personal expression. Rather than the latter, the score is filled with a series of technical mannerisms, indistinguishable from the gestures being contrived in similar measures by composers seeking a 20th Century spirit; paper music, thick with pedantry, devoid of emotive power, and substituting a lack of cadence for a largeness of vision. One could not feel shock; anonymity only induces sadness. Mr. Lewis was on tap for a bow to strained applause.

Owing to the indisposition of the soprano, Leontyne Price, who was scheduled, but who had to cancel her appearance when she came down with a cold earlier this week, Symphony Hall spokesmen declare that Miss Price hopes she will be able to sing with the orchestra at a date later in the season, Mr. Leinsdorf was impelled to substitute the Brahms second for the Strauss excerpts originally programmed. He came through with an exceptionally clean account, straightforward in purpose and nicely-balanced in sonorities, but for me the highlight of the program consisted of the first series performance of Mozart's Symphony No. 33.

Elegant, Sparkling

It is a bit surprising that the B-flat Symphony has only been done in Tanglewood, for it is an exceptionally captivating item, elegant in detail, sparkling with melodic lustre. Criticism has been unfair to the score, which immediately antedates Mozart's C

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 10th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K.319 .... Mozart
"Designs for Orchestra" .... Lewis
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op.73 .... Brahms major, and the towering scores of the later years, but despite the conventionality of the material, the Symphony 33 is admirably laid out for small chamber orchestra, and its graceful ambience is ideally suite d to an ensemble of oboes, bassoons, horns and strings.

Mr. Leindorf's performance was light and deftly-phrased, and it seemed to me that he achieved a delectable variety of string tone in an animated interpretation. It is the aptness of Mozart's melodic ideas that charm, rather than the innate invention of the thought, and the fluency of the performance accented the gentle, precise buffo manner.

The Brahms, if anything, was understated, but none the worse for that. It was treated with a brightness highly apposite to the symphony, and if it seemed that Mr. Leinsdorf bore down a bit heavily to achieve the necessary woodwind translucence, he nevertheless achieved a pastoral shimmer and contrast with the dramatic trombones and tubas of the outer movements. The performance was a very good one, not perhaps of the highest order, but still welcome, and greeted by cheers from an audience who found in it release from the rigors of the score preceding.

Next weekend Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin will be the soloists in Brahm's Concerto in A Minor fo rViolin and 'Cello, Op. 102; and Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony No. 3, in E-fla tmajor, and Fine's Toccata Concertante.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 12 1964

At Symphony

On Mozart, Brahms And Robert Hall Lewis

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

At Friday's Boston Symphony program, Erich Leinsdorf conducted Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B flat, the first Boston performance of "Designs for Orchestra" by Robert Hall Lewis, and the Brahms Second Symphony.

The program was originally to have included excerpts from "Salome" and "Aegyptische Helena" by Strauss, but Leontyne Price has been ill and was unable to appear. She hopes, as of course does the Boston Symphony, that it will be possible for her to fulfill the engagement later in the season.

Robert Hall Lewis is a composer in his late thirties who teaches at Goucher College in Baltimore. "Designs for Orchestra" was composed during the Summer and Fall of 1963, and it was first performed by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Peter Herman Adler conducting, last January.

It is a work perhaps a quarter of an hour long and in two connected movements, a slow passacaglia and a faster section in sonata form. The formal design is quite traditional; the harmonic matter, however, is atonal, or at least thickly and continuously dissonant.

The passacaglia is particularly well and interestingly made in that the variations become longer up to its midpoint, whereafter they contract again. Lewis writes for large orchestra, and I had the feeling that he writes for too much of it too much of the time. In the second half of the passacaglia, he seems to be exercising timbral choice with fastidiousness and care; otherwise "Designs" tends to sound untransparent, monotonous, and noisy rather than brilliant.

I say all this a little hesitantly because I know from experience how dangerous it is to take for granted in a new piece that the performance is really a just one, and that this is particularly true in matters of dynamics and balances. In other words, not having seen the score, I cannot be completely sure I was hearing the sounds Lewis would have wanted me to hear. The magniloquent Lewis rhetoric is a kind not very sympathetic to me, but I found his composition to contain interesting ideas, and I should be interested to hear some of his chamber music.

Most of the audience clearly hated it. Several ladies fled soon after the beginning, and the composer's reception when he appeared on stage for a bow is best described as passively discourteous.

Mozart and Brahms fared neither badly nor really well. Actually, I am at a loss to analyze a performance like that of the Mozart: tempi were appropriate, phrasings intelligent, the playing good, yet it is hard to imagine anything duller.

The work itself, amazingly enough being done for the first time by the Boston Symphony, is marvelous, and specializes in turning innocent openings into amazing developments and conclusions.

The Brahms was plain, a little on the slow and heavy side. It has one moment of very great beauty, and that was James Stagliano's playing of the horn solo just before the first movement coda.

Is Boston still against Brahms? There was a constant procession to the exits. At the end, however, the audience rose to the bait at Leinsdorf's whipped-up coda to indulge in the provincial and by now automatic habit of clapping right into the last chord.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

Program Change

Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B flat will replace the Suite No. 1 by Bach on programs today at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The illness of soprano Leontyne Price, who was to have been soloist in two Strauss works, necessitated program changes early this week. Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct the first Boston performance of Robert Hall Lewis' Designs for Orchestra and the Symphony No. 2 of Brahms.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

DEC 12 1964

New Lewis 'Designs'

By Harold Rogers

We had been looking forward to hearing Leontyne Price at the weekend Boston Symphony concerts, singing excerpts from Strauss operas. But she had to cancel; she was not feeling well; and when she telephoned Erich Leinsdorf she told him she wanted to come before the end of the season. That is, provided her heavy schedule at the Metropolitan permits her to do so.

We hope she can. The substitute program Mr. Leinsdorf gave us would have been disappointing on any basis. It was doubly so owing to Miss Price's absence.

He opened with Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B-flat major, K. 319—another first performance at these concerts. All was pretty; all went well.

* * *

Then he offered the first Boston hearing of "Designs for Orchestra" by Robert Hall Lewis. Composed in 1963, this atonal work doubtless held the greatest inferest for the composer himself, though on first hearing it was not without its ingratiating moments. At the double bar Mr. Lewis ran to the stage to shake Mr. Leinsdorf's hand before the applause had dissipated. All contemporary composers have trained themselves for this sprint.

The "Designs" have much to commend them. In two connected movements—Passacaglia (an Adagio) and Allegro — Mr. Lewis displayed the happy ability to construct a sweeping melody, most listenable, and then punctuate it by little eddies of pizzicati or of pooping brass.

* * *

The melody sings its way from choir to choir in true passacaglia form as the tension builds. Then come some great growling chords that spew all over the orchestra, after which a certain relaxation sets in. There are some fine trilling effects that bubble up here and there; also some luscious string writing in closed position.

In the Allegro the tension again builds to a macrocosmic explosion, this time with tambourine. Then come a series of frenetic, spasmodic statements during which I completely lost interest. It turned gray in the ear.

* * *

This is the problem faced by any composer or conductor—that of holding the listener's attention. If a listener—especially an experienced listener—finds his thought wandering to extra-musical subjects, then he knows that all is not going right. The fault may lie either in the score or on the podium.

When Mr. Leinsdorf closed with the Brahms Symphony No. 2, all was pretty; all went well. But all was not going right. He did not infuse it with the excitement that he recently put into Menotti's "Death of the Bishop of Brin-

1 52 PROVIDENCE 3. SUN. DEC:13RD.

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 63.635 SUN. 194,795

DEC 6 1964

RICHARD BURGIN conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Sunday at 3:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

DEC 1 4 1964

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Concert Wins Ovation For Director

Richard Burgin, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given an ovation for the manner in which he brought out the drive and power, and also the graceful, florid and exquisite playing of those musicians Sunday in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Opening with Schubert's "Symphony No. 4 in C-Minor, 'Tragic,'" with its first movement divided with a pensive adagio molto and an animating allegro vivace there was no hint of the tragic in the grace and poetry of the music. A bit grave but not sad. However, in the andante, second movement, there was a haunting plaintiveness, an almost futile hopefulness.

Then in the third movement, menuetto: allegro vivace, the stately dance rhythm produced a false gaiety and a pseudo insouciance that seemed to be trying to suppress a foreboding of ill.

The finale, allegro, was a restless driving, almost frenzied, protestation of the recurring accented beats in the percussion that resembled the relentless blows of Fate.

The following modern work—Carter's "Variations For Orchestra" — was the kind of music to go to sleep by. When it didn't sound like fire crackers exploding and mosquitoes whining it was like a couple of kids with a lath on a picket fence or throwing rocks into a wash tub. It is a waste of genius to write a composition like that, a waste of talent to play it, and a waste of money if you had paid to listen to it.

There was musical imagery in every one of the "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky, Ravel arrangement, when Burgin called for color or shading and the tension built until the magnificent "Great Gate of Kiev" brought the audience to its feet cheering at its last, crashing chord. C. H. L.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 194,795

DEC 1 3 1964

MUSIC

TODAY

THE GUITAR GUILD will present a program at 3 p.m. at the William H. Hall Free Library, 1825 Broad St., Cranston.

Performers include Steven Fales, Thomas Greene, Mrs. Jacqueline Walker, Mrs. Ilsa Shaler and Lloyd Moon.

The program, open to the public without charge, is as follows:

Barcarole	Bellow
Suite	DiVisee
Indian Suite	Hoffer
Greensleeves	traditional
Sonata	Corelli

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra gives its third Providence program at 3:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor, will direct the orchestra in Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, Tragic, Carter's Variations for Orchestra and Moussorgsky's Pictures an Exhibition.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

DEC 1 4 1964

Music Yesterday

Hub Symphony Orchestra Plays at Vets Auditorium

By RUTH TRIPP

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played yesterday afternoon at Veterans Memorial Auditorium to an enthusiastic audience. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented an interesting program which featured a first performance in Providence of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. The audience also heard Schubert's Symphony No. 4 and the Ravel orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The Carter work generated much lively conversation at intermission with absolute strangers discussing its merits spiritedly as though they were old friends. Commissioned by the Louisville Symphony Orchestra, this piece was first played there in 1956. It will be some time before it makes the list of "50 favorites," indeed, if it ever does. But contemporary composers are not concerned with that distinction. They are concerned with expressing their musical ideas in a pattern that can be explained to their musical colleagues and possibly understood by them. In the process, they hope cheerfully that the public will also enjoy the results of their labors.

On the credit side, for this complex structure, three-cheers for Mr. Burgin and the boys from Boston. They made the double bar safely with only one or two worried moments. As for Carter, it is evident that his orchestral works are easier to take than his string quartets. The diffusion of his conflicting sounds over the many tonal areas of a large orchestra, lessens the pain of the more acute dissonance. He has very exciting rhythmic ideas and asks much of her performers. The timpanist seemed to need an extra pair of hands at one point.

There were many lovely moments in the gentler spots of the score and one of these was the exquisite melting away of the final variation. The themes were fragmentary. Before one of them could be identified securely, another choir of the orchestra would take it up and still a third. Yet at times, it was perfectly apparent that a theme was progressing in the retrograde fashion so dear to the serial writers. Solo instruments were frequently used and they performed well. Have your own opinion about Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra, but give the Boston Symphony Orchestra the credit due it for its presentation of a work by one of the outstanding contemporary American composers.

The Schubert Symphony was a pleasant adventure into familiar consonant music, a good opener. The Moussorgsky Pictures was a brilliant piece orchestral virtuosity, with the powerful impact, rhythm variety and descriptive episo required. Cheers followed triumphal ending of the "G Gate at Kiev" and each performer was singled out applause. The orchestra pla very well indeed and the audience left in a gay mood.

"Cambridge" 3. FRI-SAT. 11.

ASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eleventh Program

ERNOON, DECEMBER 18, at 2:00 o'clock

ATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 19, at 8:30 o'clock

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97

ace oderato assai llegro non troppo
Maestoso
Vivace

..........................Toccata Concertante

INTERMISSION

Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Vivace non troppo

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
Violin

JULES ESKIN
Cello

These concerts will end about 3:40 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN..................Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER............................Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
III. Andante
IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

Symphony Calendar

Orchestra Plans 5-Concert Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will give four concerts and an open rehearsal this week at Symphony Hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the programs through Saturday evening, and Richard Burgin will conduct next Sunday afternoon.

The Tuesday evening "Cambridge" concert will be telecast as usual by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and broadcast via Radio Station WGBH-FM, preceded by a half-hour interview with Mr. Leinsdorf and guests via Channel 2. The orchestra's program will begin with the Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115, by Schumann, and will conclude with Mahler's Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

Jules Eskin, principal cello of the orchestra, and Joseph Silverstein concertmaster, have been invited by Mr. Leinsdorf to be soloists at the Friday-Saturday concerts in the Brahms Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Op. 102. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with Schumann's Symphony No. 3, Op. 97, and the Toccata Concertante by the late Irving Fine, which received its world premiere by the Boston Symphony in 1949.

The orchestra's concert next Sunday afternoon, conducted by Richard Burgin, will begin with Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, and continue with the first performance in this series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. The program will close with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Mr. Burgin will conduct the above program in Providence this afternoon at the orchestra's third concert of the season in the Veterans Auditorium.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 18 1964

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN AND JULES ESKIN, concertmaster and principal cellist, respectively, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloists for the Brahms Double Concerto in A minor, Op. 102, at Symphony concerts today and tomorrow night.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 13 1964

Cellist at Symphony

The Boston Symphony's new solo cellist, Jules Eskin, will perform in Brahms' Double Concerto in A minor at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be the violinist. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The programs will open with Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97, and continue with the late Irving Fine's Toccata Concertante. The Boston Symphony gave the world premiere of the fine work in 1949.

The orchestra's concert of Sunday afternoon, Dec. 20, at 3, conducted by Richard Burgin, will begin with Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, and continue with the first performance in this series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 17 1964

BSO to Perform Irving Fine Work

Toccata Concertante by the late composer Irving Fine, who at his untimely death was head of the School of Fine and Applied Arts at Brandeis University, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at this weekend's Symphony Hall concerts, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf on Friday afternoon, Dec. 18 and Saturday evening, Dec. 19.

---

ewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 18 1964

Late Irving Fine Represented at BSO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present "Toccata Concertante" by the late Irving Fine, former chairman of Brandeis University's School of Creative Arts, today at 2 p.m. and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at Symphony Hall.

---

ng contemomposers.
mphony was ure into fa-usic, a good sorgsky Pi-ant piece of y, with all t, rhythmic ive episode ollowed the the "Great each solo gled out for estra played nd the audi-ood.

"CAMBRIDGE" 3. FRI. SAT. 11.

FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eleventh Program

FTERNOON, DECEMBER 18, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 19, at 8:30 o'clock

. . . Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97

- I. Vivace
- II. Moderato assai
- III. Allegro non troppo
- IV. Maestoso
- V. Vivace

FINE . . . . Toccata Concertante

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102

- I. Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Vivace non troppo

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN Violin	JULES ESKIN Cello

These concerts will end about 3:40 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN . . . . Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER . . . . Symphony No. 6, in A minor

- I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
- II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
- III. Andante
- IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 1 3 1964

Symphony Calendar

Orchestra Plans 5-Concert Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will give four concerts and an open rehearsal this week at Symphony Hall. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the programs through Saturday evening, and Richard Burgin will conduct next Sunday afternoon.

The Tuesday evening "Cambridge" concert will be telecast as usual by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and broadcast via Radio Station WGBH-FM, preceded by a half-hour interview with Mr. Leinsdorf and guests via Channel 2. The orchestra's program will begin with the Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115, by Schumann, and will conclude with Mahler's Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

Jules Eskin, principal cello of the orchestra, and Joseph Silverstein concertmaster, have been invited by Mr. Leinsdorf to be soloists at the Friday-Saturday concerts in the Brahms Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Op. 102. Mr. Leinsdorf will open the program with Schumann's Symphony No. 3, Op. 97, and the Toccata Concertante by the late Irving Fine, which received its world premiere by the Boston Symphony in 1949.

The orchestra's concert next Sunday afternoon, conducted by Richard Burgin, will begin with Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, and continue with the first performance in this series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. The program will close with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Mr. Burgin will conduct the above program in Providence this afternoon at the orchestra's third concert of the season in the Veterans Auditorium.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 1 8 1964

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN AND JULES ESKIN, concertmaster and principal cellist, respectively, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloists for the Brahms Double Concerto in A minor, Op. 102, at Symphony concerts today and tomorrow night.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 17 1964

BSO to Perform Irving Fine Work

Toccata Concertante by the late composer Irving Fine, who at his untimely death was head of the School of Fine and Applied Arts at Brandeis University, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at this weekend's Symphony Hall concerts, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf on Friday afternoon, Dec. 18 and Saturday evening, Dec. 19.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 1 3 1964

Cellist at Symphony

The Boston Symphony's new solo cellist, Jules Eskin, will perform in Brahms' Double Concerto in A minor at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be the violinist. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The programs will open with Schumann's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97, and continue with the late Irving Fine's Toccata Concertante. The Boston Symphony gave the world premiere of the fine work in 1949.

The orchestra's concert of Sunday afternoon, Dec. 20, at 3, conducted by Richard Burgin, will begin with Schubert's Symphony No. 4, in C minor, and continue with the first performance in this series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra.

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 1 8 1964

Late Irving Fine Represented at BSO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present "Toccata Concertante" by the late Irving Fine, former chairman of Brandeis University's School of Creative Arts today at 2 p.m. and tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at Symphony Hall.

Sk

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 1 6 1964

Cello Soloist

The Boston Symphony's new solo cellist, Jules Eskin, will join violinist Joseph Silverstein in the Brahms Double Concerto at the orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

DEC 1 9 1964

Missing ingredient

That extra something

By John Marshall Cuno

Craftsmanship of the first order, lively animation, and strong feeling were in evidence at the Friday afternoon concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. However, the performance lacked that extra ingredient — call it what you will: excitement, enthusiasm, love — which can turn a concert into something more than a listening experience.

Three selections emerged with about equal eloquence: Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony No. 3, Irving Fine's "Toccata Concertante," and the Brahms Double Concerto in A minor for violin and cello.

* * *

Most forceful of these was Fine's fairly short work with its syncopated and percussive elements. The strings here had their argumentative discourse with the horns, settled by the percussion section. It was much like someone raising his voice to produce a silence. The work became quite rhythmically angular and increasingly dynamic toward the end.

Fine called it "toccata" to suggest its fanfare qualities, and "concertante", because of its affinity with baroque concertos. A baroque energy was colorfully apparent. Solo wind instruments accompanied by strings were thematically articulate, as were trumpet, flute, and bassoon. The clarinets had their persuasive points to make. Erich Leinsdorf conducted this work with a rhythmic precision that inspired audience confidence.

* * *

Fine's Toccata was composed in 1947 and was performed by the Boston Sympony the next year. It is one of the most refreshingly contemporary things one could select for an interlude such as it became on Friday's program.

Schumann's symphony was marked by slowness of tempo, particularly in the first and second movements. But elegaic and lyric strains, contrasting themes in basses and violins, sudden and effective modulations, and a pleasantly urgent first theme, repeating itself with rhythmic variation, constituted an engaging opening movement for both the program and the Schumann work.

The third and fourth movements imparted, respectively, their tenderness and solemnity. Trombones and horns lifted the latter movement to the level of the majestically beautiful. But again, where was that extra needed ounce of inspiration?

* * *

The gay, energetic themes of the final movement brought the work to a strong close. But with all its sweeping, romantic individuality, the work still lacked power.

Jules Eskin, cello, and Joseph Silverstein, violin, produced a pleasant combination in the Brahms concerto, but the performance, generally orchestral as it is, with soloistic effects, sounded too much like a concerto for violin with cello accompaniment.

Mr. Eskin, nevertheless, as modestly unassuming as he is, could produce some beautiful measures, and Mr. Silverstein was his usual bright, but not brilliant, self.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 1 9 1964

Symphony

Most Thoroughly Satisfying Afternoon of the Season

By ROBERT TAYLOR

On paper, yesterday's program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems a humdrum affair. In performance it became the most thoroughly satisfying afternoon of the season so far.

One's advance misgivings were based on the fact that Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony, despite its felicities, is based on the free development of themes of a similar character — with the result that most readings are muddy and monotonous.

The Brahms double concerto, to the record collector who can quibble over the merits of Heifetz-Feuermann vs. Heifetz-Piatigorsky, would appear to demand virtuosi of exalted station. The Irving Fine Toccata Concertante was unfamiliar to me, but checking on the reviews of the prior BSO performance, Oct. 22, 1948, I discovered the work was praised rather dutifully as promising but academic.

As a matter of fact, the Toccata Concertante turned out to justify the evaluation Koussevitzky made of it: "a contemporary minor masterpiece." The good Doctor was prone to describe all new music he scheduled in the same phrase, but he was right in his enthusiasms more often than not, and he had the Fine score summarized accurately.

It is another illustration of the loss suffered by American music upon the composer's death at the age of forty-seven in August, 1962.

Fine Orchestration

The work is brilliant in its orchestration, and together with Elliott Carter's Variations constitutes the most imaginative modern U.S. music heard at Symphony this season. Irving Fine knew how to make an orchestra sound, and his striving in this piece for a stylistic affinity with "the energetic music of the Baroque concerto" results in a blend of rhythmic vitality and fastidious craftsmanship.

Nothing is overstressed: the textures of solo voice and ensemble are admirably balanced, the polyphonic form contains some of the dry melodic aphorisms of Stravinsky yet expresses subtle eloquence of its own. The polish and clarity of the musical ideas are remarkable. Concentrated, lyrical and bright, they add luster to the memory of a first-rate musical sensibility.

Demand on Soloists

The Brahms isn't done as often at these concerts as cursory examination of the program would suggest, for the last pairing (Francescatti-Mayes) eight years ago, ended a gap of 32 years. Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin, stepping from the first-desk ranks, gave a splendid performance, notable for its stylistic rapport and shapeliness of phrase.

The virtuoso side of this music demands a great deal of the soloists, but from the initial attack of Mr. Eskin it was plain the interpretation would be understated. What really counted more was unaminity of purpose, the dialogue between the solo instruments acquiring a noble cantabile tranquility from the elaborate opening cadenza onward passing from 'cello to violin.

Mr. Eskin did not stress largeness of tone; he and Mr. Silverstein, whose warmly-accented phrasing proceeded smoothly, achieved the chamber-music dynamics that really must be foremost, the double-stoppings and bowings of an intricately-interwoven utterance tinged with the colors of gypsy overtones in its reflective course.

Playing a concerto is not the same as expertise in orchestral matters. To the credit of both performers, who received excellent accompaniment from Mr. Leinsdorf, this was an eminently respectable account that said much for the quality of individual talent within the choirs of the Boston Symphony. The competition from itinerant virtuosi is stiff, but Messrs. Eskin and Silverstein more than held their comparative own.

Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony received a handsome treatment, with Mr. Leinsdorf taking the slow movement "adagio" rather than "moderato assai."

This had the considerable advantage of preparing one for the clarinet-and-bassoon tenderness of the third movement as a logical contrast to the heavier joviality of the scherzo, while the so-called "Cathedral scene" emerged in the carefully-blazoned pomp of a solidly-organized design. Enchanting in detail, interpreted with a becoming restraint, the performance was totally alive, and I am not inclined to quibble with Mr. Leinsdorf's concepts.

The next concert on the first days of 1965 features Haydn's "The Seasons," with Helen Boatwright, soprano, Charles Bressler, tenor, Thomas Paul, bass, and the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus prepared by Dr. Edward F. Gilday.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 11th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, 'cello, were the soloists. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major,
"Rhenish," Op. 97 .... Schumann
Toccata Concertante .... Fi
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violincello, Op. 102 .... Bra

55

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

[illegible] 1964

Symphony

Eskin's Official Debut: Brahms Double Concerto

[illegible] INBERG

[illegible] nearly [illegible] first sea- [illegible] of the [illegible] There have [illegible] opportunities to get an idea of his playing. He has been heard with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, the Boston Symphony String Quartet, and in several incidental solos that crop up in the symphonic literature.

But on Friday afternoon he made what in a sense was his official debut when he played in a performance of the Brahms Double Concerto with Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, as violin soloist, and with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

It was a beautiful performance of a work that is as far as any standard concerto from playing itself. It was a more intimate performance than most. Eskin's tone, though warm, is not large. His style is chamber-musical, rather quietly inflected, and without much outward dramatic projection. He resisted all temptation to force or to inflate his playing, and it was in its quiet way playing of impressively sensitive responsiveness and intelligence.

One of the great pleasures of the performance was the ensemble with Joseph Silverstein. His sound and style are also delicate, and the two soloists were perfectly matched to each other.

And this time there was not only the customary pleasure of Silverstein's impeccable intonation and violinist control, but there was also the greater pleasure of his lively and exquisite playing of the music.

The orchestra's contribution was excellent also, though perhaps just a little burly in the long opening ritornello of the first movement.

In the first half of the concert, Leinsdorf conducted Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony and the "Toccata Concertante" by the late Irving Fine.

When he wrote the "Toccata", which was in 1947, Fine was still a kind of satellite to Stravinsky, and his piece at every moment brings to mind the Symphony in Three Movements and to a slighter extent the Symphony in C also.

In the "Toccata Concertante" Fine speaks Stravinskian with less originality and so personal an imprint as does Arthur Berger in the "Poplyphony" which was played by the Symphony in October, but he handles the manner with skill and with flair.

Fine's "Toccata" is very effectively written for orchestra —enough so that one wonders why it is not heard more often —and its revival was an excellent thing to have happen.

Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony also went beautifully. There is a certain kind of performance Leinsdorf often strives for in which he conducts using the largest possible metric unit and with relaxed motions that convey a minimum sense of either sharp or heavy accent.

In this non-propulsive style there is the danger that the performance will not get off the ground at all. When, however, it does work, it can produce playing that is large in rhythmic stride, ample in its breathing, full of an easy and relaxed energy.

Friday afternoon's Schumann performance was one of the times when the approach worked, and it produced the most beautiful performance of the piece I have heard. It was lovely in sound except when some of the trumpet punctuations became a little over-prominent.

It had in the third movement a personal though almost private and restrained warmth of feeling, and a most imposing grandeur in the fourth movement. Best of all, it was clear for once what a good piece this symphony is.

A good concert!

SUNDAY 3. TUESDAY 5

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 20, at 3:00 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT . . . . Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

- I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
- IV. Allegro

CARTER . . . . Variations for Orchestra

Introduction — Allegro
Theme — Andante
Variations — Vivace leggero
Pesante
Moderato
Ritardando molto
Allegro misterioso
Accelerando molto
Andante
Allegro giocoso
Andante
Allegro molto

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY . . . . "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT . . . . Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"

- I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
- IV. Allegro

CARTER . . . . Variations for Orchestra

Introduction — Allegro
Theme — Andante
Variations — Vivace leggero
Pesante
Moderato
Ritardando molto
Allegro misterioso
Accelerando molto
Andante
Allegro giocoso
Andante
Allegro molto

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY . . . . "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

DEC 2 1964

The Sound of Musi

BSO's Dreary Night

By Peter M. Knapp

Most of the Boston Symphony's program last night turned out as dreary as the weather outside.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, isn't the most subtle of interpreters, and in fact has no little trouble merely in keeping his musicians together. His direction last night was uninspired and probably the instrumentalists were delighted to disband for their holiday vacation.

As the capstone to his program, Mr. Burgin selected the orchestral version of Moussorgsky's "Pictures At An Exhibition" that Maurice Ravel arranged from the original piano score. This was probably the best effort by conductor and orchestra last night, and it was hardly memorable.

Loses Impact

As a piano work, it is a tremendous composition, and pianists could spend years experimenting with its variety of effects. But as an orchestral piece, the musical description of a posthumous exhibit of the architect-artist Victor Hartmann's "pictures" seems to lose much of its effect.

Ravel was one of six musicians who felt compelled to transcribe the Moussorgsky work for orchestra. His version is colorful and brilliant, yet suggests vast, epic canvasses rather than the deftly-characterized miniatures of Moussorgsky's piano composition. At its worst, with all the fiddles sawing away, brass blaring and battery setting up a barrage, the Ravel orchestration is bombastic and tasteless. At its best, it seems as germane to Moussorgsky's intentions as scoring Wagner for an ensemble of harmonicas. It may be done — but why?

Occasionally in last night's reading there were some admirable touches. The virtuosity of the Boston Symphony's first-desk players was evident in the many solos sprinkled throughout the score, and sometimes there was fine section playing as well. But overall, the "Pictures" came out in a straight-forward and unimpelling manner, as if the tonal icing had been scraped off and the substance neglected.

Carter's 'Variations'

Mr. Burgin departed from convention to present Elliott Carter's "Variations for Orchestra" before intermission. Premiered in 1956, Mr. Carter's "Variations" employs a sizable instrumentation and every musician gets a good workout.

Mr. Carter is hardly avant garde, and the "Variations" is not filled with the kind of screaming dissonance that make audiences take early intermissions. His scoring is intricate, it has a solid formal structure, and the piece is colorful and full of virtuosity.

Yet it seems primarily composed for musicians, rather than audiences who might get a chance to hear it only once. At first hearing, the theme seems vague, and of course without a solid grasp of the basic tune, it's difficult to appreciate the various transformations of it the composer has worked out.

In this aspect, Mr. Carter's "Variations" seem to share a common bond with much of contemporary music which makes extraordinary demands upon sophisticated listening, and quite often the technique may be more readily digested on paper than aurally. In last night's performance, Mr. Carter's "Variations" could be listened to as a showpiece of contrasting tonal masses, but it was utterly cold emotionally.

Heavy Schubert

The program opened with a heavy-handed interpretation of Schubert's Symphony No. 4 in c minor, the "Tragic." The title is not particularly apt, since there is nothing really "tragic" about this symphony of the 19-year-old Schubert. Its excursions into the minor don't last long and there is an abundance of the sunny melody for which the Austrian composer is noted.

Mr. Burgin, however, chose to accent the symphony's darker side, and only in the finale were there flashes of the light, classical texture Schubert employed in much of this work. The performance often sounded clumsy, was marred by sloppy entrances and releases, and a muddy ensemble sound. Whether Mr. Burgin or the orchestra had the worse time is a moot point.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 20 1964

Burgin to Conduct Today, Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will take a week's vacation beginning Wednesday and there will be no Symphony Hall concerts this Friday and Saturday, Dec. 25-26.

The orchestra will give two concerts, however before adjourning. Richard Burgin will conduct the third program of the Sunday Afternoon Series this afternoon at 3 and the fifth program of the Tuesday Evening Series on Dec. 22 at 8:30.

Burgin's program for both concerts will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic," and will continue with the first performance in each of the series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. He will conclude with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be on Jan. 1 and 2, when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will consist of a complete performance of "The Seasons" ("Die Jahreszeiten") by Franz Josef Haydn. Leinsdorf has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to join the orchestra for this performance, in recognition of the 150th season of the chorus, which is the oldest active choral society in America. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

SUNDAY 3. TUESDAY 5

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 20, at 3:00 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT .... Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"
- I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
- IV. Allegro

CARTER .... Variations for Orchestra
- Introduction — Allegro
- Theme — Andante
- Variations — Vivace leggero
  - Pesante
  - Moderato
  - Ritardando molto
  - Allegro misterioso
  - Accelerando molto
  - Andante
  - Allegro giocoso
  - Andante
  - Allegro molto

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY .... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries —
Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells —
Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace —
Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) —
The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SCHUBERT .... Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"
- I. Adagio molto; Allegro vivace
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
- IV. Allegro

CARTER .... Variations for Orchestra
- Introduction — Allegro
- Theme — Andante
- Variations — Vivace leggero
  - Pesante
  - Moderato
  - Ritardando molto
  - Allegro misterioso
  - Accelerando molto
  - Andante
  - Allegro giocoso
  - Andante
  - Allegro molto

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY .... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries —
Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells —
Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace —
Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) —
The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

DEC 2 [illegible]64

The Sound of Musi

BSO's Dreary Night

By Peter M. Knapp

Most of the Boston Symphony's program last night turned out as dreary as the weather outside.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, isn't the most subtle of interpreters, and in fact has no little trouble merely in keeping his musicians together. His direction last night was uninspired and probably the instrumentalists were delighted to disband for their holiday vacation.

As the capstone to his program, Mr. Burgin selected the orchestral version of Moussorgsky's "Pictures At An Exhibition" that Maurice Ravel arranged from the original piano score. This was probably the best effort by conductor and orchestra last night, and it was hardly memorable.

Loses Impact

As a piano work, it is a tremendous composition, and pianists could spend years experimenting with its variety of effects. But as an orchestral piece, the musical description of a posthumous exhibit of the architect-artist Victor Hartmann's "pictures" seems to lose much of its effect.

Ravel was one of six musicians who felt compelled to transcribe the Moussorgsky work for orchestra. His version is colorful and brilliant, yet suggests vast, epic canvasses rather than the deftly-characterized miniatures of Moussorgsky's piano composition. At its worst, with all the fiddles sawing away, brass blaring and battery setting up a barrage, the Ravel orchestration is bombastic and tasteless. At its best, it seems as germane to Moussorgsky's intentions as scoring Wagner for an ensemble of harmonicas. It may be done — but why?

Occasionally in last night's reading there were some admirable touches. The virtuosity of the Boston Symphony's first-desk players was evident in the many solos sprinkled throughout the score, and sometimes there was fine section playing as well. But overall, the "Pictures" came out in a straight-forward and uncompelling manner, as if the tonal icing had been scraped off and the substance neglected.

Carter's 'Variations'

Mr. Burgin departed from convention to present Elliott Carter's "Variations for Orchestra" before intermission. Premiered in 1956, Mr. Carter's "Variations" employs a sizable instrumentation and every musician gets a good workout.

Mr. Carter is hardly avant garde, and the "Variations" is not filled with the kind of screaming dissonance that make audiences take early intermissions. His scoring is intricate, it has a solid formal structure, and the piece is colorful and full of virtuosity.

Yet it seems primarily composed for musicians, rather than audiences who might get a chance to hear it only once. At first hearing, the theme seems vague, and of course without a solid grasp of the basic tune, it's difficult to appreciate the various transformations of it the composer has worked out.

In this aspect, Mr. Carter's "Variations" seem to share a common bond with much of contemporary music which makes extraordinary demands upon sophisticated listening, and quite often the technique may be more readily digested on paper than aurally. In last night's performance, Mr. Carter's "Variations" could be listened to as a showpiece of contrasting tonal masses, but it was utterly cold emotionally.

Heavy Schubert

The program opened with a heavy-handed interpretation of Schubert's Symphony No. 4 in c minor, the "Tragic." The title is not particularly apt, since there is nothing really "tragic" about this symphony of the 19-year-old Schubert. Its excursions into the minor don't last long, and there is an abundance of the sunny melody for which the Austrian composer is noted.

Mr. Burgin, however, chose to accent the symphony's darker side, and only in the finale were there flashes of the light, classical texture Schubert employed in much of this work. The performance often sounded clumsy, was marred by sloppy entrances and releases, and a muddy ensemble sound. Whether Mr. Burgin or the orchestra had the worse time is a moot point.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 20 1964

Burgin to Conduct Today, Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will take a week's vacation beginning Wednesday and there will be no Symphony Hall concerts this Friday and Saturday, Dec. 25-26.

The orchestra will give two concerts, however before adjourning. Richard Burgin will conduct the third program of the Sunday Afternoon Series this afternoon at 3 and the fifth program of the Tuesday Evening Series on Dec. 22 at 8:30.

Burgin's program for both concerts will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic," and will continue with the first performance in each of the series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. He will conclude with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be on Jan. 1 and 2, when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will consist of a complete performance of "The Seasons" ("Die Jahreszeiten") by Franz Josef Haydn. Leinsdorf has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to join the orchestra for this performance, in recognition of the 150th season of the chorus, which is the oldest active choral society in America. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

FRI.-SAT. 12.

NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twelfth Program

RNOON, JANUARY 1, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 2, at 8:30 o'clock

. . . . . . .The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")

SPRING (DER FRÜHLING)

SUMMER (DER SOMMER)

INTERMISSION

AUTUMN (DER HERBST)

WINTER (DER WINTER)

(First performance at these concerts)

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, Soprano

CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor

THOMAS PAUL, Bass

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY CHORUS

DR. EDWARD F. GILDAY, Director

These concerts will end about 4:25 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:55 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 2 7 1964

Program at Symphony

Three performances of Haydn's "The Seasons" will be given in Symphony Hall this week. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra made up of Boston Symphony players, the Handel and Haydn Society chorus and a vocal trio, Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 and Tuesday, Jan. 5, at 8:30.

The Handel and Haydn Society was invited to participate in recognition of the chorus' 150th season. Soloists will include Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bresler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass. Miss Boatwright and Bresler have been guest artists with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood but not with the orchestra in Symphony Hall.

"The Seasons", composed in 1799 and 1800, will receive its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. It has been performed three times previously by the Handel and Haydn Society, in 1875, 1906, and 1957. Three other performances, complete or partial, appear to have been given in Boston, the earliest in 1851.

The Handel and Haydn Society, America's oldest active choral society, was founded March 24, 1815, for the purpose of "improving the performance of sacred music and introducing into general use the works of Handel and Haydn and other eminent composers." Its many distinctions include the publication in 1821 of one of the first American anthologies of great choral music; the first American performances of Handel's "Messiah," Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Bach's "St. Matthew Passion;" nearly 1000 performances of over 100 major choral works; the provision of scholarships to talented young singers; and many important benefit performances. The tion of the society will culminate next Fall with an international choral festival in Boston, the first of its kind ever held in the United States.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 2 9 1964

Helen Boatwright will sing in the Boston Symphony performances of Haydn's "The Seasons" Friday, Saturday and next Tuesday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 2 3 1964

Symphony Box Office On Week's Vacation

Beginning today, the Symphony Hall box-office will be closed for the holidays until Wednesday, Dec. 30. On Monday, Jan. 4 at 10 a.m., the remaining tickets will go on sale at Symphony Hall for the performances by the Berlin Philharmonic under Herbert Von Karajan on Wednesday, Jan. 20, the Jose Greco Spanish Dance Company on Friday, Jan. 22, and for the recital by Artur Rubinstein, on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 24.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 2 7 1964

With H-H Society Chorus

Symphony Offers Haydn's 'Seasons'

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a complete performance of Haydn's "The Seasons" at the orchestra's weekend concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening and also at its Tuesday evening concert next week (Jan. 5).

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to participate in these performances, in recognition of the Society's 150th season and its strong influence as a musical force of international scope since its inception in 1815. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, basso. Accompanying will be a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony.

"The Seasons," composed in 1799 and 1800, will receive its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. It has been performed three times previously by the Handel and Haydn Society, 1875, 1906, and 1957. Three other performances, complete or partial, appear to have been given in Boston, the earliest in 1851.

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, a native of Wisconsin, who is well known for her performance of early music and of oratorio, has appeared recently at Tanglewood, but this will be her first appearance at Symphony Hall as a guest of the Boston Symphony. Charles Bressler, born in Pennsylvania and graduated from the Juilliard School, is also noted for his oratorio work and until recently was a member of the New York Pro Musica; he too has appeared at Tanglewood but will be guest soloist with the orchestra in Boston for the first time at these performances.

Thomas Paul will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. Now in his third season with the New York City Opera, he is a Californian who was previously a violinist, violist and conductor, and was urged to turn to singing while a graduate conductor at the Juilliard School. He has sung extensively in the United States in both opera and oratorio.

Robert Taylor Is on Vacation

His Notes on Music Will Resume on January 10

FRI.-SAT. 12.

EIGH -FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twelfth Program

FRID AFTERNOON, JANUARY 1, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 2, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ....The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")

SPRING (DER FRÜHLING)
SUMMER (DER SOMMER)

INTERMISSION

AUTUMN (DER HERBST)
WINTER (DER WINTER)
(First performance at these concerts)

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, Soprano
CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor
THOMAS PAUL, Bass

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY CHORUS
DR. EDWARD F. GILDAY, Director

These concerts will end about 4:25 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:55 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 27 1964

Program at Symphony

Three performances of Haydn's "The Seasons" will be given in Symphony Hall this week. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra made up of Boston Symphony players, the Handel and Haydn Society chorus and a vocal trio, Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday at 8:30 and Tuesday, Jan. 5 at 8:30.

The Handel and Haydn Society was invited to participate in recognition of the chorus' 150th season. Soloists will include Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bresler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass. Miss Boatwright and Bresler have been guest artists with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood but not with the orchestra in Symphony Hall.

"The Seasons", composed in 1799 and 1800, will receive its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. It has been performed three times previously by the Handel and Haydn Society, in 1875, 1906, and 1957. Three other performances, complete or partial, appear to have been given in Boston, the earliest in 1851.

The Handel and Haydn Society, America's oldest active choral society, was founded March 24, 1815, for the purpose of "improving the performance of sacred music and introducing into general use the works of Handel and Haydn and other eminent composers." Its many distinctions include the publication in 1821 of one of the first American anthologies of great choral music; the first American performances of Handel's "Messiah," Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Bach's "St. Matthew Passion;" nearly 1000 performances of over 100 major choral works; the provision of scholarships to talented young singers; and many important benefit performances. The tion of the society will culminate next Fall with an international choral festival in Boston, the first of its kind ever held in the United States.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 29 1964

Helen Boatwright will sing in the Boston Symphony performances of Haydn's "The Seasons" Friday, Saturday and next Tuesday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

DEC 23 1964

Symphony Box Office On Week's Vacation

Beginning today, the Symphony Hall box-office will be closed for the holidays until Wednesday, Dec. 30. On Monday, Jan. 4 at 10 a.m., the remaining tickets will go on sale at Symphony Hall for the performances by the Berlin Philharmonic under Herbert Von Karajan on Wednesday, Jan. 20, the Jose Greco Spanish Dance Company on Friday, Jan. 22, and for the recital by Artur Rubinstein, on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 24.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 27 1964

With H-H Society Chorus

Symphony Offers Haydn's 'Seasons'

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a complete performance of Haydn's "The Seasons" at the orchestra's weekend concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening and also at its Tuesday evening concert next week (Jan. 5).

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to participate in these performances, in recognition of the Society's 150th season and its strong influence as a musical force of international scope since its inception in 1815. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, basso. Accompanying will be a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony.

"The Seasons," composed in 1799 and 1800, will receive its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at these concerts. It has been performed three times previously by the Handel and Haydn Society, 1875, 1906, and 1957. Three other performances, complete or partial, appear to have been given in Boston, the earliest in 1851.

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, a native of Wisconsin, who is well known for her performance of early music and of oratorio, has appeared recently at Tanglewood, but this will be her first appearance at Symphony Hall as a guest of the Boston Symphony. Charles Bressler, born in Pennsylvania and graduated from the Juilliard School, is also noted for his oratorio work and until recently was a member of the New York Pro Musica; he too has appeared at Tanglewood but will be guest soloist with the orchestra in Boston for the first time at these performances.

Thomas Paul will make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony. Now in his third season with the New York City Opera, he is a Californian who was previously a violinist, violist and conductor, and was urged to turn to singing while a graduate conductor at the Juilliard School. He has sung extensively in the United States in both opera and oratorio.

Robert Taylor Is on Vacation

His Notes on Music Will Resume on January 10

1 58

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4300

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 2 1965

At Symphony

Leinsdorf Conducts Haydn's 'Seasons'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Haydn's great oratorio, 'The Seasons,' was given at Friday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert. Erich Leinsdorf conducted, the chorus was that of the Handel and Haydn Society, Dr. Edward F. Gilday, director, and the soloists were Helen Boatwright, soprano, Charles Bressler, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

The intensity and variety of Haydn's invention was never more exciting than in this amazing achievement from the end of his career. The listener is astounded by the expressive range that encompasses the earthiness of the hunting and drinking as well as the contemplation of the man who sees suddenly the parallel between the Winter of the year and the Winter of life itself.

Still more, though, the listener is spellbound, and finally really moved, by the life behind the art. That life emerges not only in the personal high spirits, no matter whether in praise of the Lord or in praise of hunting rabbits, but in the flow of musical invention those high spirits called forth. The freshness of the harmony, the rhythm, the writing for the instruments, makes something special of nearly every bar. If you stop to examine even the simplest things—the final cadences of arias and choruses, for example—you discover that nothing is routine.

That 'The Seasons' was given is, then, a cause for rejoicing. It was also in many respects given very well. The chorus sang with a clean and solid sound though it lacks the brilliance Haydn's music needs. I had the impression that it responded less directly to Leinsdorf than it does to Dr. Gilday: the enthusiasm so characteristic of its work usually was not so striking this time, and especially in the numbers of predominantly secular preoccupations, the effect was a bit tame. The German diction was less than first-rate also.

The solo singing was of great distinction. Paul was a little dry of voice, but sang with fine musicianship and intelligence. Good as he was, it was evident that Mrs. Boatwright and Bressler are artists in quite a different category. Their voices are beautiful, though not glamorous, and they use them with an alert responsiveness to the words and to harmonic changes that becomes a delight to follow in just the way that Haydn's music itself is.

The orchestra was reduced. Double wind in the choruses would have been most welcome, and it was a real loss to have the hunting horns cut back from four to two. The playing, as such, of Haydn's very difficult parts was very good, though not on an even plane of excellence in all the woodwind solos.

'The Seasons' is a long work, and Leinsdorf cut it considerably. Not counting some passages of secco recitative, he eliminated one piece entirely and made excisions in nine others. Actually, he will hardly have saved more than 20 minutes, but I would still call the cuts considerable because of the damage they did.

It is important that works like 'The Seasons' be included in the symphony's repertory, but they must be given without the falsification brought about by such hacking at the Summer storm scene of the final chorus. The people whose listening mechanism automatically turns off at four o'clock walked out at the end of Autumn anyway; for the remainder, enjoyment would not have been diminished by the extra minutes of music by a composer whose sense of form and proportion was notably fine as well as grand.

The ARTS

By eliminating the expansiveness of so much of the music, Leinsdorf eliminated also some of the variety and energy of the work. For all its tastefulness in details, the performance lacked a life-giving sense of pace. It is not much that tempi were too fast or two slow, but they were not vividly characterized.

Everything seemed to move at the same pace, and the performances seemed not to keep up with the fascinating and unpredictable life in the music itself. So while Leinsdorf was a careful leader—and except for his surgery a musicianly one—he was not an enlivening interpreter of the miraculous music.

, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4300

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

AN 6 1965

The Sound of Music

BSO Starts The Year With 'The Seasons'

By Peter M. Knapp

The New Year is a particularly good time to bring forth a festive and relatively seldom-performed score.

Such a work was the choice of Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony for last night's concert in Symphony Hall: Franz Joseph Haydn's oratorio "The Seasons."

It was a refreshing experience for Symphony Hall concert-goers, many of whom perhaps had not heard the work before. There have been only five complete performances of "The Seasons" in Boston previously, and only two this century, the last in 1957. Mr. Leinsdorf's series represents the first time the Boston Symphony has done it.

For this large-scaled, hour and three-quarter composition, Mr. Leinsdorf and the Symphony were joined by the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus and soloists Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

Musical Images

"The Seasons" is not an overwhelming work, and one often hears that it lacks power. Well, of course, it isn't intended to be a Verdi's "Requiem," although the storm in Mr. Leinsdorf's hands becomes a kind of awesome echo of the "Dies Irae" in that work.

Haydn's oratorio rather is a series of pastoral tableaux, full of musical-pictorial images, laced with sly humor, and containing more than one lovely melody. Its choral portions rarely overwhelm, but they are tuneful and sturdily crafted.

Above all, Haydn's music rose far above the cumbersome text (a German translation by his friend, Baron Gottfried von Swieten, of a lengthy poem by the Scottish poet, James Thompson). With "The Creation," "The Seasons" stands as the composer's substantial choral testament, in the last decade of his life.

The work, of course, is divided into four parts, with choral passages alternating with recitatives and arias. The characters are Simon, a farmer, (bass), Hanne, his daughter (soprano), and Lukas, a young farmer (tenor).

Cycle Of Seasons

Spring starts off the cycle, with songs of praise for the passage of winter; the five-part summer section follows the course of a summer's day from sunrise through an evening storm; in autumn, there is a hunting scene and a peasant binge, and winter brings a fireside spinning song and Simon's philosophical musings about the transcience of life.

The problem with a composition of this size is how to sustain it. Certainly there were moments when pace slackened and interest lagged. But Mr. Leinsdorf's direction was consistently superb—and one marvels at his meticulous attention to the details which make the score so fascinating.

Deserving special mention are the hunting scene, beginning with the orchestral accompaniment to Simon's aria depicting the dog darting through the grass and snuffling on the scent—a racing passage for the strings—and the boisterous full cry of the hunt, as well as the humorous, rough drinking scene that follows. For the first time in memory, Mr. Leinsdorf also used a baton on occasion.

The Handel and Haydn Chorus sang sturdily throughout, and with more flexibility in the second half, working out some initial stiffness. And the soloists were quite good: Mr. Paul with his clean, resonant, masculine bass; Mr. Bressler with his flair for drama and impeccable technique, and Miss Boatwright, in the slower sections, having one of her better nights.

Their diction in the German text was exemplary. Miss Boatwright, though, still has trouble with the more difficult florid passages, and her breathing technique is dismal.

---

10 A THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, DEC. 13, 1964

Robert Taylor's Notes

Mahler's Sixth Is Worthy Despite Whack by Criti

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf's revival of Mahler's Sixth Symphony has inspired a call for audience revolt. Applying such emotionally-charged epithets as "shrieking," "interminable," and "in the name of decency," Delos Smith, the critic for the United Press, proposes that audiences hiss and howl against such revivals as that of the Sixth and Strauss's "Elektra," as recently programmed by William Steinberg, conducting The New York Philharmonic.

Aside from the questionable therapeutic grace of Mr. Smith's manifesto, if placed into practice (the picture of Mr. Leinsdorf amid a shower of vegetables hurled by a Friday afternoon audience is a bemusing one), the critic reveals a response that is not indifference.

He is evidently under the impression that conductors like sadistically to provoke audiences in order to get talked about; that "Elektra" and the Mahler have been condemned by a perceptive posterity; and that tar-and-feathers are too gentle a treatment for the miscreant maestros, Steinberg and Leinsdorf.

SOMETHING must have gotten across in order to bother Mr. Smith; it takes a powerful communication to induce a powerful response. And so, this morning, we should like to urge Mr. Leinsdorf if possible to repeat the performance on a Symphony program of the future, for Mahler's Sixth—if we may toss a posy through the dowager lynch mob—has been the highlight so far of the 84th season of the BSO.

It is a big work, a vital score, charged with grandeur, eloquence and remarkable drama. Everything about it discloses Mahler's mastery of orchestral components, from the "Heerdeglocken," or cowbells employed to suggest a lyric Alpine dimension of bucolic simplicity, the "Rute" (a brush of twigs struck upon a hard surface), to the melodic tints of English and French horn in the cantabile andante, which is infinitely seraphic in its high string harmonics.

BUT THE SIXTH is not only the statement of a master orchestrator and compelling symphonist, it also represents an advance in Mahler's musical language, far beyond anything expressed in the preceding symphonies, and seldom exceeded in the later.

It is true that he abandons in it the notion of "progressive tonality," which he was to reinvoke in the Seventh, but in such matters of detail as the "hammer-blows" of the finale, which are introduced at climactic points before and after the extended development (Mahler specified they should be dull and oppressive rather than ringing out like a blacksmith on an anvil), he attains a form that follows the thematic material rather than having that material poured into it arbitrarily.

The Sixth Symphony has not received the praise that has been lavished on other Mahler scores, but the reason is obvious: the pessimistic character of the conclusion. The harmonic means are simplicity itself, the major triad sinking to the minor, and the utter, bleak despair implied by this direct, inexorable comment leaves no space at all for optimism.

STILL, IF the symphony ends on a note of deterministic darkness, everything about it is executed on the level of celestial brilliance. The sublimity of the slow movement and the so-called "Alma" theme in the opening pages represent a radiant tranquility as exalting as the Bird Song on Judgment Day in Mahler's Second.

The music is, of course, an "absolute" symphony, despite the verbal weighting of such necessary comments as "despair" or "radiance," nevertheless, on the most elemental level of response, one can sense in the music the tensions between an outwardly mellow calm and the intrusive shadows of spectral prophecy. The cowbells are similar to the heavenly allusions of the Fourth, invoking a mood of other-worldliness which eventually ebbs into the dark.

The Sixth Symphony is so vast in layout that one would welcome the opportunity to hear it once more. The details are many, subtle and complex. Mr. Leinsdorf would do a service by carrying forward a task nobly begun—and if any tumbrils are waiting outside the hall, they ought to be wreathed with garlands.

'The Seasons' Work of Haydn's Last Years To Be Sung at Symphony

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Haydn's "The Seasons" will be sung at the next group of Boston Symphony concerts and it is hard to think of a happier way of beginning the New Year.

Haydn worked on the music from 1798 until 1801, and though he died only in [illegible] "The Seasons," along with the "Creation Mass" of 1801 and the "Wind Band Mass" of 1802, actually brought his career to a close.

T[illegible] were not [illegible] Haydn. He [illegible] old; 1802 [illegible] turned 70. [illegible]ever, become [illegible] physically, kept [illegible]mfortable by [illegible] troubled by [illegible] failing eyesight, [illegible] anything tor- [illegible] mental fatigue [illegible]ult for him [illegible] work.

[illegible] and biogra- [illegible], he said, "I [illegible] to the world any [illegible] to be waited on [illegible] of like a little [illegible] high time God [illegible] to Himself." In [illegible] admited defeat. [illegible] he had two move- [illegible] string quartet be- [illegible] years previously to [illegible] & Haertel. He knew [illegible] not finish. It was [illegible] too, in which he had [illegible] cards made, bear- [illegible] imprint of a quotation [illegible] of his four-part [illegible] "Gone is all my [illegible]ngth, Old and feeble am I."

For all this, Haydn blamed "The Seasons." The success of "The Creation," completed in 1798, had been such that his patron, the Baron van Swieten, insisted on another oratorio from Haydn.

Van Swieten, a former diplomat and then Court Librarian, had prepared the libretto for "The Creation," using "Paradise Lost" as source.

Again he turned to English literature, this time to "The Seasons" of James Thomson, and along with the libretto, he gave Haydn astonishing detailed instruction as to how it was to be set.

This angered Haydn, especially things like, "Here I want to hear the wailing cry of the owl," "Vulgar Frenchified trash" was Haydn's opinion of such pictorial detail, fit perhaps for someone like Gretry.

Hadyn disliked the text anyway: After the angels of "The Creation," the flatfooted sententiousness of the Thomson-Swieten peasants annoyed it.

And even though "The Seasons" was an immense success at its first performance, Haydn continued to harbor a grudge against it.

Haydn was full of plans for after "The Seasons", plans, that included another oratorio—he had thought about The Last Judgment as a possible topic—and another set of six string quartets.

When he died, he believed still that the effort of completing "The Seasons", partly against his will, had incapacitated him.

What made those years so painful was that only the ability actually to work out and articulate ideas was gone. The mind was as inventive as ever.

To another biographer, the landscape painter Dies, Haydn gave a vivid account of his pitiful condition: "Musical ideas pursue me to the point of torture. I cannot get rid of them; they stand before me like a wall. If it is an allegro that pursues me, pulse beats faster. I cannot sleep; if an adagio, I find my pulse beating more slowly. My imagination plays upon me as if I were a keyboard . . . I really am a living keyboard.

The music in "The Seasons" makes all this very unbelieveable. The whole late flowering of Haydn's choral style is incredible in itself.

Beginning in 1796, a year after his last symphonies, Haydn composed besides the two oratories six settings of the Mass and the C major Te Deum. And never had he seemed so youthful and inventive. The String Quartets bear it out also: the older he was, the more adventurous he became.

The harmony of "The Seasons" takes one's breath away constantly.

Once, the young Mozart had learned from the older and more experienced Haydn. After Mozart died in 1791, not quite 36, Haydn began to learn from him, and he absorbed with ever greater assurance the chromatic richness of Mozart's style. One great example of Mozartean Haydn is the Prelude to "The Creation;" its peer is in 'Winter" in "The Seasons," in the Introduction "that paints the thick fogs. The same manner is continued with fantastic power in the tenor aria, "Hier steht der Wand'rer," about the wanderer lost in the blizzard, and again with a fragrant, really Mozartan subtlely in the surprising cadences of the Spinning Chorus.

Certain details are extensions of devices Haydn had used most of his life, and which owe nothing to Mozart.

These are the tremendous harmonic leaps that propel the music forward so energetically. There is a wonderful example in those amazing spurts of power at the end of the Trio with Chorus in "Autumn," "So lohnet die Natur."

It is found in the quiet of Hanne's description of a Summer landscape, "Willkommen jetzt," and the boldest example of it is in the wild chorus in praise of wine and beer that concludes "Autumn." And let us not forget the Hunting Chorus that starts in D and so casually ends in E flat, for all the world as though it were something of Mahler's!

The Hunting Chorus brings to mind the sound of its quartet of high horns in unison, and how dazzling the orchestral writing is throughout "The Seasons."

There are those powerful four opening measures; the snow falling from the rocks through two and a half octaves; the high flute as harbinger of Spring; the double octaves for violins and bassoon in "Schon eilet froh der Ackersmann," the aria in which the piccolo plays a bit from the "Surprise" Symphony to portray the farmer as he whistles behind his plow; the oboe's cockcrow; the bassoon in the area about the pointer and the pheasant; the pizzicato passage in D flat just before the thunder breaks at the end of "Summer", the unforgetable mixture of loud first trumpet and contrabassoon against soft second trumpet, flute, obes, bassoons, and timpani, as the final Trio and Chorus opens.

Once, when Dr. Theodor Billroth had been reading through "The Seasons," he wrote to his friend Brahms, "Haydn seems to be almost bolder and more secure than Mozart."

Billroth spoke truth: There is in Haydn's last music precisely that quality of boldness with a maturity and a sense of beauty. The literature has no greater treasure, and a performance of "The Seasons" is a red-letter day in any musical community.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 2 7 1964

---

vEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 6 1964

A Problem

Inaudible Harpsichords In 18th Century Music

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

STEINBERG

The problem of when and how to use a harpsichord in the orchestral or ensemble music of the 17th and 18th centuries is so complex that to write so brief a column about it seems an impertinence.

Nonetheless, I intend to run the risk for the sake of attempting to clarify at least some basic points.

In the period, roughly, from 1600 to 1770, composers did not write out everything they intended to be played and heard.

Most ornaments, for example, were not notated, but they were expected, and without them the music is incomplete.

Then—and this is the present issue—composers often wrote lown only the top and bottom of the music, expecting the middle to be filled out n performance on some instrument or instruments capable of playing chords.

"Top and bottom" should ot be taken too literaly. In he early Symphony No. 21, erformed recently by Erich einsdorf and the Boston Symphony Haydn writes out some of the middle as well, but less of it than he would have wished to hear. The improvised, or at least not fully notated, supplementing of the music is necessary here.

The choice of instruments can be complicated also, but the following is a rough and certainly usable guide: Organ in church music, harpischord in chamber music and most orchestral pieces, and in the theater harpischord also, but probably things like lute and harp as well.

Skeletons and Chasms

So far it sounds easy, but it is not. For instance, a harpsichord is not ideally heard in a room the size of Symphony Hall, and even when the conductor reduces the size of the orchestra to 18th century proportions, the instruments themselves are louder and more brilliant than their earlier counterparts.

Beecham used to deal with the problem by orchestrating what would normally be played at the keyboard.

He once said he disliked the harpsichord because he did not wish, while conducting Handel, to be put in mind of skeletons on a tin roof.

Koussevitsky used to leave it out altogether, leaving grim chasms that can be heard in his recordings of the Brandenburg Concertos.

Nowadays word has gotten around pretty well that the keyboard instrument is desirable, and one is not surprised to see it on stage when a Handel Concerto or an early Haydn Symphony is on the program.

But one harpsichordist I know likes to tell the story of how he played the St. Matthew Passion under a famous conductor who afterwards said to him, "It was marvellous. The balance was just right. I couldn't hear the harpsichord at all." And another player tells about the same conductor that balance was at last achieved to his satisfaction at the point when, in response to repeated requests for less harpsichord, the harpsichordist had taken off all stops so that he was playing on a silent keyboard.

The harpsichord has a function, and that function is an auditory one. Harmony and texture need filling out. The harpsichord or whatever, is there to do that. Nothing else matters.

Secondary Function

Before there were baton conductors, the sound of the harpsichord would also have served as a means to help keep the ensemble together.

Listeners today can still benefit fro mthe rhythmic life lent by a well-played figured bass and so can players, but the players, who are used to taking their time from a conductor's hand motions no longer depend on the harpsichord as metronome.

When Leinsdorf the other day led Haydn's Symphony No. 21 from the harpsichord he was presumably trying to achieve historical authenticity.

Leinsdorf was doing what Haydn himself did. So at least it seemed, and that was what he intended to have the audience believe.

Hayden's orchestras at Eisenstadt, London, and elsewhere, were accustomed to being led from the harpsichord and Haydn was accustomed to leading thus.

The Boston Symphony is not and Leinsdorf is not. It is also relevant that an 18th century concertmaster would have assumed more leadership responsibility than is expected of his modern counterpart.

Can It Be Done?

If Leinsdorf intended to show that a Haydn Symphony was effectively led by using the 18th century mechanics of conducting, he succeeded mainly in demonstrating the opposite.

He achieved a precise performance, but he did it by abdicating his self-imposed position as keyboard continuo player.

Leisdorf felt—and rightly—that the harpsichord was needed; he also felt—and I know not whether rightly or no—that the Boston Symphony could not be trusted to get through the piece without the help of his modern arm-waving technique.

The mere sight of Leinsdorf as he did half of each of two jobs was enough to expose the hollowness of his pretension. But my proper concern is the ear, not the eye.

In that realm I would point out that the sporadic harpsichord playing left gaps where chords were wanted. What was worse, it produced an effect of textural discontinuity, which, in a piece otherwise so uniform in its textures, was inappropriate, jarring, and unmusical.

There is nothing wrong in conducting Haydn from the keyboard if it is effectively done. When it is badly done, the gullible and the ignorant may be impressed with what they take to be a display both of scholarship and of virtuosity.

In fact, Mr. Leinsdorf's little show turned out to be as relevant—and musically damaging—as doing the performance in knee-breeches and wigs of 1763. The point is worth making, because it is not a unique experience to be offered the gesture without the substance.

1 60 TUES. # 6. FRI-SAT # 13.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 5, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN . . . . The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")

SPRING (DER FRÜHLING)
SUMMER (DER SOMMER)

INTERMISSION

AUTUMN (DER HERBST)
WINTER (DER WINTER)
(First performance at these concerts)

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, Soprano
CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor
THOMAS PAUL, Bass

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY CHORUS
DR. EDWARD F. GILDAY, Director

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 8, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

ROSSINI . . . . Overture to "La Scala di Seta"
(First performance at these concerts)

STRAVINSKY . . . . "Pulcinella," Ballet with Song, in One Act

Overture — Serenata (Tenor) — Scherzino — Allegro — Andantino — Allegro — Allegretto (Soprano) — Allegro assai — Allegro alla breve (Bass) — Andante (Trio) — Andante (Tenor) — Allegro (Tenor, Soprano) — Presto (Tenor) — Larghetto — Allegro alla breve — Tarantella — Andantino (Soprano) — Allegro — Gavotta (with two variations) — Vivo — Tempo di Minuetto (Trio) — Allegro assai (Finale)
(First complete performance at these concerts)

Soloists: HELEN VANNI, Soprano; JEROLD SIENA, Tenor;
THOMAS PAUL, Bass

INTERMISSION

WAGNER . . . . Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"

Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Interlude, Act I — Prelude to Act II — Siegfried's Death — Conclusion

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 3 1965

The Week's Programs

Symphony Back From Vacation

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra will reconvene this week after a mid-season vacation and will play at the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

On Tuesday evening of this week at the sixth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony in the third and final performance of Haydn's "The Seasons."

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, Dr. Edward Gilday, director, to take part in these performances in recognition of the 150th season of the Society and its influence as a musical force since its inception in 1815. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

MR. LEINSDORF will begin the Friday-Saturday concerts with Rossini's Overture to the one-act opera "La Scala di Seta" ("The Silken Ladder"). The program will continue with the complete music to "Pulcinella," Ballet with Song, by Igor Stravinsky, for which Mr Leinsdorf has invited Helen Vanni, soprano, Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass, to be guest soloists.

The program will conclude with excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung." The Rossini Overture has been performed by the Boston Symphony only once before, at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1954, conducted by Jean Morel. It will also be the first complete performance at these concerts of the music to "Pulcinella."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 3 1965

Programs at Symphony

The full Boston Symphony will reconvene after a mid-season vacation for concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The concerts will open with Rossini's Overture to the one-act opera "La Scala di Seta" ("The Silken Ladder"). The program will continue with the complete music to "Pulcinella," ballet with song, by Igor Stravinsky, for which Leinsdorf has invited Helen Vanni, soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass, to be guests soloists. The program will conclude with Excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung."

The Rossini Overture has been performed by the Boston Symphony only once before, at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1954, conducted by Jean Morel. It will also be the first complete performance at these concerts of the music to "Pulcinella."

Jan. 5, at 8:30, at the sixth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series, Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony in the third and final performance of Haydn's "The Seasons."

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, Edward Gilday, director, to take part in these performances in recognition of the 150th season of the Society. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 3 1965

Concert Calendar

TUESDAY

SYMPHONY HALL — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, with Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Haydn, Oratorio, "The Seasons." 8:30 p.m.

60 TUES. # 6. FRI.-SAT. # 13.

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 5, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN .... The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")
SPRING (DER FRÜHLING)
SUMMER (DER SOMMER)

INTERMISSION

AUTUMN (DER HERBST)
WINTER (DER WINTER)
(First performance at these concerts)

HELEN BOATWRIGHT, Soprano
CHARLES BRESSLER, Tenor
THOMAS PAUL, Bass

HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY CHORUS
DR. EDWARD F. GILDAY, Director

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 8, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

ROSSINI .... Overture to "La Scala di Seta"
(First performance at these concerts)

STRAVINSKY .... "Pulcinella," Ballet with Song, in One Act

Overture — Serenata (Tenor) — Scherzino — Allegro — Andantino — Allegro — Allegretto (Soprano) — Allegro assai — Allegro alla breve (Bass) — Andante (Trio) — Andante (Tenor) — Allegro (Tenor, Soprano) — Presto (Tenor) — Larghetto — Allegro alla breve — Tarantella — Andantino (Soprano) — Allegro — Gavotta (with two variations) — Vivo — Tempo di Minuetto (Trio) — Allegro assai (Finale)
(First complete performance at these concerts)

Soloists: HELEN VANNI, Soprano; JEROLD SIENA, Tenor;
THOMAS PAUL, Bass

INTERMISSION

WAGNER .... Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"
Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Interlude, Act I —
Prelude to Act II — Siegfried's Death — Conclusion

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
JAN 3 1965

The Week's Programs

Symphony Back From Vacation

The full Boston Symphony Orchestra will reconvene this week after a mid-season vacation and will play at the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

On Tuesday evening of this week at the sixth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series, Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony in the third and final performance of Haydn's "The Seasons."

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, Dr. Edward Gilday, director, to take part in these performances in recognition of the 150th season of the Society and its influence as a musical force since its inception in 1815. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

MR. LEINSDORF will begin the Friday-Saturday concerts with Rossini's Overture to the one-act opera "La Scala di Seta" ("The Silken Ladder"). The program will continue with the complete music to "Pulcinella," Ballet with Song, by Igor Stravinsky, for which Mr Leinsdorf has invited Helen Vanni, soprano, Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass, to be guest soloists.

The program will conclude with excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung." The Rossini Overture has been performed by the Boston Symphony only once before, at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1954, conducted by Jean Morel. It will also be the first complete performance at these concerts of the music to "Pulcinella."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105
JAN 3 1965

Programs at Symphony

The full Boston Symphony will reconvene after a mid-season vacation for concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The concerts will open with Rossini's Overture to the one-act opera "La Scala di Seta" ("The Silken Ladder"). The program will continue with the complete music to "Pulcinella," ballet with song, by Igor Stravinsky, for which Leinsdorf has invited Helen Vanni, soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass, to be guests soloists. The program will conclude with Excerpts from Wagner's "Die Gotterdammerung."

The Rossini Overture has been performed by the Boston Symphony only once before, at a Berkshire Festival concert in 1954, conducted by Jean Morel. It will also be the first complete performance at these concerts of the music to "Pulcinella."

Jan. 5, at 8:30, at the sixth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series, Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony in the third and final performance of Haydn's "The Seasons."

He has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, Edward Gilday, director, to take part in these performances in recognition of the 150th season of the Society. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
JAN 3 1965

Concert Calendar

TUESDAY

SYMPHONY HALL — Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Handel and Haydn Society Chorus, with Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Haydn, Oratorio/ "The Seasons." 8:30 p.m.

61

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

1965

At Symphony

Stravinsky's Pulcinella Gets Complete Reading

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Many thanks to Erich Leins-lorf for giving the complete core of Stravinksy's ballet Pulcinella at Friday's Boston Symphony concert, and for giving it on the whole very vell. The tunes are by the th century Neapolitan opera riter, Pergolesi, but the usic, that is, the real com-osing, is all by Stravinsky.

People have taken umbrage
the trombone glissandos, ut to think of Pulcinella only terms of such a detail is ke remembering nothing but e four brass bands in the erlioz Requiem.

Pulcinella is for the most rt a work of subtle humor, great tenderness. Above all, is filled with an extraordi-ary sense of esthetic and soorous beauty.

Stravinsky himself conucted the Suite from Pulinella here a few weeks ago, nd so did Harry Ellis Dickson n his children's concerts. The uite is always a pleasure to ear, but one really needs to now the whole score. Some ery beautiful things are exluded from the suite, notably the vocal trio, "Sento dire," and the lovely setting of the song, "Se tu m'ami." More important, however, is that while the suite is a sequence of attractive pieces, the whole score is a real composition of uncommon beauty of design.

The three vocal soloists were Helen Vamni, mezzo-soprano, Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass. They were ideally chosen, not only because of the precise and elegant singing each did individually, but because of the lmost uncanny matching of their voices in ensemble.

Leinsdorf's pacing of Pulcinella has become both more lucid and more witty since his performance last Summer with the Berkshire Music Center orchestra. Where his tempi differ from Stravinsky's own, they are less effective, for example in the rather slow Tarantella, or in the fast "Sento dire" Trio, which blunts the contrast with the Duet and Aria that follow. But even though the performance was persistently just a little more square than the music, it was in general a good one that conveyed the sense of the music justly.

Pulcinella calls for virtuoso playing and that is what it got in spite of a plague of minor accidents. The work does, however, sound better when the number of strings is not increased beyond Stravinsky's specifications, which is what Leinsdorf did. Special honors should go to Roger Voisin for his brilliant trumpet solos, and special thanks to him also for his correct placing of the accents in the hilarious trombone-bass duet when the solo trombone persistently misplaced them.

The concert began with Rossini's Overture, "La Scala di Seta," a delight, and in its own unostentatious way a masterful piece of orchestral writing also. It was a clean performance and Ralph Gomberg took a bow for his oboe solo which he had indeed played very well.

After the intermission, Leinsdorf conducted a series of excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung." To the usual Dawn-Rhine Journey sequence he added the Interlude before Act I, Scene 3, and the Prelude to Act II; the Funeral Music was followed by parts of the Immolation Scene.

Incongruity was achieved where contrast was intended. The delicacy of Rossini and Stravinsky put Wagner's aggressiveness into the most unflattering light; Wagner retaliated in that the weight and brilliance of his climaxes almost blotted out any recollection of having heard any other music at all.

Except for the end, which was an atrocious musical and rhetorical muddle, Leinsdorf's sequence of excerpts is not bad. Still, I remain unconvinced when preparations lead only to further preparations and when moods lead to more moods instead of to actions.

The performance was as good as could be expected when poetry and atmosphere are excluded.

ndar

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

AN 9 1965

'Pulcinella' ballet

By Harold Rogers

[illegible] Leinsdorf con- [illegible] Overture to [illegible] di Seta," tidy and [illegible] Then he offered [illegible] "Pulcinella," a [illegible] song. This was its [illegible] complete performance at [illegible] ton Symphony con- [illegible] with "Pulcinella" [illegible] if not always [illegible] was, in fact, not [illegible] It had no [illegible] No Stravin- [illegible] No Stravin- [illegible]

⁂

[illegible] melodies by Per- [illegible] charming work [illegible] Janus neck. It [illegible] Pergolesi and forward to Stravinsky at the same time. This apparently is how Mr. Leinsdorf chose to play it.

But the Janus viewpoint is weak. The results were neither flesh nor fowl. Without a strong Stravinskian attack, the piece becomes bad Pergolesi. True, it had its winsome moments, especially in the vocal portions. These were amiably added by Helen Vanni's soprano, Jerold Siena's tenor, Thomas Paul's bass. All three are excellent singers; all deserve high praise.

But the product was bland Stravinsky.

Mr. Leinsdorf closed with excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"—Dawn, Siegfried's Rhine Journey, the Act I Interlude, the Act II Prelude, Siegfried's Death, and the Conclusion.

⁂

Here was unmistakable Wagner, beautifully played. Not anything to send one from the hall in a fever of excitement, mind you, but eminently satisfying.

Again you could stand back in amazement at Wagner's architecture. You could thrill at his masterful way of piling up tonal arches one above the other. You could rest in a glorious sense of fulfillment when he crowns the whole edifice with radiance.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 9 1965

Symphony

Missing Link of the Theater Leads to a Hollow Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Everywhere these days one encounters the theaters: in politics, finance, industry and science—almost everywhere except on the stage. At this weekend's concerts of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the theater turns up in Symphony Hall, and it doesn't belong there, either.

Yesterday's program amounted to a kind of superior divertissement, and it left me feeling self-indulgent and torpid, as though I had spent an afternoon at an entertainment for want of anything else better to occupy the time. I have nothing against pure diversion; idleness serves its role; like Mr. Leinsdorf I am inordinately fond of the music of the dramatic arts: but, all the same the program contained a hollow at its core.

Curtain-Raiser

In short, the missing link of the theater was necessary in order to make this concert live. The Rossini overture alone was valid, for it is a lively curtain-raiser that might as well introduce a concert as a stage work, Rossini's overtures being dramatically non-functional. But the complete 'Pulcinella', "a ballet with song, in One Act," as a non-ballet, and "Gotterdammerung" as a non-opera create in their divorce from their proper element a sense of empty decor.

There was much to like, and there is even a defensible side to Mr. Leinsdorf's Wagnerian anthologizing. Let us leave the composer's purpose, coherent design and logical relationships out of it for the moment, all of which have been advanced as sufficient reason why the operas should not be excerpted in this fashion. The fact remains that a generation has grown up in Boston unfamiliar with the Ring cycle as it should exist, on a stage, and at best forced to depend on recordings, no substitute for live musical experience.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 13th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Overture to 'La Scala di Seta' . . . Rossini
'Pulcinella' . . . Stravinsky
Excerpts from 'Gotterdammerung' . . . Wagner

Sad Conclusion

We are therefore left with the melancholy conclusion that half a "Gotterdammerung," or a fraction thereof, is better than none. At least we are part-way toward the real thing, even if the pronouncements of the program that the portions presented "bring to a glorious culmination the characters of Brunnhilde and Siegfried" are in no way justified by the potpourri.

What we hear actually is a sublime tissue of motif and interlude, that can be appreciated in an abstract way as sheer tone, and which Mr. Leinsdorf conducts with a superb sense of opulent sonority and detail.

The 'Pulcinella' music likewise relies on an elaborate libretto for a commedia dell arte that exists in the imagination, and I'm afraid I only read enough of it to discover that Pulcinella is a man.

The music, of course, which Stravinsky conducted in its form as a suite a month ago in Symphony Hall, is enormously witty and urbane, commenting on the inspiration of Pergolesi as well as providing a pastiche with a dry adroitness of which Stravinsky alone among moderns is the master.

Firm Basis

One has only to compare the ornamentation of this work, its musical vocabulary, with the ornate baroque evocations of Strauss to realize how peerless is the 'Pulcinella' by every imaginative standard, in a harmony, melody and meter having a firm basis in the compositional methods of two periods widely removed in time.

The performance was exceedingly graceful and rather lush: of the three soloists, Jerold Siena, who has a high, light tenor, was largely muffled due to problems of intonation; but Helen Vanni, the soprano, and Thomas Paul, the bass, sang with exceptional felicity, clarity and style.

"The Silken Ladder" overture is further evidence that Rossini, as Shaw once said, wrote tunes without the least regard for the technical convenience of the player, and passed them to the instruments they would sound prettiest upon. As a result, the burden placed on the woodwinds here is virtually intolerable.

Although the performance had its breath-stopping hitches springing from such savage virtuosity, it went well, and opened a jejeune theatrical afternoon, sparkling like a bogus diamond on the surface.

Next weekend Isaac Stern is the soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto; and Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled the Prelude to Tchaikowsky's "The Queen of Spades," and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 9 1965

BSO Presents Stravinsky's 'Pulcinella'

Singular omissions marked yesterday's Boston Symphony Orchestra program here. First came a "Pops Concert" overture without the beer, followed by a ballet without dancers. Concluding were orchestral excerpts from Wagner's "Dusk of the Gods" without godlings and goddesses.

Rossini's "Silken Ladder" overture was presented under Erich Leinsdorf's fluent and animated direction with more incisiveness than subtlety by an orchestra fully sensible of his wishes. Even when so well played, this music sounds thoroughly inconsequential, "light and detached, rather than passionate or humorous," as Stendhal wrote in Paris just 143 years ago.

Stravinsky's "Pulcinella," a ballet with song in one act, is interesting mainly because it is a musical milestone in this curious decomposer's chameleonized career. It signified the beginning of the neoclassical movement.

Therein this imitative musician, smitten with melodic sterility, began hiding behind the masters of earlier times. These "Pulcinella" tunes have been attributed to Pergolesi (1710-36), though musicologists, those dreary curators of mummified music, doubt their authenticity.

Whatever their source, these melodies were left almost untouched, harmonized in Neapolitan style and arrayed in piquant orchestral dressage. Stravinsky did not eschew jazzy effects, such as blatant trombone glissandi.

The Bostonians' exposition of this borrowed finery was clean and musicianly and well controlled by Dr. Leinsdorf, who elicited elements of humor and fantasy in his performance not present in interpretations by other conductors, including the composer himself. The vocal soloists, Helen Vanni, soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, basso, sang with finesse and gusto.

After the interval came excerpts from Wagner's "Dusk of the Gods," concluding music drama of the "Ring" cycle. Dr. Leinsdorf is superb as a Wagnerian conductor, his orchestral colleagues are adept in following his sensitive direction; yet, to hear the music of Brunnhilde's "Immolation" scene without the Valkyrie herself singing this immortal apostrophe, then plunging into the flames astride her charger, Grane, is unhorsed opera.

ROLFE BOSWELL

1 62 PROVIDENCE #4

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 194,795

JAN 1 0 1965

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will give its fourth concert of the season here at 3:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

The program:

Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319 .... Mozart
- I. Allegro assai
- II. Andante moderato
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Finale: Allegro assai

Toccata Concertante .... Fine
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73 .... Brahms

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

JAN 1 1

Music In Review

Weather Fails To Lessen Boston Symphony Welcome

It has been noticeable for several years that when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Providence, more times than not the weather is vexatious — blinding snow, slashing rain, piercing winds or near-zero cold. Yet it has not decreased the number of patrons attending, nor diminished the brilliance of a performance by these superb musicians.

Sunday was no exception at Veterans Memorial Auditorium when a near-capacity audience gave Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra a standing ovation after a magnificent performance of the glorious "Symphony No. 2 in D-Major, opus 73" by Brahms. It was the concluding work of a splendid program that included Mozart's trite and repetitious "Symphony No. 33 in B-Flat Major, K 319" and a new work (1947) by Irving Fine, "Toccata Concertante," a work that proved that all new compositions are not sick or cruel music.

Only the third movement of the Mozart, Menuetto, had the usual merriment and animation that identify Mozart's works, and even that was subdued, playful but not gay, with a soaring and dipping, swallow - like flight. The first two movements were gently singing, but too soothing, almost soporific, in both — allegro assai and andante moderato.

The toccata was a display piece for full orchestra and it had a refinement and orderliness that made it music to be remembered, not merely to attract attention. There were some noble chords in the brasses and some eloquent phrases in the woodwinds. And never did it explode beyond the bounds o good taste or spill over with ea assaulting dissonances.

The Brahms was the mos contemplative music that have heard; contemplative i the meaning that the massiv chords and heaped up harmonies had less appeal to the sens of hearing than to the feelings You listened with your heart.

Leinsdorf was not his usua self. He did not smile once either to the welcoming hand clapping at his first entrance o in acknowledgement of th standing ovation, and he seeme reluctant to return for the several curtain calls. It was a though he was weary or ill. Ye his conducting, although less intense and enthusiastic, brought out all his art of persuasion that makes his musicians share his conception and give him, and the listeners the pure essence of eloquence.

The opening movements, allegro non troppo followed by adagio non troppo, had a gravity that was more reverent than solemn, and the third movement, avoiding the customary brightness and insouciance, had an Old Testament sternness but with a flashing recurrence of the hopeful theme. It was the finale, allegro con spirito, that fulfilled the expectations of this seemingly enchanted audience. Leinsdorf built the tension in a surging tide of climbing crescendos that terminated in a flood of unrestrained applause for the resounding, triumphant jubilance of the closing phrase.

C.H.L.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

JAN 11 1965

Music Yesterday

Boston Symphony Concert At the Veterans Memorial

By RUTH TRIPP

It was inevitable that the dates of one of the winter's snow storms and of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert here would coincide. It happened yesterday afternoon but the usual enthusiastic audience came to the Veterans Memorial Auditorium to hear one of Erich Leinsdorf's excellent programs, in spite of the weather.

We heard a Mozart Symphony, No. 33, which could hardly have been excelled for elegance, a well assembled Toccata Concertante by Irving Fine and the opulent Symphony No. 2 by Brahms. The orchestra played with an infinite variety of tonal gradations many of which were unbelievably delicate, and when the final grand climax of the Brahms Symphony came, it was all the more impressive. The audience rose to cheer as the concert closed.

The Mozart interpretation was one which sought out every possible detail of phrasing, every possible contrast of color and which almost lost the listener in its intricacies. But this was the era of lace at the wrists and embroidery on satin and, in sound, Erich Leinsdorf demonstrated this fact for us.

The Irving Fine composition had great vitality and arresting rhythm. Short phrases, many of them easily recognizable, gave a contemporary feeling to the music, yet, when the lyrical passages came, it was easy to realize that the work was more than 10 years old. Melodies seem to be less and less frequent in music. The percussion section provided its punctuation with gusto and the gay bits of syncopation were very refreshing. This is a good example of writing which stands up over the years and for a piece written in 1947, it was a pleasant contrast to some of the aleatory music which occasionally gets a hearing here.

The Brahms second was one of the high points of the winter's season. The transparency of the reading made a wonderful fabric of sound. The reeds were in fine form and they were excelled only by the horns which played with a velvet tone. The cellos sang eloquently and the entire string section made a fascinating display of the rhythmic patterns. This is great music and it seemed to give the musicians as much pleasure in the playing as it did the listeners, which was considerable.

The final concert of the season Boston Symphony series will be given on March 21.

luxurious. She seems to compensate for this by darkening its tone, which, combined with what only can be described as Germanic swooping, affects its focus and, on occasion, its pitch. On the plus side, when she allows herself its natural brightness the result is quite effective and she has volume to spare.

She is an intelligent singer, as opposed to intelligible — her diction, in the Harkins Hall acoustics at least, was not clear at all times — and she knows how to form an interesting program. She sang Mozart, Schubert, two songs from Mussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death," Faure, Samuel Barber, Ned Rorem and Menotti. There was a first performance, too: 14 Japanese Haiku poems set to music by Robert F. Birch. These little three-line poems are as brief as a watercolor brush stoke, depending more on nuance than description. Birch's settings, in vocal line and in the piano accompaniment, are agreeably colorful without aping orientalism.

You could sense Miss Ayer's affection for them in her delicate treatment of their short form. Previously she had been at her best in the Schubert "Death and the Maiden," and the "Serenade" from the "Songs and Dances of Death." And afterward Barber's romantic "Sure on this shining night," with words by James Agee, and Rorem's "The Snake," a setting of a poem by Theodore Roethke had a number of qualities to applaud.

She was most fortunate t have Alvin Novak as her accompanist. At no time did h overpower her sound and ye his playing was always an a dible contribution to the tot performance. That, as every r citalist or concertgoer knows, i and art, and, no doubt about i Novak is an artist of the genre.

C'BRIDGE 4. THURS. 3. FRI-SAT. 14

63

• NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

ourth Program

VENING, January 12, at 8:30 o'clock

Moz Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319

assai
moderato
Allegro assai

Sch Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
aktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
ner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil) witschermaschine (The Twittering Machine) abische Stadt (Arabian Town)
Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment) storale

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

Brahms Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Vivace non troppo

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
Violin

JULES ESKIN
Cello

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourteenth Program

ERNOON, January 15, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, January 16, at 8:30 o'clock

Prelude to "The Queen of Spades"
(First performance at these concerts)

.... Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111 egro moderato go ace

INTERMISSION

B ....*Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61

Allegro ma non troppo
Larghetto
Rondo

SOLOIST
ISAAC STERN

oncerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, January 14, at 8:30 o'clock

Schumann ....Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

Mahler ....Symphony No. 6, in A minor

I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
III. Andante
IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441;810

JAN 13 1965

★ ★ ★

ERICH LEINSDORF, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the third concert of the Thursday Evening Series of the B.S.O. with Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115. After the early intermission the conductor will present Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A minor, which he is introducing to the Symphony concerts for the first time during the current season.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

13 1965

Violin Soloist

Isaac Stern will play the Beethoven Concerto Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Reception to Honor Isaac Stern, Jan. 16

A reception honoring Isaac Stern, who will be soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts next weekend, will be held at Symphony Hall, Saturday evening, Jan. 16, in the Ancient Instrument Room after the concert. The noted violinist has been associated with the orchestra since 1948.

This reception is the first of a series of three to be given this season by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. George A. Parson of Boston is general chairman.

The reception for Mr. Stern will be under the direction of the Greater Boston Committee of the Council. The chairman is Mrs. Arthur Joshua Livingston of Boston. Members of the Council of Friends and invited guests will attend.

6 A THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, JAN. 10, 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

JAN 17 1965

CONCERT POSTPONED

BOSTON (AP) — Because of the storm, the Boston Symphony Orchestra called off its Saturday performance to today at 3 p. m. One of the features of the concert is Beethoven's violin concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

JAN 17 1965

C'BRIDGE 4. THURS. 3. FRI-SAT. 14

EIGH[illegible] SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

[illegible]AY EVENING, JANUARY 12, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ....Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319
- I. Allegro assai
- II. Andante moderato
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Finale: Allegro assai

SCHULLER ....Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee
- I. Antike Harmonien (Antique Harmonies)
- II. Abstraktes Terzett (Abstract Trio)
- III. Kleiner Blauer Teufel (Little Blue Devil)
- IV. Die Zwitschermaschine (The Twittering Machine)
- V. Arabische Stadt (Arabian Town)
- VI. Ein Unheimlicher Moment (An Eerie Moment)
- VII. Pastorale

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ...Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102
- I. Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Vivace non troppo

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN
Violin

JULES ESKIN
Cello

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourteenth Program

FRI[illegible] AFTERNOON, JANUARY 15, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16, at 8:30 o'clock

TC[illegible]SKY ....Prelude to "The Queen of Spades"

(First performance at these concerts)

PR[illegible] ....Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111
- Allegro moderato
- Largo
- Vivace

INTERMISSION

BE[illegible]EN ....*Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61
- Allegro ma non troppo
- Larghetto
- Rondo

SOLOIST
ISAAC STERN

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN.................Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER............................Symphony No. 6, in A minor
- I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
- II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
- III. Andante
- IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 13 1965

★ ★ ★

ERICH LEINSDORF, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the third concert of the Thursday Evening Series of the B.S.O. with Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115. After the early intermission the conductor will present Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A minor, which he is introducing to the Symphony concerts for the first time during the current season.

Reception to Honor Isaac Stern, Jan. 16

6 A THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, JAN. 10, 1965

A reception honoring Isaac Stern, who will be soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts next weekend, will be held at Symphony Hall, Saturday evening, Jan. 16, in the Ancient Instrument Room after the concert. The noted violinist has been associated with the orchestra since 1948.

This reception is the first of a series of three to be given this season by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. George A. Parson of Boston is general chairman.

The reception for Mr. Stern will be under the direction of the Greater Boston Committee of the Council. The chairman is Mrs. Arthur Joshua Livingston of Boston. Members of the Council of Friends and invited guests will attend.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 13 1965

Violin Soloist

Isaac Stern will play the Beethoven Concerto Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

JAN. 1 7 1965

evidence.

CONCERT POSTPONED

BOSTON (AP) — Because of the storm, the Boston Symphony Orchestra called off its Saturday performance to today at 3 p. m. One of the features of the concert is Beethoven's violin concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

JAN 1 7 1965

1

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 16 1965

Symphony: Noble Works by Prokofiev, Beethoven

By ROBERT TAYLOR

This was a program of substantial felicity. The current weekend concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra offers attractive performances of two noble works, the masterly Prokofiev Sixth Symphony and the more familiar Beethoven Violin Concerto in which Isaac Stern's virtuosity rises to the limpid level of art concealing art.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 14th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Isaac Stern, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Prelude to "The Queen of Spades ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111 ..... Prokovfiev
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 ..... Beethoven

It is an effort at this point in time to understand how the Prokofiev score roiled the Communists so mightily 16 years ago, causing the subsequent denunciations and recantations that comprise a drearily predictable element of Soviet culture.

Highest Order

True, the music isn't full of banal tunes that one can whistle in the dungeons of the Lubianka prison whilst awating the tread of the firing squad; but by no means is its syntax gnarled and esoteric: the Sixth, in fact, neither depends on the gestures of modernity nor a pseudo-Slavic mood, being simply, a composition of the highest order.

The architecture is extremely simple. Prokofiev himself conceded that the main theme bears resemblance to Beethoven's last Piano Concerto, also Opus 111, but we must remember there is an even stronger relation to the same work in Prokofiev's Second Symphony, in D minor.

The amplitude of the artistic vision is probably what the composer had in mind with this allusion; in any case, the later work is much more open in texture, and its sonorous emotional figurations and melodies convey an immediate, yet profound grandeur.

Such a composition requires extremely adroit handling of tempo and balance problems. The melancholy suggestions of the opening, allegro moderato, plangently stated in the winds and colored by the hollow pastoral English horn, interpose themselves between light, plastic and rhythmic intervals. And, in particular, it is a pitfall of the final movement that one can go too far in stressing the scherzo-like character of the strings, making a fine effect but in the process losing the heavily-weighted, grim tensions in a pounding, fleet ensemble.

The phrase tempi and accents of Mr. Leinsdorf's version articulated the Sixth scrupulously. The total effect was a shade sombre, but that indeed is the essence of the symphony, despite its many spirited and graceful cantabile aspects. The conception of the score and the response of the players constituted a tasteful, searching account of a work that only superfically appears open, accessible and without overt ambiguities.

The fascination of the piece may perhaps reside in its emotional paradoxes of form and content; but it is certain that yesterday's performance carried a stimulating authority in the resolution of these subtleties.

Isaac Stern's approach to the Beethoven Concerto is also, in the best sense of the word, controlled. He takes no refuge in a heavy, expressive vibrato or in other romantic notions of virtuosity; he performs without fuss; he seeks shapely, crisp phrase rather than 'original' furbelows, cadenzas remote from the style of the writing, emotionalism of fleet, heaven-storming technique.

The result is immaculately convincing, the kind of interpretation in which performer and composer blend into a singular purity. The artist's tone is large, clear, smooth, his bowing and intonation that of an instrumental giant. At the same time everything is wonderfully calibrated, but not to the point where mechanical perfection saps the life of the concerto.

The distinguished feature of Mr. Stern's performance is its soundness of style combined with sensual drama—this was a radiant experience, and the strict accompaniment of Mr. Leinsdorf enhanced the notable achievement.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR 1/16/65

Isaac Stern and his violin

By John Marshall Cun

"He makes it look so easy!"

The comment was heard during the applause and cheering at Symphony Hall directly following Isaac Stern's performance of the Beethoven Concerto for Violin in D major, Op. 61.

"That's the best concert they've had this season!"

That comment was heard a little later during the sidewalk procession up Massachusetts Avenue.

Were the comments justified?

Yes! The violin soloist imparted a great sense of ease and freedom compatible with the broad, serene strokes of the Beethoven concerto itself.

* * *

And yes, the entire program — including also Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6 in E flat minor and Tchaikovsky's Prelude to "The Queen of Spades"—was marked by strong lyricism, being full of warmth and joy throughout.

The curtain - raiser, the Tchaikovsky prelude, succeeded in establishing the mood for works of larger lyricism, particularly the Beethoven. Its subdued surges, like far echoes of the nostalgic "Eugene Onegin," alas, were over all too soon.

The Prokofiev, not unlike the Tchaikovsky in its surging passages and Russian austerity, was given an unusually clear, almost pictorial , expression. A fullness was evident in the undercurrent of horns and bass strings.

And the rapid forward movement, suggestive of an army on wheel and horseback, moving forward to the point of enemy contact.

* * *

The rumbling and frightening artillery with the more natural and earthy sound of flute and bassoon heard in the quiet passage before the outbreak. Then the clash of arms!

Quieter tympani beats marshal and unify the violin concerto. While playing this work, Mr. Stern was meticulous in bringing to the fore patterns of notes within larger patterns.

His beautiful and brilliant first movement cadenza, full of trills and double stops, made this listener's hands ache to play like that.

The Kreutzerlike passages —beautiful exercises, in effect, were given full and poignant bowing. The purity and refinement of tone in the instrument's higher register were nothing less than thrilling. And the solo violin voice seemed to hold each heart with the golden thread of its melody.

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

JAN 21 1965

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

STERN'S BEETHOVEN AT BSO

Isaac Stern invariably makes everything he plays sound so easy. The notes are never off pitch. The vast and pure violin sound, undefiled by the heavy vibrato of the old-line virtuosos, embraces a variety of tonal color and shading probably beyond the reach of any other master of this era. One could set a metronome by his rhythmic steadiness. His hallmark has always been clearness of musical line without fussing or mannerisms in his phrasing, or the introduction of a highly personalized idiom in his style.

Small wonder that this frequent visitor to Symphony Hall has always been anticipated with excitement and looked back on with satisfaction. His advent last week-end was surrounded by more than usual relish, for he was assaying — for the first time here with the orchestra — the Beethoven concerto.

The performance was one which people, whatever they thought of it, will not soon forget. Not here any straightforward, angular, unembellished interpretation. Rather, it was a highly individualized, even unorthodox, traversal that was quintessential in its romantic treatment. The tempi, the accents, the emphasis were quite different from anything I can ever recall. For good measure he even used the Kreisler cadenza in the first movement with its tour-de-force use of both main themes simultaneously.

It all unfolded very much in the grand manner, but in the very noblest sense of those words. Every passage was obviously deeply thought through and fell magnificently into place, while the total line was overpowering in its cumulative impact.

Mr. Leinsdorf's orchestral accompaniment was discreet and responsive, although his woodwind players frequently subverted both him and the soloist with their faulty intonation. All of this was of minor moment, for here was one of those rare and exhilirating occasions when a performance of a familiar work fairly glowed with spirit and strength and provided an entire new cluster of insights.

The rest of the program consisted of the Introduction to Tchaikowsky's "The Queen of Spades" and Prokofief's Symphony No. 6. The Introduction is a curtain raiser and nothing more, though possessed withal of a certain museum-like interest. The Prokofief Sixth, apparently, is not going to be anybody's museum piece so long as Mr. Leinsdorf has anything to say about it. He brought this symphony out during his first year in Boston in 1963 and here it is again.

The three movements of the Sixth consist chiefly of a few islands of real feeling, melodic inspiration and authentic tragic sense in a large and dreary sea of decay and rehash that at times came quite close to being a Prokofieffian parody of his own compositions, particularly his Fifth Symphony. I find it on balance really not worth the candle. Mr. Leinsdorf obviously feels differently about it and indeed about most of Prokofieff, and he conducted the piece with warmth and conviction.

This week the orchestra is away on its winter tour of New Haven and New York. It returns next week-end for a program of Bach, Stravinsky and Tchaikowsky. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct and the soloists will be Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips in the Bach D minor Concerto for Two Violins and String Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 18 1965

ern, BSO in Beethoven Concerto

When a great violinist essays the Beethoven concerto, he usually elicits fresh beauties from its music. Soloist at yesterday's postponed Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was Issac Stern, whose forthright elan evoked a thunderous ovation. He played with artistic dash, earnest virtuosity and obvious relish. Erich Leinsdorf's masterly control made it readily apparent why this violin concerto sometimes is alluded to as Beethoven's "Tenth Symphony."

Curtain-raiser was the prelude to Tchaikovsky's most successful opera, "The Queen of Spades." She was played through to the last trump with invigorating zest and proclamatory vigor. This overture's opening round should be scored as a little slam in spades, redoubled.

Prokovieff's sixth symphony (E-flat minor, Op. 111), which followed, is among the Russian master's more gracious later works. It is the sort of music that should be appreciated even at first hearing. Dr. Leinsdorf's bold approach, not probing for subtleties where none exist, imparted greater impact to the somewhat flabby and shapeless first two movements of this three-part symphony. The more resounding finale projected Prokovieff's characteristic symphonic comedy, alternately urbane and grotesque.

Half a century of listening to the Beethoven violin concerto in both concert hall and recorded performances was recalled here by this rescheduled, snowed-out concert. Imprimis was established by the immortal Fritz Kreisler, playing so long ago with Dr. Karl Muck's vibrant BSO, a wonderfully warm re-creation, noble in perspective and powerful in artistic appeal. Jacques Thibaud, soon thereafter, vouchsafed an understanding clarity and eloquent musicianship with pleasing though not powerful, tone. Tonal opulence graced a Mischa Elman performance in London; Isaac Stern has acquired much of that Elmanesque plangency.

More recent performances of "Beethoven's Tenth" remaining in sharp recollection were the late, great Ginette Neveu's appearance in Carnegie Hall with the New York Philharmonic, Leonid Kogan's in Symphony Hall, Dr. Charles Munch conducting, and David Oistrakh's at a recent Worcester Festival, though his reading of the Tchaikovsky concerto would have been tastier. Yet another searching and musicanly traversal of Beethoven's may-sided violen concerto by our own Roman Totenberg with the Poznan Philharmonic was afforded by listening to a well - recorded phonographic transcription.

Doubtless the next time Isaac Stern performs the Beethoven concerto, his musical poetry will differ in some measure from yesterday's and Friday's lofty, masterful and lyrically stressed readings, punctuated by splendid orchestral collaboration, but that is only natural. Musicians and reporters have a talent in common — they're always re-writing.

ROLFE BOSWELL

NewEngland Newsc
Box 2078, Boston 6

Mornin
BOSTO
Circ. 20

JAN 16

At Symp
The Pr
Stern

By

Prokofiev's Sixth ritten between 194 in many respects iece and also an ne. Its first two re serious in tone.
giddy, but the ma that mood seems repare for its own on. At least the ve stroke in the the sudden swee
all the gaiety and ectedly dark and da that follows a mpletes the piece.
There is good m ention, especially argo, and some effe
g for orchestra.
so, less fortunatel
rable mannerism,
e, the octave pa rings that seem so all these Russian
ies. And among th chos one finds, m ectedly and disco
e Parsifal Goo
usic.
All this goes on fo ng time. Not that long-winded; rat istressingly short-w epetitious. He wa mposer whose inv
nd natural music
ified by his acader midity. In the S hony, originality a ity break through ake the piece
orth hearing occas

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 1 6 1965

At Symphony

The Prokofiev Sixth; Stern Plays Beethoven

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony, written between 1945 and 1947, is in many respects a strange piece and also an interesting one. Its first two movements are serious in tone. The finale is giddy, but the main purpose of that mood seems to be to prepare for its own evaporation. At least the most effective stroke in the symphony is the sudden sweeping away of all the gaiety and the unexpectedly dark and even grim coda that follows and swiftly completes the piece.

There is good melodic invention, especially in the Largo, and some effective writing for orchestra. There is also, less fortunately, considerable mannerism, for example, the octave passages for strings that seem so ubiquitous in all these Russian symphonies. And among the stylistic echos one finds, most unexpectedly and disconcertingly, the Parsifal Good Friday music.

All this goes on for rather a long time. Not that Prokofiev is long-winded; rather, he is distressingly short-winded and repetitious. He was often a composer whose inventiveness and natural musicality was stifled by his academicism and timidity. In the Sixth Symphony, originality and personality break through enough to make the piece very much worth hearing occasionally.

Leinsdorf performed it very well. His well chosen and well adjusted tempi and his careful attention to the murky textures gave the piece a sense and shape that it does not come close to having on Ormandy's recording.

It was preceded on the program by the Prelude to Tchaikovsky's opera, "The Queen of Spades." It is a lovely moment from a beautiful and sadly neglected score, though it does not stand quite convincingly by itself in concert. It, too, was well performed. The Boston Symphony trombones, whose shallow tone makes them often too light-weight for Mahler and Wagner, speak with handsome eloquence in Tchaikovsky.

After the intermission, Isaac Stern played the Beethoven Violin Concerto. The performance began bravely enough quite as though it were going to make sense, as though, for instance, it was going to have a tempo. But then it never recovered from the (quite properly) free manner of the first solo entrance, and the remainder of the first movement seemed to be no more than improvised from one detail to the next.

As usual, by time the G minor episode in the development was reached, the tempo had become not only so slow but also so vague, that it was nearly impossible to associate, as one should, the repeated horn notes with the drum taps of the opening. The second and third movement do not allow so random an approach, and they were correspondingly better played. On the whole, Leinsdorf was able to do little more than to provide some sort of mortar with which to hold together the fragments of Stern's drifting interpretation, and the effectiveness of what he was doing was not increased by the wayward intonation in the woodwinds.

As for Stern himself, he is, of course, a marvellous violinist, and at Friday's concert he played the violin marvellously, with beautiful purity of tone and intonation, great power, and with an authoritative personal command that became something quite dazzling in the brilliant Kreisler cadenza.

Stern is, for me, anything but a marvellous player of music though. Details obscure the whole, and the line is constantly broken by fussy manipulations of all kinds.

Actually, his mannerisms are those to be heard in most performances of the Beethoven Concerto (Stern executes them better than most). Perhaps what we need now is for all recordings of this work to be destroyed and performances to be forbidden for 30 years. Then a new generation can pick up the piece fresh from the score; as it is, we are losing sight rapidly of what Beethoven wrote.

It is exciting to hear Isaac Stern play the violin, and in hose terms the audience's cheers are quite understandable, but I would not recommend his playing as a way to ind out how the Beethoven Violin Concerto goes.

1 166

TOUR # 3

NEW HAVEN. JAN 19TH

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 98,547

JAN 18 1965

Burgin Conducts Boston Symphony Tuesday Evening

Erich Leinsdorf, originally scheduled to conduct th~~e Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night at Woolsey Hall in the Woolsey Hall series, will be replaced by the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Leinsdorf has accepted an invitation to attend the inaugural ceremonies in Washington as the special guest of President Johnson.

The President and Leinsdorf have been friends for many years dating to the time when the President, then a congressman, arranged for the extension of Leinsdorf's visa in 1938.

At the invitation of the President and Mrs. Johnson, Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in a White House concert March 31. It was the first concert there by an orchestra since Johnson assumed the presidency.

While in Washington Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf will attend the inaugural gala Monday evening, the inaugural concert Tuesday evening, and the inauguration at the Capitol Wednesday noon. They will also attend several private receptions.

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 98,547

JAN 20 1965

At The Concert

No Leinsdorf, But Good Music

The Inaugural ceremonies are taking precedence over a number of activities and events around the country, and there was evidence of this in a Woolsey Hall concert Tuesdam evening. The Boston Symphony was here, but ~~its conductor,~~ Erich Leinsdorf, was in Washington as an invited guest of President Johnson.

Perhaps the orchestra's program in this fifth concert of the Woolsey series would have been somewhat different if Leinsdorf had conducted at this time. Aside from this, everything was just fine! Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the orchestra, was on the podium and his success with the baton was no surprise to his many admirers. He has conducted on occasion here before.

Burgin served as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony under both Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch. He joined the orchestra in 1920 and retired two years ago at the time when the latter conductor relinquished his post also. However, Burgin has continued as the orchestra's associate conductor, an appointment which came to him in 1943, and still conducts his former performing confreres in a number of concerts each season both in Boston and on tour.

The more adventurous listeners may have missed the usual contemporary "tidbit" in Tuesday's concert, despite the cnclusion of a work by Stravinsky. This was his "Pulcinella" (ballet with song in one act), based on themes by the 18th Century Italian composer, Pergolesi. Stravinsky, perhaps wisely, preserved the Neapolitan flavor of the music and intruded few of his modernisms in order to retain the delightful flavor of the Italian "divertimento."

If "Pulcinella" therefore was not the usual provocative program novelty, it proved to be an intriguing work in this moving and delightful performance. The three soloists were well-chosen and all were obviously well-versed in their intermittent roles. Soprano Helen Vanni, tenor Jerold Siena and bass Thomas Paul were in fine voice in their short solos and their voices blended effectively in two trio interludes.

The full orchestra didn't get on stage until the second half of the program, which was devoted to excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." The opening Overture to Rossini's "La Scala di Seta" was, like the Stravinsky opus, scored for asmaller instrumentation. Burgin may have started the overture a little on the impetuous side but after this slight unsteadiness all was smooth sailing.

The conductor has undoubtedly had as long and thorough an acquaintance with the Wagner music as anyone and his interpretation was both reverent and impassioned. He molded and shped line and sonority in knowing and musical fashion and the full impact of the performance was not lost on listeners, judging by the highly enthusiastic reception.

GORDON ARMSTRONG

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 28,868

JAN 20 1965

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Turns To Opera

Woolsey Hall concert goers were given unusual musical fare Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented an operatic program instead of its more familiar array of the classics.

The program opened with the sparkling Rossini overture to "La Scala di Seta" and this was followed by the rhythms of Stravinsky's "Pulcinella" a ballet composed in 1920 for de Diaghileff for his Ballet Russe. The vocal solos were expertly presented by Helen Vanni, soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass. The magnificent work with its outstanding aggressive melodic idiom was given a colorful reading by Burgin, resulting in a delightful, out-of-the-ordinary musical treat for his audience.

The second half of the program was devoted to the dramatic musical language of Richard Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

So effectively was it presented that it was not difficult for the audience to recreate mentally, the exciting, powerful drama which accompanies the majestic music.

All the turbulence which fills this work was most forcefully presented as story of the noble Siegfried and his Brunhilde was related by the Boston musicians. Unusual as concert fare, but interesting.

F. R. Johnson

The New Haven Register
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 98,547 SUN. 109,204

JAN 17 1965 Burrelles

Boston Symphony At Woolsey

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Both the Boston Symphony and our own New Haven Symphony will have "something different" for audiences here this week. The visiting orchestra will bring along three soloists for a presentation of Stravinsky's "Pulcinella", a highlight of its concert on Tuesday evening as the fifth event of the Woolsey series. On Thursday evening in Sprague Hall, the New Haven Symphony will introduce its new chamber group, the New Haven Chamber Orchestra, in a concert under the baton of Frank Brieff.

Patrons of the Woolsey series hardly need to be reminded that the Boston Symphony is giving only one concert here this season in contrast to the two Woolsey Hall appearances which this great orchestra has been making for many years. Scheduling difficulties developed this year but series manager Daggett Lee informs me that he is hopeful that the Boston musicians will be back "in the traditional groove" next season.

In any case, there has been no lack of symphonic interest in the current series which has marked notable debuts by both the Chicago and Warsaw Symphonies. And with the concert by the Cleveland Symphony on Feb. 9 as an extra event, surely patrons of these concerts are drinking deeply of the "symphonic cup that cheers" this season. Incidentally, reports are that ticket sales to date for the Cleveland concert indicate the usual widespread interest in George Szell and his superbly trained musicians.

"Pulcinella" (Ballet with song, in one act) is, of course, a concert version of the music which Stravinsky composed on hemes from Pergolesi. The soloists in Tuesday's performance are to be soprano Helen Vanni, tenor Jerold Siena, and Thomas Paul, bass.

The other items in the program which, incidentally, will be given under the baton of associate conductor, Richard Burgin, should help to make this one of the most interesting and generally appealing programs ever given here by the Boston musicians. Rossini's Overture to "La Scala di Seta" will get the program underway and the entire second half will be devoted to Excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung" (Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Interlude, Act I —Prelude to Act II —Siegfried's Death —Conclusion).

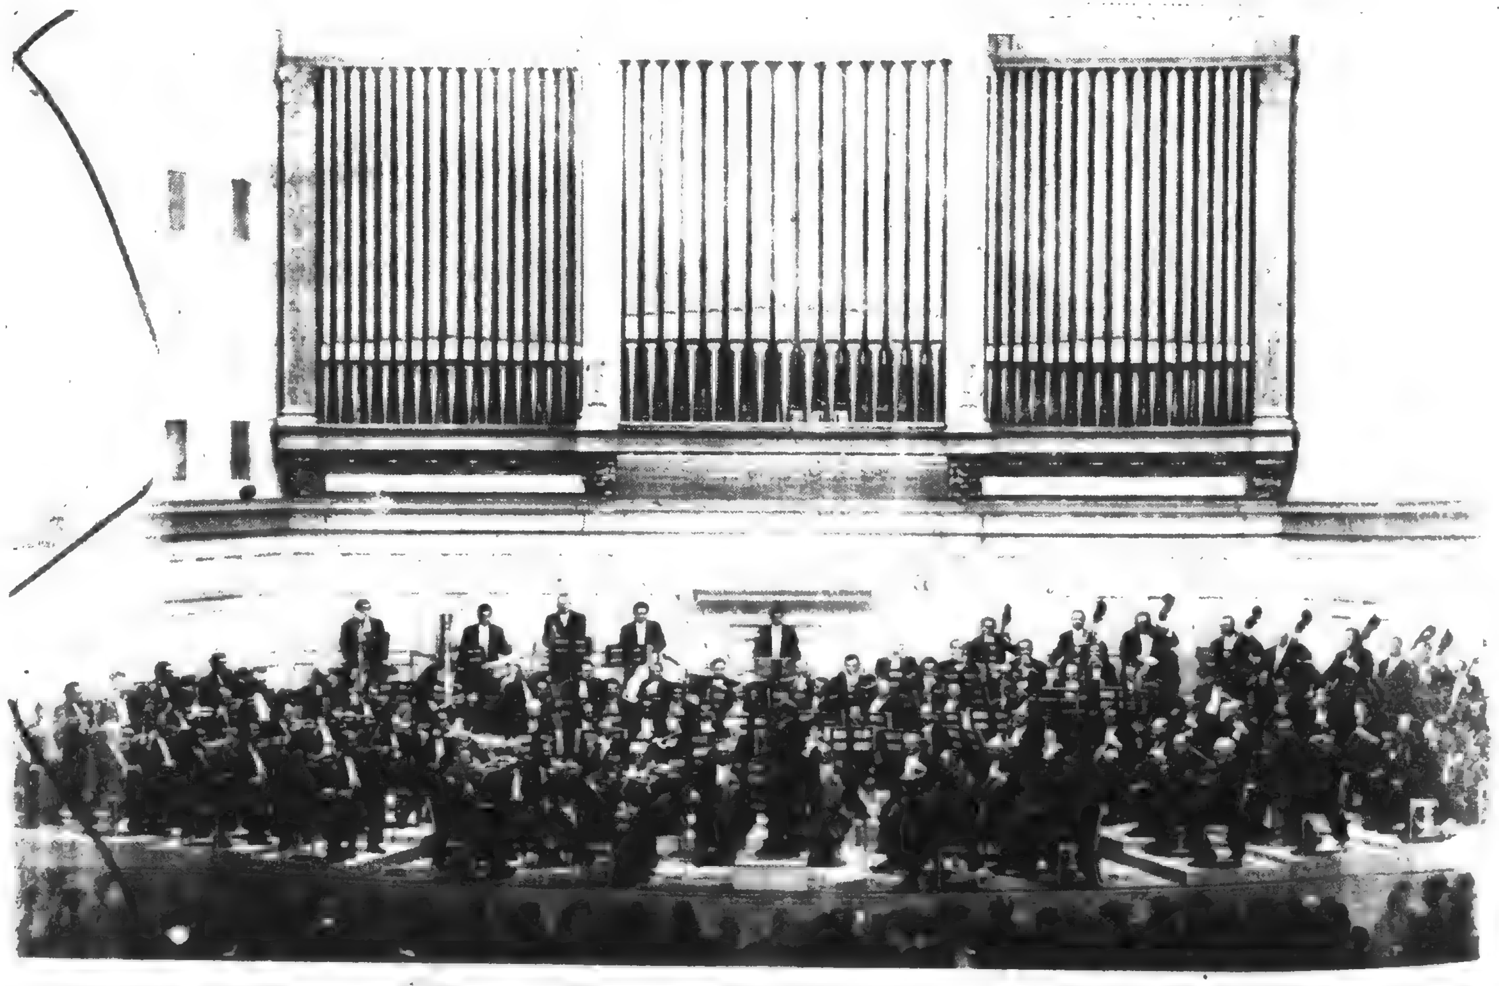
* * *

RICHARD BURGIN, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the concert in Woolsey Hall Tuesday evening. He will substitute for Erich Leinsdorf, who has accepted an invitation to be President Johnson's special guest at the inaugural ceremonies in Washington Monday through Wednesday. The President and Leinsdorf have been friends since 1938 when Johnson, then a congressman, arranged for Leinsdorf's visa to be extended.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
HAMDEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,110

DEC 30 1964



BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCHEDULED

The fifth concert of the current Woolsey Hall Series will be held on Jan. 19, with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra performing. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

NEW YORK JAN. 20TH

Herald NEW YORK Tribune
282 005 SUN. 363,384

2 1 1965

Isaac Stern's Supreme Mastery Of Beethoven Violin Concerto

By William Bender

Who knows how many times Isaac Stern has played the Beethoven Violin Concerto? Twenty times, 200 or 2,000? Perhaps even the master fiddler himself doesn't know.

What is certain, however, is that he has rarely given as sweet and relaxed a reading of the score as the one last night with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall.

Mr. Stern played with all the surety and ease that comes with long association, plus—and this is a big plus—the kind of dreamy introspection and youthful curiosity that one seldom hears in the playing of established artists.

It was quite a blend of ingredients. Fortunately Mr. Leinsdorf was in a similarly thoughtful mood, and the resulting collaboration in the familiar concerto was fresh and easy to take. It was a lyrical performance rather than a strong one, but it didn't suffer by that.

Both men were Inaugural guests of President Johnson earlier in the day, and if they had to miss the dancing last night—well, it was our good fortune.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened the evening with something of a curiosity for an orchestral program—the Introduction to "Pique Dame" by Tchaikovsky. It is an atractive little item—typical of the opera's rich scoring—but fragmentary and inconclusive by itself.

The big work before intermission was Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony, a work that Leinsdorf performs superbly. It is a hard work to bring off. It lacks the cohesion of the Fifth Symphony and the charm of the Seventh. It is rhapsodic and almost programmatic in the way it derives mood and texture from the "Cinderella" ballet score, but its harmonic richness and orchestral coloring give it a power and stature that cannot be denied. And Mr. Leinsdorf wisely chose to play it for sound and mood, and it worked beautifully. As good as his performance was in Tanglewood in 1963, this was better.

Mr. Leinsdorf is now in the midst of performing all the Prokofiev orchestral literature. On the basis of this and his readings of other scores, he is quite clearly just the man for the job.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
D. 40,700 S. 60,500

FEB 2 8 1965

ON THE EVENING between the first two Berlin Philharmonic concerts Isaac Stern played the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf at Philharmonic Hall, to the complete satisfaction of critics and public alike. The concerto was preceded by works of Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev, giving Beethoven the well deserved last word.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 339,455

MUSIC TO MY EAF

Stern's Beethoven,

NAMES change, values remain. Once it was Fritz Kreisler whose performance of the Beethoven Violin Concerto could be cited as the model against which could be argued the merits of Szigeti's or Flesch's (or, for some, Menuhin's or Heifetz's). Now it is Isaac Stern, whose recent appearance with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall produced a performance of such nobility, poise, and musical sophistication that it may stand for this time as the luminous image of comparison for Oistrakh or Milstein, Francescatti or Grumiaux (or, for that matter, the still formidable Heifetz).

There are some performers born, so it with a character that is fully or who attain it so early in their like Heifetz or Menuhin—that it timeless, unchanging, indeed eable. Stern's is quite another hen he was first heard here in Thirties there was no question dent, but there was some queshether the rampant energy through it was expressed might not wear ut, and with it his future. The ctive view would have to be that has been applied to intellec-
th and self-criticism, converted ource of inner strength rather aining a purely physical manivas most absorbing in this latest of a thoroughly equipped prond a work that can search out in anyone of lesser rank was a s sense of each note's function vhole, a mature reflection and d choice of alternatives. This ap-ot only to his solo part, but also performance of the orchestral

Under Leinsdorf's knowing direche results came the closest possible h the numbers involved) to chamber-e ensemble. As an instance, at that ment well along in the first movement en the orchestral violins have the rincipal matter and the soloist embelshes it, Stern played with them not erely in principle, but in fact—turning their direction the better to hear what they were doing. The Kreisler cadenza, which Stern played faultlessly, was also in context, as a bridge to the final affectionate reminiscence of the same theme. Both the Larghetto and the Rondo were permeated with a sense of disciplined ardor profitably applied.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

JAN 2 1 1965

Stern and Boston Symphony Join In Unusual Beethoven Rendering

Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony, and Isaac Stern played a Beethoven Violin Concerto at Philharmonic Hall last night that, for two movements, was highly atypical.

From the standpoint of violin playing, the Stern-Leinsdorf version was a knockout. It was equally so from the standpoint of personal communication from gifted performer to audience.

From the standpoint of Beethoven as we usually hear him, with one foot in the classic age, the other in the romantic, the concerto, as Mr. Stern played it, is open to question.

The center of attention was definitely the violinist, rather than the piece, By smoothing out phrases, slowing them down, speeding them up, by constantly dramatizing virtuoso passages, Mr. Stern kept one's ears on his remarkable performance. It was not blatant dramatizing of the empty showpiece variety. Mr. Stern, with silken, impassioned tones, conveyed many moods: reflective, sweet, warm, but rarely—except in the third movement—bold ones.

Mr. Leinsdorf managed the orchestra beautifully so that it fell in with Mr. Stern, so that the orchestra became an extension of the violinist's concepts. Mr. Leinsdorf kept the orchestra out of the way. It was completely an accompanying body.

Under this treatment, the concerto lost much of its familiar vigor, its stanchness, its upright backbone.

The Stern treatment can't be dismissed, however. He is a thinking musician as well as impeccable technician, and he made his viewpoint fascinating, if sometimes disappointing.

And in the third movement, all the vigor, stanchness, backbone and outgoing spirit returned. It was a joy.

Earlier Mr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra in Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony, which plodded at first. Some of the symphony's mystery and some of its spaciousness were missing, but the conductor gathered all his forces for a spirited ending. He also directed the introduction to "The Queen of Spades" by Tchaikovsky.

THEODORE STRONGIN.

NEW YORK ~~JAN.~~ 20th

67

Herald NEW YORK Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

JAN 2 1 1965 Bykellen

Isaac Stern's Supreme Mastery Of Beethoven Violin Concerto

By William Bender

Who knows how many times Isaac Stern has played the Beethoven Violin Concerto? Twenty times, 200 or 2,000? Perhaps even the master fiddler himself doesn't know.

What is certain, however, is that he has rarely given as sweet and relaxed a reading of the score as the one last night with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall.

Mr. Stern played with all the surety and ease that comes with long association, plus—and this is a big plus—the kind of dreamy introspection and youthful curiosity that one seldom hears in the playing of established artists.

It was quite a blend of ingredients. Fortunately Mr. Leinsdorf was in a similarly thoughtful mood, and the resulting collaboration in the familiar concerto was fresh and easy to take. It was a lyrical performance rather than a strong one, but it didn't suffer by that.

Both men were Inaugural guests of President Johnson earlier in the day, and if they had to miss the dancing last night—well, it was our good fortune.

Mr. Leinsdorf opened the evening with something of a curiosity for an orchestral program—the Introduction to "Pique Dame" by Tchaikovsky. It is an atractive little item—typical of the opera's rich scoring—but fragmentary and inconclusive by itself.

The big work before intermission was Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony, a work that Leinsdorf performs superbly. It is a hard work to bring off. It lacks the cohesion of the Fifth Symphony and the charm of the Seventh. It is rhapsodic and almost programmatic in the way it derives mood and texture from the "Cinderella" ballet score, but its harmonic richness and orchestral coloring give it a power and stature that cannot be denied. And Mr. Leinsdorf wisely chose to play it for sound and mood, and it worked beautifully. As good as his performance was in Tanglewood in 1963, this was better.

Mr. Leinsdorf is now in the midst of performing all the Prokofiev orchestral literature. On the basis of this and his readings of other scores, he is quite clearly just the man for the job.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
PRESS
D. 40,700 S. 60,500

FEB 2 8 1965 Bykellen

ON THE EVENING between the first two Berlin Philharmonic concerts Isaac Stern played the Beethoven Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf at Philharmonic Hall, to the complete satisfaction of critics and public alike. The concerto was preceded by works of Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev, giving Beethoven the well deserved last word.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 339,455

6 1965 Bykellen

MUSIC TO MY EA

Stern's Beethoven,

NAMES change, values remain. Once it was Fritz Kreisler whose performance of the Beethoven Violin Concerto could be cited as the model against which could be argued the merits of Szigeti's or Flesch's (or, for some, Menuhin's or Heifetz's). Now it is Isaac Stern, whose recent appearance with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall produced a performance of such nobility, poise, and musical sophistication that it may stand for this time as the luminous image of comparison for Oistrakh or Milstein, Francescatti or Grumiaux (or, for that matter, the still formidable Heifetz).

There are some performers born, so it seems, with a character that is fully formed, or who attain it so early in their careers—like Heifetz or Menuhin—that it stands as timeless, unchanging, indeed unchangeable. Stern's is quite another case. When he was first heard here in the late Thirties there was no question his talent, but there was some question whether the rampant energy through which it was expressed might not wear out, and with it his future. The spective view would have to be that ergy has been applied to intellec- owth and self-criticism, converted source of inner strength rather emaining a purely physical mani- on.

hat was most absorbing in this latest nter of a thoroughly equipped pro- nal and a work that can search out aws in anyone of lesser rank was a ous sense of each note's function whole, a mature reflection and ured choice of alternatives. This ap- not only to his solo part, but also he performance of the orchestral e. Under Leinsdorf's knowing direc- the results came the closest possible ith the numbers involved) to chamber- sic ensemble. As an instance, at that oment well along in the first movement hen the orchestral violins have the principal matter and the soloist embellishes it, Stern played with them not merely in principle, but in fact—turning n their direction the better to hear what they were doing. The Kreisler cadenza, which Stern played faultlessly, was also in context, as a bridge to the final affectionate reminiscence of the same theme. Both the Larghetto and the Rondo were permeated with a sense of disciplined ardor profitably applied.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

JAN 2 1 1965 Bykellen

Stern and Boston Symphony Join In Unusual Beethoven Rendering

Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony, and Isaac Stern played a Beethoven Violin Concerto at Philharmonic Hall last night that, for two movements, was highly atypical.

From the standpoint of violin playing, the Stern-Leinsdorf version was a knockout. It was equally so from the standpoint of personal communication from gifted performer to audience.

From the standpoint of Beethoven as we usually hear him, with one foot in the classic age, the other in the romantic, the concerto, as Mr. Stern played it, is open to question.

The center of attention was definitely the violinist, rather than the piece. By smoothing out phrases, slowing them down, speeding them up, by constantly dramatizing virtuoso passages, Mr. Stern kept one's ears on his remarkable performance. It was not blatant dramatizing of the empty showpiece variety. Mr. Stern, with silken, impassioned tones, conveyed many moods: reflective, sweet, warm, but rarely—except in the third movement—bold ones.

Mr. Leinsdorf managed the orchestra beautifully so that it fell in with Mr. Stern, so that the orchestra became an extension of the violinist's concepts. Mr. Leinsdorf kept the orchestra out of the way. It was completely an accompanying body.

Under this treatment, the concerto lost much of its familiar vigor, its stanchness, its upright backbone.

The Stern treatment can't be dismissed, however. He is a thinking musician as well as impeccable technician, and he made his viewpoint fascinating, if sometimes disappointing.

And in the third movement all the vigor, stanchness, backbone and outgoing spirit returned. It was a joy.

Earlier Mr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra in Prokofiev's Sixth Symphony, which plodded at first. Some of the symphony's mystery and some of its spaciousness were missing, but the conductor gathered all his forces for a spirited ending. He also directed the introduction to "The Queen of Spades" by Tchaikovsky.

THEODORE STRONGIN

168 BROOKLYN. JAN 21ST.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS
PRESS-
W. 4,200

JAN 1 4 1965

Boston Symphony in 3rd Concert At Music Academy

The Boston Symphony will appear ~~for its third concert~~ of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Jan. 21, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director.

Beginning at 8:30, in the Opera House, the program is devoted to the works of Mazart, Gunther Schuller and Brahms.

This is the first appearance of Mr. Leinsdorf in Brooklyn since October. Mozart's "Symphony No. 33 in B flat, K. 319" will open the program, and Brahms' "Double Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello" will conclude it. In the middle, Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled a work by Gunther Schuller, who headed the composition faculty at Tanglewood last summer and who conducted the Orchestra U.S.A. series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music last season.

The Schuller piece is his "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," inspired by works of the noted painter.

Harry Schwartz, Soviet expert of the "New York Times," will speak in a special evening lecture Tuesday evening, Jan. 19, at the Academy. The lecture, beginning at 8:00 p.m. is titled "The New Triangle of World Politics: Washington, Moscow and Peking" and will be followed by a question-and-answer period.

Mr. Schwartz is recognized as a leading authority on Communism and its relation to world politics. For years, he has made a specialty of Soviet politics and economics, and in recent years he has included Communist China in his studies. He knows the Russian language and reads Soviet newspapers and periodicals to gain first-hand knowledge of events that are not covered in the American press.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, January 14, 1965

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BULLETIN
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

PAGE ONE

JAN 1 4 1965

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,500

JAN 1 6 1965

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 12,100

JAN 1 6 1965

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

JAN 1 3 1965

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

JAN 1 8 1965

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 2,949,646

JAN 1 7 1965

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,200

JAN 1 6 1965

Leinsdorf to Conduct Concert at Academy

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Bostonians in their third concert of the 1964-65 season Thursday, January 21st, at 8:30 p.m. in the Opera House of the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The program is devoted to the works of Mozart, Gunther, Schuller and Brahms.

This is the first appearance of Mr. Leinsdorf in Brooklyn since October. Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B flat, K. 319 will open the program, and Brahms' Doubls Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello will conclude it. In the middle, Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled a widely acclaimed work by Gunther Schuller, who headed the composition faculty at Tanglewood last summer and who conducted the Orchestra U.S.A. series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music last season. The Schuller piece is his "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," inspired by works of the noted painter.

Tickets for the January 21st concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Leinsdorf conducting are now on sale at the box-office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Box-office hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Prices are $3, $3.75, $4, $4.25, $5, $5.50, $6.50, and $7. Mail orders must include stamped, self-addressed envelope with check or money orders.

NEW YORK JAN. 22ND

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

JAN 2 4 1965

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Leinsdorf Leads Prokofiev '6th'

It is difficult to imagine Serge Prokofiev of the Sixth Symphony writing a letter of apology to the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Yet he did so in 1948 after the Committee had issued the detailed, notorious condemnation of major contemporary Russian composers which shocked the world.

In the course of time, for whatever reasons, he wrote several such letters, regretting his "errors" and attempting to explain the problems encountered in writing suitable melodies. The first performance of the Sixth Symphony, in E Flat minor, Op. 111, was in October, 1947, and the ax fell four months later.

~~Erich Leinsdorf~~ conducted the Boston Symphony in a tense performance of the work Friday night at Philharmonic Hall. Performance time was approximately 45 minutes.

As one of the most intellectual of composers, whose wit and satire had cut through his style from youth, Prokofiev must have found compromise intolerable. He was the musical Voltaire of his age and country, and the Sixth Symphony is among his most important works.

Sometimes over-size, its discourse amplifies rather than rambles, and the dominating tragedy is never forgotten, even in the final "Vivace" which is prevailingly vivacious but reverts to the probing gloom and occasional mockery of the first movement, before the work's conclusion.

Interpretation Lacked Warmth

Prokofiev's use of the English Horn for a Slavic melody which recalls an old modal melodic sequence is only one of his many ingenious and pertinent examples of brilliant scoring.

Leinsdorf's interpretation had drama and surge but missed something in communicating the richness of Prokofiev's language. Conducting from memory, he obviously knew what he wanted, but his drive bypassed warmth of tonal color and blend which must emerge from the orchestral fabric for an encompassing re-creation of the composer's ideas. These teem with an intellectual vibrancy which the symphony orchestra should match in tone.

Irving Fine's jazz-oriented "Toccata Concertante" preceded the Symphony, an 11-minute work of some interest, but too long for its content. Before the end, its solidarity became monotonous. Mozart's Smphony No. 33, K. 319, opened the program.

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

JAN 2 3 1965

AT PHILHARMONIC HALL

Leinsdorf in Form

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC rather than Mozart found Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony expert collaborators in Philharmonic Hall last night.

Quite unexpectedly Mozart's Symphony No. 33 came through a bit dull. The performance had that clean-cut sound that Mr. Leinsdorf likes, the proper style, and the academic tinge that Mr. Leinsdorf sometimes achieves.

More elegance to accompany the custom-tailored presentation might have made a difference.

With the shift to Irving Fine's "Toccata Concertante," the characteristics limiting the performance of the Mozart became assets in interpreting this well-composed contemporary score.

It is a workout piece for orchestra. With perfect rapport between conductor and musicians, it can be quite effective.

★

FROM ITS TITLE the listener can expect the motor complex that marks its rhythmic life. He might not expect the Stravinskish aspects the ostinatos establish.

The piece has a nice jaunty character that holds attention and a compositional procedure that sustains it.

This is the kind of music that George Balanchine likes to choreograph; it is surprising that he has not caught up with it by now. His dancers would appreciate it. Mr. Leinsdorf danced his way through entertainingly.

Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony completed the program, a repeat from the Wednesday program.

Herald Tribune
NEW YORK
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

JAN 2 3 1965

Leinsdorf's Bostonians

Mozart Breaks the Mold

By John Gruen

An astringent, biting approach to Mozart seems inappropriate, but Erich Leinsdorf, last evening conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Philharmonic Hall, elected to cast the master's Symphony No. 33 into a rigid, metallic mold. As it happened, the work cracked and buckled under such stern [illegible].

Written at a time when Mozart was eager to leave his native Salzburg for broader geographic and artistic horizons, the work, while never less than engaging, does not quite carry the weight or invention to command ambitious new interpretations. Mr. Leinsdorf's reliable musicianship misfired on this count, as he turned each movement into a studied and acerbic exercise.

The symphony was followed by Irving Fine's "Toccata Concertante." Meeting an untimely death in 1962, this American composer did not live to fulfill the promise of his considerable talent. Judging by the "Toccata," written in 1947, he was in superb command of every orchestral possibility, and manipulated each instrument with sureness and sensitivity. The work itself boasts a full gamut of rhythmic thrusts serving as springboards to a number of highly expressive melodies. Always accessible, always musical, Fine could stir up excitement as well as elegance. Mr. Leinsdorf gave it a tense and passionate reading.

The evening concluded with a repeat performance of Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6—the work which Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra played to great advantage last Wednesday.

The New York Time
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

JAN 2 3 1965

BOSTON SYMPHONY PERFORMS MOZART

Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall last night, offered a speedy performance of the joyful Mozart Symphony in B flat (K. 319) and a foursquare one of the late Irving Fine's "Toccata Concertante."

Mr. Leinsdorf and his men also played the Prokofiev Sixth Symphony, which they had given in Wednesday's Philharmonic Hall concert, reviewed on these pages.

The Boston Symphony, reduced for authenticity in the Mozart, had a wonderful sound, silky, transparent, light, undisfigured by sharp emphases and by yielding tempos.

But at times, as the music rushed ahead, a certain nervousness of effect was detectable—as on a roller coaster. And the work's rococo flavor—its grace and stately eloquence—all but disappeared.

Mr. Fine's Toccata, which was given its premiere by the Bostonians in 1948, is conservative, neo-classic and colorful and has a loose-limbed, muscular sense of rightness about it. Certainly it poses no problem to today's audiences. Mr. Leinsdorf treated it straightforwardly, letting it speak for itself.

THEODORE STRONGIN.

CARNEGIE HALL. JAN 23 69

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

JAN 2 5 1965

Boston Symphony Caps Day

Having deprived myself Wednesday and Friday of even a partial visit with the Boston Symphony and Erich Leinsdorf at Philharmonic Hall, I braved the sleet and ice to hear them at Carnegie Hall Saturday night.

I say braved advisedly. On my first trip in earlier Saturday, two blocks from Carnegie Hall and in a post-concert state of unheeding bliss, I had a nasty fall in the street—right on my basso profundo. I very nearly called it a day. I'm glad I didn't.

As if by reciprocal action, Leinsdorf and the orchestra were wholly inspired in a program of Rossini, Stravinsky-Pergolesi and Wagner. The Rossini "Scala di Seta" overture caught the very image of the master, and of his master interpreter—Toscanini.

One expected the grandeur in the "Goetterdaemmerung" excerpts. But the surprise was Stravinsky's "Pulcinella," that mystic union of melody and harmony between an 18th century Neapolitan and a 20th century Russian. All of it was as fresh as dew.

With two such composers, such a conductor, such an orchestra and such vocal soloists as Helen Vanni, Jerold Siena, and Thomas Paul, there was no need for Massine's or anybody else's choreography. "Pulcinella" was a ballet for the ears.

LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Herald Tribune
NEW YORK
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

JAN 2 5 1965

As Erich Leinsdorf led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung" last Saturday night in Carnegie Hall, probably more than one listener recalled—somewhat wistfully—his brilliant "Ring" cycle just three years ago at the Metropolitan Opera, the conductor's last appearances there prior to taking up his duties as Music Director of the Boston. Saturday's extractions from Wagner's masterpiece were all-orchestral: "Dawn," "Siegfried's Rhine Journey," the Act I Interlude, Prelude to Act II, "Siegfried's Death" and the opera's conclusion. Mr. Leinsdorf's complete mastery of the score was everywhere evident. The music flowed in a full, unbroken line; its climaxes were stunningly, shatteringly realized; its overall effect galvanized the senses. This was the final offering on the program. Its impact had a large audience standing and cheering the superb ensemble and conductor.

Stravinsky's "Pulcinella"—complete with its vocal excerpts—was the evening's novelty. An attractive, if not substantial work, "Pulcinella," with its themes and quotations from Pergolesi, is colorful, animated music, spiced with Stravinsky's imaginative orchestration. The vocal parts somewhat fragmentary, are well-known from the orchestral suite. They were capably sung by Helen Vanni, mezzo-soprano; Jerold Siena, tenor, and Thomas Paul, bass. Rossini's bouncy overture to "La scala di seta" got the evening off to a sprightly start.

W. L.

179 WED #2 . THURS #4 . FRI-SAT. #15

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Second Program

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 27, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUMANN .... Overture to Byron's Manfred, Op. 115

INTERMISSION

MAHLER .... Symphony No. 6, in A minor
- I. Allegro energico, ma non troppo
- II. Scherzo (Wuchtig)
- III. Andante
- IV. Finale (Allegro moderato)

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fourth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART .... Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319
- I. Allegro assai
- II. Andante moderato
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Finale: Allegro assai

FINE .... Toccata Concertante

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73
- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Adagio non troppo
- III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
- IV. Allegro con spirito

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERICH LEINSDORF
Music Director

THIS

CONCERT IS DEDICATED

TO THE MEMORY

OF

SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL

1874-1965

Wednesday, January 27, 1965

Bach's Concerto for Two Violins will be played in memory of
Sir Winston Churchill

The program will be as follows:

BACH .... Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra
- I. Vivace
- II. Largo ma non tanto
- III. Allegro

MOZART .... Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319
- I. Allegro assai
- II. Andante moderato
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Finale: Allegro assai

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73
- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Adagio non troppo
- III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
- IV. Allegro con spirito

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN   ALFRED KRIPS

Thursday, January 28, 1965

71

Fifteenth Program

RNOON, JANUARY 29, at 2:00 o'clock

TURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 30, at 8:30 o'clock

ormance of Bach's Concerto is dedicated he memory of Sir Winston Churchill.

Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüte"

(First performance at these concerts)

ncerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra vace go ma non tanto llegro

. . . . "Agon," Ballet

INTERMISSION

. . . . . *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto: Moderato con anima
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Allegro (Pizzicato ostinato)
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN ALFRED KRIPS

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 24 1965

Programs at Symphony

Bach's Concerto for Two Violins will be played at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday at 2 and Saturday at ~~8:30 p.m.~~ Soloists will be Joseph Silverstein, orchestra concertmaster, and Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster.

The program will begin with the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den hochsten von ganzen Gemute." Following the concerto, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct music to Stravinsky's ballet "Agon" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The second concert in the new Wednesday evening series will be held Jan. 27. Leinsdorf will open the program with Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred. After an early intermission he will conduct the Mahler Sixth Symphony, which he is introducing to the Boston Symphony concerts for the first time this season.

On Jan. 28 Leinsdorf will conduct the fourth program of the Thursday Evening Series. The concert will begin with Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B-flat major, K. 319, and continue with the Toccata Concertante by the late Irving Fine. After the intermission the program will close with Brahm's Symphony No. 2.

The second Symphony Hall organ concert of the season will take place today at 6 p.m. in Symphony Hall.

Allan Birney, graduate student at Boston University who is giving this recital as part of his award as winner of the 1964 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the A.G.O., will play Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat; Schumann's Canon in B minor; "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy" by Messiaen; the first Boston performance of Intersections for Organ (1964) by Richmond Browne; and Franck's Grande piece symphonique.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
FITCHBURG, Mass.
Circ. 18,929

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Caledonia-Record (e)
ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.
Circ. 6,304

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Cape Cod
Standard Times (e)
HYANNIS, Mass.
Circ. 20,739

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 12,522

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,427

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 28 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Circ. 4,878

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,177

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 15,968

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,240

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 27,550

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,016

JAN 27

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 14,021

JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 27 1965

Symphony Plans Musical Tributes To Sir Winston

The memory of Sir Winston Churchill will receive the rare honor of four musical tributes by the Boston Symphony orchestra during this week's concerts. The tribute of music in memoriam is believed to be the first such for a foreign statesman in the orchestra's 84-year history.

Tonight the entire program will be dedicated to the late British leader and will consist of Schumann's overture to Byron's "Manfred" and the "Tragic" sixth symphony of Mahler.

The tributes will continue in portions of the other concerts tomorrow, Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

71

Fifteenth Program

RNOON, JANUARY 29, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 30, at 8:30 o'clock

erformance of Bach's Concerto is dedicated the memory of Sir Winston Churchill.

Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüte"

(First performance at these concerts)

Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra

Vivace
Largo ma non tanto
Allegro

STRAVINSKY . . . . "Agon," Ballet

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY . . . . *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto; Moderato con anima
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Allegro (Pizzicato ostinato)
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN   ALFRED KRIPS

BALDWIN PIANO   *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 24 1965

Programs at Symphony

Bach's Concerto for Two Violins will be played at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday at 2 and Saturday at ~~8:30 p.m.~~ Soloists will be Joseph Silverstein, orchestra concertmaster, and Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster.

The program will begin with the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den hochsten von ganzen Gemute." Following the concerto, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct music to Stravinsky's ballet "Agon" and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The second concert in the new Wednesday evening series will be held Jan. 27. Leinsdorf will open the program with Schumann's Overture to Byron's Manfred. After an early intermission he will conduct the Mahler Sixth Symphony, which he is introducing to the Boston Symphony concerts for the first time this season.

On Jan. 28 Leinsdorf will conduct the fourth program of the Thursday Evening Series. The concert will begin with Mozart's Symphony No. 33 in B-flat major, K. 319, and continue with the Toccata Concertante by the late Irving Fine. After the intermission the program will close with Brahm's Symphony No. 2.

The second Symphony Hall organ concert of the season will take place today at 6 p.m. in Symphony Hall.

Allan Birney, graduate student at Boston University who is giving this recital as part of his award as winner of the 1964 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the A.G.O., will play Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat; Schumann's Canon in B minor; "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy" by Messiaen; the first Boston performance of Intersections for Organ (1964) by Richmond Browne; and Franck's Grande piece symphonique.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sentinel (e)
FITCHBURG, Mass.
Circ. 18,929
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Caledonia-Record (e)
ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt.
Circ. 6,304
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Cape Cod Standard Times (e)
HYANNIS, Mass.
Circ. 20,739
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 12,522
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,427
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
JAN 28 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
ATHOL, Mass.
Circ. 4,878
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,177
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 15,968
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,240
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 27,550
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,016
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 14,021
JAN 27 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 27 1965

Symphony Plans Musical Tributes To Sir Winston

The memory of Sir Winston Churchill will receive the rare honor of four musical tributes by the Boston Symphony orchestra during this week's concerts. The tribute of music in memoriam is believed to be the first such for a foreign statesman in the orchestra's 84-year history.

Tonight the entire program will be dedicated to the late British leader and will consist of Schumann's overture to Byron's "Manfred" and the "Tragic" sixth symphony of Mahler.

The tributes will continue in portions of the other concerts tomorrow, Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

1 12

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483
JAN 30 1965

Fourth Saves Program

Symphony: Tchaikowsky

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Of all things, Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony given a restorative reading by Erich Leinsdorf at yesterday's concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, redeemed a program that was otherwise shambling, eccentric, sapless and dull.

Mr. Leinsdorf is, I think, insufficiently recognized for his conducting in this area. He has a way with Tchaikowsky: sentiment is not in it, but the composer is the better for a treatment that stresses architecture, form and drama rather than legato brooding.

No Lingering

To begin with, the ensemble tone is bright and clear; you will not find the conductor lingering over the cantabile cellos of the opening, or even — in the liquid oboe canzona — drawing out its lines. Most maestros offer Tchaikowsky in an exceedingly introverted style, at tempi that give the impression of a pseudo-Slavic melancholy aware of itself but the Leinsdorf interpretation avoids the temptations of the treacly, phrasing with a simple warmth and establishing a metric design full of brilliance, spirit and poise.

The first movement is offered with a sonorous appreciation of the so-called "Fate" theme, Mr. Leinsdorf doesn't accent this brutally; part of the meretricious effect this symphony can make, the effect of manic-depression derives from the fact that fury and agitation achieve such momentum that the woodwinds and strings lose their expressivity as song and become constricted interludes of anguish.

Rather than communicating the Fourth in such theatrical and episodic contracts Mr. Leinsdorf gives each of the movements sufficient rubato to preserve the dancelike moods—a delicate motion is preserved throughout, including a crisp pizzicato ostinato, and weight in the brass and tympani when required. Only the finale is slightly overdone, partially overwhelming the D minor element in the strings; yet it is also logical, and in terms of what has gone before, a powerful fortissimo punctuation to a streamlined and supple symphonic statement.

Questionable Taste

The notation in the program that the Bach Concerto was dedicated to "the memory of Winston Churchill" did not seem to me in good taste since (a.) Churchill had no interest in classical music whatsoever, much less in Bach, and (b.) the program was announced several weeks ago while the great man was alive. I am sure that the sentiment is genuine, and the wish to honor a salient figure of our era upon the day of his funeral; yet in view of the foregoing, what is real, as too often happens in our society, is transmuted into unctious institutional piety.

This put me in a churlish frame of mind, although I heartily endorse the policy of using BSO musicians as soloists, and it struck me that Messrs. Silverstein and Krips glossed over the polyphonic possibilities of the Vivace and the Largo in abrand performance that rushed phrase, had a nervous and tentative pulse, and blurred details.

Both men could have dug in more, and their rapport with each other and the orchestra was ragged. The Allegro, however, found the various elements of performance at least cheerfully coming together, the sound technique of Mr. Krips, whom we do not hear as often in this role as Mr. Silverstein, was revealed, and the concerto attained a shapely and triumphant conclusion.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 15th program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips violin. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174 "Ich liebe den Hochsten von ganzem Gemute" .... Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra .... Bach
"Agon" ballet .... Stravinsky
Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Op. 36

The Sinfonia of the Cantata 174, which opened the program, again found Mr. Leinsdorf at the continuo, conducting from the harpsichord. His Bach orchestra was balanced engagingly, oboes and English horn to the left, and the performance proceded almost by rote, genial in a rather pedantic and ponderous way.

The mixed delights of this were reflected also in Stravinsky's "Agon" which contains some wonderful music, piquant timbres and harmonies, and also some music of virtually stupefying inertia, dry, slack and tiresome. The initial passages are replete with a lean economy of statement, rhythmic ingenuity and remarkable fragments of color, but toward the end the work drones away into a series of mannerisms, which reflect the old artsit, and grow tedious indeed. The work is crammed with formidable technical problems, too, and this performance regrettably disclosed the strain on musicians coming home from tour.

Phyllis Curtin soprano, will be soloist next week in Berg's "Le Vin" Concert Aria; and Mr. Leinsdorf has scheduled Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and Overture to "Lenore," No. 2, Op. 72, and Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite.

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
JAN 30 1965

At Symphony

Stravinsky's 'Agon,' Bach, Tchaikovsky

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Erich Leinsdorf's Boston Symphony on Friday ended with the Tchaikovsky Fourth—the loudest piece ever, it seemed—but in the first half there had been both adventure and refinement: Bach's Sinfonia to the Cantata No. 174 ("Ich liebe den Hoechsten") and D minor Concerto for Two Violins, then Stravinsky's ballet score, "Agon."

The Sinfonia is an orchestral and polyphonic marvel: it is the first movement of the Third Brandenberg Concerto, but enriched by the addition of five new parts for oboes and horns. The playing of the treacherous high horn parts, a bit tentative at first, got to be marvellous as the movement went on.

The Double Concerto is a more familiar miracle. The soloists were Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips, respectively concertmaster and assistant concertmaster. One hears all kinds of performances of this piece, good and bad, but it is rare to encounter one whose chief problem is the uneven matching of the two soloists. Silverstein's playing was perhaps a little impersonal, but it was also clear, tasteful and impeccable in its violinistic aspects. That of Krips, on the other hand, inclined toward chaotic intonation, and its occasional sentimentalities were stylistically inappropriate.

In both Bach pieces, tempi were relaxed and dynamics rather subdued. The later created a problem in that the difference between the solo and tutti sections was diminished to a point where the musical structure became a little fuzzy. In the Largo of the Concerto, the solo playing was so reticent that the instrument that at any given moment carried the melody could not always be sure of coming clearly through the decorative figurations of the other.

Leinsdorf conducted both Bach works from the harpsichord, and this time with results that were almost completely satisfactory. What made it work, when, for me, it had not worked at previous concerts, was that he hardly conducted at all, but played instead, with the result that the harpsichord was able to fulfill its function of providing a firm and continuous rhythmic and harmonic foundation. The qualifying "almost" refers to my thought that the Boston Symphony's continuo problems be still better solved if an instrument of brighter tone could be used than the Herz harpsichord which Leinsdorf now plays. It isn't always loud enough, but otherwise the effect was admirable.

The performance of the tricky "Agon" score was impressive for its clarity of textural detail. The instrumental writing is breathtaking with its filigree of harp, mandolin, isolated piano notes, harmonics for double basses, delicate duets for trumpets, trombones, bassoons, etc. And I have not heard another performance in which these wonders emerged consistently with such clarity. The one exception was the Sarabande, where Silverstein's tone was always on the verge of disappearing behind the accompanying trombones and xylophone.

There was not the sharp edge of Stravinsky's own performance. Actually Stravinsky takes the piece slower than his own metronome marks (Rosbaud is very close to these, and to great effect), and Leinsdorf's seemed a little slower still. So "Agon" emerged with a kind of placidity that seems a little alien to it.

Still, many expressive points were extremely well taken: I remember with special pleasure the humor in Coda of the first Pas-de-Trois, and the grand closing gesture of the Bransle Simple in the second. And I hope that Leinsdorf will at some time reconsider his decision to omit the repeats in the wonderful Pas-de-deux: it's a bit shapeless without. Not least, "Agon" was the occasion for some very good playing from the orchestra.

The performance of the Tchaikovsky Fourth had the merit of being pretty straight, and free of the traditional vulgarizations. The last two movements, which need more than anything to be marshaled along in a direct and energetic way, went very well from every point of view. Their success went some way toward making up for a certain stiffness in the more lyric first and second movements, and for some ungainly and out-of-tune clarinet and oboe solos in them.

Among other things, I was left wondering if the composition has been written that will keep a Friday Symphony audience in its seats. Even by its own standards, this audience outdid itself from the point of view of providing a continuing and distracting promenade to the exits.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
FEB 4 1965

BSO Program

PAYS TRIBUTE TO CHURCHILL

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

Bach, Stravinsky and Tchaikowsky comprised last Saturday evening's Boston Symphony program which included a tribute to Sir Winston Churchill. The concert opened with Bach's "Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174," a derivation of the first movement of the third Brandenburg Concerto with added wind instruments. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf also provided the harpsichord continuo in a bright, crisp reading of the work.

Bach's "Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra" was then given a performance "dedicated to the memory of Sir Winston Churchill." Soloists were Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips, who shares the first desk with Silverstein. Conductor Leinsdorf again was seated at the harpsichord while directing a superb performance by soloists and ensemble both. The somber, dignified second movement seemed especially appropriate to the occasion.

The high point of the evening for me was "Agon," a ballet composed by Igor Stravinsky. "Agon" literally means "conflict" or "struggle," but Stravinsky intended it to be a contest of sorts between the dancers. This leads to a discussion of the significance of the work. Structurally the music is atonal, in the tradition of Schoenberg or Webern, but it is less cerebral, less vacuumized. This is music of passion and dry humor, and the score, for example, includes a mandolin, tom-tom, xylophone and castanets, and one of the ways in which this work specifically differs from the bulk of atonal compositions is in the use of spirited rhythms. Through such usage, the atonality becomes more focused and purposeful.

It would seem that Mr. Leinsdorf interpreted "Agon" with all its facets clearly in mind and the orchestra gave it a lively, discerning performance. It was a performance, furthermore, that deserved a far warmer reception than it received from the indifferent audience.

The final work was Tchaikowsky's "Symphony No. 4, in F minor," and here I have a quarrel with Mr. Leinsdorf's interpretation, particularly the fourth movement. It almost appeared that the orchestra was trying desperately to finish by 10:30 sharp, for the tempo was on the speedy side. Interestingly enough, the deadline was made with minutes to spare.

Finally, I have a few observations on the audience. Admittedly, it has been some time since my last Symphony concert, but I had not remembered the audience as being quite so discourteous. The applause, as I have indicated, after the Stravinsky was perfunctory with the bulk of the audience heading quickly for the lobby. The crash at the beginning of the fourth movement of the Tchaikowsky was the signal for many around me to start getting dressed and they spent the movement preparing themselves for the outside cold. No sooner had Mr. Leinsdorf's posture relaxed than these people, now fully prepared, dashed out, — presumably to meet their fates.

A symphony orchestra should not be taken for granted—even if the program selection or interpretation is not to one's liking. The Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot be expected to please everyone all the time, but its audiences can and should be expected to show courtesy, both to the orchestra and to fellow listeners.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1965

Two fiddles and Tchaikovsky

By Godfrey John

Bach — Stravinsky — Tchaikovsky: Three vividly contrasting canvases to hang in Friday's orchestral gallery. Under Erich Leinsdorf's baton, the Boston Symphony cut two Bach works into the heights of Symphony Hall (the Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174 and the surprising Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra).

They were followed by Stravinsky's latest abstract, his "Agon" ballet piece. And finally the intense color and dark depths of Tchaikovsky —one of orchestral music's most tragic painters — rose and fell in our ears after intermission with his Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

The clean lines of the Sinfonia were carefully drawn for us as Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from the harpsichord. He allowed Bach's unerring geometry to define itself, occasionally beating time between the faint percussive accents of his instrument. No break from tradition here.

And then the Concerto. This one was born out of the most placid years of Bach's career — the years at Cöthen.

The orchestra here is noticeably subordinate, moving behind the two soloists with little more than the rhythmic pulse. But it is not so much a contrast between these two violins that is entered into as what Sir Hubert Parry describes as a "sisterly discourse."

The slow movement was noticeably melodic. After all, these are not geometrical altitudes in which move the question and answer, call and echo that fall between the soloists. Something of Bach's reaching for spiritual breadth was recognizable in this Leinsdorf rendering.

Stravinsky is always incurably Stravinsky. In the "Agon" colors flew. Canons of harmony were readily violated. We reminded ourselves that this was "pure" music.

As we shifted position, harmonic fragments fled from one plane of sonority to another. But once we got round to accepting the idiom, the composer's latest cataclysm of sound acquired shape.

Brass, woodwinds, strings exploded together, or snapped the air with their single voices. Atonal glee. We wondered why Mr. Leinsdorf was not having any fun.

What so far had been missing in lyrical warmth on this program came at last in the rich wash of Tchaikovsky. In this final canvas, after the bombastic entry of the brass, the strings leaned into the main theme, rising and falling along their chromatic suspense. Shudders like sudden bursts of dactyls insistently broke up the plaintive melody. And in that first ascent and sweep of the full orchestra the surging tones of the composer's great sadness quite caught at the heart for a moment.

Both the first and the third movements were particularly faithful. We returned to the main theme like coming back to old rooms known in childhood, into the corners of which we could no longer fully see. Dust changed to moving shadows . . . yes, we were almost there.

Then in the Finale, from flickering fingertips to scything sweep of arms, Mr. Leinsdorf gave himself up all too soon to the full range of his histrionics. Our eyes were held stranded between caricature and pathos. Our ears were deafened. How he rushed it all!

Where was the buildup? What began as that brilliant hurl and tearing of Tchaikovsky's own struggling angel trembled, with the last chords, between over-statement and genuine crisis.

TUESDAY # 7 FRI-SAT # 16

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 2, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH . . . . Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüte"
(First performance at these concerts)

BACH . . . . Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra
- I. Vivace
- II. Largo ma non tanto
- III. Allegro

STRAVINSKY . . . . "Agon," Ballet

INTERMISSION

WAGNER . . . . Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"
Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Interlude, Act I —
Prelude to Act II — Siegfried's Death — Conclusion

SOLOISTS
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN ALFRED KRIPS

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXT

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 5, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 6, at 8:30 o'clo

BEETHOVEN . . . . Overture, Leonore No. 2

BEETHOVEN . . . . Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93
- I. Allegro vivace e con brio
- II. Allegretto scherzando
- III. Tempo di minuetto
- IV. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BERG . . . . . "Le Vin," Concert Aria (To a text by Charles Baudelaire)

KODÁLY . . . . Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"
- I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
- II. Viennese Musical Clock
- III. Song
- IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
- V. Intermezzo
- VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST
PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 31 1965

Soprano at Symphony

The concert aria "Le Vin," a setting by Aban Berg of three poems from Baudelaire's cycle, will be performed by the soprano Phyllis Curtin and the Boston Symphony at concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will also include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and Symphony No. 8. The concerts will conclude with the "Hary Janos Suite" of Kodaly.

The other Boston Symphony concert this week is on Tuesday. There will be an open rehearsal Thursday.

Leinsdorf will begin Tuesday's program with the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Hochsten von Ganzem Gemute." Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips will perform the Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra.

The orchestra will play the complete music to Stravinsky's Ballet. "Agon." The concert will conclude with Excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

On Thursday at 7:30 p.m., the fourth open rehearsal of the season will take place, at which the week-end program will receive its final rehearsal. The proceeds from the open rehearsals benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 3 1965

Soprano Soloist

Phyllis Curtin will sing Alban Berg's concert aria "Le Vin" at Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

178

TUESDAY #7. FRI-SAT #16

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, February 2, at 8:30 o'clock

Bach .... Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüte"

(First performance at these concerts)

Bach .... Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra

- I. Vivace
- II. Largo ma non tanto
- III. Allegro

Stravinsky .... "Agon," Ballet

INTERMISSION

Wagner .... Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung"

Dawn — Siegfried's Rhine Journey — Interlude, Act I — Prelude to Act II — Siegfried's Death — Conclusion

SOLOISTS

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN   ALFRED KRIPS

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, February 5, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, February 6, at 8:30 o'clock

Beethoven .... Overture, Leonore No. 2

Beethoven .... Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

- I. Allegro vivace e con brio
- II. Allegretto scherzando
- III. Tempo di minuetto
- IV. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

Berg ...... "Le Vin," Concert Aria (To a text by Charles Baudelaire)

Kodály .... Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"

- I. Prelude — The Fairy Tale Begins
- II. Viennese Musical Clock
- III. Song
- IV. The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon
- V. Intermezzo
- VI. Entrance of the Emperor and his Court

SOLOIST

PHYLLIS CURTIN, Soprano

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 31 1965

Soprano at Symphony

The concert aria "Le Vin," a setting by Aban Berg of three poems from Baudelaire's cycle, will be performed by the soprano Phyllis Curtin and the Boston Symphony at concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will also include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and Symphony No. 8. The concerts will conclude with the "Hary Janos Suite" of Kodaly.

The other Boston Symphony concert this week is on Tuesday. There will be an open rehearsal Thursday.

Leinsdorf will begin Tuesday's program with the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Hochsten von Ganzem Gemute." Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips will perform the Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra.

The orchestra will play the complete music to Stravinsky's Ballet. "Agon." The concert will conclude with Excerpts from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

On Thursday at 7:30 p.m., the fourth open rehearsal of the season will take place, at which the week-end program will receive its final rehearsal. The proceeds from the open rehearsals benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 3 1965

Soprano Soloist

Phyllis Curtin will sing Alban Berg's concert aria "Le Vin" at Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

75

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

FEB 3

The Sound of Music

Wagner, Si, Bach, No At Symphony Concert

By Peter M. Knapp

From Bach to Stravinsky is quite a leap in style and time. And from Stravinsky back to Wagner also requires some adjustments in listening.

Such was the peculiar programming arranged by Erich Leinsdorf for last night's concert by the Boston Symphony. Fortunately, the choicest music-making was reserved for last, and the humdrum Bach renditions which began the evening were drowned out by the closing superlative interpretation Mr. Leinsdorf brought to excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung."

Wagner chose not only an imposing name for the closing of his monumental four-opera Ring cycle, he also put together some awesome music. Contemporary taste tends to snicker at Wagner's Ring, with its unwieldy collection of gods and goddesses, heroes, dragons, magic spells, talking birds and what not.

Yet Wagner, of course, is much more than that, as Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians demonstrated in their searingly dramatic performance of the closing of the Ring. Wagner can be bombastic, obvious and turgid in unskilled hands; under the guidance of a sensitive musician, this music can burn with the passion, the pathos and the hope of human emotions.

In his last season at the Metropolitan Opera, Mr. Leinsdorf conducted a Ring cycle that won considerable acclaim. This connection with stage performances, perhaps, enables him to approach this music from a dramatic, rather than a symphonic, viewpoint. The difference is clearly discernable in the flow of musical action he commands, rather than the slack readings one often encounters in which each climax is an excuse for provocative pause.

The concert opened with two compositions of J.S. Bach which were disappointingly bland, and at times, sloppy. The first was the Sinfonia from the Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Hoechsten von ganzem Gemuete", more familiar in its other setting in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, and the magnificent Concerto in d minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra, for which the soloists were Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips.

Leinsdorf At Harpsichord

On the positive side, Mr. Leinsdorf cut down his orchestra to suitable proportions, and gained a fine tonal balance by rearranging the seating. The woodwinds were brought down front, with the violins to the rear. Mr. Leinsdorf also played the harpsichord continuo and directed from the instrument.

But where clarity of line and transparency of texture should have resulted, there was dense, thick sound, loose ends, and a lack of any rhythmic punch. The Sinfonia was especially muddy, and the harpsichord in both works was barely audible with its faint tinklings.

The concerto was rescued from absolute boredom by the more than competent solo work. But the accompaniment was dry and stiff, and Mr. Krips was overbalanced by the bigger, more brilliant tones of his colleague. Mr. Silverstein's playing in the slow movement was unusually beautiful.

Also on the program was Igor Stravinsky's complete ballet score, "Agon", written in 1957 for the New York City Ballet. It is probably more successful for the dance than for a concert performance without the additional dimension of movement. Stravinsky employs a large orchestra, including a mandolin, but fragments his score among individual sections and soli groups rather than using large masses.

There is wit and craftsmanship evident in "Agon", with some ingenious combinations of instruments and the usual compelling Stravinskyian rhythms. The individual sections also are clearly recognizable.

Yet there is no sense of continuity here, and the extreme abstractness of the score, even without ear-piercing dissonance, makes it sound like bits and pieces — a kind of aural study without logical design. Most of the audience obviously found it tedious — and so it was.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

FEB 6 1965

Boston Symphony

Power and repose

By John Marshall Cuno

Power and repose — those two words suggest the mood evoked at Symphony Hall during the Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The two elements go together, or at least they did in the selections played by the ensemble under Erich Leinsdorf's watchful direction.

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 began the program more meditatively than solemnly. That was all right. In the opera (later called "Fidelio") all is not lost for the condemned man.

Even when the orchestra collected its strength and rose to a grand pronouncement, the power and the repose were in equilibrium. At the climax the remote (offstage) trumpet came sweetly as sunlight into a dark cell.

The long coda, of course, is exultant, rising, falling, and rising again with string outbursts. But grand as it becomes, the strength and the gentleness are forces held in flawless equipoise.

The playing and conducting gave the work that form and meaning it inherently possesses.

Mr. Leinsdorf also deserves credit for choosing works that "play" well together.

* * *

In Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F major there is profound repose. Say what you will of its strong and commanding gestures, it rests you — it does not tire you — to hear it. In fact there is in it even caprice.

One could hear the composer putting together all the many fragmentary ideas in a flowing and richly classical mosaic of tones. At the same time Beethoven, forward-looking as he was, made every detail serve a highly individual design.

And always a counterpoise.

Accents and cross accents, iambs and dactyls, piano and forte, and the interweaving textures of the instruments. The composer left no tone unturned (nor did the director).

The Tempo di minuetto might have gone a bit more slowly, more stately, because the finale (happily) did not gallop, and there must be a strong contrast here. But those horns and clarinets, what a pleasure to hear!

* * *

Phyllis Curtin, soprano, joined the orchestra after intermission for "Le Vin," a concert aria by Alban Berg. Larklike, her sustained vocal tones soared above and along with the buoyant and fluid orchestral cadences. She captured the delirious feeling of the work and added her own clear, plaintive, and sublime comment.

Kodály's Suite from the comic opera, "Háry János" came as a final major selection. And splendidly.

Full of Hungarian elements, the work requires a cimbalom to give that moody gypsy plucking and trilling sound. Cimbaloms, of course, don't grow on trees, but one was somehow found and a fine lady performer to go with it.

The work, keeping itself in its national idiom, with now and again Viennese elements showing, delighted with its many effects. There are bells, a piano, a beautiful viola solo (beautifully rendered), some lovely oboe and flute work, and one of the most charming horn melodies in the Intermezzo — two horns joined by violin, cello, and flute.

One could almost see the heroic national (and Magyar) figure of Háry János striding across the score like some mythic giant.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

FEB 6 1965

Symphony

Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Leonora No. 2 Save the Day

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Last week the Tchaikowsky Fourth redeemed the program at Symphony; this weekend it is Beethoven coming to the rescue of a concert that would have been woefully defective without the Leonora No. 2 and the Eighth Symphony.

Mr. Leinsdorf erred probably in his Beethoven sequence. The Leonora Overture — and No. 2 is the least-played of all the variants — when it is given such a splendidly theatrical reading, has the capacity to overwhelm the pensive elegance of such a statement as the Eighth Symphony; nevertheless, this is a relatively minor point, for if the latter was partially blurred by its placement in the program, it was not in performance.

Thorough Joy

The first three movements of the Eighth were a thorough joy. The conductor's conception is traditional, straightforward, judicious, all qualities that express the limpid simplicity of the opening melodies, the metronomic chords of the winds and the repose of the minuet.

In these three movements Mr. Leinsdorf discloses that a classic approach to Beethoven —i.e., an approach of carefully-balanced outline in which tempi are animated only a shade more than average — can result in a structure of refined stylistic vitality. There is, furthermore, a great deal of fastidious detail in the phrasing, rhythmic definition and tonal glow of the instrumental fabric.

The Allegro vivace finds a shift in dramatic emphasis not uncommon in the Eighth, and here it seemed to me that Mr. Leinsdorf, plagued by the necessity for effective climax, strove for an acceleration that scrambled the movement somewhat and did not supply enough steadiness. Taken all in all, though, especially in its earlier sections, this was an interpretation of rare quality.

Of the Overture to Leonora, I have no cavil at all, since the eminently theatrical idiom, with its pronounced rubato, was a superb rendering of the darkling heroism implicit in the text. From the offstage trumpet call outside the castle walls to the emphatic dynamic contrasts of the ensemble, Mr. Leinsdorf's handling of the elaborate thematic development constituted a dramatic experience of the highest order. He chose the rhetorical manner, and the contrast of its accents was charged with a mounting sense of excitement.

Berg's concert aria in praise of wine and its invaluable properties, set to a Baudelairean text, combines orchestral timbres and colors of striking opulence (at times), with a dessicated atonal composing procedure (most of the time) seemingly based on the idea that the way to celebrate wine is cerebral rather than olfactory. In short, he is no Anacreon, and his concert aria is enough to make the wine-lover respond to it as a rather gummy Austrian bottling of a good year.

Impossible Task

Phyllis Curtin, an imposing and handsome brunette figure in an off-the-shoulder crimson gown, did her best to cope with the sounds that were ricocheting from all directions of the orchestra, sounds that ranged from the lugubriously hollow alto sax to the tinkle of the glockenspiel, as another cork went off, and I'm afraid she had trouble projecting the clarity of the words, although she possesses a musicianship of a high order in other respects. Her phrasing was commendable, insofar as it could be heard, and her word-coloring, but the task was impossible.

There are two ways of looking at the "Hary Janos" suite: either as good fun or else as superficial decor, and I was of both persuasions. The music wouldn't tax the sensibilities of a Pops concert, and I noted in passing that Mr. Leinsdorf had secured a stylish new soloist, Toni Koves-Steiner, to play that excessively romantic instrument, the Hungarian cembalom.

Half the audience charged out after the penultimate section, which was not surprising, and Mr. Leinsdorf brought them back to their seats with a thunderous Entrance of the Emperor and his Court, which must be situated in Brobdignag.

Next weekend Charles Munch as guest conductor schedules Berlioz's Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini", Debussy's "Iberia", Roussel's Symphony No. 4, Op. 53, and Ravels "Daphnis and Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 16th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Overture, Lenore, No. 2 . . . Beethoven
Symphony No. 8, in F major,
Op. 93 . . . . Beethoven
"Le Vin," Concert Aria . . . . . . Berg
Suite from the Comic Opera,
"Hary Janos" . . . . Kodaly

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 6 1965

The ARTS

Beethoven, Berg at Symphony

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Friday's Boston Symphony concert, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, began well with performances of two of Beethoven's most individual and inventive pieces, the second Leonore Overture and the Eighth Symphony.

Both were on the whole done excellently, though I was sorry to observe that Leinsdorf i among the many conductor who hurry across the powerfu silences in the Overture's 37t and 39th measures.

The interpretation of th symphony was full of interesting and effective ideas. Th subtle and beautifully clarifying relation of the temp for the first two movement was one, managed so that th staccato wind chords of th Allegretto were just a slightly urgent variation on th similar chords in the Allegro The tight joining of Menue and Trio was fine also, the latter being allowed to expand expressively only at the point where the harmony begins to move and become adventurous.

There were also a couple of ideas that were less good, such as the underplaying of the cello triplets in the Trio, and the over-elaborate preparation for some of the jokes in the Finale. In all though, it was a notably good Eighth.

What should have been a high point of the whole season, Phyllis Curtin's performance of Alban Berg's concert aria "Der Wein"—here done in Baudelaire's French original as "Le Vin" rather than in the more usual Stefan George translation—was a bitter disappointment.

We badly need performances of 20th-century classics, and good ones, but this was too useless to be called a performance at all. True, Berg writes heavily in the orchestra, but it is possible to come a little closer to intelligibility. Miss Curtin was almost entirely inaudible throughout. One could tell the difference when she was singing and when she was not, but no words came across and there was no chance for poetic communication, let alone nuance.

From the orchestra there was only mud, rhythmically shapeless, untransparent, penetrated now and again by a loud and badly played saxophone.

The concert ended with Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite.

FRI.-SAT # 17. SUN. # 4. THUR # 5.

N • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

venteenth Program

FRI NOON, February 12, at 2:00 o'clock

TURDAY EVENING, February 13, at 8:30 o'clock

ARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

Berlioz Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

Debuss ....Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways) arfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

Roussel ....Symphony No. 4, Op. 53

I. Lento; Allegro con brio
II. Lento molto
III. Allegro scherzando
IV. Allegro molto

Ravel *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

RSDAY EVENING, February 18, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

B Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

D ....Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
Le Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

R Symphony No. 4, Op. 53

Lento; Allegro con brio
Lento molto
Allegro scherzando
Allegro molto

*"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, February 16, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

Berlioz..........Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

Debussy..........Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

Roussel..........Symphony No. 4, Op. 53

I. Lento; Allegro con brio
II. Lento molto
III. Allegro scherzando
IV. Allegro molto

Ravel..........*"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2
Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SAME PROGRAM
SUNDAY FEB. 14th.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 7 196

Dr. Munch to Serve As Guest Conductor

Dr. Charles Munch, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra prior to Erich Leinsdorf, will be guest conductor of the Symphony in a program to be broadcast live in stereophonic sound on WCRB Saturday, Feb. 13, at 8:25 p.m.

Dr. Munch has chosen for his concert the Overture "Benvenuto Cellini" by Hector Berlioz, "Iberia" from the Images Pour Orchestre by Debussy, the Symphony No. 4 by Albert Roussel and the Suite No. 2 from the ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe" by Maurice Ravel.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

FEB 9 1965

★ ★ ★

CHARLES MUNCH, eminent French conductor and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have special tribute paid to him at Friday's Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. He returns to Boston this week to conduct an entire program of music by French composers so "Gallic" is the theme of the luncheon. Harry Ellis-Dickson will talk on "Music of France" and its influence on music of the world. A French gourmet menu is planned.

★ ★ ★

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

FEB 9 19

Conductor Munch To Be Honored

Friday's Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown ~~Motor~~ Inn, will welcome Charles Munch, eminent French conductor and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Munch returns to Boston this week to conduct an entire program of music by French composers.

At the luncheon, Harry Ellis Dickson will talk on "Music of France" and its influence on music of the world, a topic especially popular to Boston audiences, who are so familiar with everything French. Bouquets of red, white and blue spring flowers will decorate the tables. The French gourmet menu will please gourmets.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 10 1965

Guest Conductor

Former music director of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, will return for two weeks beginning Friday, to lead the orchestra in programs of French music.

77

FRI.-SAT # 17. SUN. # 4. THUR # 5

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, February 12, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, February 13, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ .... Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

DEBUSSY .... Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)
- I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
- II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
- III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

ROUSSEL .... Symphony No. 4, Op. 53
- I. Lento; Allegro con brio
- II. Lento molto
- III. Allegro scherzando
- IV. Allegro molto

RAVEL .... *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2

Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, February 18, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BE .... Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

DE .... Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)
- I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
- II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
- III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

RO .... Symphony No. 4, Op. 53
- I. Lento; Allegro con brio
- II. Lento molto
- III. Allegro scherzando
- IV. Allegro molto

RA .... *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2

Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, February 16, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ .... Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23

DEBUSSY .... Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)
- I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
- II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
- III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (The Morning of a Festal Day)

INTERMISSION

ROUSSEL .... Symphony No. 4, Op. 53
- I. Lento; Allegro con brio
- II. Lento molto
- III. Allegro scherzando
- IV. Allegro molto

RAVEL .... *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2

Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SAME PROGRAM
SUNDAY FEB. 14th.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 7 1965

Dr. Munch to Serve As Guest Conductor

Dr. Charles Munch, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra prior to Erich Leinsdorf, will be guest conductor of the Symphony in a program to be broadcast live in stereophonic sound on WCRB Saturday, Feb. 13, at 8:25 p.m.

Dr. Munch has chosen for his concert the Overture "Benvenuto Cellini" by Hector Berlioz, "Iberia" from the Images Pour Orchestre by Debussy, the Symphony No. 4 by Albert Roussel and the Suite No. 2 from the ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe" by Maurice Ravel.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

FEB 9 1965

CHARLES MUNCH, eminent French conductor and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will have special tribute paid to him at Friday's Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. He returns to Boston this week to conduct an entire program of music by French composers so "Gallic" is the theme of the luncheon. Harry Ellis-Dickson will talk on "Music of France" and its influence on music of the world. A French gourmet menu is planned.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

FEB 9 1965

Conductor Munch To Be Honored

Friday's Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, will welcome Charles Munch, eminent French conductor and former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Munch returns to Boston this week to conduct an entire program of music by French composers.

At the luncheon, Harry Ellis Dickson will talk on "Music of France" and its influence on music of the world, a topic especially popular to Boston audiences, who are so familiar with everything French. Bouquets of red, white and blue spring flowers will decorate the tables. The French gourmet menu will please gourmets.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 10 1965

Guest Conductor

Former music director of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch will return for two weeks beginning Friday to lead the orchestra in programs of French music.

1 178

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

FEB 7 1965

Munch at Symphony

Charles Munch, who retired in 1962 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years at the post, will arrive in Boston this week for a two-week engagement as guest conductor.

This week he will conduct the fifth open rehearsal of the season on Thursday evening, the 17th pair of Friday-Saturday concerts, and the fourth Sunday afternoon concert Feb. 14.

Munch will present works by French composers at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts. The program will include the Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23, by Berlioz; Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2); Roussel's Symphony No. 4, Op. 53, and Ravel's Suite No. 2 from the Ballet "Daphnis et Chloe." The same program will be repeated next Sunday afternoon.

The final rehearsal of this program will be heard Thursday evening at 7:30 at the Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall. Munch initiated the open rehearsals in 1951, and the proceeds benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

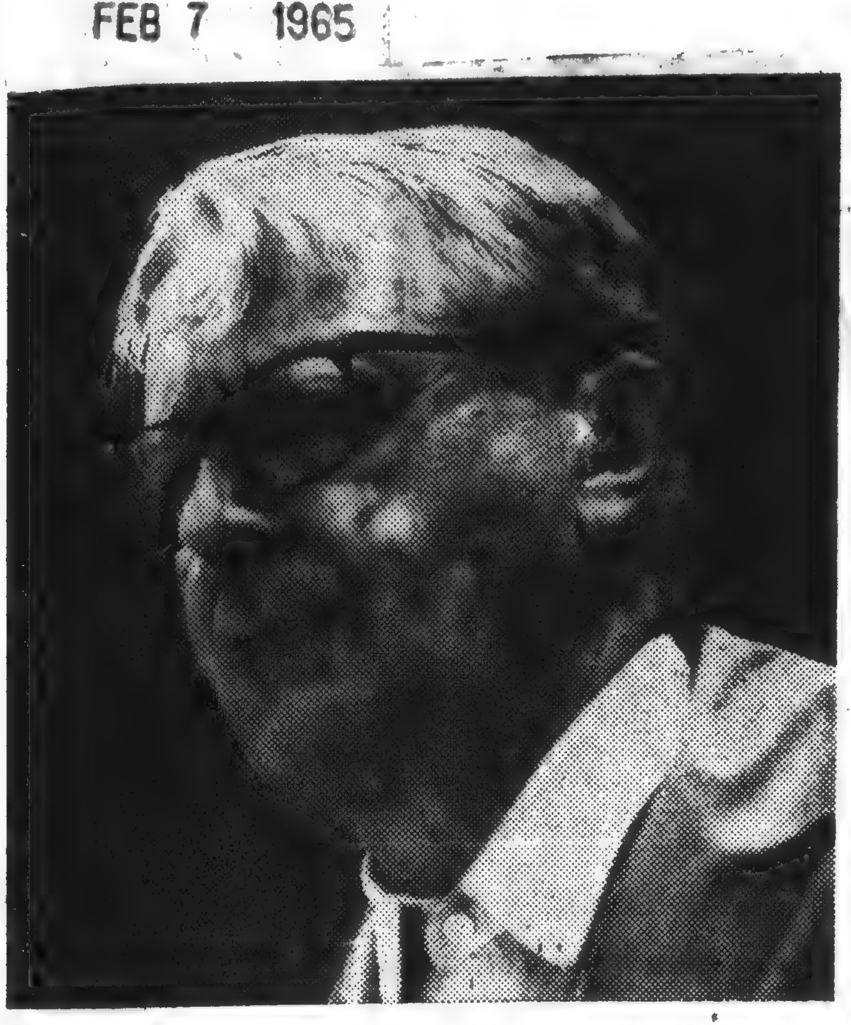
Since his retirement from Boston Munch has been active as a guest conductor in many parts of the world. He recently completed a tour of England and Holland. In the past season he has also conducted extensively on the West Coast, in Canada, and in Philadelphia. In many of his current programs he is presenting the music of French composers. Between conducting engagements he lives near Paris.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a new group composed of principal players of the Boston Symphony, will give its second Boston concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Claude Frank, the pianist who has recently joined the Chamber Players, will appear in three of the four works on the program, which consists of Aaron Copland's Vitebsk for Violin, Cello and Piano; Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio; Mozart's Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K. 452; and the Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings in C minor, Op. 60.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 7 1965



CHARLES MUNCH returns to Boston to serve as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks, starting tomorrow night and continuing through Feb. 14.

This Week at Symphony

Dr. Munch Returns With Guest Baton

Charles Munch, who retired in 1962 as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after 13 years at the post, will arrive in Boston this week for a two-week engagement as guest conductor of the orchestra. This week he will conduct the fifth open rehearsal of the season on Thursday evening, the seventeenth pair of Friday-Saturday concerts and the fourth Sunday Afternoon concert next Sunday.

Dr. Munch will present works by French composers at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts. The program will open with the Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23 by Berlioz, followed by Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2). After the intermission he will conduct Roussel's Symphony No. 4, Op. 53, and the program will conclude with Ravel's Suite No. 2 from the Ballet "Daphnis et Chloe." The same program will be repeated next Sunday afternoon at 3 p.m.

The final rehearsal of this program will be heard Thursday evening at 7:30 at the open rehearsal in Symphony Hall.

Since his retirement from Boston Dr. Munch has been continuously active as a guest conductor in many parts of the world. He has recently completed a tour of England and Holland. In the past season he has also conducted extensively on the West Coast, in Canada, and in Philadelphia. In many of his current programs he is presenting the music of French composers, continuing his wide reputation as one of the foremost interpreters of the French repertory. Between conducting engagements he resides near Paris.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a newly formed group composed of principal players of the Boston Symphony, will give its second Boston concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Claude Frank, eminent pianist who has recently joined the Chamber Players, will appear in three of the four works on the program, which consists of Aaron Copland's Vitebsk for Violin, Cello and Piano; Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio; Mozart's Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K. 452; and the Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings in C minor, Op. 60. A few tickets will be available at Sanders Theatre this evening.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

FEB 15 1965

Munch Conducts Brilliant French Concert in Boston

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Charles Munch, who for 13 years was music director of the Boston Symphony until his retirement in 1962, returned to the podium in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon as guest conductor.

Displaying a devotion to Gallic culture that rivals that of General Charles de Gaulle, Dr. Munch presented an all-French program—Berlioz's "Overture to Benvenuto Cellini," Debussy's "Iberia" ("Images," No. 2), Roussel's "Symphony No. 4, Opus 53," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Ballet Suite, No. 2.

Dr. Munch has, of course, an international reputation for his interpretations of French music; consequently, yesterday's concert was conducted with sensitivity and perception. The opening Berlioz "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture is a grandiso and flamboyant piece, notable for its colorful orchestration and for its daring (for the time) utilization of brass, wood winds, and percussion. Both Dr. Munch and the orchestra were in fine fettle so that the result was splendid sound compensating for a lack of genuine musical substance.

Debussy's "Iberia" is a masterful evocation of Spanish spirit and atmosphere. The first movement depicts interestingly the sights and sounds of Andulasian life; the second shimmers with typically Debussyian impressionism in its poetic representation of "the fragrance of the night," and the last movement is a treat for Hispanophiles, with its dance rhythms and folk themes appropriate to a Spanish fiesta.

The only bit of novelty on the program was the Roussel symphony—a work which we had not previously heard. It is easily assimiliated and frequently pleasurable. The opening lento develops a somber theme in the string section and then moves briskly to a lively allegro. The slow movement is lush in melody and romantic in viewpoint; the scherzo, for us the brightest and most ingratiating portion of the work, skips along merrily and wittily, and the finale, taken by Dr. Munch at a breakneck speed and revealing the virtuosity of the orchestra, achieves considerable impact.

Concluding the program was a work that Dr. Munch has virtually made his own—the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2. In it, concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, flutist Doriot Anthony-Dwyer, and trumpeter Roger Voisin were given ample opportunity to shine—and they shone brightly, indeed.

In the concluding "Danse Generale," the orchestra's cascades of sound were rafter-shaking and a remarkable sample of the power and precision that the gifted musicians of the Boston Symphony can attain.

The audience was most cordial to Dr. Munch, obviously looking upon him as an old and welcome friend. Although this program of French music might seem, to quote "Alice in Wonderland," too "much of a muchness" to some, no one can deny that Dr. Munch had the orchestra well in hand and the ensemble performed [illegible]able zest and skill

---

NewEnglandNewscli
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RI

Jewish Advo
BOSTON,
Weekly Circ.

FEB 1 8 1

Charles

RETURN

A standing o greeted Charles M last Saturday eve evening ended, the ovation.
Part of the appla bute to the man w distinguished servi in Boston and pa
ponse to an absolu
ficent performan
"Daphnis et Chl
Suite No. 2 by Ma
It was the climax together exciting e
What made it e that the orchestra alive in a way tha been for some tim nis et Chloe," Ro trumpet rang wit brilliance. Dorio Dwyer's flute soare
al around. Indeed, tra itself built up
ious crescendi into waves of sound. It the musicians wer whale of a good strings bit into the the woodwinds out and the bras them out. The tota
a sound that one nately luxuriate in out of one's seat b of the Ravel, I, limp, for the ex
exhilirating, head hat, I would hav
into the air.
So much for the
of the rest of the Munch began Overture to "Ben lini," which was cessful offering.
tion was muddied
the effect was some Then on to Debus
— much more su
warm flowing pa
Parfums de la n
bright, staccato g of "Le Matin d
Fete." After interm
Roussel's Sympho trained, graceful, a at others misty. A formance was evocative.
Viewing the e whole, it can be was Dr. Munch form. It was not had selected a pr ly to his liking a to his interpreti
there was someth did not merely orchestra, he in verve and inner the feeling that were immensely themselves and o
feeling that the devotion — to to Dr. Munch. A during the Ravel was visceral in have seldom symphony conce
In short, welc
Munch.
Finally, Dr. M conduct this we gram of Mozart
Honegger and R

Brilliant
Boston

c in viewpoint; the us the brightest and ating portion of the along merrily and he finale, taken by a breakneck speed
the virtuosity of a, achieves consid-
t.
the program was a
r. Munch has virhis own—the Ravel
nd Chloe" Ballet
In it, concertmas-
Silverstein, flutist hony-Dwyer, and oger Voisin were opportunity to ey shone brightly,
uding "Dance Gen-chestra's cascades
rafter-shaking and e sample of the precision that the ans of the Boston attain.
ce was most cor-
Munch, obviously him as an old and
d. Although this ench music might e "Alice in Won-
'much of a much-no one can deny h had the orches-and and that the ormed with laud-skill.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

FEB 1

Charles Munch
RETURNS TO CONDUCT BSO

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

A standing ovation from orchestra and audience alike greeted Charles Munch as he stepped to the podium to conduct last Saturday evening's Boston Symphony concert. When the evening ended, there were cheers, bravos and another standing ovation.

Part of the applause was tribute to the man who gave such distinguished service to music in Boston and part was response to an absolutely magnificent performance of the "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No 2 by Maurice Ravel. It was the climax to an altogether exciting evening.

What made it exciting was that the orchestra was alive — alive in a way that it has not been for some time. In "Daphnis et Chloe," Roger Voisin's trumpet rang with a lustrous brilliance. Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute soared up, down, al around. Indeed, the orchestra itself built up great, glorious crescendi into tremendous waves of sound. It seemed that the musicians were having a whale of a good time. The strings bit into their entrances, the woodwinds clipped them out and the brasses punched them out. The total effect was a sound that one could alternately luxuriate in or be lifted out of one's seat by. At the end of the Ravel, I, for one, was limp, for the experience was exhilirating, heady. Had I a hat, I would have thrown it into the air.

So much for the Ravel. What of the rest of the program? Dr. Munch began with Berlioz' Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," which was the least successful offering. The delineation was muddied at times and the effect was somewhat blurry. Then on to Debussy's "Iberia" — much more successful, with warm flowing passages in "Les Parfums de la nuit" and the bright, staccato gypsy rhythms of "Le Matin d'un jour de Fete." After intermission came Roussel's Symphony No. 4, restrained, graceful, at times crisp, at others misty. Again, the performance was spirited and evocative.

Viewing the evening as a whole, it can be said that this was Dr. Munch in his best form. It was not only that he had selected a program greatly to his liking and best-suited to his interpretive powers — there was something more. He did not merely conduct the orchestra, he infused it with verve and inner drive. One got the feeling that the musicians were immensely pleased with themselves and one also got the feeling that they played with devotion — to the music and to Dr. Munch. And, particularly during the Ravel, my response was visceral in a way that I have seldom responded to symphony concerts.

In short, welcome back, Dr. Munch.

Finally, Dr. Munch will again conduct this weekend in a program of Mozart, Mendelssohn, Honegger and Ravel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

FEB 13 1965

Munch on BSO Podium In All-French Concert

Gall, not unexpectedly, was divided into three parts in Symphony Hall yesterday. It was galling to Boston Symphony subscribers when the orchestra's former music director served forth three warmed-over glazed chestnuts.

There was the rollicking "Benvenuto Cellini" overture of Berlioz for an appetizer, followed by a Spanish-spiced slice of Debussy's imagery for an entree. Only Albert Roussel's fourth symphony offered less-familiar gustatory delights, but the epicurean aftertaste was vitiated by another shopworn delicacy, the much-played second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet music.

GALLIC CULTURE

Dr. Charles Munch is as much of a chauvinist musically as Gen. Charles de Gaulle is politically. Their constant harping on Gallic superiority in cultural attainments and hawking of French wares knows no boundaries. If Dr. Munch must continue to play supersalesman for Parisian "good taste," he should at least offer a new line of merchandise. For example, George Szell and his Cleveland Orchestra showcased the 1965 five-passenger model by Henri Dutilleux here Wednesday.

The prelude to the Berlioz flopera was presented with greater accent on this innovating composer's brimstone than on his fluent brain-power. Debussy's "Iberia" was communicated with efficacious verve, but the multihued tonal dynamics were more episodic than imaginative. Debussy's masterly evocation of the Hispanic musical idiom requires a more vibrant interpretation, with poetic insight and less-metronomical rubato phrasings.

RUGGED GRANDEUR

Roussel's symphony (Opus 53) is a coloristic instance of the French master's conversion to neoclassicism. A rugged grandeur marks its taut and invigorating, albeit Prokofieverish, polyphonics.

There is an inherent youthfulness without a smidgin of conservatism, but with artistic vigor, in Roussel's last symphony, wherein he manifested his musicianly sympathies with the new look fostered by younger French composers—"because his spirit and heart remained perpetually opened to everything new," as one critic expressed it.

The concluding Ravel ballet music might have ben more deeply satisfying had it not been music might have been more overly familiar, for Dr. Munch directed the final bacchanale, its dionysiac afterglow a-gleam with silvery glints, with a passionate intensity recalling the earlier portion of his 13-year suzerainty in Boston.

ROLFE BOSWELL

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 13 1965

At Symphony
Charles Munch Returns With French Program

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Charles Munch has returned to conduct the Boston Symphony for two weeks here and one on tour. Friday afternoon's audience rose to greet him. There was some cheering then and a good bit of it later on in which the orchestra joined demonstratively. The program: Berlioz' Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Debussy's "Iberia," the Roussel Fourth Symphony, and the second suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe."

Munch is in most ways Leinsdorf's opposite as a conductor. That is one of the things that makes his visits welcome to those listeners and players who have either never become accustomed to the sobriety of the present administration or who have become a little bored with it.

Munch radiates personal charm and grace. He suggests that it is more than anything great fun to wave a baton at a hundred people who are making very loud sounds. There is a certain improvisatory element in the performance. The approach is casual, and it seems to matter little if sections of the orchestra begin to lose contact with one another, as happened in the second movement of "Iberia."

Hardly ever is there the feeling of considered interpretation. Munch seems uninterested in clarifying the nature of any particular piece he happens to be conducting, but appears content to put it over to the audience with the biggest possible bang. He gave to everything on Friday a kin of nervous excitement tha would be altogether delightfu first of all, if it were neve allowed to become sheer noise and violence, and second, if it were appropriate to all the music.

Much's best is very good, and he was at his best, that is, at his most controlled and contained, in the sharp-witted and elegant Roussel Symphony

There were fine things else where, like the well-phrase Larghetto of the Overture, an much of the second movemen and the third of "Iberia."

In the "Daphnis" Pantomine, Mrs. Dwyer played th flute solo brilliantly—literally —with intense vibrato and a daringly high pitch. It wen wonderfully, and it did so no because of her own artistry which is something radiant especially with the right conductor to draw her out, bu also because of the alert and supple context Munch provided for her playing.

But the beauty of that pas sage had been preceded by Sunrise that was too loud fo magic, and before that ther had been an 'Iberia" too hard driven for dance-like grac and made discontinuous, an thus trivial, by the vehemenc with which details were underlined.

Still earlier, "Benvenuto Cel lini" began, and eventuall continued, at a tempo that con veyed the sense of Berlio direction that the music b played "Allegro . . . con im peto," but ignored the "deciso." At certain speeds, rhythm cannot be clearly articulate and rendered intelligible, and brass instruments played at a certain volume will cover violins. By ignoring this, Munch made the music rather hard to hear as he sometimes does. In justification he might cite the cheers of the audience.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

FEB 13 1965

Munch's return
Flexing muscles

By Harold Rogers

Like Rip Van Winkle, the Boston Symphony opened its eyes as if from a long sleep. It blinked, flexed its muscles, then sprang to life.

Charles Munch is back.

The men took aim, breath, and—with the first downbeat — let fly. It was the Overture to Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini," and it went badly. Call it too much confidence, call it joie de vivre, call it anything you like. Maybe they were just plain giddy.

One thing was obvious: they were loving it. They leaned into their bows. They banged their drums, crashed their cymbals, blew like mad. What a surprise to see the bell of Roger Voisin's trumpet again! How radiant its clarion call!

And Munch loved it. There was that old beatific look on his face. Now and again he'd just lean back on his heels and let the sound pour over him. His baton would fall to his side, almost without motion. Then he'd take hold again, electric in his command. Glorious!

* * *

What if the Berlioz came forth in splotches? The team was warming up, feeling its fettle.

And all went better after that.

Munch trotted out his favorites. Frenchmen, of course He called upon Debussy, Roussel, and Ravel to keep Berlioz good company. Of Debussy he gave us "Ibéria," and again we inhaled the aroma of Spanish days and nights. Now it was our turn to be giddy as the blazing rhythms of the fiesta took hold of our jaded ears.

Of Roussel he gave us the Symphony No. 4, free of the sentimental moods of Debussy and Ravel on whose heels Roussel closely followed. Charming stuff. Good craftsmanship. Plenty of color. And, in this case, eloquently played.

Of Ravel he gave us the "Daphnis et Chloé" Suite No. 2. When Munch was conductor of the Boston Symphony we used to get tired of it. Tired in anticipation, that is. But he never failed to excite us when we heard him do it for the umpteenth time.

And he evoked the old magic at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon. Was there ever a crescendo quite like the one he produced in "Lever du jour"? It built from within, like something atomic. When the inner pressures could stand it no longer, it burst forth in sheer magnificence.

We were all winded after the "Danse générale." Applause was abetted by cheers, bravos, stamping, many listeners standing in tribute.

Charles Munch is back. No doubt about it.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483
FEB 13 1965

Symphony: Charles Munch in Varied Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Charles Munch, returning to Boston for his third guest engagement—the first in which he has come to us as the only living former conductor of The Boston Symphony Orchestra—was greeted yesterday by an audience which stood upon his initial entrance and applauded his distinguished servives to music here.

Not everyone got up, but I am inclined to regard this as insignificant, and the result of several factors ranging from being caught off-guard to sheer lassitude rather than deliberate discourtesy to a venerable artist. If I am wrong, it is indeed a sorry comment by a Boston audience upon itself.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 17th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23	Berlioz
Iberia ("Images," No. 2)	Debussy
Symphony No. 4, Op. 53	Roussel
"Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2	Ravel

French Scores

In any case, Dr. Munch, alas, conducted the first half of the program of French scores, the music with which he has long been associated, in a manner designed to make him vulnerable to the severest criticism. The intermission was an occasion for despair. Then, suddenly, the whole aspect of the concert changed: and the Roussel Symphony and "Daphnis and Chloe" emerged as only he does them, with incomparable charm and brilliance.

Thus we heard two sides of Dr. Munch yesterday: the emotionally exaggerated and the nobly musical. It is true that in dealing with the Benvenuto Cellini overture he was handling material full of robust Renaissance trumpery and strutting drama, but Cellini himself could scarcely have improved upon its shrill bombast, notable as he was in this regard.

From first to last the performance was loud, tense and brassy—impetuous, yes, but overbearingly so due to the lack of contrast and climactic accent.

Against these conceptions must be set the undoubted triumphs of the conductor's Roussell and his "Daphnis and Chloe." The Fourth Symphony, too seldom heard, is a perfect example of the French genius in minor art, neither striving for a profound rhetoric nor a universal grandeur, but, in setting distinct limitations, creating a statement thoroughly satisfying in its own terms.

The "Iberia" followed the same vein, noisy in its outer sections, blurred in detail and striving for a bogus and speeded-up momentum. The central reverie, Les Parfums de la nuit, was quite lovely, and here Dr. Munch hardly conducted at all, preferring to suggest mood and let the orchestra take its head with only the merest containment of a beat. The lack of interpretation as such worked wonders in conveying the hushed and temulous overtones of mystery and meditation; but the interpretation as a whole needed cohesion and a less splashy outline.

The color of the orchestration, the buoyancy of the rhythms and the compression of lyrical musical thought make the symphony delightfully urbane and fresh. Its design is unorthodox from the opening Lento to the finale, and the form abounds in surprises such as the scherzo which is tartly rhythmic without grotesquerie.

Throughout, it was treated by Charles Munch with a reverence for scrupulous balance and directness.

The result captured the luminous texture of the score with enough control to present the brief, apt, aphoristic ideas in context, vividly and precisely. The conducting developed the discriminating coloristic element and the concentrated melody that enhances the line. The account, splendidly modelled, rewarded one with a sustained and limpid sincerity: a captivating enterprise.

The "Daphnis and Chloe" of Dr. Munch is relatively familiar, but likewise retains an exhilarating sparkle. Drenched in color, dionysiac, rising to a swirl of unfettered vigor, the instrumental version of the piece, as he deals with it, becomes a maelstrom of lights and colors, nevertheless, exquisite in detail.

The audience afterward rose again, this time en masse, and cheered the conductor, and I would have joined them—for the second half of the program.

Next weekend finds Dr. Munch scheduling Mozart's Divertimento in D for Strings, K. 136; the Mendelssohn "Reformation" Symphony in D Minor; Honegger's Symphony No. 4. "Deliciae Basilensis," and Ravel's Rapsodie Espagnole.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Cape Cod
Standard Times (e)
HYANNIS, Mass.
Circ. 11,953
FEB 21 1965

Munch Returns to Boston as Guest Conductor

Opinions naturally differ as to the relative merits of Charles Munch and Erich Leinsdorf as conductors. Last Sunday afternoon, in Symphony Hall, Dr. Munch returned as guest conductor for the Boston Symphony, which he guided for 13 years until his retirement in 1962.

Dr. Munch, a devotee of Gallic culture, offered an all-French program; he is, after all, internationally famous for his interpretations of French composers. Three of the works—Berlioz's Overture to "Benevuto Cellini," Debussy's "Iberia," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe Suite, No. 2" — were perhaps overly-familiar to Symphony Hall audiences inasmuch as they have been staples of Dr. Munch's repertoire.

The only unfamiliar work, Roussel's "Symphony No. 4" proved to be a melodious piece of music, with a delightful scherzo, an ingratiating slow movement, and a finale that moves with jet-like speed.

Of the other three works, Dr. Munch and the orchestra were in the vein in "Iberia," a notable evocation of Spanish atmosphere and especially effective in the Ravel, whose cascades of glorious sounds obviously pleased the enthusiastic audience.

Under Dr. Munch, the orchestra has a thinner, lighter sound. Dr. Munch is not so meticulous about detail as Mr. Leinsdorf; rather, he seems to concentrate on a broad, overall view of the work he is conducting. As a result, the playing is sometimes fuzzy, without the sharpness of detail that Mr. Leinsdorf achieves. It may be that Dr. Munch is more the poet than Mr. Leinsdorf.

In the world of music, there is plenty of room for both approaches. We happen to prefer Leinsdorf's. We admire his devotion to musical detail, his control of the orchestra, his innate sense of discipline. But, for variety, it is good, on occasion, to sample Dr. Munch's conducting, too. And Sunday's concert, despite its reliance on old warhorses, was, for the most part, enjoyable and relaxing.

PATRIO LEDGER 2/17/65

Munch Brings Gallic Touch To Symphony

By Peter M. Knapp

Charles Munch has returned to Boston for two weeks of guest conducting his former colleagues in the Boston Symphony. Predictably, his first week's program was a collection of the French compositions which have earned him acclaim.

One suspects the Symphony players could have encompassed the bulk of last night's concert in their sleep, so often has Mr. Munch performed them here. Unfortunately, at times the music sounded as if this were the case.

Dismal Berlioz

It would be kinder perhaps to say there were two concerts, and to forget the pre-intermission fiascos. For the record, the evening began with a dismal example of Berlioz at his turgid worst, the treacly Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." Debussy's coloristic portrayal of life in Spain, "Iberia", should have moved better, since Mr. Munch has achieved memorable interpretations of Debussy's scores, but it didn't.

Either it lacked sufficient rehearsal, or the conductor's flair for producing spontaneous combustion failed to ignite. Whatever, "Iberia" was stodgy and dull. The initial section floundered in rhythmic unease, probably abetted by Mr. Munch's often-vague beat, and the instrumental choirs at times came unhinged.

"The Fragrance of the Night" produced little real perfume, unless it was "Nuit d' Ennui." Those clouds of puffy sound never got off the ground. The finale seemed more to the point, with Mr. Munch putting more vitality into the dramatic sonic clashes, but it wasn't overwhelming.

After intermission, though, Mr. Munch displayed his savoir faire in a suave reading of the Symphony No 4, Opus 53, of Albert Roussel, and a splendid performance of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

Gallic Clarity

The Roussel is an interesting piece of Gallic clarity. The opening movement cavorts good-naturedly about a theme of leaping intervals; the slow section is moodily thoughtful; the scherzo, bright and genuinely playful in its capricious interplay, and the finale, brusque and compact. For the size of Roussel's orchestra, the sound is amazingly transparent, and Mr. Munch mustered the requisite organization and coherency.

The "Daphnis et Chloe" is a familiar showpiece, but Mr. Munch gave it an appealing freshness, with all the dazzling tonal delights of impressionistic orchestration spaciously laid out. Here and there, more restraint in the brass crescendi would have been more fitting, and the day didn't merely break in the first movement — it erupted in a shattering blast.

But few conductors could have handled the lacy string work setting off the superb flute solo of Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Pantomime with the finesse of Mr. Munch, or created the dreamy atmosphere shattered so abruptly by the driving Danse Generale.

FRI-SAT. # 18

81

RTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighteenth Program

FTERNOON, FEBRUARY 19, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 20, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

*Divertimento in D major, for Strings, K. 136

I. Allegro
I. Andante
III. Presto

SOHN Symphony No. 5, in D minor, "Reformation," Op. 107

Andante; Allegro con fuoco
Allegro vivace
Andante
Chorale: Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott (Andante con moto);
Allegro vivace; Allegro maestoso

INTERMISSION

EGGER . . . . Symphony No. 4, "Deliciae Basilienses"

I. Lento e misterioso; Allegro
II. Larghetto
III. Allegro

RAVEL . . . . *Rapsodie Espagnole

I. Prélude à la nuit
II. Malagueña
III. Habanera
IV. Feria

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 14 1965

Dr. Munch Continues As Guest

Charles Munch will enter his second and final week as guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this week. He will conduct the fourth Sunday afternoon program today at 3, and concerts Tuesday evening, Thursday evening, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. In the week following he will conduct the orchestra in four concerts on tour.

At the concerts this afternoon and on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, Dr. Munch will conduct the all-French program which he introduced this weekend.

The program will begin with the Overture to Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz and will continue with Debussy's "Iberia." After an intermission, he will lead the orchestra in the Symphony No. 4 by Roussel and will conclude with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Dr. Munch will open his program with the Mozart Divertimento in D major, K. 136, which will be followed by Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 6. After the intermission he will conduct the Symphony No. 4 of Honegger and close with Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

FEB 20 1965

Boston Symphony And Charles Munch

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Charles Munch returned to the Boston Symphony for a second week on Friday afternoon with a program that included Mozart's Divertimento in D, K.136, Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, Honegger's Fourth Symphony, and Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole."

Mozart's piece, for strings only, is one of the most pleasant among his early ones: it was given an insipid, characterless playing of the notes. Mendelssohn's Symphony was given an equally bland performance, though there were also the seemingly inevitable Munchian disruptions such as the exaggerated breaking in two of the Dresden Amen. The piece itself is a trial. Its pompousness and gentility are unattractive, its tedium inexcusable (even for this audience, the number of sleepers was uncommonly large). Martin Luther was a man of highly educated musical tastes and sensibilities; had he lived to be subjected to Mendelssohn's unctuous expressions of religious sentiment, he might even have regretted posting the 99 theses.

Honegger's Symphony No. 4 is subtitled "Deliciae Basilienses" and it was written for Paul Sacher and his Basel Chamber Orchestra. It quotes a couple of local songs, one of them the "Basel an mim Rhy" also used by Britten in his "Cantata Academica." It is scored with delicacy, and that is its main charm. Its substance is made mostly of the more sentimental Ravelian cliches manipulated toward a fairly tedious end result. Except for making the first movement unduly discontinuous, Munch shaped it well.

The "Rapsodie Espagnole" is far from the best of Ravel. In any event more could be made of it in performance. The orchestral playing became exceedingly careless, especially in intonation, and the general tone of the performance, except for the raucous "Feria," was lifeless.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

FEB 25 1965

Charles Munch
Again Guest Conductor of BSO

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

I left Symphony Hall Saturday night feeling rewarded but sad. Charles Munch once again gave us an evening of superb but this was his last weekend as guest conduetor. A it had welcomed Dr. Munch the preceding weekend, the audiene stood sad. Charles Munch once again gave us an evening of superb music.

The orchestra warmed up with a spritely performance of the Mozart "Divertimento in D major, for Strings." Then came the dramatic sweep of Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5, in D minor," the "Reformation" Symphony. Dr. Munch carefully developed his forces for the emphatic statement of the Chorale, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott."

After intermission came the sparkling "Symphony No. 4, 'Deliciae Basilienses'" by Arthur Honegger. Based on the spirit and melodies of Basle, Switzerland, the Symphony is charming rather than profound and it was given a delightful performance right to the humorous flourish of its conclusion.

Finally Dr. Munch offered a composer without whom the evening would not have been complete. Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" received a glorious interpretation from the muted "Prelude a la nuit" to the flashing, color - drenched "Feria." Again, it seemed that Dr. Munch was unleashing the orchestra and its own pure enjoyment overflowed into the audience.

As I reflected on the enjoyment of the evening, I found myself hoping that the spirit of the entire concert (and last weekend's) will be nurtured in the weeks to come. From Dr. Munch has come more than competence. He has shared with us his warmth and energy, his enjoyment of music and of life. He will be missed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

FEB 17 1965

Munch Brings Gallic Touch To Symphony

By Peter M. Knapp

Charles Munch has returned to Boston for two weeks of guest conducting his former colleagues in the Boston Symphony. Predictably, his first week's program was a collection of the French compositions which have earned him acclaim.

One suspects the Symphony players could have encompassed the bulk of last night's concert in their sleep, so often has Mr. Munch performed them here. Unfortunately, at times the music sounded as if this were the case.

Dismal Berlioz

It would be kinder perhaps to say there were two concerts, and to forget the pre-intermission fiascos. For the record, the evening began with a dismal example of Berlioz at his turgid worst, the treacly Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." Debussy's coloristic portrayal of life in Spain, "Iberia", should have moved better, since Mr. Munch has achieved memorable interpretations of Debussy's scores, but it didn't.

Either it lacked sufficient rehearsal, or the conductor's flair for producing spontaneous combustion failed to ignite. Whatever, "Iberia" was stodgy and dull. The initial section floundered in rhythmic unease, probably abetted by Mr. Munch's often-vague beat, and the instrumental choirs at times came unhinged.

"The Fragrance of the Night" produced little real perfume, unless it was "Nuit d' Ennui." Those clouds of puffy sound never got off the ground. The finale seemed more to the point, with Mr. Munch putting more vitality into the dramatic sonic clashes, but it wasn't overwhelming.

After intermission, though, Mr. Munch displayed his savoir faire in a suave reading of the Symphony No 4, Opus 53, of Albert Roussel, and a splendid performance of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

Gallic Clarity

The Roussel is an interesting piece of Gallic clarity. The opening movement cavorts good-naturedly about a theme of leaping intervals; the slow section is moodily thoughtful; the scherzo, bright and genuinely playful in its capricious interplay, and the finale, brusque and compact. For the size of Roussel's orchestra, the sound is amazingly transparent, and Mr. Munch mustered the requisite organization and coherency.

The "Daphnis et Chloe" is a familiar showpiece, but Mr. Munch gave it an appealing freshness, with all the dazzling tonal delights of impressionistic orchestration spaciously laid out. Here and there, more restraint in the brass crescendi would have been more fitting, and the day didn't merely break in the first movement — it erupted in a shattering blast.

But few conductors could have handled the lacy string work setting off the superb flute solo of Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Pantomime with the finesse of Mr. Munch, or created the dreamy atmosphere shattered so abruptly by the driving Danse Generale.

FRI-SAT. # 18

OURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Eighteenth Program

AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 19, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 20, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

........*Divertimento in D major, for Strings, K. 136

- I. Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Presto

ELSSOHN ..Symphony No. 5, in D minor, "Reformation," Op. 107

Andante; Allegro con fuoco
Allegro vivace
Andante
Chorale: Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott (Andante con moto);
Allegro vivace; Allegro maestoso

INTERMISSION

HONEGGER ....Symphony No. 4, "Deliciae Basilienses"

- I. Lento e misterioso; Allegro
- II. Larghetto
- III. Allegro

RAVEL....................................*Rapsodie Espagnole

- I. Prélude à la nuit
- II. Malagueña
- III. Habanera
- IV. Feria

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 14 1965

Dr. Munch Continues As Guest

Charles Munch will enter his second and final week as guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's ~~Symphony~~ Hall concerts this week. He will conduct the fourth Sunday afternoon program today at 3, and concerts Tuesday evening, Thursday evening, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. In the week following he will conduct the orchestra in four concerts on tour 0 47

At the concerts this afternoon and on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, Dr. Munch will conduct the all-French program which he introduced this weekend.

The program will begin with the Overture to Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz and will continue with Debussy's "Iberia." After an intermission, he will lead the orchestra in the Symphony No. 4 by Roussel and will conclude with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

On Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Dr. Munch will open his program with the Mozart Divertimento in D major, K. 136, which will be followed by Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 6. After the intermission he will conduct the Symphony No. 4 of Honegger and close with Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 194,870

FEB 20 1965

Boston Symphony And Charles Munch

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Charles Munch returned to the Boston Symphony for a second week on Friday afternoon with a program that included Mozart's Divertimento in D, K.136, Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, Honegger's Fourth Symphony, and Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole."

Mozart's piece, for strings only, is one of the most pleasant among his early ones: it was given an insipid, characterless playing of the notes. Mendelssohn's Symphony was given an equally bland performance, though there were also the seemingly inevitable Munchian disruptions such as the exaggerated breaking in two of the Dresden Amen. The piece itself is a trial. Its pompousness and gentility are unattractive, its tedium inexcusable (even for this audience, the number of sleepers was uncommonly large). Martin Luther was a man of highly educated musical tastes and sensibilities; had he lived to be subjected to Mendelssohn's unctuous expressions of religious sentiment, he might even have regretted posting the 99 theses.

Honegger's Symphony No. 4 is subtitled "Deliciae Basilienses" and it was written for Paul Sacher and his Basel Chamber Orchestra. It quotes a couple of local songs, one of them the "Basel an mim Rhy" also used by Britten in his "Cantata Academica." It is scored with delicacy, and that is its main charm. Its substance is made mostly of the more sentimental Ravelian cliches manipulated toward a fairly tedious end result. Except for making the first movement unduly discontinuous, Munch shaped it well.

The "Rapsodie Espagnole" is far from the best of Ravel. In any event more could be made of it in performance. The orchestral playing became exceedingly careless, especially in intonation, and the general tone of the performance, except for the raucous "Feria," was lifeless.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

FEB 25 1965

Charles Munch
Again Guest Conductor of BSO

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

I left Symphony Hall Saturday night feeling rewarded but sad. Charles Munch once again gave us an evening of superb but this was his last weekend as guest conductor. A it had welcomed Dr. Munch the preceding weekend, the audience stood sad. Charles Munch once again gave us an evening of superb music.

The orchestra warmed up with a spritely performance of the Mozart "Divertimento in D major, for Strings." Then came the dramatic sweep of Mendelssohn's "Symphony No. 5, in D minor," the "Reformation" Symphony. Dr. Munch carefully developed his forces for the emphatic statement of the Chorale, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott."

After intermission came the sparkling "Symphony No. 4, 'Deliciae Basilienses'" by Arthur Honegger. Based on the spirit and melodies of Basle, Switzerland, the Symphony is charming rather than profound and it was given a delightful performance right to the humorous flourish of its conclusion.

Finally Dr. Munch offered a composer without whom the evening would not have been complete. Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" received a glorious interpretation from the muted "Prelude a la nuit" to the flashing, color-drenched "Feria." Again, it seemed that Dr. Munch was unleashing the orchestra and its own pure enjoyment overflowed into the audience.

As I reflected on the enjoyment of the evening, I found myself hoping that the spirit of the entire concert (and last weekend's) will be nurtured in the weeks to come. From Dr. Munch has come more than competence. He has shared with us his warmth and energy, his enjoyment of music and of life. He will be missed.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

FEB 17 1965

Munch Brings Gallic Touch To Symphony

By Peter M. Knapp

Charles Munch has returned to Boston for two weeks of guest conducting his former colleagues in the Boston Symphony. Predictably, his first week's program was a collection of the French compositions which have earned him acclaim.

One suspects the Symphony players could have encompassed the bulk of last night's concert in their sleep, so often has Mr. Munch performed them here. Unfortunately, at times the music sounded as if this were the case.

Dismal Berlioz

It would be kinder perhaps to say there were two concerts, and to forget the pre-intermission fiascos. For the record, the evening began with a dismal example of Berlioz at his turgid worst, the treacly Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." Debussy's coloristic portrayal of life in Spain, "Iberia", should have moved better, since Mr. Munch has achieved memorable interpretations of Debussy's scores, but it didn't.

Either it lacked sufficient rehearsal, or the conductor's flair for producing spontaneous combustion failed to ignite. Whatever, "Iberia" was stodgy and dull. The initial section floundered in rhythmic unease, probably abetted by Mr. Munch's often-vague beat, and the instrumental choirs at times came unhinged.

"The Fragrance of the Night" produced little real perfume, unless it was "Nuit d' Ennui." These clouds of puffy sound never got off the ground. The finale seemed more to the point, with Mr. Munch putting more vitality into the dramatic sonic clashes, but it wasn't overwhelming.

After intermission, though, Mr. Munch displayed his savoir faire in a suave reading of the Symphony No 4, Opus 53, of Albert Roussel, and a splendid performance of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

Gallic Clarity

The Roussel is an interesting piece of Gallic clarity. The opening movement cavorts good-naturedly about a theme of leaping intervals; the slow section is moodily thoughtful; the scherzo, bright and genuinely playful in its capricious interplay, and the finale, brusque and compact. For the size of Roussel's orchestra, the sound is amazingly transparent, and Mr. Munch mustered the requisite organization and coherency.

The "Daphnis et Chloe" is a familiar showpiece, but Mr. Munch gave it an appealing freshness, with all the dazzling tonal delights of impressionistic orchestration spaciously laid out. Here and there, more restraint in the brass crescendi would have been more fitting, and the day didn't merely break in the first movement — it erupted in a shattering blast.

But few conductors could have handled the lacy string work setting off the superb flute solo of Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Pantomime with the finesse of Mr. Munch, or created the dreamy atmosphere shattered so abruptly by the driving Danse Generale.

1 | 14 82

Symphony: Mendelssohn 'Reformation' Revived

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, which Charles Munch revived in a tidy performance yesterday, deserves repetition, being unjustly neglected in favor of the "Italian" and "Scotch" symphonies, but revealing the composer even more as the master orchestrator.

No doubt, the reasons for the neglect are superficial, having to do with the alleged religious content. And while it is true that Mendelssohn wrote for the anniversary of the Augsburg Confession, and drew upon the Catholic "Dresden Amen" and the Protestant "Ein' feste Burg," the composer's own attitude toward his materials was rather ecumenical. Theology in music is — by and large — inscrutable.

Soggy Second

Dr. Munch firmly confronted the complicated features of this symphony and dealt with commendable understatement those parts of the score that present problematic issues. In particular, the soggy second movement, which isn't at all related to the ideas of the rest, received a clear handling. To keep this part from remaining veiled, the conductor elected to give it a firm place in the design; and this meant underplaying the climaxes, especially, the final fugal development of the chorale which was built up from its first appearance in the winds into a strongly emphatic but not bombastic utterance.

The total performance sacrificed some of the dramatic accents for the delineation of detail, so the design had a virtually Wagnerian tone fabric—not inappropriate, considering the use that was later made of the identical theme in Parsifal—and the bright colorations, from Doriot Dwyer's initial entry with the chorale melody to the wonderful writing for horns and bassoons, held an engaging radiance. It wasn't a "Reformation" in the grand style: rather, honestly and sturdily paced, with healthy non-raucous fortes, the symphony attained direct simplicity.

Such again was the very proper approach in the Honegger, but Dr. Munch failed to kindle much sparkle from the intractable score. The delights of Basle, I'm afraid, are of an elevated and philisophic order, not designed to entice the tourist of grosser appetites. The spirit and form of the piece are cast in the Mozartian mode, but what they require is the Mozartian amiability.

One couldn't help but consider Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony and how differently two composers, inspired by the same classic style react to it. Honegger's approach is basically impressionistic and if the composition contains a great deal of transparency and open sound, it also lacks the wit, ingenious turn of phrase and sophisticated interplay between past and present in mood.

Active Sensibility

The linear construction, complex though it may be, has its polyphonic moments, and the finale seems not without a glint of the possibilities inherent in the score. The sensibility of chamber music is active throughout; but the four-square treatment emphasized the somber and determined aspects of what Honegger calls "a state of spirit," and which seemed to me in another definition: having a good time even if it hurts.

The Mozart Divertimento, which opened the program, and the Rapsodie Espagnol, which closed it, were a mixture of ingredients. The slow tempos pre[illegible] the former underlined [illegible]icacy of Mozart's workmanship, while simultaneously lending it a ponderous rhythmic character and the edge of lethargy.

The Rapsodie Espagnole, however, was supercharged with the dramatic and impassioned rhetoric of Iberia, and while matters got out of hand at the close, tumultuous even for a feria, the Malaguena and Habanera sections received an opulent sheen.

After the swirl, the applause of the audience put Spanish floridities to shame, recalling Dr. Munch again and again to the stage where he bowed, his hand over his heart, an artist beloved of Boston, who has given of his best here, esteemed for his rare qualities as a musician and a man.

Next weekend the orchestra is on tour, and the program of March 5 and 6 finds Mr. Leinsdorf listing Strauss's "Don Juan," the first performance of Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8, and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, Op. 83, with Grant Johannesen as the soloist.

KING AND QUEEN candidates at University of Maine Winter Carnival Feb. 26-28 are, front row from left, Carol Denton, Saco, Me., Sue Myer, Springvale, Me.; Melody Mace, Amherst, Me., and Sarah Bunker, Brewer. Back row, Dave Svendsen, Needham, Mass.; Henry Schmelzer, Stow, Mass.; Wayne Johnson, Rockland, Me., and Arnold Delaite, Brunswick, Me.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 18th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The concert will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Divertimento in D Major, for strings, K. 136	Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in D Minor, "Reformation," Op. 107	Mendelssohn
Symphony No. 4, "Deliciae Basilienses"	Honegger
Rapsodie Espagnole	Ravel

TOUR # 4

83

NORTHAMPTON.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

FEB 17 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,427

FEB 17 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

FEB 17 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

FEB 22 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

FEB 19 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

FEB 21 1965

BSO Concert

The Boston Symphony concert in the Smith College course, in John M. Greene Hall at 8.15 Wednesday evening, will be conducted by the former leader of the symphony, Charles Munch, who has chosen for this occasion an all French program of Berliz, Debussy, Ravel and Roussel.

Tickets are available at the box office. The program will open with the Benvenuto Cellini Overture of Berlioz, followed by Debussy's Iberia. The symphony will be Roussel's Fourth, op. 53, composed in 1936, in four classical movements of great rhythmic and orchestral brilliance. The concert will close with Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite.

Next Sunday in Sage Hall at 8 p m. Dorothy Stahl, soprano, with Robert Miller, piano, Philipp Naegele, violin and Marion DeRonde cello, will present a recital of Handel German Airs, a group of Debussy songs, Schumann's Frauenliebe and Leben, an da group of English songs by Chanler, Bowles, and Britten. The recital is open to the public without charge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

FEB 24 1965

Standing Ovation Given Dr. Munch At Smith

A standing ovation was given Dr. Charles Munch by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he appeared last evening as their guest conductor, at John M. Greene Hall. The third in the current Smith College Concert Course, it was definitely a Munch program, all French, with the conductor evidently enjoying his return as much as the musicians, giving them free - rein where it was possible, and controlling them with his usual smooth and unique manner.

The program opened with Berlioz' Overture to his opera "Benvenuto Cellini," a composer to whom Dr. Munch always gives himself with quite complete abandon. The orchestra seemed a little unwieldly at first, but soon hit their stride, and made the beautifully contrasting sections as exciting as they are written.

Delightful to hear, and fascinating to watch performed, especially the percussive assortment, was the Debussy Images, No. 2, from his Iberia Suite, with its evocative music of Spain and her brilliant peoples, her richly colorful country, charming and gay as only Debussy could impress.

After intermission, during which it was learned that the orchestra would fly to New York City, came the fourth Symphony of Albert Roussel, who spanned the 19th and 20th centuries, and was noted for his anti-romantic and anti-impressionist views. Classic in form and style, the four movements were superbly played, the Lento especially impressive with grand layers of sound, the Allegro scherzando well-defined and delightfully dissonant, ending abruptly; and the final Allegro molto, with the oboe (its principal player Gomberg replaced in the second half by a very adept artist) giving the principal theme, taken up in turn by the other winds, and finally the strings, syncopated, restrained but lively.

To many of Munch's admirers, the last number was the favorite, and undoubtedly magnificently projected, Ravel's Ballet Suite No. 2 from "Daphnis et Chloe." Loud cheers and tumultuous applause brought Dr. Munch back several times, during which he insisted on flutist Doriot Dwyer joining him in acknowledgment. After every number on the program, as always, Dr. Munch graciously directed the musicians to rise and bow with him. It was a pleasure to see and hear their former conductor and the Boston Symphony together again. — Mde. B. B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

FEB 24 1965

Boston Symphony, Munch Cheered At Smith Concert

NORTHAMPTON—John M. Greene Hall at Smith College was filled to capacity Tuesday night as Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a two-hour concert featuring compositions by well-known French composers.

Munch, who formerly was Boston Symphony conductor, was greeted warmly by the audience, and was given a rousing cheer at the conclusion of the performance.

Selections presented included Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" Opus 23, Dubussy's "Iberia Images No. 2," Roussell's Symphony No. 4, Opus 53, and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" ballet suite No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

FEB 24 1965

Music Review

BSO at Smith College

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra came to Smith College in Northampton last night and played a completely French program under the baton of Charles Munch, returning for a three-week term as guest conductor.

Except for a Berlioz overture, the music was all by composers of this century, but of a generation just preceding that of Munch. Two, Ravel and Roussel, had been old friends. Debussy had died before Munch came to France.

Munch has made himself a prime champion of Berlioz, yet the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture was played with the least balance of the evening. It may be that John M. Greene Hall is extra resonant, but the wind instruments, the brass particularly, were extremely favored the whole evening to the disadvantage of the strings. Indeed, it was not until "The Fragrance of the Night," the second scene from the Debussy "Images" from his "Iberia," that the strings were allowed their rightful prerogative.

* * *

IT IS, of course, due to the diaphanous nature of this imaginative movement that this side of the orchestra was properly exposed, but the excessive brass became annoying. After the impetuous introduction in the Berlioz, the song for the strings in the larghetto is accompanied by reiterated waving figures in the reeds. Munch allowed this to completely submerge and almost obliterate the unison of the four string sections. It must be said that in the final sentence he brought the orchestra to the great abyss with a formidable dramatic punch, an effect in which he is not excelled.

* * *

THE MAIN offering of the evening was the last (the fourth) symphony of Albert Roussel. There is nothing here of the filmy translucence of his confreres, Debussy and Ravel, even though he came out of the same background and was exposed to the same germs. Roussel fills in his canvases with vivid colors and, instead of fragmentary phrases, writes long graceful lines in polytonal textures.

But Munch's old warhorse, the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe" second suite, was cannily chosen to end the program. It was beautifully done as the virtuosi of the Boston orchestra can so competently do it, but the final and climactic eight bars in which the tympani and all the percussion are beat to insensitivity is a proven bravo-evoker, a peak of approval which the large audience had not approached during the rest of the program.

NEW YORK FEB 24th

Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

FEB 1 7 1965

Music Notes

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra three times in New York City next week. Mr. Munch, who retired as the orchestra's music director in 1962, will lead an all-French program (Ravel, Berlioz, Debussy and Rousell) Wednesday in Philharmonic Hall, and a Mozart-Mendelssohn-Honegger - Ravel program Thursday at the Brooklyn Academy and Friday at Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf, the current music director, will conduct Saturday night's program in Carnegie Hall at which soprano Phyllis Curtin will be soloist in Alban Berg's concert aria, "Le Vin." . . . Meanwhile, Boston's new Veterans' Memorial Auditorium will be opened next Monday with an inaugural concert by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra. . . . Works by Messiaen, Carter, Hamilton and Crumb will be offered at a Contemporary Music Society concert Thursday, Feb. 25, in the auditorium of the Guggenheim Museum. Pianist Paul Jacobs and cellist Kermit Moore will be the performers.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

FEB 2 1 1965

WEDNESDAY

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30 P.M. Conductor, Charles Munch.

Overture to Benvenuto Cellini..Berlioz
Iberia (Images No. 2)........Delbussy
Symphony No. 4..............Roussel
Daphnis et Chloe, Suite No. 2.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

FEB 2 4 1965

MUSIC NOTES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at Philharmonic Hall tonight at 8:30, with Charles Munch as conductor.

Other events today: Mischa Elman, violinist, with members of the American Symphony Orchestra, José Iturbi, conductor, Carnegie Hall, 8:30 P.M.; Esterhazy Orchestra, David Blum, conductor, with Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, Town Hall, 8:30; Music in Our Time, Max Pollikoff, director, Kaufmann Concert Hall, 92d Street "Y," 8.

And, Gale Enger, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, 12:05 P.M.; John Upham, organist, St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Fulton Street, 12:30.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 339,455

MAR 1 3 [illegible]

Boston Symphony Orchestra regained its French accent, which had been missing for some time past, during its latest visit to Philharmonic Hall. This was not a question of finding something that had been misplaced so much as restoring somebody who had been replaced. That somebody was Charles Munch, returning to the post of command in which he had been replaced by Erich Leinsdorf.

The spirit of the performances of Berlioz's Benvenuto Cellini Overture, Debussy's Ibéria, Roussel's Symphony No. 4, and the second of Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé Suites was all Munch, but some of the substance, at least, was Leinsdorf. For every slashing stroke of impulse there was a responsive unity that gave the listeners the best of two worlds, Leinsdorf's discipline and Munch's compulsion. It was good as well as interesting to hear —Irving Kolodin.

Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

FEB 2 6 1965

Nostalgia: Munch, Boston

By John Gruen

An extended ovation, by both public and members of the orchestra, greeted the appearance of Charles Munch, who Wednesday evening came to guest-conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Munch, it will be recalled, served as music director of the Boston players for 13 years (from 1949 to 1962), and his return to the podium recalled—with no little nostalgia—the many memorable performances heard under his aegis.

It was clear from the very first that the orchestra would outdo itself. This, and the fact that the program was devoted to music by French composers—an area in which Mr. Munch is master—contrived to make the evening an event to cherish.

The opening work was Berlioz's Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," a rousing, wonderfully put-together piece that alternates fire and brimstone with flights of bitter-sweet melodic invention. It received a predictably disciplined performance.

This was followed by Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2). Like all good French composers, (Bizet, Lalo and Ravel immediately come to mind), Debussy could evoke the spirit, atmosphere and color of Spain almost better than any of his Spanish confreres. The work, in three sections, is drenched in the sounds and rhythms of that sultry land, yet with it all, there are none of the smoldering cliches that so often attends this sort of music.

Debussy, like Mozart, believed above all in clarity and purity of line. Given the sinuous delicacy and color of his orchestral textures, nothing deterred the composer from following an almost punctilious logic at every turn. Under Mr. Munch's experienced hands the work became a wondrous study in expressive shape, contour and meaning.

Next came the Symphony No. 4 by Albert Roussel, a composer infrequently heard hereabouts. Roussel, who died in 1937, wrote music of a diffident nature. Restrained, often cool, always elegant, it weaves its spell through an understated insistence of melodic and harmonic ideas. The Symphony bore all these qualities, and the conductor knew how to translate all these elements into an arresting musical experience.

The evening concluded with a superb reading of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

FEB 2 5 1965

Music: Boston Plays for Munch Again

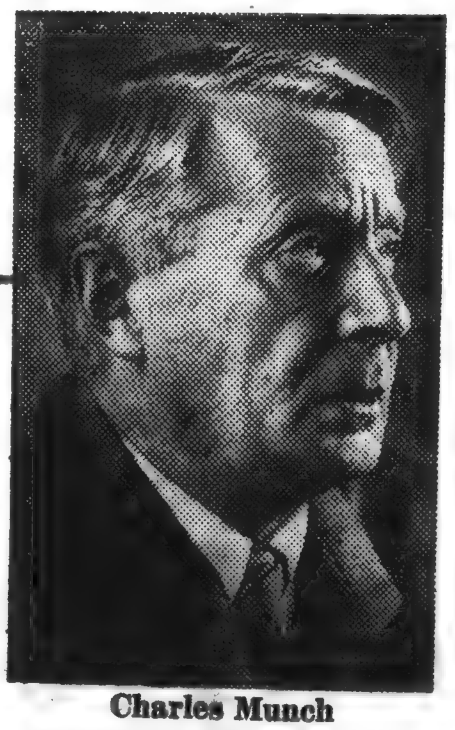
Concert Program Here Recalls Recent Era

By THEODORE STRONGIN

CHARLES MUNCH led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Philharmonic Hall last night in a concert very reminiscent of a few years ago years ago when the orchestra was his own.

First of all, the program was French, ending with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2. During his years as music director of the Boston, from 1949 to 1962, the suite was something of a specialty of the conductor, as was French music in general.

Mainly, though, it was the sound of the orchestra and the quality of its playing that brought one back in time. Erich Leinsdorf, the current music director, has emphasized a transparency and lightness of texture. This was absent. Instead one heard the Munchian nobility of proportion and rushing impetuosity. The textures were blurred at times and there were ragged moments, especially in the opening "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture of Berlioz. But a sense of grandness was present in the overture that overrode petty detail.



Charles Munch

French Works Given Touches of Grandeur

Debussy's "Iberia" was savored. Especially in the middle movement, "Les Parfums de la nuit," the conductor's pacing was miraculous and sure and it gave the feeling that the music was destined to be that way and no other. His patience with the Debussy released the myriad small sounds buried in the work, without for one moment disturbing its motion.

Mr. Munch's decisions were just as apt in the Roussel Symphony No. 4, which, with a minimum of fuss, he invested with a life and direction of its own. It flowed effortlessly. It is not a work dripping with ultra-refinement of sentiment, but it is romantic and graceful and very clear and civilized. It has a touch of earthiness, too, which Mr. Munch brought out.

All in all, it was a pleasure to return to the Boston Symphony of another era for an evening. Some members of the audience thought so, too. When Mr. Munch came out on the stage to start the concert, the applause was loud and there were scattered cheers.

85

BROOKLYN FEB 25th

CAPITA[illegible] NEWS BUREAU
[illegible]LBANY, N.Y.
[illegible]WSPAPER
[illegible]IPPINGS
CO[illegible]E NEW YORK
[illegible] SERVICE

1965

Boston Symphony Here

NE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Charles Munch, will present a concert Thursday at 8:30 P.M. in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. The program will include works by Mozart, Mendelssohn, Honegger and Ravel.

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,588

FEB 2 4 1965

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE [illegible] YORK
STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN [illegible]RD
[illegible] 1965

CAP[illegible]S BUREAU
[illegible] N.Y.
[illegible]PER [illegible]GS
CO[illegible] YORK

[illegible] PRESS
[illegible] 1965

MAESTRO RETURNS

Charles Munch returns to Brooklyn as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~Thursday~~ night at the ~~Brooklyn~~ Academy of Music. The maestro, who was the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1949 to 1962, has been appearing around the world as a guest conductor.

NE

NEW YORK FEB 26th

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

FEB 2 7 1965

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Munch Sways Bostonians

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH exerted his mesmerizing influence as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night.

It was good to have his genial personality suffuse warmth into the orchestral playing as well as into the music.

He chose a German-French program with some emphasis on things of the spirit.

The German entry in this category was Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony No. 5; The French entry Honegger's Symphony No. 4, subtitled "Baslerian Delights."

If the former may be classified as somewhat "sacred" music, the latter leaned strongly toward the secular; both, however elevate the spirit.

★

NEITHER work turns up often. The Mendelssohn appeals to Mr. Munch for the spiritual quality of the music. He is faithful to his friend's memory when he plays Honegger. In both he conveyed the feeling that he gets personally involved in them .

That circumstance held the secret of the richer, cohesive sound that characterized the orchestral playing last night. The fervor with which Mr. Munch conducts is as infectious as it is comumnicative.

Both performances gave pleasure in different ways: the Mendelssohn as an old friend met occasionally, the Honegger as a new acquaintance still novel.

Its relaxation was somewhat disconcerting possibly because last night it assumed too somber a mood. Only the finale completely engaged the listener; the other movements sounded too introspective on this occasion.

★

THE DELICACY with which Mr. Munch played this Honegger symphony revealed how much rapport existed between musicians and conductor.

It was noticeable in the artful simplicity of the opening performance of Mozart's "Diver Timento for Strings" where the ensemble was justly proportioned.

It showed itself in the magical quality of the playing in Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole," which ended the concert with a burst of virtuosity peculiarly Munchian.

Time may not deal too kindly with the Honegger because it is such a personal indulgence. Some people shun the Mendelssohn because they do not place it on a par with the "Italian"" and "Scotch" symphonies.

Thus the observation that this program did not offer quite the substance it might have could be valid. It nevertheless had its refreshing aspect, and the audience enjoyed the concert, partly, no doubt because Mr. Munch was present.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

04

NEW YORK PARK EAST
Thursday, February 25, 1965

Boston Symphony

NE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present concerts on Friday, February 26, at 8:30 p.m. at Philharmonic Hall and on Saturday, February 27, at Carnegie Hall, also at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch, retired music director of the orchestra, will be guest conductor at the Friday concert, and Erich Leinsdorf, present director of the orchestra, will conduct the Saturday performance of works by Bach, Beethoven, Berg, and Brahms.

118

CARNEGIE HALL FEB 27th

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 496,980 S. 492,211

MAR 2 1965

OVER AT CARNEGIE, Leinsdorf was enjoying himself as much as his listeners. Although the Bach Double Violin Concerto, reduced to Baroque proportions and accompanied at the harpsichord by the conductor, was dwarfed by the auditorium, the evening contained some powerful Beethoven, Berg and Wagner to compensate. At the first great chord of the Beethoven "Leonore" Overture No. 2, one could feel the sound in his toes, for the carpet-covered wooden floor of the old hall transmits aural vibration in a way that concrete-based halls can never hope to do. Leinsdorf, conducting with a freedom and an expressiveness that one had never before heard from him, capped a grand concert with Brahms' Second Symphony, so glowingly done that perfect strangers were challenging one another at the end to remember when they had heard better Brahms.

N. Y. TIMES. MARCH 1, 1965

Phyllis Curtin Sings Berg

Erich Leinsdorf stretched the familiar three B's to four in the Boston Symphony Concert in Carnegie Hall on Saturday night. Besides Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, the program listed Alban Berg, staying within the German-Austrian orbit of composers.

The Berg work was the rarely heard "Le Vin," a long concert aria for soprano with a text by Beaudelaire. Written in 1929 it prefigures in some ways the composer's opera "Lulu." It has a 12-tone basis, with a wide-ranging vocal line that still has a lyrical quality. But it is the shimmering texture of the orchestra and all the subtle interplay of rhythms, including, for example, a tango rhythm, that make the score outstanding.

Phyllis Curtin was the soloist, appearing quite appropriately in a wine red gown. She sang the original French poems: Berg set them in a German translation by Stefan George, but the German and French work about equally well with the music. The soprano's singing, as was to be expected, had a fine clarity of tone and intelligent style.

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster, were soloists in Bach's Concerto in D minor for Two Violins. Mr. Leinsdorf used a minimal number of string players and conducted from a harpsichord. The resultant sound was pure chamber music, the soloists seeming like members of an ensemble rather than individuals.

Other than this, the performance was distinguished by the smooth, silken sounds of the strings, which tended to soften the structural line.

Neither Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 nor Brahms's Symphony No. 2, which completed the program, was routinely played, although the orchestra and conductor might have been forgiven a run-of-the-mill approach. (Was Mr. Leinsdorf on his mettle after all the Beethoven that orchestras from Berlin, Philadelphia and Cleveland have played here this season?) The overture and symphony had unusual breadth; tempos in the symphony might even have been called slow. Yet the readings were firmly shaped and clear in detail, and not obsessively so. Given the elegant, warm sonorities of the Boston Symphony, this performance of the Brahms was most heartening.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

MAR 1 1965

L. S.

'Le Vin'— Rare Vintage

Alban Berg's setting of three Baudelaire poems, "Le Vin," is not often served up locally. It was, however, on Saturday night at Carnegie Hall by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony, with Phyllis Curtin as a beautifully liquid "voix du vin," expressing, in Berg's becomingly tipsy idiom and the poet's fragrant words, the soul-inspiring qualities of the pressed grape in a variety of guises—a wine commercial of most unusual cast! Berg's capacity musically to agitate the bubbles as well as stir up the sediment, often in an aurally clinical manner reminiscent of the current Met "Wozzeck," proved entirely appropriate in this alternatingly painful, sparkling and haunting score. Miss Curtin sang with great expertise against the orchestra's wonderfully explicit flow of sound.

Bach's Concerto for Two Violins and Strings had eloquent soloists in Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips, with Mr. Leinsdorf as a proficient harpsichordist. Beethoven's "Leonore No. 2" overture, and Brahms's Second Symphony rounded out a satisfying program.

L. S.

BALTIMORE FEB 28th

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

FEB 26 1965

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which the Baltimore Symphony presents in concert Sunday at 3 P.M. at the Lyric. The concert is one in the current series.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 219,257 SUN. 312,266

FEB 28 1965

THE MAESTRO gives cues during rehearsal. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Lyric, today, 3 P. M.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,991

FEB 24 1965

Club Sells Concert Tickets

Tickets to the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at 3 P.M. Sunday at the Lyric are still being sold by members of the Radcliffe College Club of Baltimore, according to Mrs. Jerome D. Frank, president.

Club members are selling a block of seats at the concert to benefit their scholarship fund. The concert under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, is part of a midweek series of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra.

Chairman of the benefit is Mrs. Courtney Clower. Mrs. Peter S. Houts, of Stevenson lane, is ticket chairman.

Other officers serving with Mrs. Frank, include: Mrs. John B. Newman, vice president; Mrs. John Goodell, recording secretary, and Mrs. James W. Holtzworth, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. George E. Thomsen is interviewer of prospective students. Mrs. Paul H. Voreacos heads a committee on new opportunities for women.

Chairman of the annual College Night is Mrs. Philip Van I. Darling. Mrs. Harry G. Green is publicity chairman.

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

FEB 25 1965

As a benefit for its scholarship fund, the Radcliffe College Club of Baltimore has a block of seats for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf, scheduled for 3 P.M. Sunday at the Lyric Theater as part of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra midweek series.

A few of these tickets still are available through Mrs. Peter S. Houts, of Stevenson lane, ticket chairman of the club's benefit committee; Mrs. J. Henderson Dorsey, Jr., Mrs. Hamilton H. Sanger or Mrs. Francis D. Murnaghan, Jr., members of the ticket committee. Chairman of the benefit is Mrs. Courtney Clower.

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN 325,664

FEB 21 1965

Next Sunday at 3 P.M., as one of the events in the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra's midweek series, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Lyric Theater under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

The program:

Overture to La Scala di Seta........Rossini
Double Concerto........Brahms
Symphony No. 6........Prokofiev

Erich Leinsdorf will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in matinee concert next Sunday in the Lyric.

The Home News
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
D. 46,171 SUN. 45,794

FEB 28 1965

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,991

FEB 26 1965

Boston Symphony Due

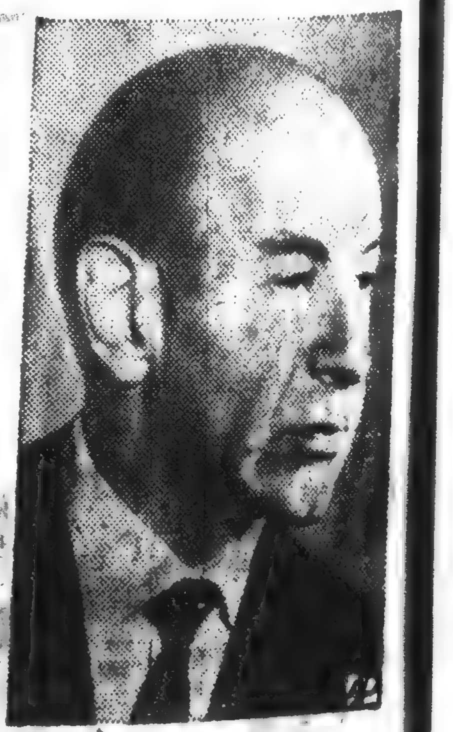
The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform at the Rutgers Gymnasium on College Avenue Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

The Symphony, composed of 101 male and three female members, will be presenting its 23rd concert at Rutgers and the fourth concert in the 1964-65 gymnasium series.

Erich Leinsdorf, 11th musical director of the 84-year-old Boston Symphony, received an honorary doctorate in music from Rutgers in 1952. He was previously music director and conductor of the New York Metropolitan Opera.

For the Rutgers concert, Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Overture, Leonore No. 2, and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A Minor.

Tickets for Tuesday's performance are still available and may be obtained through the University Concert Office at 542 George St.



ERICH LEINSDORF

87

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
SUN. 325,664

MAR 1 1965 Bufkeller

Music Notes

Boston Symphony

By ELLIOTT W. GALKIN

FOR the second time since he assumed the musical directorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962, Erich Leinsdorf appeared with this distinguished symphonic ensemble at the Lyric Theater yesterday afternoon.

The program, cannily chosen to reveal the singular characteristics of the orchestra under its new conductor, included Rossini's Overture to La Scala di Seta, Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6 in E-Flat Minor, and Brahms's Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, in which Joseph Silverstein, the orchestra's concertmaster, and Jules Eskin, its solo cellist, appeared as soloists.

Both texturally and stylistically, Mr. Leinsdorf has in his three years of tenure wrought great changes in this orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra no longer has the sharp intensity of sound, the keen, lean focus of brass sonority, the floating winds and the transparent strings it had under Koussevitzky and Munch. In effect, it is no longer a French orchestra.

In Stylistic Image

Mr. Leinsdorf instead has molded the organization into his stylistic image, one influenced primarily by the criteria of orchestral color and interpretation characteristic of the great orchestras of Middle Europe.

In its vibrancy of sound, broad of bow in the strings, forceful and heavy of weight in the woodwinds, and majestically noble in the brass, this is an orchestra that if comparisons may be made to those in Europe, resembles the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam in its over-all characteristics.

There is, however, in its playing, an added quality which has been unique to this orchestra under former conductors and which has remained with Leinsdorf; this is their quick almost nervous immediacy of attack. Unlike many European orchestras which have been trained to play after the beat, Nachschlag, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's attacks are machine-gun-like in their instantaneous response to the conductors gestures.

Variety Of Gestures

And what a variety of gestures there are. Leinsdorf's baton technique is undeniably one of the most sophisticated in the world of podium personalities. Like a ballet dancer's, his movements are ever changing, graceful, smooth and fluid-like.

However, they are intended for more than the public eye. Leinsdorf is a virtuoso who can titilate the audience by acting out the emotional content of the music; equally important is the fact that at every moment of the musical continuity, his is a technique of consummate control of all aspects, physical and psychological, of the performance. Every beat and part of a beat count.

To watch him mark a simple four-beats-in-a-bar in the air, and to change the shape and emphasis of each measure, is to recognize the wisdom of Berlioz's observations that the mechanical gestures of conducting may be learned in a half hour, but their subtelties and mastery are given only to a few and are the work of a lifetime.

Program Well Executed

Thus from a technical point of view the program was one marvelous for its execution; paradoxically, however, it was less stylistically consistent and impressive of accomplishment.

The offerings began with the Overture to La Scala di Seta, one of the lesser known masterpieces by the Nineteenth Century's foremost farsa composer, a work bright with the sounds of simple melodies played frequently in octaves, the use of the oboe piquant in its expressiveness, the total impression one of bubbling impetuousness.

In presentation, Leinsdorf reduced the orchestra to one of chamber proportion, its tempi brisk and speedy, almost Toscanini-like in its precision, clarity and dramatic exploitation of crispness and crescendo.

It was clever psychological programing to follow the Rossini with the double concerto of Brahms.

Points To Dissappointment

Although undeniably authoritatively executed, however, there were aspects of its presentation which were disappointing. In general the approach to the work was one which seemed to emphasize specific sections, rather than to convey a sense of over-all structure.

While such a point of view is certainly valid, and was a characteristic of great German interpreters of two or three generations ago, there was, however, one specific element, that of sustained intensity, which appeared to be lacking in this performanee.

Both Mr. Silverstein and Mr. Eskin are extraordinary technicianss, and both are musicians of intelligence; Mr. Silverstein, a Brussels prize-winner in 1959 and the recipient of a Naumberg Award, has a broad, rich sound, a sure and agile bow arm and an impeccable left hand technique, even in the stratospheric regions of his instrument; Mr. Eskin plays with comparable agility and purity, although his sonority is neither so dramatic nor so robust as that of his partner.

An Ingredient Missing

What seemed to be missing, however, was a combination of the senses of the spontaneous and the spacious. This appeared to be a careful reading by two exceptional instrumentalists, but it did not bear the soloistic stamp of impetuousity nor the emphasis upon individuality of utterance.

To conclude the program, Mr. Leinsdorf changed the emotional climate to one of incandescence with a brilliant performance of Prokofiev's Sixth symphony.

Like the final works of Beethoven (it in fact bears the same opus number as his last piano sonate, III) this is an extraordinary amalgamation of qualities of personal tragedies, intellectuality and nobility.

Mild and colorful music, it is filled with extraordinary distributions of instrumental parts, the flutes heard below the oboes and clarinets, the violins combined with the tuba, two and three octaves apart.

Mr. Leinsdorf conducted it with brio. In particular the ominous coda of the finale was contrasted passionately with the rollicking almost Mozart-like four-note vivace, to bring the program to a stirring and dramatic close.

THE EVENING SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,991

MAR 1 1965 Bufkeller

Music In Review

Erich Leinsdorf Conducts Boston Symphony At Lyric

By Adelide C. Rackemann

Erich Leinsdorfer conducted the Boston Symphony Orhestra yesterday afternoon at the Lyric, phesented by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, as part of its regular series of Wednesday evening concerts.

The three works on the program were no doubt chosen to display the rich diversity of sound of this orchestra and the tehcnique of Mr. Leinsdorf. The Rossini Overture to "La Scala di Seta" (The Silken Ladder), a compartively insignificant work (written in 1812, when Rossini was 20), was brilliantly played, with the score drained of every ounce of musical content. The strings had a bouyancy and the overture as a whole a conversational precision.

Conductor A Perfectionist

Mr. Leinsdorg, a perfectionist, conducts in a way which leaves no doubt as to his intentions. Acting with the alacrity of a coiled spring, he both demands and receives. Every one of his many gestures is meaningful.

The ringing Rossini Overture contrasted with the opulence of the Brahms Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Opus 102. The soloists were the young concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Joseph Silverstein, and the first cellist, Jules Eskin.

Here, in the first movement (Allegro) were exciting gradations of strings, with almost no woodwinds audible. The solo violin was delicately persistent, with the bold undercurrent of the cello, against the vibrant pealing of the orchestra.

But the woodwinds were emphasized, and the solo instruments assumed a mellowness, in the Andante. In the concluding movement, Vivace non troppo, there was an effective balance in the diailogue between violin and cello and th humming orchestra accompaniment, as each successively took up the sinister short theme.

Soloists Able, Imaginative

While the soloists are both able and imaginative, the total effect was a successful blending, with Mr. Leinsdorf provoking an instant response in whatever luckless section of the orchestra his graphic gesture was aimed.

The Symphony No. 6 in E flat minor, Opus III, by Prokofiev, was given its first performance in 1948. Shortly afterwards, Prokofiev and the other leading Russian composers were condemned by the Central Committee of the Communist Party, accused of "confusing and neuropathic combinations which turn music into cacophony and a chaotic accumulation of sounds." Prokofiev was considered to express bourgeois ideology, to have lost touch with the artistic demands and tastes of the Soviet People.

Oddly enough, the Sixth Symphony seems less cacophonic than the composer's Fifth, a work ostensibly one of lavish patriotism. There is little in it that most of us would accept as "bourgeois."

It has themes easy to follow, small explosions of sound and long valleys of comparative quiet. In addition, it is a symphony of tremendous instrumental variety and innovation—with the use of the bassoon, perhaps, the most striking — percussive, rhythmic, and even, in the pictures it conjures up, Russian.

For the first movement (Allegro moderato) suggests a topographic map of the Soviet Union, vast and varied, while the sweep of the second movement (Largo) expresses a steady wind over the Steppes, with the Vivace ending jauntily reminiscent of "Peter and the Wolf" (a work which earlier provided Prokofiev with a cheap success), an effective martial ending.

Played with clarity and regard for all its nuances, it showed again Mr. Leinsdorf's iron control, as he elicited at all times the right responses from his fine orchestra.

It may have been partly because this was an afternoon performance that the audience was alert and responsive, applauding with more than its usual warmth. In addition, of course, it was appreciation of one of the foremost orchestras of the country, with, possibly, the most exacting conductor.

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

FEB 28 1965 Bufkeller

Concerts On Music Menu

By ELLIOTT W. GALKIN

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, the second oldest permanent symphonic organization in the United States (dating from 1881), and now recognized as among the foremost symphonic ensembles of the world, will be heard at 3 P.M. today at the Lyric Theater under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

Their appearance will take place as one of the scheduled events included in the mid-week series of concerts sponsored by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra.

Leinsdorf, who became the musical director of the orchestra in 1962, is its first conductor in the mid-European tradition since Karl Muck in 1918. Through the tenures of its succeeding musical directors, Pierre Monteux (1919-1924), Serge Koussevitzky (1924-1949), and Charles Muench (1949-1962), the style and tonal qualities of this orchestra had been developed according to the aesthetic criteria and characteristics of French orchestral playing, and in terms of a repertory which stressed the works of French composers.

Leinsdorf's appointment marked the end of an era in the orchestra's history, and the beginning of a renewed performance policy which emphasized the works of the German symphonic composers, contemporary symphonists following their tradition, and Italian opera composers.

The program to be presented, typical of this new orientation, will feature the appearances as soloists of the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, and its solo cellist, Jules Eskin.

The program:

Overture to La Scala di Seta	Rossini
Double Concerto in A Minor, Opus 102, for violin, Cello and orchestra	Brahms
Symphony No. 6	Prokofiev

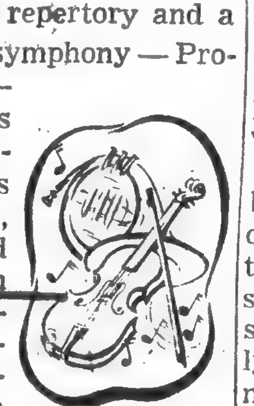
The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 219,257 SUN. 312,266

MAR 1 1965 Bufkeller

Boston Symphony

A Posthumous Honor For Serge Prokofief

By R. P. HARRISS



Two 19th Century works from standard repertory and a 20th Century symphony — Prokofief's Sixth— that brought its composer humiliation in his native land, were performed by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon to a contented audience filling the Lyric to capacity.

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the concert was presented under the auspices of the Baltimore Symphony.

THE PROGRAM offered, seriatim:

Rossini: Overture to "La Scadi Seta" (The Silken Ladder).

Brahms: Concerto in A Minor for Violin and Cello, with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and first cellist Jules Eskin as soloists.

Prokofief: Symphony No. 6 in E-flat Minor.

THE SOVIET composer's condemned work, superbly performed, provided the greater part of the interest. Prokofief's Sixth was glumly received at its first performanee in the U.S.S.R. in 1948.

The Communist Party bigwigs denounced Prokofief.

THE IDIOCY of the official Red strictures becomes obvious with the opening notes of the first movement, heavily accented in the cellos and basses.

True, it is intricate music, but it certainly is not cacophonic, and the thematic development is masterly.

After this tart and bracing beginning, with its markedly contrasting, bright figures in the lighter strings against the somber bass coloration, the slow movement provides a richly melodic texture. The final movement, Vivace, is delightful throughout, with lively suggestions of folk melodies.

What a pity Comrade Prokofief could not have heard such a spendid reading as this of his Sixth, before he died.

ROSSINI'S sprightly overture to a forgotten opera buffa went very nicely, as a start.

The Brahms double concerto was given a stylistically satisfying performance with admirable collaboration between soloists and orchestra. For all its beauty, however, this concerto tends a little toward monotony in its noble, dark resonance, which lacks brilliant contrasts.

SINCE his last appearance here with the Boston Symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf has developed cetrain distracting histrionics and a dancing-master, Bernsteinian bounciness — regrettable in so able a conductor. It was disturbingly noticeable in his conducting of the Rossini and Brahms, but happily absent from the Prokofief.

NEW BRUNSWICK

SOUTH AMBOY, N. J.
CITIZEN
W. 1,900

FEB 2 5 1965

Boston Symphony In Rutgers Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its twenty-third visit to the State University on Tuesday, Mar. 2, for the fourth concert in the Rutgers Gymnasium Series.

The 84-year old orchestra, which last performed at Rutgers in February, 1962, will appear at 8:30 p.m. in the gymnasium on College Avenue.

Erich Leinsdorf, the 11th musical director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra for the first time at Rutgers. The program will consist of Beethoven's Overture, Leonore No. 2 and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A Minor.

Leinsdorf, who received an honorary doctorate in music from Rutgers in 1952, was previously music director and conductor of the New York Metropolitan Opera.

A former student of the late conductors Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, Leinsdorf has also been a guest conductor of the major symphonies throughout the world. He received Musical America's 1963 award as Musician of the Year, an honor based on a poll of the nation's music critics and editors.

The Boston Symphony has the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world and averages more than 200 concerts each year. The season includes performances in July and August at its summer home, Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass.

Tickets for the Rutgers performance are still available and can be obtained through the University Concert Office in 542 George St., New Brunswick, or by calling CH 7-1766, Ext. 6591.

DAILY HOME NEWS
NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.

FEB [illegible] 647

W E D CLIPPING SERVICE
CALDWELL, N. J.
CApital 6-4044

Boston Symphony Due

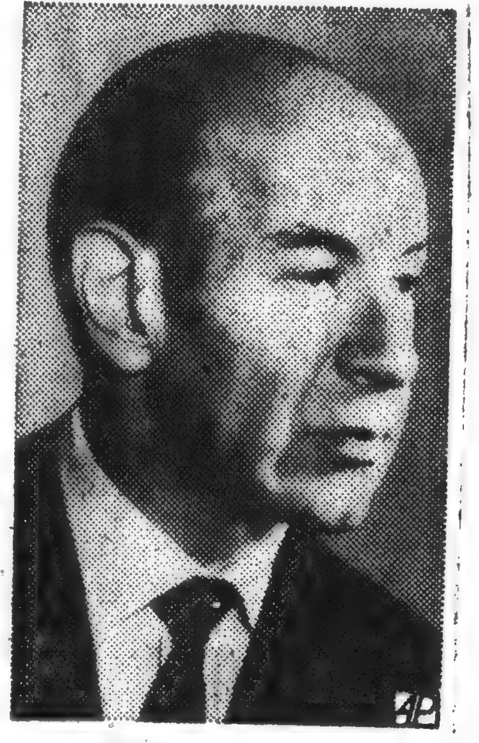
The Boston Symphony Orcnestra will perform at the Rutgers Gymnasium on College Avenue Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

The Symphony, composed of 101 male and three female members, will be presenting its 23rd concert at Rutgers and tne fourth concert in the 1964-65 gymnasium series.

Erich Leinsdorf, 11th musical director of the 84-year-old Boston Symphony, received an honorary doctorate in music from Rutgers in 1952. He was previously music director and conductor of the New York Metropolitan Opera.

For the Rutgers concert, Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Overture, Leonore No. 2, and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A Minor.

Tickets for Tuesday's performance are still available and may be obtained through the University Concert Office at 542 George St.



ERICH LEINSDORF

THE COURIER-NEWS
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
D. 46,472

FEB 2 5 1965

METUCHEN, N. J.
RECORDER
W. 7,400

FEB 2 5 1965

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its 23rd visit to Rutgers University Tuesday for the fourth concert in the current Gymnasium Series.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program includes Beethoven's Overture Leonore No. 2 and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A Minor. Tickets for the performances are still available and may be obtained through the University Concert Office at 542 George street, New Brunswick.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J.
NEWS
D. 38,700

FEB 2 5 1965

Concert Set At Rutgers

NEW BRUNSWICK — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its twenty-third visit to Rutgers University on Tuesday for the fourth concert in the Rutgers Gymnasium Series.

The 84-year old orchestra, which last performed at Rutgers in February 1962, will appear at 8:30 p.m. in the gymnasium on College Avenue.

Erich Leinsdorf, the 11th musical director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct the orchestra for the first time at Rutgers. The program will consist of Beethoven's Overture, Leonore No. 2 and Mahler's Symphony No. 6 in A Minor.

Leinsdorf, who received an honorary doctorate in music from Rutgers in 1952, was previously music director and conductor of the New York Metropolitan Opera.

A former student of the late conductors Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, Leinsdorf has also been a guest conductor of the major symphonies throughout the world. He received Musical America's 1963 award as Musician of the Year, an honor based on a poll of the nation's music critics and editors.

FRI-SAT. # 19. SUN # 5. TUES. # 9

Nineteenth Program

RNOON, March 5, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, March 6, at 8:30 o'clock

on Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

....Symphony No. 8

oderato mosso

nto assai llegro marcato

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

Brahms ...... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- Allegro non troppo
- II Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST

GRANT JOHANNESEN

Mr. Johannesen plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Fifth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, March 7, at 3:00 o'clock

Strauss ... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

Piston ....Symphony No. 8

- I. Moderato mosso
- II. Lento assai
- III. Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

Brahms .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST

GRANT JOHANNESEN

Mr. Johannesen plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Ninth Program

UESDAY EVENING, March 9, at 8:30 o'clock

"Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

....Symphony No. 8

Moderato mosso

Lento assai

Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

.... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

Allegro non troppo

Allegro appassionato

Andante

Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST

GRANT JOHANNESEN

Mr. Johannesen plays the Steinway Piano

N PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

FEB 28 1965

New Piston Symphony

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8 will have its first performances Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at concerts by the Boston Symphony. The new work was commissioned by the orchestra last year in recognition of the composer's 70th birthday and his close association with the Boston Symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will open with Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan." After intermission, Grant Johannesen will be soloist in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2.

The Piston Symphony is the second one written for the Boston Symphony. No. 6, which was commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, 1955-56, was performed around the world on the orchestra's European and oriental tours. The orchestra has also given first performances to seven other symphonic works by Piston. One was his Symphony No. 7, which Erich Leinsdorf conducted at his first concert as the orchestra's new music director.

Grant Johannesen will appear for the first time at the Friday-Saturday concerts, although he has performed at Tanglewood and last season filled an engagement for the indisposed Rudolf Serkin. Born in Salt Lake City of Norwegian parents, he began his piano study at the age of 5, and later studied with Robert Casadesus, Egon Petri and Nadia Boulanger. Since his New York debut in 1944, the pianist has made frequent tours of Europe, South America, the Philippines, India, and Russia. In addition to appearances at the Amsterdam, Bergen, Aix-en-Provence and other international festivals, he performs frequently at the Aspen Festival, where he is artist-in-residence.

FRI.-SAT. # 19. SUN # 5. TUES. # 9

E... RTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Nineteenth Program

FR... TERNOON, MARCH 5, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 6, at 8:30 o'clock

STRAU... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

PISTO... Symphony No. 8

- I. Moderato mosso
- II. Lento assai
- III. Allegro marcato

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
GRANT JOHANNESEN
Mr. JOHANNESEN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 7, at 3:00 o'clock

STRAUSS .... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

PISTON .... Symphony No. 8

- I. Moderato mosso
- II. Lento assai
- III. Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
GRANT JOHANNESEN
Mr. JOHANNESEN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, at 8:30 o'clock

ST... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

PI... .... Symphony No. 8

- Moderato mosso
- Lento assai
- Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BR... .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST
GRANT JOHANNESEN
Mr. JOHANNESEN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

FEB 28 1965

New Piston Symphony

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8 will have its first performances Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at concerts by the Boston Symphony. The new work was commissioned by the orchestra last year in recognition of the composer's 70th birthday and his close association with the Boston Symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. The program will open with Strauss' tone poem, "Don Juan." After intermission, Grant Johannesen will be soloist in the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2.

The Piston Symphony is the second one written for the Boston Symphony. No. 6, which was commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary, 1955-56, was performed around the world on the orchestra's European and oriental tours. The orchestra has also given first performances to seven other symphonic works by Piston. One was his Symphony No. 7, which Erich Leinsdorf conducted at his first concert as the orchestra's new music director.

Grant Johannesen will appear for the first time at the Friday-Saturday concerts, although he has performed at Tanglewood and last season filled an engagement for the indisposed Rudolf Serkin. Born in Salt Lake City of Norwegian parents, he began his piano study at the age of 5, and later studied with Robert Casadesus, Egon Petri and Nadia Boulanger. Since his New York debut in 1944, the pianist has made frequent tours of Europe, South America, the Philippines, India, and Russia. In addition to appearances at the Amsterdam, Bergen, Aix-en-Provence and other international festivals, he performs frequently at the Aspen Festival, where he is artist-in-residence.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 9 1965

Piano Soloist

Appearing this week with the Boston Symphony, Grant Johannesen will be heard in the Brahms Second Piano Concerto tonight and Thursday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAR 5 1965

GRANT JOHANNESEN, American pianist, will be soloist in the Brahms Concerto in B flat, No. 2, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 28 1965

Johannessen To Be Soloist

Pianist Grant Johannessen will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the concert to be broadcast live in stereophonic sound by WCRB Saturday at 8:28 p.m. Johannessen will play the "Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat, op. 83," by Brahms.

The concert, to be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will open with the tone poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, followed by the "Symphony No. 8" by Walter Piston. The Brahms concerto will follow an intermission.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

MAR 10 1965

The Sound of Music

Piston's 8th Symphony

By Peter M. Knapp

Walter Piston's new Symphony No. 8 and two familiar standards were on the Boston Symphony's program last night and it was the Piston that came out with the freshest performance.

Dedicated to Erich Leinsdorf, the Symphony's music director, the new work by the 69-year-old former Harvard music professor is an attractive addition to the repertoire. While framed in traditional language, Mr. Piston's Eighth Symphony demonstrates that being conventional doesn't necessarily mean being banal.

Clear, Not Cloudy

The symphony uses a large orchestra, reinforced in the brass and employing a number of percussion effects. Yet nothing is cloudy, and the moments of orchestral density are merely passing contrasts. The primary quality here is clarity, well-suited to the composer's lean themes.

In mood, the work is somber, even melancholy in the slow middle movement swept away by the agitated rhythms of the finale. Throughout, there is a sense of craftsmanship and logic, although one finds the symphony—on first hearing at least—to be emotionally cool.

The first two movements seem to turn back upon themselves, completing a kind of development circle in which both sections begin and end with much the same material and treatment. There is an especially fine section for woodwinds, in solo and in playful section work, in the first movement.

The performance seemed carefully-prepared and beautifully executed. Mr. Leinsdorf, who has been using a baton on occasion, last night used it throughout the program. But he looks uncomfortable with this appendage, and one misses the eloquence of his right hand without the baton.

After intermission, the American pianist Grant Johannesen appeared as soloist in the Brahms Concerto No. 2 in B flat, Opus 83. It was a puzzling reading, one in which there were passages of exciting declamation or subdued lyricism spotted between stretches of stiffly correct yet unmoving music.

Impersonal Soloist

There were care and control exercised by Mr. Leinsdorf, and certainly nothing got out of order. But the impression was of over-restraint and the excitement of this craggy and difficult concerto never left the ground.

There is much to admire in Mr. Johannesen's playing. It is direct, technically proficient, unfussy. He neither moons over lyrical passages nor pounds in the fortes. However, his playing in the Brahms was impersonal, sometimes bland. Intelligent as it was, it lacked heart.

To open the concert, Mr. Leinsdorf chose Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan". It sounded more Wagnerian than Straussian, square and loud at the beginning, held-in during the "love scenes" (the first sounding like "Tristan und Isolde.") and massive at the end with a blare of brass suitable for "Goetterdammerung." More spontaneity, flexibility, impetuosity would have been welcomed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

MAR 14 1965

Boston Symphony Performs Piston's New Symphony

Last Sunday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed the premiere of Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 8," a work that strengthens Mr. Piston's position as perhaps the best of our American symphonists and our leading academic traditionalist.

Mr. Piston's progress as a composer has been interesting. In his "Symphony No. 1," he utilizes 12-tone elements, a good deal of dissonance, many passages of fugal writing. With the passing years, however, Mr. Piston has become more direct in expression, less complex in texture, more lyrical and dramatic in his themes.

His "Symphony No. 8" is in three movements. The first two are characterized by a somber beauty, by considerable skill in orchestration, and by skillful development of musical ideas. The final movement, an allegro, is perhaps the best in the symphony—lively, driving, composed with precision and admirable control. Mr. Piston was on hand last Sunday to receive the plaudits of the cordial audience and the obvious respect and affection of conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians also offered Richard Strauss' "Don Juan" in a perceptive and enjoyable reading and Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2," with Grant Johannesen as soloist. Although there were moments of beauty and truth in Mr. Johannesen's rendition, his playing seemed to lack the requisite power and drama—surprising in view of his magnificent playing last season of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 3."

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1965

SYMPHONY

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8 Receives World Premiere Here

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8, which received its world premiere at yesterday's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a structure of sober beauty, order and craft.

The pattern of its three units presents two slow movements, a moderato tempo and a stately lento, followed by an emphatic allegro. Orchestration explores the resources of the contemporary symphony orchestra without exotic combinations of timbre. The language of the composition is orthodox, suggesting in its way the musical idiom of Hindemith, yet the relationships of style establish a distinctly individual voice.

Enormous Skill

In short, the symphony makes no appeal whatever to the vulgarities of an alleged modernism. It is cerebral but clear; the informing principles of organization may be perceived, the enomous skill in construction; however, technique never becomes an end in itself. What is readily apparent at first listening is that Piston's conceptions of balance and proportion support statement which in a lesser talent would depend on sham novelty.

That we have heard the ideas in the Eighth Symphony in other earlier stylistic contexts of the composer is of scant importance—the same may be said of Mozart.

The most successful movement of the three, it seemed to me yesterday, was the allegro, for the dark, introverted character of the initial sections does not permit much leeway for contrast, although they are of instrinsic subtlety.

But in the first two movements, commencing with the bright fleck of the triangle against unison strings, and carrying over into the lento with its plaintive bassoon cavatina and low-register 'cellos, we have an extended, thoughtful and weighty commentary that never palls, even if the colors modulate almost imperceptibly.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 19th program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Grant Johannesen, pianist, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Don Juan," Tone Poem, Op. 20 ..... Strauss
Symphony No. 8 ..... Piston
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 ..... Brahms

It is in the allegro that the counterpoint and harmonic nuances of the symphony may be relished most completely at first hearing. Piston has a way of suggesting harmonies and equilibriums within a propulsive rhythmic pattern, and the vitality of the line receives unexpected punctuations and tantalizing indications of texture.

I found the Eighth Symphony a ruminative, lyrical and modest abstract design, the comment of the mature composer upon his art, and in the refreshingly unpretentious program notes learn that it had its inception in a remark by a lady who wanted to know what the composer had whispered to Mr. Leinsdorf while taking a stage bow. Mr. Piston might well have said, on the evidence of this music: "Ripeness is all."

Somehow, it seemed that the program had otherwise been turned upside-down, for it flowed from the exuberance of the youthful "Don Juan" through the mellowness of age, which may be apt as chronology but not as exciting program-making.

Brahms Concerto

Grant Johannesen's performance of Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major lay on the bland side. The soloist obviously possesses a fine technique and his articulation, especially of the andante was highly commendable. He over-pedalled the opening movement slightly, however, and his control over the second was scarcely "appassionato".

Still, despite the fact that ease and poetic distinction were wanting in the restrained approach and the obligato treatment of the soloist's role, there were things to commend: lucidity of tone and even-fingered precision.

The range of expression was not great, and in the first movements the balances of accompaniment were ragged, though Mr. Leinsdorf took minute care with the rest and the dialogue with Mr. Eskins was delicately rhapsodic. Mr. Johannesen created elegant phrases, but I missed a sense of meaningful direction and dramatic power.

The "Don Juan" contrast... rebutted the myth of Mr. Leinsdorf as the detached disciplinarian, for it was treated with a rubato passion and extroverted glamour that lent the score unusual impact. The impetus of the performance was exhilarating, and the largeness of scale (though it diminished what came after) was exciting in the variety of its sound levels and color changes.

Next week Leopold Stokowski is guest conductor, and has scheduled Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAR 1965

Symphony

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, plays four pairs of Friday afternoon (2:00 p.m.)-Saturday evening (8:30 p.m.) concerts in March, at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492): March 5-6, 12-13, 19-20, and 26-27.

Grant Johannessen, pianist, will be soloist, playing the Brahms piano concerto No. 2 at the March 5-6 concerts (repeated at the concerts of Sunday afternoon, March 7, and evening concerts on Tuesday, March 9, Thursday, March 11, Tuesday, March 16.)

The Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society sings Prokofiev's "Ivan the Terrible" at the March 19-20 concerts.

Joseph Silverstein, BSO concertmaster, will be soloist in Schoenberg's violin concerto at the concerts of March 12-13.

Leopold Stokowski takes over the baton from Mr. Leinsdorf on March 26 and 27.

Open rehearsals, at 7:30 p.m., on Thursday, March 18 and Thursday, March 25 (a chance to see Mr. Stokowski at rehearsal).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 9 1965

Piano Soloist

Appearing this week with the Boston Symphony, Grant Johannesen will be heard in the Brahms Second Piano Concerto tonight and Thursday evening, Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAR 5 1965

GRANT JOHANNESEN, American pianist, will be soloist in the Brahms Concerto in B flat, No. 2, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 28 1965

Johannessen To Be Soloist

Pianist Grant Johannessen will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the concert to be broadcast live in stereophonic sound by WCRB Saturday at 8:25 p.m. Johannessen will play the "Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat, op. 83," by Brahms.

The concert, to be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will open with the tone poem, "Don Juan," by Richard Strauss, followed by the "Symphony No. 8" by Walter Piston. The Brahms concerto will follow an intermission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

MAR 10 1965

The Sound of Music

Piston's 8th Symphony

By Peter M. Knapp

Walter Piston's new Symphony No. 8 and two familiar standards were on the Boston Symphony's program last night and it was the Piston that came out with the freshest performance.

Dedicated to Erich Leinsdorf, the Symphony's music director, the new work by the 69-year-old former Harvard music professor is an attractive addition to the repertoire. While framed in traditional language, Mr. Piston's Eighth Symphony demonstrates that being conventional doesn't necessarily mean being banal.

Clear, Not Cloudy

The symphony uses a large orchestra, reinforced in the brass and employing a number of percussion effects. Yet nothing is cloudy, and the moments of orchestral density are merely passing contrasts. The primary quality here is clarity, well-suited to the composer's lean themes.

In mood, the work is somber, even melancholy in the slow middle movement swept away by the agitated rhythms of the finale. Throughout, there is a sense of craftsmanship and logic, although one finds the symphony—on first hearing at least—to be emotionally cool.

The first two movements seem to turn back upon themselves, completing a kind of development circle in which both sections begin and end with much the same material and treatment. There is an especially fine section for woodwinds, in solo and in playful section work, in the first movement.

The performance seemed carefully prepared and beautifully executed. Mr. Leinsdorf, who has been using a baton on occasion, last night used it throughout the program. But he looks uncomfortable with this appendage, and one misses the eloquence of his right hand without the baton.

After intermission, the American pianist Grant Johannesen appeared as soloist in the Brahms Concerto No. 2 in B flat, Opus 83. It was a puzzling reading, one in which there were passages of exciting declamation or subdued lyricism spotted between stretches of stiffly correct yet unmoving music.

Impersonal Soloist

There were care and control exercised by Mr. Leinsdorf, and certainly nothing got out of order. But the impression was of over-restraint and the excitement of this craggy and difficult concerto never left the ground.

There is much to admire in Mr. Johannesen's playing. It is direct, technically proficient, unfussy. He neither moons over lyrical passages nor pounds in the fortes. However, his playing in the Brahms was impersonal, sometimes bland. Intelligent as it was, it lacked heart.

To open the concert, Mr. Leinsdorf chose Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan". It sounded more Wagnerian than Straussian, square and loud at the beginning, held-in during the "love scenes" (the first sounding like "Tristan und Isolde,") and massive at the end with a blare of brass suitable for "Goetterdammerung." More spontaneity, flexibility, impetuosity would have been welcomed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

MAR 14 1965

Boston Symphony Performs Piston's New Symphony

Last Sunday afternoon the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed the premiere of Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 8," a work that strengthens Mr. Piston's position as perhaps the best of our American symphonists and our leading academic traditionalist.

Mr. Piston's progress as a composer has been interesting. In his "Symphony No. 1," he utilizes 12-tone elements, a good deal of dissonance, many passages of fugal writing. With the passing years, however, Mr. Piston has become more direct in expression, less complex in texture, more lyrical and dramatic in his themes.

His "Symphony No. 8" is in three movements. The first two are characterized by a somber beauty, by considerable skill in orchestration, and by skillful development of musical ideas. The final movement, an allegro, is perhaps the best in the symphony—lively, driving, composed with precision and admirable control. Mr. Piston was on hand last Sunday to receive the plaudits of the cordial audience and the obvious respect and affection of conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians also offered Richard Strauss' "Don Juan" in a perceptive and enjoyable reading and Brahms' "Piano Concerto No. 2," with Grant Johannesen as soloist. Although there were moments of beauty and truth in Mr. Johannesen's rendition, his playing seemed to lack the requisite power and drama—surprising in view of his magnificent playing last season of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 3."

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1965

SYMPHONY

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8 Receives World Premiere Here

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8, which received its world premiere at yesterday's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is a structure of sober beauty, order and craft.

The pattern of its three units presents two slow movements, a moderato tempo and a stately lento, followed by an emphatic allegro. Orchestration explores the resources of the contemporary symphony orchestra without exotic combinations of timbre. The language of the composition is orthodox, suggesting in its way the musical idiom of Hindemith, yet the relationships of style establish a distinctly individual voice.

Enormous Skill

In short, the symphony makes no appeal whatever to the vulgarities of an alleged modernism. It is cerebral but clear; the informing principles of organization may be perceived, the enormous skill in construction; however, technique never becomes an end in itself. What is readily apparent at first listening is that Piston's conceptions of balance and proportion support statement which in a lesser talent would depend on sham novelty.

That we have heard the ideas in the Eighth Symphony in other earlier stylistic contexts of the composer is of scant importance—the same may be said of Mozart.

The most successful movement of the three, it seemed to me yesterday, was the allegro, for the dark, introverted character of the initial sections does not permit much leeway for contrast, although they are of intrinsic subtlety.

But in the first two movements, commencing with the bright flick of the triangle against unison strings, and carrying over into the lento with its plaintive bassoon cavatina and low-register 'cellos, we have an extended, thoughtful and weighty commentary that never palls, even if the colors modulate almost imperceptibly.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 19th program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Grant Johannesen, pianist, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Don Juan," Tone Poem, Op. 20	Strauss
Symphony No. 8	Piston
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83	Brahms

It is in the allegro that the counterpoint and harmonic nuances of the symphony may be relished most completely at first hearing. Piston has a way of suggesting harmonies and equilibriums within a propulsive rhythmic pattern, and the vitality of the line receives unexpected punctuations and tantalizing indications of texture.

I found the Eighth Symphony a ruminative, lyrical and modest abstract design, the comment of the mature composer upon his art, and in the refreshingly unpretentious program notes learn that it had its inception in a remark by a lady who wanted to know what the composer had whispered to Mr. Leinsdorf while taking a stage bow. Mr. Piston might well have said, on the evidence of this music: "Ripeness is all."

Somehow, it seemed that the program had otherwise been turned upside-down, for it flowed from the exuberance of the youthful "Don Juan" through the mellowness of age, which may be apt as chronology but not as exciting program-making.

Brahms Concerto

Grant Johannesen's performance of Brahms's Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major lay on the bland side. The soloist obviously possesses a fine technique and his articulation, especially of the andante was highly commendable. He over-pedalled the opening movement slightly, however, and his control over the second was scarcely "appassionato".

Still, despite the fact that ease and poetic distinction were wanting in the restrained approach and the obligato treatment of the soloist's role, there were things to commend: lucidity of tone and even-fingered precision.

The range of expression was not great, and in the first movements the balances of accompaniment were ragged, though Mr. Leinsdorf took minute care with the rest and the dialogue with Mr. Eskins was delicately rhapsodic. Mr. Johannesen created elegant phrases, but I missed a sense of meaningful direction and dramatic power.

The "Don Juan" contrastingly rebutted the myth of Mr. Leinsdorf as the detached disciplinarian, for it was treated with a rubato passion and extroverted glamour that lent the score unusual impact. The impetus of the performance was exhilarating, and the largeness of scale (though it diminished what came after) was exciting in the variety of its sound levels and color changes.

Next week Leopold Stokowski is guest conductor, and has scheduled Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

BOSTON
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAR 1965 Buffaller

Symphony

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, plays four pairs of Friday afternoon (2:00 p.m.)-Saturday evening (8:30 p.m.) concerts in March, at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492): March 5-6, 12-13, 19-20, and 26-27.

Grant Johannessen, pianist, will be soloist, playing the Brahms piano concerto No. 2 at the March 5-6 concerts (repeated at the concerts of Sunday afternoon, March 7, and evening concerts on Tuesday, March 9, Thursday, March 11, Tuesday, March 16.)

The Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society sings Prokofiev's "Ivan the Terrible" at the March 19-20 concerts.

Joseph Silverstein, BSO concertmaster, will be soloist in Schoenberg's violin concerto at the concerts of March 12-13.

Leopold Stokowski takes over the baton from Mr. Leinsdorf on March 26 and 27.

Open rehearsals, at 7:30 p.m., on Thursday, March 18 and Thursday, March 25 (a chance to see Mr. Stokowski at rehearsal).

91

World première

New Piston Eighth

By Harold Rogers

Walter Piston's new Eighth Symphony—given its world première Friday by the Boston Symphony—is another masterful addition to an output earning him the right to be called the leading American symphonist.

Proof of its vitality was found as it won its way while sandwiched between two lushly romantic items—Strauss's "Don Juan" tone poem, and the Second Piano Concerto of Brahms. But the Piston proved to be the only thing of real interest. The rest turned gray in its presence.

It was Erich Leinsdorf who commissioned the work. He, too, is the dedicatee. And it was he who gave it a commanding performance, if not altogether exciting.

Piston in his Eight has again brought forth his superb sense of form. This he gains by using a certain instrument or choir to produce a certain melody or mood, and then recalling the same effect when the melody or mood later reappears in the structure.

Superb form

For the most part it appears to be through-composed. Themes do not sound as if quoted verbatim, at least on first hearing. Yet the listener is never lost in a morass of sound that knows not where it has come from or where it is going. With Piston you always know where you are.

And you can always understand what he is saying. You know that he bases his symphony on a solid layer of counterpoint. You know—as in the first movement (Moderato mosso)—that he is restive as the music seethes into climactic knots, only to unravel their tensions into areas of lyric beauty.

Piston sings a sad little song in the middle movement (Lento assai). It was announced by Sherman Walt's suave bassoon. It is then picked up by the fiddles and later developed into great dissonant arcs of tension, interspersed with moments of diatonic peace.

The final Allegro marcato sets an agitated pattern that keeps most of the instruments hopping from first to last. Through this he drives an aspiring melody that recalls an older Sibelius technique. But the likeness stops there. Piston is Piston. He is reminiscent of no one. He knows how to express his musical identity without losing his audience.

He was on hand to receive rounds of appreciative applause.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
MAR 6 1965

At Symphony

New Piston Symphony; Johannesen's Brahms

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

One sometimes hears it said, generally in defense of some recent musical developments, that the resources of traditional music are exhausted. It is true that some composers find that they no longer can bring certain traditional techniques to life, but there are also composers who still manage to work creatively and inventively within the familiar framework.

Walter Piston has been one such composer, and especially some of his recent chamber music has demonstrated the point eloquently. His new Symphony, his eighth, which was written for the Boston Symphony and was give its first performance by them under Erich Leinsdorf on Friday afternoon, is, however, a disappointment, so largely does it consist of familiar gestures joined in familiar ways.

It is technically skillful, though every time I read or write that phrase I am haunted by a phrase in a published letter of Randall Thompson's, something to the effect, "what is technique if not making a work good?" Let us say then that the Piston Eighth is fluent, coherent, consistent, and efficiently scored. There is something curiously Russian about the piece; perhaps it is the prevalence of unisons, especially in the Lento, that are so suggestive of Shostakovich. The performance seemed to be good, and the composer was warmly applauded.

Winthrop Sargeant has a theory that many compositions in their opening moments contain touchstone phrases by whose execution one can infer much about what the whole performance is apt to be like. The theory is attractive and useful, and Grant Johannesen and Erich Leinsdorf provided an illustration of it in their performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2.

First, Leinsdorf got the opening horn call started at a ridiculously slow tempo. First of all, it was wrong for Brahms' "allegro non troppe;" then, it had the effect of making everything up to the entrance of the full orchestra an introduction, that is, something outside the piece, when, in fact, the principal structural point of the movement is the integration of the horn phrase into a great variety of contexts.

Then there was the pianist's sentimentalizing of the decending triplet at the end of his first measure. Next, the conductor counted only to three-and-a-half when he should have counted to four, and brought the next horn entrance in too soon. Predictably by then, there was a similar rhythmic truncation in the measure when the woodwinds first enter.

Such things are not momentary accidents. They are matters of basic conviction (Johannesen's style) or basic unawareness, (Leinsdorf's rhythm). It was unlikely, as early as measure 7, that this would be a performance of the Brahms Second Concerto much worth listening to, and as it went on there was increasing evidence that Johannesen does not understand where this work lives expressively.

In the context of the slack reading, the one element of distinguished playing of music was provided by Jules Eskin's cello solos in the third movement.

Earlier there had been a performance of Strauss' "Don Juan." Leinsdorf played it straight, which was welcome, but here also, except for the very well managed coda, there was a deadening lack of rhythmic animation. Ralph Gomberg played the oboe solo simply, and thus satisfyingly.

FRI.-SAT. 20. "CAMBRIDGE" 5

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 12, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, at 8:30 o'clock

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, Guest Conductor

BACH .... Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor

SCHUBERT .... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, at 8:30 o'clock

STRAUSS ....."Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

PISTON .... Symphony No. 8

- I. Moderato mosso
- II. Lento assai
- III. Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST

GRANT JOHANNESEN

Mr. JOHANNESEN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 1 0 1965

Guest Conductor

Leopold Stowosky will direct works of Bach, Schubert and Shostakovitch at the Friday and Saturday Boston Symphony concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

MAR 1 0 1965

STOKOWSKI TO CONDUCT BSO CONCERTS FRI., SAT.

Leopold Stokowski, who conducted the Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra for the first time last season, has accepted the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, music director, to return as guest conductor at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts next Friday at 2 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 7 1965

Stokowski B.S.O. Guest

Leopold Stokowski, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time last season, has ~~accepted the invitation~~ of Erich Leinsdorf, music director, to return as guest conductor at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The 83-year-old conductor also appeared at the Berkshire Festival last year and will return once again this coming Summer.

Stokowski's program this weekend will open with the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and will continue with Schubert's Symphony No. 8, in B minor, "Unfinished." After the intermission he will conduct the Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, by Shostakovitch.

Leinsdorf will conduct the first Sunday Afternoon concert today, the ninth Tuesday Evening concert Mar. 9 at 8:30, and the sixth and final Thursday Evening concert Mar. 11 at 8:30. Grant Johannesen will be guest pianist at each program, performing the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83. Leinsdorf will begin these concerts with Strauss's Tone Poem "Don Juan, and will then conduct the new Symphony No. 8 by Walter Piston, which received its first performance Mar. 5.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be heard in their third and final Boston program of the season Sunday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Their concert will include Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and Ludwig Spohr's ~~Nonet, Op. 31~~.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

MAR 1 1 1965

Where To Go, What To Do

Friday, March 12

Leopold Stokowski will appear as guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall.

The 83-year-old maestro will open with the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and continue with Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor, "Unfinished."

Saturday-niters will also have an opportunity to enjoy the great conductor, of Philadelphia Orchestra fame, who comes to the Hub for the weekend.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

MAR 1 3 1965

Boston Symphony In Musical Honor To Slain Minister

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Friday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall performed Gluck's music of the blessed spirits in the Elysian Fields, from "Orpheus and Eurydice," in Reeb's memory. Leopold Stokowski conducted.

The orchestra management said the Gluck work was included in the program at the request of members of the orchestra. The music was last played by the orchestra Nov. 22, 1963, at a concert in memory of President John F. Kennedy.

FRI.-SAT. 20. "CAMBRIDGE" 5

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 12, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 13, at 8:30 o'clock

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, Guest Conductor

BACH .... Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor

SCHUBERT .... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH .... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

- I. Moderato
- II. Allegretto
- III. Largo
- IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 16, at 8:30 o'clock

STRAUSS ..... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20

PISTON .... Symphony No. 8

- I. Moderato mosso
- II. Lento assai
- III. Allegro marcato

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS .... Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83

- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegro appassionato
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegretto grazioso

SOLOIST

GRANT JOHANNESEN

Mr. JOHANNESEN plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

---

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 10 1965

Guest Conductor

Leopold Stowosky will direct works of Bach, Schubert and Shostakovitch at the Friday and Saturday Boston Symphony concerts.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 7 1965

Stokowski B.S.O. Guest

Leopold Stokowski, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time last season, has accepted the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, music director, to return as guest conductor at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The 83-year-old conductor also appeared at the Berkshire Festival last year and will return once again this coming Summer.

Stokowski's program this weekend will open with the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and will continue with Schubert's Symphony No. 8, in B minor, "Unfinished." After the intermission he will conduct the Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, by Shostakovitch.

Leinsdorf will conduct the first Sunday Afternoon concert today, the ninth Tuesday Evening concert Mar. 9 at 8:30, and the sixth and final Thursday Evening concert Mar. 11 at 8:30. Grant Johannesen will be guest pianist at each program, performing the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83. Leinsdorf will begin these concerts with Strauss's Tone Poem "Don Juan, and will then conduct the new Symphony No. 8 by Walter Piston, which received its first performance Mar. 5.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be heard in their third and final Boston program of the season Sunday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Their concert will include Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

MAR 10 1965

TOKOWSKI TO CONDUCT SO CONCERTS FRI., SAT.

Leopold Stokowski, who conucted the Boston Symphony rchestra for the first time last eason, has accepted the invitaon of Erich Leinsdorf, music irector, to return as guest conuctor at the Orchestra's Symhony Hall concerts next Friday t 2 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

MAR 11 1965

Where To Go, What To Do

Friday, March 12

Leopold Stokowski will appear as guest conductor at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall.

The 83-year-old maestro will open with the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and continue with Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor, "Unfinished."

Saturday-niters will also have an opportunity to enjoy the great conductor, of Philadelphia Orchestra fame, who comes to the Hub for the weekend.

---

ew England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

MAR 13 1965

Boston Symphony In Musical Honor To Slain Minister

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Friday afternoon concert in Symphony Hall performed Gluck's music of the blessed spirits in the Elysian Fields, from "Orpheus and Eurydice," in Reeb's memory. Leopold Stokowski conducted.

The orchestra management said the Gluck work was included in the program at the request of members of the orchestra. The music was last played by the orchestra Nov. 27, 1963, at a concert in memory of President John F. Ken-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078. Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

65

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI

Symphony This Week

Stokowski Guest For 2 Concerts

Leopold Stokowski, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time last season, has accepted the invitation of Erich Leinsdorf, music director, to return as guest conductor at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The 83-year-old conductor also appeared at the Berkshire Festival last summer and will return again this coming summer.

Mr. Stokowski's program this weekend will open with the Bach Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and will continue with Schubert's Symphony No. 8, in B minor, "Unfinished." After the intermission he will conduct the Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, by Shostakovitch.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the fifth Sunday afternoon concert today at 3 p.m., the ninth Tuesday Evening concert next Tuesday at 8:30, and the sixth and final Thursday Evening concert next Thursday at 8:30. Grant Johannesen will be guest pianist at each program, performing the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83. Mr. Leinsdorf will begin these concerts with Strauss' Tone Poem "Don Juan," and will conduct the new Symphony No. 8 by Walter Piston, which received its first performance this weekend.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be heard in their third and final Boston program of the season next Sunday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Their concert will include Piston's Divertimento foi Instruments (1946), Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31. Tickets are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office and at the Harvard Coop.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 13 1965

At Symphony

Leopold Stokowski Returns as Guest

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Stokowski returned to the Boston Symphony Friday afternoon to the obvious pleasure of the orchestra and of much of the audience. He conducted his own orchestration of Bach's organ Passacaglia, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, and the Shostakovich Fifth.

In addition, at the beginning of the second half of the program, Stokowski announced that the orchestra had requested he lead them in the Dance of The Blessed Spirits from Gluck's "Orpheus" in memory of Rev. James J. Reeb, the Boston clergyman murdered in Alabama earlier this week. The same music had been chosen for the orchestra's Kennedy memorial the day after the President's death in November, 1963.

At nearly 83, Stokowski still is an elegant, self-possessed figure, and in many ways a compelling one. His movements are not as precise as they once were, but by the end of the afternoon, the ensemble difficulties that marked the first part of the concert had disappeared. As a musician, Stokowski is as tasteless as ever.

Stokowski's transcription of the Passacaglia is bad, not because it is a transcription: Bach himself would be first to deplore that viewpoint. Nor is the trouble that the transcription is out of style: so are the ones by Liszt, Schoenberg, Webern, and Stravinsky.

The problem is that it reveals nothing about the piece. Orchestral colors are used for their own sakes, without regard for phrase or paragraph structure. The naive alternation of winds and strings in the variations only obscures their design. In the double fugue, all one can ever hear is the part of the fugue subject that is derived from the Passacaglia bass. That was always rammed out clearly enough, which is the way talented piano students play fugues (let'em hear the subject, never mind the rest!). The performance was bad, too, but less for its fevered outbursts than for its rhythmless tedium.

When Stokowski let the Schubert alone, it went pleasantly. There were too many interruptions of the flow by exaggerated accelerations and retardations, and the codas of both movements became absurd in their melodrama and sentimentality.

As for the compositional clumsiness and the endless oratorical commonplaces that make up the Shostakovich Fifth, they, too, were given a Stokowski treatment. That is, where the music failed to meet the conductor's standards for mushiness and sensationalism, it simply got fixed up. By now, at least, the playing was alert and rhythmic, and the performance of the Scherzo was by any standards exceptionally good.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,553

MAR 13 1965

SYMPHONY

Stokowski in Musical Tribute To Memory of Rev. James Reeb

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Leopold Stokowski and the members of The Boston Symphony Orchestra placed a wreath of musical remembrance on the testament of the Rev. James Reeb yesterday afternoon.

In an extraordinary gesture, the orchestra and this week's guest conductor offered Gluck's Music of the Blessed Spirits In the Elysian Fields in memory of the martyred clergyman. The score was last played as tribute to President Kennedy on the evening of Nov. 23, 1963.

Prior to the homage, the musicians of The Boston Symphony unanimously reaffirmed their orchestral policy of no performances before segregated audiences. Officials of Symphony Hall pointed out the trustees were in complete accordance; and that Erich Leinsdorf a year ago publicly had stated his refusal to conduct such concerts.

Although the orchestra could not have rehearsed the memorial music from Gluck's "Orpheo," the performance achieved a direct and poignant simplicity. Mr. Stokowski, who briefly announced the work from the stage following the intermission, allowed the limpid flow of the strings and woodwinds to achieve ethereal purity. Then, unmarred by a single handclap, the moment passed into an eternity where the light of the spirit shines, inspiring the example of men . . .

Returning to the harsh business of musical criticism, I'm afraid I could endorse nothing else on the program. Mr. Stokowski is the doyen of American conductors, and his years and very considerable contributions to his art deserve only veneration. At the same time, it must be recognized he is at his best in music lending itself to emotional excitement; and his lapses of taste are apt to convert less viable works into orgies of virtuoso musical showmanship.

The Bach Passacaglia and Fugue, alas, was utter nonsense being neither Bach nor Stowkowski, and indeed for a time making me doubt, despite contrary evidence, it was even a fugue. To build up the sonorities of a Bach organ Passacaglia in terms of strings and woodwind with occasional brass reinforcement can only remotely suggest keyboard registrations—but Mr Stokowski's transcription (like Respighi's before him) with its eight horns and four trumpets and four trombones is so anti-baroque in character that it transcends mimicry to rise into a realm of Glorious Technicolor.

The reading of the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert was almost as exaggerated. Instead of the pseudo-dramatic, it emphasized the pseudo-sentimental. The strings were coaxed into larger-than-life expression the phrasing shaped into melting languorous accents. The performance had the sheen of pathetic fluency one associates with the pretty and the ornamental and the texture was saccharine.

Different Concept

One heard an approach to Schubert smacking of "Blossom Time," and one had only to compare Alfred Einstein's excellent program comments about crescendi, which should be sharp and clear-cut rather than glassy furbelows, to detect the difference in stylistic concepts.

Mr. Stokowski used a score of Shostakovitch's Fifth that had been annotated by the composer, I'm informed. However, the interpretation was whipped-up, although the most successful of the scheduled program, relatively. The score, a rather coarse and obvious exhibit of jingoism, has seemingly endless pedal points, not a few good melodies and the mannerisms of other composers (Mahler, for example) mingled in the Russian style of unison writing. The Stokowski performance held the textural virtue of clarity; but in every respect it was sham stercophonic; loud, bombastic and spuriously punctuated for theatrical bravura. There were cheers.

Next week the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will be heard in Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" Cantata, Op. 78, with Shirley Verrett as the mezzo soloist. Mr. Leinsdorf also schedules Brahm's Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 73, and Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat Major, for strings and two horns, K. 287.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski conducting, presented the 20th program of the 84th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor	Bach
Symphony in B Minor, "Unfinished"	Schubert
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47	Shostakovitch

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 13 1965

Stokowski guest at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

When he returned to the podium after intermission, Leopold Stokowski lifted his hands to silence applause.

"We of the orchestra," he announced, "would like to play—in memory of the Reverend James Reeb—Gluck's Music of the Blessed Spirits from 'Orpheus and Eurydice.'"

Then the noted conductor—appearing as guest at the Boston Symphony's weekend concerts—paid eloquent tribute to the Boston clergyman killed in Alabama by white segregationists.

But the Gluck was only a fraction of an afternoon of eloquent music. Perhaps Stokowski's hands are not so dramatic as they once were, yet it is not the movement of the hands that makes the music blow hot or cold. It's the heart, and this maestro's heart has never lost its youthful fire.

True to original

He opened with his own transcription of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Eliciting great organ tones from the orchestra (in keeping with Bach's original), he proved his version to surpass by far the one by Respighi we have heard in Symphony Hall in recent years.

How opulent the strings! They recaptured old glories as they again throbbed with Koussevitzkian ardor.

In Schubert's "Unfinished" he inscribed its lovely songful phrases. He added strength to the conflicts of the development sections. He evoked a superb sense of repose in the Andante con moto.

Dynamic impact

But he reserved the impact of his dynamic personality for the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5, his concluding item. Perhaps his way was not so electric as Leonard Bernstein's, nor so heady as Richard Burgin's. Yet it gained in power through Sto-heart is reined in by a steely intelligence.

the kind of power won when an impassioned heart it reined in by a steely intelligence.

Small wonder his listeners responded with rounds upon rounds of bravos.

FRI-SAT # 21

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, March 19, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, March 20, at 8:30 o'clock

Mozart . . . . Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns (K. 287)

Allegro
Theme with Variations; Andante grazioso
Menuetto
Adagio
Menuetto
Andante; Allegro molto

Brahms . . . . Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53

INTERMISSION

Prokofiev . . . . "Alexander Nevsky," Cantata for Chorus and Orchestra, with Mezzo-Soprano, Op. 78

I. Russia under the Mongolian Yoke
II. Song about Alexander Nevsky
III. The Crusaders in Pskov
IV. Arise, Ye Russian People
V. The Battle on the Ice
VI. Field of the Dead
VII. Alexander's Entrance into Pskov

(First performance at these concerts)

Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society
Elliot Forbes, Conductor

SOLOIST
SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO   RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

MAR 14 1965

Brahms Rhapsody At the Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three concerts and an open rehearsal this week.

Tuesday evening the fifth concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place, with Grant Johannesen as piano soloist.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will make her first appearances with the Symphony at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts.

The sixth open rehearsal on Thursday evening will be the final preparation for the week-end program, and the proceeds will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The Tuesday evening program will open with Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan," and will continue with the new Symphony No. 8 by Walter Piston, which received its first performances by Leinsdorf and the orchestra last weekend. Following intermission Grant Johannesen will join the orchestra for his sixth and final appearance in a performance of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83.

The concerts of Friday and Saturday will begin with the Mozart Divertimento in B-flat K. 287. Shirley Verrett will then appear to sing Brahms' Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 53, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club. The Brahms work has not been performed by the Orchestra since 1947. After intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will close the program with Prokofiev's cantata "Alexander Nevsky," with Miss Verrett, The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Chamber Players will present their final Boston concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. The program will include Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and the Nonet, Opus 31, of Ludwig Spohr, one of the composer's bolder works, written about 1815. Tickets will be available at the door at Sanders Theatre.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 14 1965

Soloist at Symphony

The American contralto Shirley Verrett will be soloist with the Boston Symphony in two works this week-end. At the concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, she will be heard in the Brahms Rhapsody for Contralto, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

After intermission will come Prokofiev's cantata, "Alexander Nevsky," with Miss Verrett, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. The choristers have been prepared by Elliott Forbes, glee club director.

Leinsdorf will open the program with the B-flat major Divertimento, K. 287, of Mozart.

Miss Verrett, who will be making her first appearances with the Boston Symphony, was born in New Orleans of ~~musical parents and~~ grew up in California.

Her father discovered her vocal potentialities very early and provided her earliest training. Later when her formal voice study began she made rapid progress and won several important vocal awards in quick succession.

She finished at the Juilliard School and has spent a Summer in the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department. Her New York recital debut in November, 1963, was acclaimed, and since then she has sung with several leading orchestras, at American and European festivals and opera houses, in recordings and on television.

The Boston Symphony will give an additional concert this week as well as an open rehearsal. Tuesday's program, to be televised on Channel 2, following a half-hour interview with Leinsdorf, Perry Rathbone of the Museum of Fine Arts, and Grant Johannesen, the evening's piano soloist, will be made up of three works. They are Strauss' "Don Juan," Piston's Symphony No. 8, and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2.

The open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30 will be the orchestra's final preparation for the Friday-Saturday concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 20 1965

SHIRLEY VERRETT
. . . soloist with Symphony

Verrett at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Seldom can you find a singer of Shirley Verrett's qualities. Her mezzo-soprano soars with strong sensuous appeal, rich and warm. It is an eloquently focused voice, save perhaps for some chesty tones in her lowest register.

But Miss Verrett not only sings the music well; she thinks the music, she feels the music. Hers is a compelling art.

Hers is also a state of mind that expresses peace, poise, dominion. It is seen physically in her walk, her stance, her head held high. All these mental, vocal, physical, and musical elements blended in an impact of striking beauty as she made her debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She spun out little more than the first phrase of the Brahms Alto Rhapsody to win over the Friday afternoon listeners. From that moment they gave her their ecstatic support.

Strange dichotomy

Erich Leinsdorf opened the concert with Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat major, K. 287. After that came the Brahms, and then the first performance at these concerts of Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" Cantata for chorus, orchestra, and mezzo-soprano. Assisting in the Brahms and Prokofiev were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Here again one could not help musing over the strange dichotomy in Mr. Leinsdorf's musical makeup—how he can set a choral work on fire and let an orchestral piece die on the vine. Both on the same program. His Mozart was pretty, all was clear, controlled, balanced. But dull.

Glorious action

Yet the Brahms came winningly to life; the Prokofiev sprang into glorious action. Great Russian panoramas unfolded before us. We heard the keening voices of oppressed peasants, the galloping hoofs of battle horses, the shouts of Cossacks. Here was vital music, and Mr. Leinsdorf let no drop of emotion fall on barren soil. True, Mozart's emotion is not Prokofiev's; but Mozart has his own kind of emotion, untouched in Mr. Leinsdorf's reading.

Miss Verrett crowned the day with her performance of the "Field of the Dead" from the "Nevsky" Cantata. Here was poetry that came close to the purest sense of it found in great lieder singing.

FRI-SAT # 21

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 19, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 20, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART .... Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns (K. 287)

Allegro
Theme with Variations; Andante grazioso
Menuetto
Adagio
Menuetto
Andante; Allegro molto

BRAHMS .... Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV .... "Alexander Nevsky," Cantata for Chorus and Orchestra, with Mezzo-Soprano, Op. 78

I. Russia under the Mongolian Yoke
II. Song about Alexander Nevsky
III. The Crusaders in Pskov
IV. Arise, Ye Russian People
V. The Battle on the Ice
VI. Field of the Dead
VII. Alexander's Entrance into Pskov

(First performance at these concerts)

HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

SOLOIST
SHIRLEY VERRETT

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

MAR 14 1965

Brahms Rhapsody At the Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three concerts and an open rehearsal this week.

Tuesday evening the fifth concert of the "Cambridge" series will take place, with Grant Johannesen as piano soloist.

Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, will make her first appearances with the Symphony at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts.

The sixth open rehearsal on Thursday evening will be the final preparation for the week-end program, and the proceeds will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The Tuesday evening program will open with Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan," and will continue with the new Symphony No. 8 by Walter Piston, which received its first performances by Leinsdorf and the orchestra last weekend. Following intermission Grant Johannesen will join the orchestra for his sixth and final appearance in a performance of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83.

The concerts of Friday and Saturday will begin with the Mozart Divertimento in B-flat K. 287. Shirley Verrett will then appear to sing Brahms' Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 53, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club. The Brahms work has not been performed by the Orchestra since 1947. After intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will close the program with Prokofiev's cantata "Alexander Nevsky," with Miss Verrett, The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Chamber Players will present their final Boston concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. The program will include Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and the Nonet, Opus 31, of Ludwig Spohr, one of the composer's bolder works, written about 1815. Tickets will be available at the door at Sanders Theatre.

SHIRLEY VERRETT
. . . soloist with Symphony

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 14 1965

Soloist at Symphony

The American contralto Shirley Verrett will be soloist with the Boston Symphony in two works this week-end. At the concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, she will be heard in the Brahms Rhapsody for Contralto, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

After intermission will come Prokofiev's cantata "Alexander Nevsky," with Miss Verrett, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. The choristers have been prepared by Elliott Forbes, glee club director.

Leinsdorf will open the program with the B-flat major Divertimento, K. 287, of Mozart.

Miss Verrett, who will be making her first appearances with the Boston Symphony, was born in New Orleans of musical parents and grew up in California.

Her father discovered her vocal potentialities very early and provided her earliest training. Later when her formal voice study began she made rapid progress and won several important vocal awards in quick succession.

She finished at the Juilliard School and has spent a Summer in the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department. Her New York recital debut in November, 1963, was acclaimed, and since then she has sung with several leading orchestras, at American and European festivals and opera houses, in recordings and on television.

The Boston Symphony will give an additional concert this week as well as an open rehearsal. Tuesday's program, to be televised on Channel 2, following a half-hour interview with Leinsdorf, Perry Rathbone of the Museum of Fine Arts, and Grant Johannesen, the evening's piano soloist, will be made up of three works. They are Strauss' "Don Juan," Piston's Symphony No. 8, and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2.

The open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30 will be the orchestra's final preparation for the Friday-Saturday concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 20 1965

Verrett at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

Seldom can you find a singer of Shirley Verrett's qualities. Her mezzo-soprano soars with strong sensuous appeal, rich and warm. It is an eloquently focused voice, save perhaps for some chesty tones in her lowest register.

But Miss Verrett not only sings the music well; she thinks the music, she feels the music. Hers is a compelling art.

Hers is also a state of mind that expresses peace, poise, dominion. It is seen physically in her walk, her stance, her head held high. All these mental, vocal, physical, and musical elements blended in an impact of striking beauty as she made her debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She spun out little more than the first phrase of the Brahms Alto Rhapsody to win over the Friday afternoon listeners. From that moment they gave her their ecstatic support.

Strange dichotomy

Erich Leinsdorf opened the concert with Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat major, K. 287. After that came the Brahms, and then the first performance at these concerts of Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" Cantata for chorus, orchestra, and mezzo-soprano. Assisting in the Brahms and Prokofiev were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Here again one could not help musing over the strange dichotomy in Mr. Leinsdorf's musical makeup—how he can set a choral work on fire and let an orchestral piece die on the vine. Both on the same program. His Mozart was pretty, all was clear, controlled, balanced. But dull.

Glorious action

Yet the Brahms came winningly to life; the Prokofiev sprang into glorious action. Great Russian panoramas unfolded before us. We heard the keening voices of oppressed peasants, the galloping hoofs of battle horses, the shouts of Cossacks. Here was vital music, and Mr. Leinsdorf let no drop of emotion fall on barren soil. True, Mozart's emotion is not Prokofiev's; but Mozart has his own kind of emotion, untouched in Mr. Leinsdorf's reading.

Miss Verrett crowned the day with her performance of the "Field of the Dead" from the "Nevsky" Cantata. Here was poetry that came close to the purest sense of it found in great lieder singing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

SYMPHONY: Brahms Alto Rhapsody Sublime

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Prokofiev's blood-curdling "Alexander Nevsky" cantata, with all its post-office-mural vulgarities, exciting orchestration and patriotic rum-tum could be endured cheerfully as the featured work of yesterday's Symphony, for it was preceded by nothing less than a sublime musical experience in Brahm's Alto Rhapsody, with Shirley Verrett as the soloist.

The Harvard Glee Club, which distinguished itself with The Radcliffe Choral Society in the shallow but pungent Prokofiev [illegible], sang the Goethe text [illegible], adding the vibrant [illegible] of young male voices [illegible] the third verso of the Brahms, when the chorus reinforces the soloist, who has till then supported the burden of the first two recitative-like stanzas.

Shining Example

The soloist, however, is everything, and Miss Verrett was a shining example of art. In appearance she is an exceedingly handsome young Negro whose simplicity of carriage conveys in terms of stage deportment the spirit of the Alto Rhapsody, and her voice, in the fascinating mezzo-contralto range, is an instrument of tonal loveliness handled with equisite musicality.

Brahms' symphonies are revived year after year, but his choral composition in smaller forms—miracles of concision and expressive nobility — are rarely encountered. The Alto Rhapsody has not been offered at these concerts since Arthur Fiedler trained a chorus for what must have been the 50th anniversary observance of the composer's death. The contrast of the solo contralto with the orchestra is almost Wagnerian in its sensuous bloom, and though the comparison involves opposite aesthetic ideals, the same kind of dusky intensity that one meets in "Gurre-Lieder" or late romanticism.

The [illegible] of the first two stanzas in the third is distinctly Brahmsian, though, and at the haunting entrance of the Harvard Glee Club against the superb clarity of Miss Verrett's soaring German, I felt profoundly moved by the lucid and yet impassioned forces of Brahm's writing. This is the kind of performance by which Symphony seasons are remembered.

How superficial it made "Alexander Nevsky" sound: the musical rhetoric of flag-waving patriotism is no less sincere a sentiment than the thoughts that lie too deep for tears when Brahms alternates from C minor to major in the Alto Rhapsody; and indeed, the best parts of "Nevsky" are redeemed by a fervent jingoism that succeeds in transcending itself in musical melodrama, such as the spectral accents of the opening of the battle on the ice between the Russian armies and the Teutonic Knights.

OPENING MONDAY at the Ebb Tide, 302 Boulevard Revere, the distaff answer to the Beatles, Les Beatlettes Canadiennes from Montreal, Canada.

Not Illuminating

But patriotism is also what Dr. Johnson said it was, and if the only scoundrels involved are 'bad' Germans, the emotion isn't very illuminating. Mr. Leinsdorf strove for the harsh, primitive qualities of Eisenstein's film, and he realized these particularly well in massive choruses where the Harvard-Radcliffe took on a snarling power and a metallic strength-through-joy in the later ceremonials of victory.

The performance was an interesting and incisive interpretation of a score originally written for a film, and which cannot exist as valid statement separately. Again there was mignificent vocalism from Miss Verrett, this time in Russian. The narrative sound effects of the cantata—such as the "water" figure—simply don't make sense without pictures, and the music invokes all sorts of irrelevant extra-musical sensations, and I found myself back at The Old South Theater, in 1946, watching Eisenstein's medieval montage, instead of hearing Prokofiev's guttural surge.

The Mozart Divertimento was a sound and straightforward reading of no especial savor. Mr. Silverstein handled the solo violin role competently, three horns were employed, and the variations were turned admirably. Mr. Leinsdorf accented the Nachtmusik element nicely, but though the balances had polish and the charm of the work was undeniable it seemed to me an account that could have taken on more sparkle. The Alto Rhapsody compensated for all.

Next weekend Leontyne Price will be soloist in Excerpts from "Salome," Op. 54, and "The Egyptian Helen," Op. 75, of Strauss. Joseph Silverstein will be soloist in Schoenberg's Violin Concerto, Op. 36; and Erich Leinsdorf will open the program with Weber's Overture to "Oberon."

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 21st program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society was prepared by Elliot Forbes. Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Divertimento in B-flat major, for strings and two horns (K.287) .... Mozart Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53 .... Brahms
"Alexander Nevsky," Cantata, Op. 78 .... Prokofiev

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

MAR 25 1965

With the BSO

Shirley Verrett Sings Brahms

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

Last Saturday evening's Symphony concert was a mixed bag — at times glorious, at times dismal. The brightness came largely from a gorgeous contralto, Shirley Verrett. She was supported extremely well by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and, some of the time at least, by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

Miss Verrett's first appearance was the Brahms' "Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra," and she scored heavily. Her voice has a rich, tactile quality — clear in the high register, warm in the lower range. Her voice soared with seemingly absolutely no effort. In short, she was magnificient. The boys from Harvard did themselves proud and the orchestra supported both extremely well.

Elsewhere things went awry, specifically in Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky." Miss Verrett returned to sing the aria, "Field of the Dead." She was superb, but more of this later. The Radcliffe Choral Society joined the Harvard Glee Club and both were excellent throughout. With Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra, however, I have a quarrel.

The first section of the score which Prokofiev wrote for Eisenstein's film is entitled "Russia under the Mongolian Yoke." It is a brooding, mood-setting introduction. Mr. Leinsdorf chose to gallop through it as though impatient to get on to the main action. Sadly, when he got to it, he just kept right on going. Had he been commander of those Russian troops, they would have been exhausted before they even got out onto the ice.

Miss Verrett, fortunately, was having none of it. She was entirely believable as the woman who searches the body-strewn field for her wounded lover. Her interpretation was well paced, restrained and deeply moving. Her voice, again, was sumptuous.

The tempo of the final section was improved and "Alexander's Entrance into Pskov" was indeed triumphant.

The combined voices of Harvard and Radcliffe were, as I have indicated, joyous to hear, letting go with overpowering waves of sound. Their attacks were clean and sure, their delivery precise. No small praise should go to Elliot Forbes, their conductor. He did his work extremely well.

Returning to the orchestra, I would simply ask what, in the name of heaven, happened to the brasses in the opening section. They worked themselves free, finally, but the intonation was pretty grim for a while.

Concluding on a brighter note, the Mozart "Divertimento for Strings and Two Horns" did get the evening off to a fine start and a particular nod must go to the two horns.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 20 196

At Symphony

Harvard-Radcliffe And Shirley Verrett

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Shirley Verrett made a solid and undoubted success with Friday's Symphony audience when she sang the Brahms "Alto Rhapsody." Her singing, and the generally excellent framework provided for it by Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra, projected vividly an uncommonly difficult piece that is so often apt to subside into a shapeless and fogbound series of growls.

Shirley Verrett's voice is large and of great sensuous beauty. It is securely produced and the pitches are perfectly placed, even in Brahms' most devilish diminished twelfth leaps. The German diction is excellent also.

The limitations of Mrs. Verrett's performance stem from the fact that, like many performers who have achieved mastery of their instrument, she uses beautiful sounds for their own sakes. She succumbs particularly to the temptation to exploit her spectacular low notes. One can almost sense the thought process: "Man, here comes an A flat. I'm going to let them have it here." One almost reels from the shock of the glorious tone, and for a moment one is almost hypnotized into forgetting that the A flats should have been part of a musical and poetic continuity.

On the whole, the singing was least successful in the recitative-like beginning of the "Rhapsody," better when the "aria" started ("Ach, wer heilet die Schmerzen"), and best of all in the hymnic concluding section ("Ist auf deinem Psalter"). In sum, the more obvious the continuity of the writing, the better its realization in performance. The musically more complex tasks at the beginning of the piece were less well solved because they were more liable to interruption by the singer's vocal narcissim.

The Harvard Glee Club, Elliot Forbes, conductor, sang very well. Leinsdorf paced the "Rhopsody" well and shaped its phrases effectively. His reorchestration of the final measures was a vulgarly sentimental assault on Brahms' esthetic, and thoroughly objectionable.

One of the pleasures of hearing the Brahms "Rhapsody" was that its predominantly low-register writing came as welcome reliefe after the long and somewhat shrieky Mozart's Divertimento that it followed. I say "shrieky" because it has an unusually high-lying solo violin part, whose acuity was emphasized by having it played by 10 first violins. The work itself, K.287 in B flat, is charming, and in a few places more than that, notably in the great Adagio aria, and the Trio of the second Menuet.

The playing was inclined to be bland and rather static rhythmically, but the playing, especially that of the 10 virtuoso violinists, was dazzling.

The concert concluded with Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" Cantata, derived from his score to the Eisenstein film. It was done with the participation of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, with both groups singing excellently, and with Shirley Verrett singing the brief "Field of the Dead" solo.

Prokofiev should have come to live in America after all. His unhappy struggle with his artistic conscience would have been no greater, and instead of being hounded by Zhdanov and the rest of the cultural commissars, he could have won heaps and heaps of Oscars.

The "Nevsky" score is blatantly cheap in its aim, expert in the handling of available technical resources in the achievement of those aims, in a word: Hollywood. It gives the customer a very big bang for his buck, and its banality makes it a stupefying bore. The performance was effective.

PROVIDENCE # 5.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,292

MAR 22 1965

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Series Ends With 'Perfection'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf, its incomparable director, were given what seemingly was unceasing applause after yesterday's concert, the last of this season's in Providence, in Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

It was light-hearted, yet profoundly touching, filled with exhilarating surprises, played as though each musician and the conductor divined the vision of the composers, the dreams of the poets and affection of the Muses. It was perfection approaching the sublime, more than in harmony with Olympus; they were attuned to Paradise.

Beginning with Beethoven's "Overture, Lenore No. 2" there was eloquence in the shadows of sorrow and the bright dreams of hope, mounting in tension, gripping with foreboding, but ending in exultation at Floristan's deliverance.

Another Beethoven work, all too-seldom heard, was "Symphony No. 8 in F-Major" that had much of the pastoral beauty of his Sixth Symphony but less of its meditative scene painting. Its opening movement, allegro vivace e con brio, was gay and childlike in a soft, flowing, dancing, bouncing-ball rhythm followed by an allegretto scherzando movement that was folksy picnic music, with all the sounds of nature mingled with the laughter and play of humans when there is eating, drinking and singing out of doors.

The third movement, tempo di menuetto, had the rhythm but not the courtliness of the dance, and a theme that was as fresh and free-moving as the summer air, as down-to-earth as bare feet in the green grass. The final movement gathered up all the fun of the day and reviewed it for an enchanted audience that thundered its approval.

Then there was Richard Strauss' "Don Juan Tone Poem" that was pure melody, first dark, then light, now like a hymn, now like a serenade; as majestic as an anthem yet as thrilling as an ode to joy.

And finally, Kodaly's "Suite from the Comic Opera 'Hary Janos' " that was a treat added to an already perfect program. It was a delight in contrast of imagery, laughing folk tunes, mock courtliness and bragging heroism, all clearly comprehensible in the manner that Leinsdorf presented the moods. A cimbalom, an uncommon, ancient, string instrument with tone like a deep-voiced viola, was played by Toni Koves-Steiner, soloist, in one of the pieces.

C.H.L.

FBI + SAT # 22.

97

ASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

wenty-second Program

FRI RNOON, MARCH 26, at 2:00 o'clock

ATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 27, at 8:30 o'clock

WE . . . . Overture to "Oberon"

SCH Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 36

allegro
lante grazioso ale: Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

Soloist: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

STRAUS . . . . The Awakening of Helen from "The Egyptian Helen," Op. 75

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS . . . . Excerpts from "Salome," Op. 54

Dance of the Seven Veils

Interlude and Final Scene

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
LEONTYNE PRICE
Soprano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

MAR 13 1965

Leontyne Price Concert Dates Reset in Boston

BOSTON — Two December concerts by soprano Leontyne Price with the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been rescheduled for March 26 and 27 and will be followed by RCA Victor recordings of her performances.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the program, which includes the final scene of Richard Strauss' "Salome" and the awakening scene from Strauss' opera "The Egyptian Helen."

RCA Victor will record these two performances.

The soprano, who began a series of performances of Verdi's "Ernani" with the Metropolitan Opera Association, New York, on Friday (5), is also one of the stars of an RCA Victor March release of Verdi's 'La Forza del Destino." The record also features Richard Tucker, Shirley Verrett, and Robert Merrill. It was recorded in Rome with the RCA Italiana Opera Orchestra and Chorus under Thomas Schippers.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 21 1965

Soloists at Symphony

Soprano Leontyne Price and the Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein will be soloists at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Miss Price's appearance this week makes up the concerts in December which she was forced to cancel because of illness. She will be heard in two works by Strauss: the Awakening Scene from "The Egyptian Helen" and the final scene from "Salome." The excerpt from "Salome" will be introduced by the Dance of the Seven Veils and Interlude.

Leinsdorf will open the concerts with Weber's Overture to "Oberon." He will then conduct the first Boston Symphony performance of Schoenberg's Violin Concerto. Silverstein will be the soloist.

The seventh open rehearsal of the season will be held Thursday evening at 7:30 when the weekend program will receive its final preparation. The proceeds from the open rehearsals benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The final Symphony Hall organ concert of the season will take place next Sunday evening at 6. John Ferris, Harvard University organist and choirmaster, will be guest artist. The concluding work of his program will be the world premiere of William Hibbard's Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion, in which he will be assisted by the Boston Symphony principal players Roger Voisin, William Gibson, and Everett Firth. The remainder of the program will consist of works by Buxtehude, Bach, Messiaen and Franck.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

[illegible] 196

Orchestra on Tour

Rubinstein Next At the Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its final tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct its concerts in Hartford Tuesday evening, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday evenings, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday and Carnegie Hall in New York Saturday evening.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 9-10. Aaron Copland will be guest conductor, and Sidney Foster, pianist, will appear as soloist.

The Boston Symphony's Pension Fund Concert next Sunday afternoon will fall on the 90th birthday of the late Pierre Monteux, who passed away last July. He was scheduled to conduct the concert to celebrate his 90th anniversary, just as he had conducted his 80th and 85th birthday Pension Fund Concerts. Arthur Rubinstein first appeared with the Boston Symphony forty-four years ago in 1921, when Mr. Monteux was music director.

Mr. Rubinstein will be heard in two piano concerti, the Beethoven Concerto No. 3 and the Brahms Concerto No. 1. Erich Leesinsdorf and the members of the Orchestra, who will contribute their services for this special concert, will open the program with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Some tickets for the concert are still available at the Symphony Hall box office.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 28 1965

Orchestra Tours

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its final tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct its concerts in Hartford Tuesday, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday, and Carnegie Hall in New York Saturday. Soloists during the tour will be Grant Johannesen, pianist, and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Apr. 9-10. Aaron Copland will be guest conductor, and Sidney Foster, pianist, will appear as soloist.

FRI. + SAT. # 22.

97

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 26, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 27, at 8:30 o'clock

WEBER . . . . Overture to "Oberon"

SCHOENBERG . . . . Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 36

I. Poco allegro
II. Andante grazioso
III. Finale: Allegro

(First performance at these concerts)

Soloist: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

STRAUSS . . . . The Awakening of Helen from "The Egyptian Helen," Op. 75

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS . . . . Excerpts from "Salome," Op. 54

Dance of the Seven Veils

Interlude and Final Scene

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
LEONTYNE PRICE
Soprano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

MAR 13 1965

Leontyne Price Concert Dates Reset in Boston

BOSTON — Two December concerts by soprano Leontyne Price with the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been rescheduled for March 26 and 27 and will be followed by RCA Victor recordings of her performances.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the program, which includes the final scene of Richard Strauss' "Salome" and the awakening scene from Strauss' opera "The Egyptian Helen."

RCA Victor will record these two performances.

The soprano, who began a series of performances of Verdi's "Ernani" with the Metropolitan Opera Association, New York, on Friday (5), is also one of the stars of an RCA Victor March release of Verdi's 'La Forza del Destino." The record also features Richard Tucker, Shirley Verrett, and Robert Merrill. It was recorded in Rome with the RCA Italiana Opera Orchestra and Chorus under Thomas Schippers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 21 1965

Soloists at Symphony

Soprano Leontyne Price and the Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein will be soloists at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Miss Price's appearance this week makes up the concerts in December which she was forced to cancel because of illness. She will be heard in two works by Strauss: the Awakening Scene from "The Egyptian Helen" and the final scene from "Salome." The excerpt from "Salome" will be introduced by the Dance of the Seven Veils and Interlude.

Leinsdorf will open the concerts with Weber's Overture to "Oberon." He will then conduct the first Boston Symphony performance of Schoenberg's Violin Concerto. Silverstein will be the soloist.

The seventh open rehearsal of the season will be held Thursday evening at 7:30 when the weekend program will receive its final preparation. The proceeds from the open rehearsals benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The final Symphony Hall organ concert of the season will take place next Sunday evening at 6. John Ferris, Harvard University organist and choirmaster, will be guest artist. The concluding work of his program will be the world premiere of William Hibbard's Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion, in which he will be assisted by the Boston Symphony principal players Roger Voisin, William Gibson, and Everett Firth. The remainder of the program will consist of works by Buxtehude, Bach, Messiaen and Franck.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAR 28 1965

~~Orchestra on Tour~~

Rubinstein Next At the Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its final tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct its concerts in Hartford Tuesday evening, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday evenings, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday and Carnegie Hall in New York Saturday evening.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, April 9-10. Aaron Copland will be guest conductor, and Sidney Foster, pianist, will appear as soloist.

The Boston Symphony's Pension Fund Concert next Sunday afternoon will fall on the 90th birthday of the late Pierre Monteux, who passed away last July. He was scheduled to conduct the concert to celebrate his 90th anniversary, just as he had conducted his 80th and 85th birthday Pension Fund Concerts. Arthur Rubinstein first appeared with the Boston Symphony forty-four years ago in 1921, when Mr. Monteux was music director.

Mr. Rubinstein will be heard in two piano concerti, the Beethoven Concerto No. 4 and the Brahms Concerto No. 1. Erich Leesinsdorf and the members of the Orchestra, who will contribute their services for this special concert, will open the program with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Some tickets for the concert are still available at the Symphony Hall box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 28 1965

Orchestra Tours

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its final tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct its concerts in Hartford Tuesday, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday, and Carnegie Hall in New York Saturday. Soloists during the tour will be Grant Johannesen, pianist, and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Apr. 9-10. Aaron Copland will be guest conductor, and Sidney Foster, pianist, will appear as soloist.

98

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 27 1965

Strauss arias

Leontyne's laurels

By John Marshall Cuno

The soprano voice of Leontyne Price is perhaps one of the finest in the world today. One thing is certain. To hear it is to react with enthusiasm. It was no effort for the Friday audience at Symphony Hall to shower Miss Price with laurels of approval. They applauded as they applaud the best.

At intermission time, just after Miss Price had sung Strauss's Awakening of Helen from "The Egyptian Helen," Op. 75, no one moved for the longest time. The audience preferred applauding this remarkable soloist rather than conversing. There was a similar response to the final number when Miss Price sang an excerpt from the Strauss "Salome," Op. 54 (Interlude and Final Scene). Nobody—it appeared—wanted to leave the hall.

Great freedom

Miss Price has achieved during the last decade a level of subjectivity in her singing which allows her great freedom of expression. At the same time, a detachment from self has made possible her concentration on the full possibilities of the music she is singing. It has lifted her high in the realm of artistic endeavor. This subjectivity is a kind of humility. It includes a recognition of the greatness of music in its infinite form and variety.

Instead of climbing to high notes and perching there for precarious moments, the voice seems to leap from nowhere. Or it soars and lands with ease. Instead of always struggling upward it descends birdlike out of the sun.

And it can find its way about at lower altitudes. Both Strauss excerpts were charged with intense feeling. Miss Price's voice became a bridge over which could pass not only the loftiest musical concepts but the deepest and most responsive feelings.

Above all it is a strongly supported voice full of rich, warm tones. It has exceptional range and an even quality of tone.

Sharp contrast

You felt she knew precisely how far the sound went. The rest of the Boston Symphony program, though slightly pale by comparison to these numbers, was by no means unenjoyable. Erich Leinsdorf, this time with baton in hand, led the orchestra through Weber's Overture to "Oberon."

By sharp contrast, Schoenberg's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 36, came next. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, was the remarkably facile soloist for this 12-tone composition of which Schoenberg himself said, "The concerto is extremely difficult, just as much for the head as for the hands." This and the first and last Strauss selections were first performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAR 27 1965

Symphony: Schoenberg Violin Concerto A Meritorious Performance

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave three first performances in its octogenarian Friday-Saturday series yesterday, and by far the most important was Schoenberg's Violin Concerto featuring Joseph Silverstein as a sensitive soloist.

The Schoenberg is difficult; incredibly so. In fact, for the first years of its existence—the score, composed in 1936, was dedicated to Webern—the Concerto was considered unplayable. Louis Krasner exploded this myth (which is very useful to lazy technicians), but his example has not been followed, and there are so few musicians with the work in their repertory that a major orchestra like the Boston has to wait nearly 30 years for its premiere.

The difficulties of the Concerto reside, it seems to me, less in the obvious problems (in the last 20 years many a piece has been penned that for fiendish intricacies make Schoenberg's sound like the Concerti of Beethoven and of Brahms—which also lay beyond the reach of the executants of their day) than in problems of temperament.

On the surface it is resolutely 'modern,' and astringent, but even a cursory encounter for the first time discloses the classical pattern — an opening movement in the sonata form with a Beethovenate development and recapitulation; a middle section of spare, song-like character; and a rondo finale in which the tattoo of the percussion filters into the themes, summed up by a salient cadenza and coda. The brilliant neo-classicism of the piece is enhanced by an orchestra of rather large dimensions, required to play with chamber-music delicacy.

While the form is classical the content is emotional, stormy, rhetorical after its idiosyncratic fashion. And in Schoenberg's collected letters, which have recently been published, one finds that he stresses the "expressive" aspects of the Concerto. The complexities of the piece are compounded by the necessity to resolve the objective and subjective tensions present within the fundamental tone row employed: the properties of discipline inherent in the 12-tone style, and of freedom in its constraints.

Mr. Silverstein's performance was honest, intelligent and true, but it cannot be said to bring together all these possibilities. He feels this music deeply, as the young 20th century interpreter will: he has less affinity for the 19th century composer that lurks in the hedges of the tone row. expertise of the performer virtually a devotional act, an commands our admiration— functional approach to a soluti the neatly-balanced timbres [illegible] touches; the sense of propor that lends such a sympa connection between the 18th [illegible] 20th centuries.

The work, in short, was fre as though its emotion came a as the application of a series laws. On one level this convincing. But, on anoth showed that of all periods romantic is least congenial to young virtuosi, and Schoenb Concerto has much of [illegible] romantic in it. The style of score provides its secret; Schoenberg never intended to create ironclad system, but to extend potentials of subjective communication. The accompaniment [illegible] too lush by far, thus reinforc Mr. Silverstein's own [illegible] phrasing.

Nevertheless, I am eminent grateful for the dedication, the imaginative decision to undertake this ambitious work, more to Mr. Silve[illegible] the orchestra and music than a dozen flashy successes.

Leontyne Price, who was for to cancel her December con because of illness, sang in the series-premiere Strauss [illegible] as the soprano soloist [illegible] magnificent in "The [illegible] Helen," which [illegible] voluptuous, large, [illegible] scope; but the sen[illegible] her singing in the finale of "Salome" was all wrong for the role. Strauss intended a ba[illegible] decadent: we heard a refined civilized and "beautif" [illegible] tation, totally artificial. The con fusion between Wilde's "Salome" and Strauss's [illegible] Leinsdorf didn't [illegible] this [illegible] Dance of [illegible]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 27 1965

At Symphony

Schoenberg Concerto And Joseph Silverstein

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Almost 29 years old, and more than 24 years after its first performance, Arnold Schoenberg's Violin Concerto has at last come to Boston. Joseph Silverstein played it at Friday's Symphony concert, which, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, also included Weber's "Oberon" Overture and some Richard Strauss operatic excerpts sung by Leontyne Price.

Schoenberg's is a remarkably beautiful violin concerto, perhaps the most beautiful since the Brahms. The pre-compositional material from which the themes, figurations, and harmonies are drawn, yield for Schoenberg a richly varied music. The melodies are full of expressive semitones, sometimes inverted into sevenths or stretched into ninths; the intense sevenths are often heard in the harmony as well, but so are warm thirds. And all of this is already prefigured in the opening two measures.

The orchestration is miraculous. Schoenberg avoids doubling notes in different octaves: in other words, if middle C occurs in a chord, there will be no lower or higher C present in the same chord. It has the effect of giving to each single sound and to every simultaneous stack of sounds an extraordinary clarity and sharpness of profile.

The problem that arises when there are no octave doublings is how to keep the orchestra busy, because in conventional orchestration most of the instruments are engaged in precisely such doublings. Some composers escaped into a chamber-orchestral style. Schoenberg, however, by a most stupendous feat of imagination and of dazzling technique, forged a completely original style that is unmistakably full-orchestral.

It is, moreover, completely successful, even when measured against the exacting standards of Schoenberg's own earlier masterful orchestra scores like the "Variations" and the opera "Moses and Aron." Fascinating as it is, Schoenberg's way with instruments is not a self-sufficient virtuosic activity. It is completely organic, inseparable from the rest of the act of composition. This integrity is in evidence even when the instrumentation is minimal, that is in the cadenzas for unaccompanied violin, when the different "orchestrations" harmonics, pizzicatos, tremolandos, etc.) are brilliantly and wittily used to clarify the material and to separate the different and simultaneous layers of activity.

Silverstein must be one of the very few violinists who can play this music with a sense of ease. His imposing mastery of the violin was especially useful in the complex technical and analytical task of separating the strands of polyphony implied in Schoenberg's difficult multiple stops. Silverstein's idea of the piece is clear, soundly based, and he played the work very well.

Still more to the point is that he will come to play it even better. It is too rare and too hard a piece to be let go in the three performances it is getting now. It should become a fairly frequent repertory item for Silverstein and Leinsdorf, and early next season would not be too soon for its next performance.

The orchestral task is extremely difficult also. Again it is partly a matter of the non-doublings, which means that the conductor was not always ideal, but it was never less than adequate, and many passages were extremely well achieved. That, too, will become better as Leinsdorf and the players come to feel more at home in the piece.

The Schoenberg Concerto was, however, unhappily programmed. Partly it was the consequence of Leontyne Price's illness that had prevented her appearance earlier i nthe season. Still, it did not seem unavoidable to follow the Schoenberg immediately with an excerpt from Strauss' "Aegyptische Helena." That could nicely have gone into the second half of the program, but what actually happened was regrettably consistent with some bad of Leinsdorf's earlie[illegible] year, such as following "Gurrelieder" excerp Respighi and Menotti. Berg's "Le Vin" with K

Oddly, the "Helena" exc was called "The Awakenin Helen." That is the nam the first act finale, but [illegible] was actually perform the opening of Act [illegible] "Zweite Brautnacht!", which Helen is wide aw from the start (though composer seems not to [illegible] been). By any name, it [illegible] stale rubbish.

Not so the "Salome" finale which is composed wit great verve and invention. It was preceded, with not especially good effect, by the Interlude that follows Jochanaan's exit, and Salome ontune Price was in mos magnificent voice and sang Dance was also played.

TOUR # 5

HARTFORD MARCH 30th

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 168,428

MAR 21 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 168,428

FEB 21 1965

Bushnell Roundup

Leinsdorf and Boston Play March Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will perform the fourth concert in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series March 30 at 8:15 p.m.

A visitor to Hartford since the early 1890s and an annual attraction in the Bushnell since its dedication 35 years ago, the Boston ensemble is expected to attract a standing-room audience, as did the Cleveland Orchestra in last week's performance.

Tickets for the Boston concert, limited in number, are now available.

Leinsdorf, who a couple of seasons ago succeeded Charles Munch, has recently been awarded several honors as the result of his 1964 activities. Music Business Magazine named him as its choice for Musician of the Year.

One magazine selected Leinsdorf's performance of Mahler's Fifth Symphony as the best orchestral recording of 1964.

Following the Bostonians' concert here next month there will be one more concert in the 1964-65 Bushnell series by visiting orchestras. London's B.B.C. Symphony will be heard April 29, in one of the limited number of American concerts it will perform.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,441

Leinsdorf and Boston At Bushnell Tonight

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Bushnell Symphony Series concert today at 8:15 p.m. This event will be the fourth in the current Bushnell series of performances by visiting orchestras.

For his program, Dr. Leinsdorf has selected: Beethoven's Lenore Overture; Stravinsky's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra, with the Orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, as soloist and Brahms' Symphony Nov. 2 in D major.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ 124,441

65

March Concert

Erich Leinsdorf, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony, has announced that the program to be performed by his orchestra at 8:15 p.m., March 30, will include works by Beethoven, Stravinsky and Brahms.

The upcoming concert will be the fourth in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, which will close on April 29 with the BBC Symphony of London. A limited number of seats for the Boston concert are now available at the box office.

The Leinsdorf program will open with Beethoven's Leonore

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 128,545

MAR 31 1965

Boston Symphony Performs Here

By GEORGE W. STOWE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf offered some resplendent music-making last night at the Bushnell, one of its most stimulating concerts in recent years.

Although the Mahlerites were undoubtedly disappointed that Mr. Leinsdorf did not perform the composer's Sixth Symphony (as originally scheduled), the orchestra was in such superb form, particularly in the Brahms Second Symphony, that only the most hard - hearted music lover could begrudge the change.

* * *

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2, the overture normally used as the First Act prelude to "Fidelio," is the composer's most concise setting of the opera's thematic material. And last night it had a reading that was notable for carefully wrought dynamics and tonal suavity.

In the dirge - like section that recapitulated Florestan's air Mr. Leinsdorf allowed the music to breathe naturally, to whisper the theme with affecting gravity. In contrast the jubilant concluding section had a tingling excitement that brought the overture to an overwhelming climax.

* * *

Stravinsky's Violin Concerto dates back to 1931 and has the lean acerbity that we associate with his so-called neo-classic period. The composer has expressed his disdain of most of the standard violin concerti and this work is far from a purely virtuoso showpiece (Stravinsky refused to write a cadenza for it).

For this performance Joseph Silverstein was the able soloist. Concertmaster and frequent soloist with the orchestra, Mr. Silverstein is a fluent technican and was particularly impressive in the two outer movements. His tone is not large or rich-timbred but this was not a great drawback in the Stravinsky concerto.

* * *

Mr. Leinsdorf has been criticized in the past for his coldly analytic approach to the music. This charge could not be leveled at his Brahms Second Symphony last night which was full of warmth and Viennese gemutlichkeit. There was fine tooled precision to the performance but there was also an inner glow, an intensity that was unmistakable.

In the second movement the cello section sang with a deep-throated richness that was inimitable. The conductor's tempi were beautifully relaxed throughtout and one had the feeling that old Brahms would have nodded in assent to this interpretation. It had an unhurried grace not often encountered in our concert halls.

There was even an encore last night, a vibrant and resounding performance of the familiar Overture to "Die Meistersinger" of Wagner.. Mr. Leinsdorf's long tenure in the opera house continues to serve him on the concert stage.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,441

MAR 31 1965

Leinsdorf And Boston Heard Here

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. Joseph Silverstein, violinist, was guest artist. The program:

Leonore Overture No. 2	Beethoven
Violin Concerto in D Mr. Silverstein, Soloist	Stravinsky
Second Symphony	Brahms

Those who yearn for music in the grand manner came in for their share of it when Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony appeared at the Bushnell Memorial last night.

Certainly the two end-works on the program, the Beethoven Overture and the Brahms symphony, were all that could be asked for in the way of lush sound, the opulent effect and the epitome of performance. In fact, Mr. Leinsdorf's reading and the Boston's playing sometimes went right by the limits of actual beauty and arrived at a kind of over-ripeness. I hope Mr. Leinsdorf does not intend to remain in this state of ecstacy permanently.

The Stravinsky Concerto

Thus, partly of itself and because it was a lean interval in contrast with the Beethoven and Brahms, the Stravinsky Violin Concerto was the most interesting and salutary part of the evening. The relationship of the violin writing to the Bach unaccompanied sonatas has frequently been remarked, while the score as a whole also recalls the kind of orchestration Stravinsky strove for in say, "Le Renard" or "Histoire du Soldat," where the instruments function like a "combo," each of equal importance and each with its own way.

An Excellent Soloist

The Concerto has a pellucid texture, a piquant orchestration, the always exciting Stravinsky flair for rhythmic invention, and a great deal that is sardonic and provocative of the Stravinsky temper. It was again extremtly beguiling as Joseph Silverstein and the orchestra set it out. The violin writing is very difficult, of course, yet Mr. Silverstein accomplished it with ease and art, gleaning both the brilliance and the sweetness of the work. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra threaded their way through all the surprises and subtleties of the score with great imagination and poise. It was all very tasteful and immaculate in the performance besides.

An encore here by the Boston Symphony is a rare event. But many persons will always remember last night's "Meistersinger" excerpt for the sadness occasioned when a member of the audience was stricken while it was being played.

—T.H.P.

100

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
MERIDEN, Conn.
Circ. 18,997

APR 1 1965

Have You Heard . . .

Boston Symphony Orchestra At Bushnell Memorial

By MARJORIE C. TOWER

Never has a Hartford audience heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra sound as it did Tuesday evening at Bushnell Memorial under the baton of its new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf. Inhibitions and sedate traditions have crumbled: the pure and the exquisite are no longer the only gods to honor. Now each section, when it is appropriate, evokes a human, solo tone so incredibly appealing that one can scarcely stand it. In fact, during the Overture to "Die Meistersingers von Nurnberg", played as an encore, one overwrought individual had to be carried out.

Leinsdorf himself, a spare, tall, sinewy man, most of the time conducts with a quiet beat, with clean but telling gestures. On occasion, as at climaxes, his arms flail, but never to the distraction of the audience. Perhaps the most striking difference this year is the dramatic urgency brought by this conductor of many operas at the Metropolitan and at New York City Centre.

Leonore Overture, No. 2 by Beethoven begs for dramatic treatment. It assuredly alerted pulses to the exciting evening in store. Thunderous claps of chords, long very silent pauses, tense racing scales through the string section, and trumpet calls offstage. Even though it was familiar Beethoven, this reading was exceptional.

A violin soloist with a great orchestra is always a treat. Joseph Silverstein overcame the enormous rhythmic and technical hurdles of the largely unknown Stravinsky violin concerto in D. But no magician can make a musically untutored body of listeners like the fragmentary, strange - sounding, will-o'-the-wisp efforts of most contemporary composers. This is hard to say, for the writer was delighted. But the enthusiasts seemed very few. Nevertheless, the first and last movements were cheery, light, tuneful, and to me, not discordant. In Aria I and Aria II the artist produced an extraordinary singing tone with the unusual accompaniment in places, of the 'cello's alone, or say, three bassoons. The reduced orchestra needed quick wits to follow the brilliant exchange of ideas between solo instrument and orchestra. And of course the audience needed quick wits, too.

Brahms' Symphony No. 2, in D major restored a blissful smile of contentment to the faces of all, as it was intended to no doubt. The tremendous orchestra was once more playing glorious melodies as easy to follow as a rainbow. Broad bands of color advanced and receded. Here again the strings implored and exulted passionately. In the Adagio the 'cellos sang their melody with a vibrancy unrivaled, while the perfection of woodwinds could only be marvelled at. An electric current vitalized each section as it became the bearer of the theme: this was the type of electric current which touches an audience when the great curtain at the opera goes up and drama with music is in the air.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 168,428

MAR 2 8 1965

Bushnell Roundup

Boston in Annual Visit, Prep School Event Set

The orchestra that has performed more Hartford concerts than any other visiting unit, the Boston Symphony, will return in a Bushnell Symphony Series concert Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf, who succeeded Charles Munch two years ago as music director of the orchestra, will conduct.

For his Hartford program he has selected: Beethoven's Overture No. 2; Stravinsky's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra, with Joseph Silverstein, the concertmaster, as violin soloist; Brahms' Second Symphony. The last two numbers replace the Mahler Sixth Symphony, which Dr. Leinsdorf had originally scheduled.

The Boston orchestra has been playing in Hartford since the early 1890s, and has presented at least one concert yearly in the Bushnell since it opened in 1930.

A limited number of tickets are available for the concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 128,545

MAR 2 0 1965

Boston Symphony Offers Stravinsky Violin Work

WHEN Erich Leinsdorf brings his Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Bushnell for the current season's concert at 8:15 p. m. March 30, he will conduct a work never before performed in the 35 years of the Bushnell Symphony Series. This is Stravinsky's Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra, a work completed, by coincidence, in the year the Bushnell was opened.

Soloist for the concerto will be the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein.

The program will open with Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 2 and will also include the Brahms Second Symphony. Leinsdorf originally had announced the long Mahler Sixth Symphony for the Hartford program, but dropped this work in favor of the Brahms and Stravinsky creations.

Silverstein succeeded Richard Burgin as concertmaster in Boston three years ago. When he joined the orchestra in 1955 after having played with the Houston, Denver and Philadelphia orchestras, he was only 23 and at the time the youngest member of the Boston ensemble. He has won signal honors here and abroad, including the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award in 1961.

The Boston Symphony concert is the fourth in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, which will close Apr. 29 with a performance by London's celebrated BBC Symphony, Pierre Boulez conducting.

New
D. 317

APR

W

Johan

Erich
ing but u
He c to open h monic Ha with inter most musi demanding toire befor chance to late come tween mo to find an tion didn't
One thing
The reaso pianist had a plane.

NewEnglandN
Box 2078, Bosto

Tim
NEW Y
Circ.

APR

Musi

Boston S
Formida

By RAYM
ERICH L one to Symphony programs.
in Philhar gan the c set of New for the sea meatiest o its interest
ment and in the mu
Brahm's
2 in B fla
hannesen
Strauss's
Piston's played fo
New Yor
Prelude t er" mad quartet o played.

The Bra
the most with its symphoni seemed f whole firs gram to i does not Strauss a tively sho rich in or they mad frame, in the conce fine new not a piece eith
All th
instrume pay on also mad
But the

NEW YORK MARCH 31st

101

New York Post

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Johannesen Opens With Brahms

Erich Leinsdorf's mystery last night was not intriguing but unfortunate.

He chose the Brahms B Flat Piano Concerto, Op. 83, to open his concert with the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall. Grant Johannesen was the soloist, saddled with interpreting one of the most musically and technically demanding works in the repertoire before the audience had a chance to settle itself, and with late comers straggling in between movements. An attempt to find an answer to the question didn't produce any answer. One thing I settled, however. The reason was not that the pianist had to rush off to catch a plane.

Johannesen has a rugged style that gave sweep and a sense of expansion to the work. At the keyboard he was really the outdoor man from his native Utah. He didn't show too much concern for nuance or elegance of phrasing. At times he landed on a chord with the thrust of a rancher's surprise shoulder clap.

No theoretical philospher mapped his course with irrefutable logic. Instead his mountain climber's endurance and vitality rode the hurdles with rough-hewn, solid conviction. The first two movements had drive without the passion of surging emotion while the Andante was thoughtful without much poetry. Technically there were slips in detail but the overall big picture was there. And there was a breezy power in his interpretation; a tempestuous, honest virility.

Leinsdorf accompanied him in the same vein. It was an ablebodied, vigorous collaboration, not distinguished for its beauty of conception or profundity of thought.

Johannesen and Brahms brought us to the intermission. Afterwards Leinsdorf conducted Strauss tone poem, "Don Juan," and Walter Piston's Symphony No. 8 in its first local performance. Completed on January 27 of this year; the work develops its ideas with sensitivity and the mastery of craftsmanship that are now a mark of Piston's talent and long experience. On first hearing, it seemed music of noble and poetic sentiment, the ideas not too compelling but developed with refinement and consistent interest. Repetitions are necessary for a more considered judgment as to its deeper significance. But it is not a work to be dismissed.

Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" completed the program.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574

APR

Music: Leinsdorf, Johannesen, Brahms

Boston Symphony Has Formidable Program

By RAYMOND ERICSON

ERICH LEINSDORF is not one to present his Boston Symphony Orchestra in slight programs. Wednesday night in Philharmonic Hall he began the organization's final set of New York appearances for the season with one of the meatiest of all concerts, and its interest lay in the arrangement and effect as much as in the music itself.

Brahm's Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat, with Grant Johannesen as soloist; Richard Strauss's "Don Juan;" Walter Piston's Symphony No 8, played for the first time in New York, and Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" made the formidable quartet of works that were played.

•

The Brahms was, of course, the most formidable of all, with its length and large symphonic proportions, and it seemed fitting to allot the whole first half of the program to it, a consideration it does not always get. If the Strauss and Wagner are relatively short, they are no less rich in orchestral texture, and they made a rather gaudy frame, in the second half of the concert, for Mr. Piston's fine new symphony, which is not a particularly ascetic piece either.

All those notes made the instrumentalists earn their pay on this occasion. They also made a lot to listen to. But the program did not turn out to be indigestible, in aural terms. No one work really resembled another, and given the kind of performances traditionally offered by Mr. Leinsdorf and his men, the concert was successful.

Grant Johannesen

Mr. Piston's Eighth Symphony is the third he has written for the Bostonians, and it was completed last Jan. 27. It is dedicated to Mr. Leinsdorf, as the Third and Sixth are dedicated to Mr. Leinsdorf's predecessors, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, respectively. The composer implies that each took into consideration the "different qualities of sound and style" developed by the orchestra under the three conductors.

Piano Concerto No. 2 Given Full Effort

•

However, this idea may have affected the work, it is a delight to both the mind and the ear. In three conventional movements, the 25-minute symphony has themes of marked character and an over-all lyricism that gives it at glistening quality. The interplay of wind and string textures is as charming to the ear as the compact development of themes is to the mind. Like other works of the composer, it should find a steady place in the repertory, and it was fitting that the grand old man—he is 71—was on hand to aknowledge the applause of the audience.

Mr. Johannesen's performance of the solo part of the Brahms concerto had a vigor and warmth not always associated with the pianist's style. But it was predominantly discriminating in tempo, seeking breadth rather than intensity. Mr. Johannesen, seconded by Mr. Leinsdorf, reached for the work's largeness of spirit and achieved it admirably.

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

APR 1 1965

Music

Symphony Shine Piston, Boston

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI
World-Telegram Music Critic

What struck me as Walter Piston's finest symphony to date was the Number Eight, performed for the first time in New York at Philharmonic Hall last night.

Louis Biancolli

Commissioned by the Boston Symphony and dedicated to Erich Leinsdorf, it was given a superlative premiere by that distinguished team last night. It is an American symphony for all to be proud of.

Piston came out for a well-deserved bow at the end. The audience obviously liked the new score. It is an easy one to like, with its pungent themes, jubilant flourishes, and ceaseless momentum.

• • •

If I say Piston's Eighth is Shostakovich's Tenth, I mean it as a compliment to both composers. Consciously or subconsciously, Piston has written an American parallel to that great symphony, at least in the Lento.

In idiom, it is the freshest and boldest of Piston's scores, very modern without abandoning the mainstream of music. That slow movement is an act of self-liberation. The finale is a smart American salute.

Also American of a very high order was the performance by Grant Johannesen of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. In a season of superb Brahms playing, it stood out for its firm control and pervasive poetry.

• • •

Other numbers on the program were Strauss' "Don Juan"—the season's most frequently performed tone-poem—and prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." There the Bostonians were in their glory.

They were in their glory, in fact, all through the program. Leinsdorf has made this orchestra his very own—an enlargement, you might say, of his own prodigious musicianship and stylistic grasp.

It was obvious throughout the Piston symphony that it was tailor-made for this kind of mastery. One felt Piston not only had the Boston Symphony always in mind, but its conductor too. The Eighth Symphony is one big compliment.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald Tribune (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 282,005

PR 2 1965

A Bostonian First

By William Bender

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the first New York performance of Walter Piston's Eighth Symphony Wednesday night in Philharmonic Hall. The score was written for the orchestra at Erich Leinsdorf's suggestion and completed only two months ago.

The new symphony is less concerned with lyricism (one of Piston's stronger traits) than it is with motor energy and tight structure. Its three movements take 19 minutes, and there are few listening problems offered by its rich scoring and the elaborate spinning out of its essentially compact melodic material. The work's shape seems to come from without, however, rather than from within, and its ability to involve the listener is the weaker for that.

Strauss' "Don Juan" and Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" Prelude rounded out the program. The Strauss burst with romance, mystery, color and drama in an excellent reading by Mr. Leinsdorf.

NEW YORK
Journal American
D. 506,746 SUN. 640,586

APR 1 1965

WALTER PISTON'S Symphony No. 8 received its first N.Y. performance with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Philharmonic Hall last night.

The composer admits to "a quaint and old-fashioned notion" of making music "that will be sympathetic to the performers and the listeners."

This listener found that the music churned too much. Piston must have taken more intellectual than aural pleasure in composing it.

His partiality to the basses was a compliment to the Boston's players, but he also favored the flute and the harp in this work even though he ranges through the orchestra freely.

Musically it had an indeterminate character. Themes that might have come into focus became obscured in counterpoint, dissonances accentuated atonal preoccupation, rhythmic craftsmanship reached no conclusion in a first hearing.

The grasp of composition exceeded the reach of communication.

Interestingly Mr. Leinsdorf used a baton, something unusual in his general procedure. The Bostonians gave a brilliant account of the work. It was something to have heard it so admirably presented.

FADED TEXT

102 BROOKLYN APRIL 1st.

New York World-Telegram
and
The Sun
D. 373,849 SAT. 142,176

MAR 29 1965

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last concert in Brooklyn for this season on Thursday evening at 8:30 in the Brooklyn Academy, 30 Lafayette Ave. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in music by Beethoven, Strauss and Tchaikovsky. Tickets are $3.50 to $6.50.

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 76,558

MAR 22 1965

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy On Thurs., April 1st

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday evening, April 1st, at 8:30 P.M. It is the last Brooklyn concert of the 1964-65 series by the Bostonians. Reservations are now being received for next season's series of five concerts; to the the 79th consecutive year in which this great orchestra will appear in Brooklyn!

This spring will mark the completion of Leinsdorf's third season as Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. So great has been his success in this short period that today his name equally identifies the world famous orchestra he directs. He has enlarged its repertoire by performing works of neglected composers and has opened new musical vistas for both its musicians and its audiences.

Tickets for the April 1st concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced $3.50, $4.00, $5.00 and $5.50, with a few at $6.50. Mail orders must be accompanied by stamped, addressed envelope with check or money order, payable to the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 12,100

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

MAR 26 1965

ENJOY GREATEST EVENTS AT:

B'klyn Academy Music

Thursday, April 1

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

~~Erich Leinsdorf, Conducting~~

The Bostonians' last concert of the current season will be conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf, the Orchestra's Music Director. He has arranged a particularly attractive program, three acknowledged masterpieces, each a popular work.

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 8
STRAUSS .... "Don Juan"
TCHAIKOVSKY .... Symphony No. 4

OPERA HOUSE at 8:30 p.m.

CARNEGIE HALL APRIL 3RD.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN 437,018

APR 11 1965

It was, in fact, quite a weekend for Mahler. The Boston Symphony arrived at Carnegie Saturday night for their first New York performance of the Mahler Symphony No. 6 in A Minor, a work not often performed. From the viewpoint of form, this is not one of Mahler's more successful works. Too many of the themes just don't seem to fit the picture, at least at first hearing.

But the Boston still made it sound grandiose, beautiful and full of the inventive me[illegible] that so many are finding in Mahler these days, [illegible] years of neglect. The murksome scherzo was a delight, especially in some measures that must have depicted drunken revels to the composer. The adagio was full of tingling harmonies and utter serenity, in turn. Erich Leinsdorf, the conductor, has a talent for Mahler and is showing it in these annual presentations (last year it was the fifth).

It was a far better piece to hear than, for instance, the program's opening work, the Schoenberg Violin Concerto, a long infinitely complex composition which remains impenetrable to this listener. The many orchestral parts seem to have little to do with each, and none of them is a close friend of the main violin solo.

The season's award for heroism goes to concertmaster Joseph Silverstein for his courage and ability in managing the solo, which with good reason is called the most difficult violin part ever written.

Bostonians Play Mahler

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~concert Saturday night~~ at Carnegie Recital—its last here this season—was a forbidding affair. Two Viennese works were done, neither of which can be called popular—Schoenberg's Concerto for Violin (Op. 36) and Mahler's Symphony No. 6.

Erich Leinsdorf led the Mahler with his customary acuity. He seemed to relish the complex work, which he conducted from memory, for he took the orchestra through its hour's length with continuous energy. The orchestra has played more brilliantly in the past, but this is not a showpiece.

Long on rhetoric but short on Inspiration, this is the least attractive of the 10 Mahler symphonies.

Joseph Silverstein, the orchestra's concertmaster, played a very honest and musicianly performance of the Schoenberg. He and the conductor used notes for this. Written in 1939, the concerto, like most of Schoenberg's music, has been highly regarded by other serial composers, but has made no mark on the concert world. Highly complex, it calls for a large orchestra but only uses bits and pieces. The writing is spare, acerbic, learned, and the music sounds dry.

Mr. Silverstein can take credit for having learned this devilish and ungrateful work and having given it such a precise reading. But the concerto remains a text more for analysis than hearing. The orchestra did a servicable job with the punctilious score.

The soloist and conductor took several bows but the steady applause was tepid. A lady patron was overheard to say: "This is terrible. I didn't expect to hear this from Boston."

HOWARD KLEIN.

SPRINGFIELD APRIL 6TH.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

SEP 27 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 100,582

APR 7 1965

Symphony Attains Zenith In Concluding Concert

Boston Orchestra Under Leinsdorf Performs Magnificently in Junior League Series Closeout

By SAM HOFFMAN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded ~~the Junior League~~ of Springfield concert series this season with a highly polished and thoroughly colorful performance of symphonies by Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

Under the very capable and adroit leadership of music director Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra reached the zenith of musical expression in both Beethoven's Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36.

Both works as well as the beautifully developed "Don Juan" tone poem by Richard Strauss call for highly selective but persistent authority. For Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony the entire program proved to be one of skilled accomplishment.

The major work was Tchaikovsky's symphony. The orchestra successfully endeavored to exploit the composer's feelings. With Mr. Leinsdorf at the helm, the orchestra moved through each of the four movements with effortless ease to attain the tonal depiction of fate versus happiness.

The composition is a highly emotional work by the composer fluctuating between melodic themes of gloom and prophesy. The orchestra moved with certain established conviction in this area and always with strength.

The Boston Symphony was again a combination of strength and sound in a crisp, splended performance of Beethoven's eighth.

There is a grace and elegance within the eighth that comes into full bloom. Again Mr. Leinsdorf's authoritative leadership was convincing in the illumination of the composer's frankness.

Crisp in Mood

The opening movement is crisp as the mood changes to one almost of gaiety in the second movement. The next area, tempo di minuetto, is a slight change from the second but the final movement is larger in dimensions and loftier in spirit.

In Strauss' "Don Juan," the orchestra exercised the wealth of color within the composition. Here is something that oozes of beauty, swaying moods which are highly developed with the ease of professionalism.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the truly wonderful Boston Symphony Orchestra performed magnificently and those attending last night's concert at Municipal Auditorium could not have left without complete satisfaction that they had seen and heard music at its finest.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 100,582

MAR 29 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

APR 4 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Shopping News
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 111,573

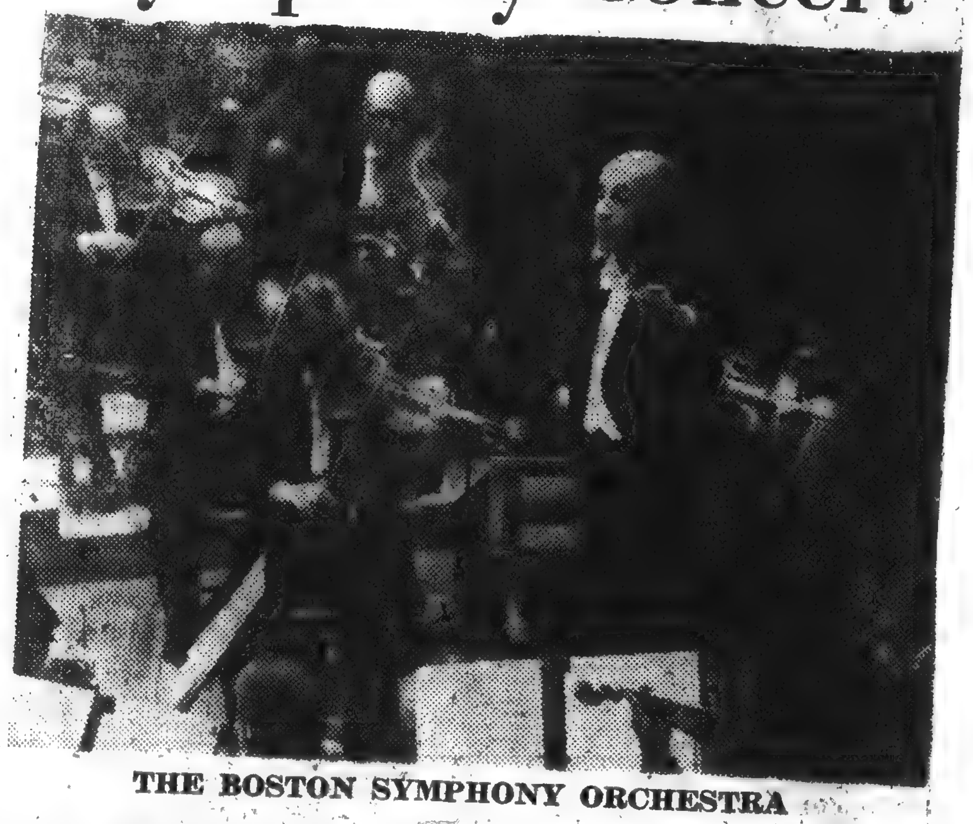
APR 1 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 100,582

MAR 24 1965

Symphony Concert



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~will present the~~ final concert of the 31st Junior League Concert series at 8:00 p.m., on Tuesday, April 6, at the Municipal Auditorium. Series subscribers are urged to note the correction in concert time, since tickets purchased early in the campaign last spring were printed in error, and indicate an 8:30 p.m. starting time. The new hour, 8:00 p.m., will continue into the next season, since it has proven attractive to parents desiring to bring school-age youngsters to these outstanding concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since the fall of 1962, will be making his second appearance in Springfield. He performed the concluding concert of the 1963-64 Junior League Concert Series, and was acclaimed by an enthusiastic local audience. The BSO has many fans in the area who journey to the orchestra's winter home at Symphony Hall in Boston, as well as to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox during July and August.

The Boston Symphony has owned, operated and presented concerts in its own auditorium, Symphony Hall, for 62 years. Also, it is the only orchestra in the world conducting its own Summer Festival on its own property and operating its own school of music.

To maintain an Orchestra of the size and calibre of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an enormous undertaking. In the 1962-63 season, the total cost for salaries, administration, music, transportation, upkeep, et al, was $3,013,228. It is the only orchestra to own a large tractor necessary to mow the areas of green lawns at Tanglewood. The Orchestra earns more of its annual budget through musical means than any other orchestra in the United States: more than 70%, versus a national average of 57%. In the 1961-62 season, the operating deficit was $641,981 before income from investments and contributions from the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It would never be possible for the Orchestra to meet its total budget through musical means alone.

Mrs. Evelyn Macaulay, ticket manager, will be in the Forbes and Wallace box office during store hours, from Monday, March 29, through the day of the concert. The Auditorium box office will be open at 7:00 p.m., the evening of the concert. Early reservations are recommended for choice seat locations.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

APR 7 1965

Leinsdorf Leads Boston Symphony in Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra played its last concert Tuesday night at the Municipal Auditorium, under the auspices of the Junior League Concert Series. Left to right, are: Dr. Leonard E. Anderson, president of the Concert Association of Greater Springfield; Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. Edward F. Bridgman, president of the Junior League; and Mrs. Dogan H. Arthur, chairman of the artists committee.

Boston Symphony Plays Magnificently Here

By R. C. HAMMERICH

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra moved into the Municipal Auditorium for the last of this season's Junior League concert series Tuesday night with a program that couldn't have been more safe and secure.

Play With Elan

It was Beethoven's Eighth, Richard Strauss' "Don Juan" and Tchaikovsky's Fourth, played in that order. Who could complain? The newest piece was "Don Juan," aged 77.

And Boston's well-oiled musical machine played as usual, which is to say magnificently. The musicians know this music intimately. They have played it many years and they play it easily, with elan, with style, with one hand behind their backs.

In fact, they played it all recently in Boston: The Tchaikovsky in January, the Beethoven in February and "Don Juan" in March; and at Tanglewood: "Don Juan" last summer and the Beethoven the year before.

Many local listeners have heard this music live recently, also. The two symphonies were played by the Springfield Symphony Orchestra a year and a half ago; the Pioneer Valley Symphony played the Tchaikovsky a year ago; the Hague Philharmonic played "Don Juan" in Northampton Sunday night.

Wide, Varied Repertory

The Boston orchestra is one of the world's great orchestras; its repertory is wide and varied. We wish it had felt frisky and showed us what it can do with at least one less familiar, more adventurous work.

About the only thing new Tuesday night, aside from the exalted emotional response this great music can recreate when played with such brilliance, was Leinsdorf's baton.

Technique Is Colorful

He has been known as a conductor who used every means short of leaping into the air and stick waving to send messages to his musicians and audience, but no more.

Tuesday night he had a baton, but there was no hint he had given up any of his other means of communication. He scowled, frowned, smiled, glared, danced, bounced on the balls of his feet and swung his arms high and wide.

His technique covered the distance from deep knee bends to the merest finger flicks, and his orchestra responded with a virtuoso performance.

We have reported performances by this orchestra more than 50 times for Springfield readers and the music on the program was familiar to most concert - goers; so perhaps Tuesday's performance can be identified adequately in one paragraph, as follows:

Leinsdorf upheld his reputation for eliminating sticky sentiment from Strauss and Tchaikovsky; the tonal quality was both full and lean; the ensemble was as exact as a good string quartet; these popular old war-horses bounced with a surprising degree of youthful buoyancy.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

MAR 2 8 1965

Boston Symphony Under Leinsdorf Here April 6

The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes a return engagement for the Junior League Concert Series Tuesday evening, April 6, at the Municipal Auditorium. Special attention is again called to the 8 p. m. starting time.

Series ticket holders may notice the printing error of 8.30 concert time if they purchased un-stamped tickets during last spring's subscription campaign. The earlier hour has proven successful in attracting student-age concert goers, and will be continued next season.

Second Appearance

Erich Leinsdorf, as the 11th conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be making his second appearance in Springfield, having been here last April for the final concert of the 1963-64 series. Mr. Leinsdorf began his first year as music director of the BSO in the fall of 1962. Its third director in 38 years, he succeeded Charles Munch, now retired, who had served 13 years.

During his first season he introduced the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Piano Concerto, the world premiere of the Benjamin Lees Violin Concerto, and the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's "War Requiem."

He led the orchestra in all 11 concerts of its transcontinental tour in April, and in July began his first summer of directing the Berkshire Music Festival programs at Tanglewood, conducting 18 of the 24 concerts. At the same time he began his duties as director of the Berkshire Music Center, taking an especially active part with his seminars for conductors.

Brilliant Record

Mr. Leinsdorf came to Boston with a brilliant record in the opera. As music consultant and conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, he established an eminent reputation as a conductor of German opera. The Vienna-trained conductor studied with two of the world's outstanding conductors — Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini.

When only 20, he hiked from his native Vienna some 150 miles to Salzburg one summer, where he so impressed the late Bruno Walter that he was taken on as his assistant to prepare operas for the festival there.

The following three summers in Salzsburg, 1935-37, he performed similar tasks for Toscanini, who recommended him to the Metropolitan Opera where he made his debut in January 1938, just two weeks before his 26th birthday.

Erich Leinsdorf

He stayed with the Met until 1943, having weathered considerable criticism for his youth and lack of experience, including public complaints by some of the Metropolitan's leading singers.

Cleveland Conductor

He then took on the Cleveland Orchestra, being at the time the youngest conductor heading a major American symphony orchestra. His career with the Cleveland was very short, being interrupted by service in the U. S. Army for nine months. He then served a season at the Met, followed by nine years with the Rochester Philharmonic during which time he brought it into prominence among the country's orchestras.

After a season's directorship of the New York City Opera, he returned to the Metropolitan where he remained from 1957 until his departure for Boston and the resumption of his symphonic career.

Mr. Leinsdorf is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston, and a member of the advisory committee on the arts of the National Cultural Center, Washington, D. C. He was named musician of the year, 1963, by "Musical America," one of the leading magazines in its field in the United States, and this distinction came to him through a poll of the nation's music critics and editors.

Program Listed

Mr. Leinsdorf will present the following program as the concluding concert of the 1964-65 Junior League Concert Series.

Symphony No. 8, in F. Major, Op. 93 .... Beethoven
I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di minuetto
IV. Allegro vivace
"Don Juan", Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20 .... Strauss

INTERMISSION

Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36 .... Tchaikovsky
I. Andante sostenuto; Moderato con anima
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Allegro (Pizzicato ostinato)
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

Mail and phone reservations may be made at the Forbes and Wallace box office which will be open during store hours starting Monday.

FRI-SAT. #23. TUES. #6. SUN. #6 105

EIGHTY- EASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

wenty-third Program

FRID NOON, April 9, at 2:00 o'clock

ATURDAY EVENING, April 10, at 8:30 o'clock

RON COPLAND, Guest Conductor

BUSONI ...."Rondo Arlecchinesco," Op. 46
(First performance at these concerts)

RUGGLES ...."Portals," for String Orchestra
(First performance at these concerts)

BARTÓK ....Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 3
- I. retto
- II. o religioso
- III. o vivace

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ....Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

COPLAND ...."Music for a Great City"
- I. Skyline
- II. Night Thoughts
- III. Subway Jam
- IV. Toward the Bridge

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
SIDNEY FOSTER
Mr. Foster plays the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 11, at 3:00 o'clock

MOZART ....Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns (K. 287)
- Allegro
- Theme with Variations; Andante grazioso
- Menuetto
- Adagio
- Menuetto
- Andante; Allegro molto

STRAVINSKY ....Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra
- I. Toccata
- II. Aria I
- III. Aria II
- IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ....*Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36
- I. Andante sostenuto
- II. Andantino in modo di canzona
- III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
- IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

UESDAY EVENING, April 13, at 8:30 o'clock

STRAV ...."Agon," Ballet

STRAV ....Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra
- occata
- ria I
- ria II
- apriccio

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

PR ....Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111
- Allegro moderato
- argo
- ivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BAL ANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 4 1965

Copland to Conduct

The American composer Aaron Copland will conduct the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony. Sidney Foster, pianist, will make his first appearance with the orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will return to Boston for the orchestra's final Sunday afternoon concert of the season, Apr. 11.

Copland's program of Friday and Saturday will include four works which will be performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony: "Rondo Arlecchinesco" by Busoni; "Portals" by Ruggles; Copland's "Music for a Great City"; and Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 3, with Foster as soloist. Copland will also conduct the Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a by Brahms.

Next Sunday afternoon, Leinsdorf's program will include Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Sidney Foster was born in Florence, S.C. A child prodigy, he was admitted to the Curtis Institute at the age of 10. In 1940 he was the first person to win the Leventritt Award. The years since then have been filled with tours in the United States and abroad. Last November he played 16 sold-out concerts in 22 days in the Soviet Union. Foster is on the faculty of the Indiana University School of Music.

FRI.-SAT. #23. TUES. #6. SUN. #6.

EIGHTY-F H SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

'wenty-third Program

FRIDA   ERNOON, April 9, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, April 10, at 8:30 o'clock

AARON COPLAND, Guest Conductor

Busoni ...."Rondo Arlecchinesco," Op. 46
(First performance at these concerts)

Ruggles ...."Portals," for String Orchestra
(First performance at these concerts)

Bartók ....Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 3
- I. Allegretto
- II. Adagio religioso
- III. Allegro vivace

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

Brahms..............Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a

Copland ...."Music for a Great City"
- I. Skyline
- II. Night Thoughts
- III. Subway Jam
- IV. Toward the Bridge

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
SIDNEY FOSTER
Mr. Foster plays the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, April 13, at 8:30 o'clock

STRAVI ...."Agon," Ballet

STRAVI S ....Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra
- Toccata
- Aria I
- Aria II
- Capriccio

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

Pr ....Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111
- Allegro moderato
- Largo
- Vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Sixth Program

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, April 11, at 3:00 o'clock

Mozart.........................Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns (K. 287)
- Allegro
- Theme with Variations; Andante grazioso
- Menuetto
- Adagio
- Menuetto
- Andante; Allegro molto

Stravinsky..................Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra
- I. Toccata
- II. Aria I
- III. Aria II
- IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

Tchaikovsky...............*Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36
- I. Andante sostenuto
- II. Andantino in modo di canzona
- III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
- IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 4 1965

Copland to Conduct

The American composer Aaron Copland will conduct the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony. Sidney Foster, pianist, will make his first appearance with the orchestra.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will return to Boston for the orchestra's final Sunday afternoon concert of the season, Apr. 11.

Copland's program of Friday and Saturday will include four works which will be performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony: "Rondo Arlecchinesco" by Busoni; "Portals" by Ruggles; Copland's "Music for a Great City"; and Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 3, with Foster as soloist. Copland will also conduct the Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a by Brahms.

Next Sunday afternoon, Leinsdorf's program will include Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, Stravinsky's Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Sidney Foster was born in Florence, S.C. A child prodigy, he was admitted to the Curtis Institute at the age of 10. In 1940 he was the first person to win the Leventritt Award. The years since then have been filled with tours in the United States and abroad. Last November he played 16 sold-out concerts in 22 days in the Soviet Union. Foster is on the faculty of the Indiana University School of Music.

106

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 4 1965

Orchestra This Week

Copland to Lead Boston Symphony

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Aaron Copland to be guest conductor at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Sidney Foster, pianist, will be guest soloist, making his first appearances with the Boston Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf will return to the podium next Sunday afternoon to conduct the final Sunday afternoon concert of the season.

Mr. Copland's program of Friday and Saturday will include four works which will be performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony: "Rondo Arlecchinesco" by Busoni; "Portals" by Ruggles; Copland's "Music for a Great City"; and Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 3, in which Sidney Foster will join the Orchestra as guest soloist. Mr. Copland will also conduct the Orchestra in the Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a, by Brahms.

NEXT SUNDAY afternoon Mr. Leinsdorf's program will open with Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, continue with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and conclude with the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Sidney Foster was born in Florence, South Carolina. A child prodigy, he was admitted to the Curtis Institute at the age of ten, and thereafter his career was carefully controlled. In 1940 he was the first person to win the famous Leventritt Award. The years since then have been filled with tours in the United States and abroad. Last November he played 16 sold-out concerts in 22 days in the Soviet Union. Mr. Foster is on the faculty of the Indiana University School of Music.

THE ANNUAL Meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, those who have made contributions in the current season to offset the orchestra's deficit, will take place in Symphony Hall this Thursday afternoon at 4 p.m. The Friends will hear a half-hour portion of the orchestra's final rehearsal of the week, conducted by Mr. Leinsdorf.

The annual address and report will follow, presented by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees. The meeting will then adjourn for tea in the gallery.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 10 1965

At Symphony Aaron Copland Guest, Sidney Foster Soloist

By MARGO MILLER

The composer Aaron Copland was guest conductor Friday afternoon of the Boston Symphony. On the program, to be repeated tonight at 8:30, four of the five works were having first performances at the orchestra's concerts and a fine pianist named Sidney Foster was making his first appearance.

Copland led, as a finale, one of his own scores, originally the music for the movie, "Something Wild," but now called "Music for a Great City." In its present form, "Great City" was first done in London's Festival Hall last May. The movements are "Skyline," "Night Thoughts," "Subway Jam" and "Toward the Bridge."

This reviewer has not seen the movie but certainly "Skyline" suggests just about every film score cliche available. And though one may take pains now to disassociate "Skyline" from New York (the movie's setting) such things as the broken chords for brass mean a camera jumping up a skyscraper, or the dancy passage for orchestra a vista of honky-tonks.

Once past these traps, Copland goes in more for mood and some interesting orchestral color combinations. The score has a large percussion section, which kept eight men busy. On the other hand, "Subway Jam" laid off all the strings but the basses. And in general, "Great City" is a haven for brass players.

Sidney Foster and the Bartok Piano Concerto No. 3 made a fine team. This is Bartok's last work; indeed he left undone the full orchestration of the final 17 bars, his precarious health leading to hospitalization, death.

The Concerto is attractive for its flavorsome first movement, its catchy rhythmic flow in the outer two movements, and in the central movement a cadenza section over steady wind chords. Foster got the flavor. And perhaps even more impressive was his sense of right tone. The piano part is not pretty but rather like the wooden xylophone, round, ringing sound, gentler than the metal glockenspiel, but with its own glow. Foster's Bartok deserved the audience's warm applause.

The program also included Carl Ruggles' "Portals," a short piece for string orchestra. Ruggles, who will be 90 next year, is not much played. "Portals," like good chamber music, has that pleasing tension between the voices, and should be revived more often. It was certainly more engrossing listening than Ferruccio Busoni's "Rondo Arlescchinesco," with which Copland opened the program. Busoni's Harlequin is pretty dim stuff.

Brahms' "Haydn" Variations were, of course, not receiving a first Boston Symphony program. Copland's approach to them is to stress clarity. The orchestra gave him fine support in this and the other works, for the guest conductor is a practiced hand at calling for what he wants. But until the final variation but one and the coda, the music seemed polished but needing of a little more sweep.

---

ewEnglandNewscli
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RI

Christian Sc Monitor (
BOSTON, M
Circ. 174,8

APR 1 0 196

Copla

By Haro

Aaron Copland — h of the Boston Symph smorgasbord for his nultimate weekend
Four first perform series on Mr. Copla assortment that so times displeased, s sometimes repelle
"Rondo Arlecchin
"Portals," Bartók'
and Mr. Copland's
The only easily from the Busoni
tions on a Theme Copland conducte tivity. (What an el

Good guidance

Since Mr. Copla posers who is also a assume that he w readings of the Harlequin danced, sad. It is an engag posed: one wonde
vived more often.
And the Ruggles!
prise. Here is a Ne years older than t was born in 1876) marked the first ti been played by th
His "Portals" is and spare, with could have been when first heard.
mild to most mod virile character t that speaks to our

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 10 1965

SYMPHONY

Aaron Copland's Conducting Shapes a Stylistic Spectrum

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Aaron Copland makes most conductors sound lifeless. One might name a dozen men at random, capable of conducting rings around him from a technical standpoint: but one would be hard put to find a single musician of that company with greater communicative powers than the eminent American composer who is the guest artist at this weekend's concerts of The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

More Illumination

By this I do not mean to imply that Mr. Copland's conducting technique is deficient. On the contrary, he possesses a soundly admirable style, a clear beat and a comely shaping of phrase. But he does lack the small graces of routining, the painstaking accents that define the orchestral major domo; nor is he especially dynamic

He is, however, a presence, and a very palpable presence. His conducting is a gesture of enlarged experience. He conveys the insight and vitality of music as a living force, and his instinct for the right tempo—as opposed to the rulebook tempo—is keen. To me, his pacing has more illumination than the superficially polished, but inert, executant: there is more joy in it.

Yesterday's program was something of a stylistic spectrum. It glowed feebly enough with the Busoni "Rondo Arlecchinesco" and Ruggles "Portals," for string orchestra, both distinctly minor pieces, both with a frail historical significance. Busoni, who wrote in 1914, and Ruggles, in 1926, must have indicated to others the modernity of a stylized romanticism in the first case, and the virtues of compression in the second.

"Arlecchinesco," however, owes its modicum of charm to the piquant timbres of the harlequinade, and despite deft strokes of orchestration sounds rather jingly. "Portals," originally written for 13 strings, is no more than five minutes long, ascending in a steady dramatic line to fff, then after a few measures of serenity, ending in a mystical cadence.

Ruggles may have been groping for the 12-tone row, but its principles were understood by Schonberg; and thus "Portals" is on the periphery of the musical experience of its time. Beside such a piece as Bartok's Third Piano Concerto, which dominated this program, it is completely dwarfed

Sidney Foster, the soloist, gave an excellent account of the vehement, monumentally-scaled score, in turn powerful, contemplative, then filled with a raging desperation to outlast—the composer was literally racing death to the scrawled 'the end' he had written in Hungarian on the score—and prevail.

The score is unlike the dissonant, rhythmically-persistent First and Second Concertos with their hammer-attacks and formidable double-note passages. The broad outer movements declare the inspiration of Liszt, while the middle, "Adagio religioso," has a baroque contra-puntal character. In all probability Bartok left it as a heritage to his pianist-widow.

Mr. Foster's pianism was fleet, brilliant and controlled. He probably could have gotten more from the second movement, but largeness of conception, clarity of tone and vigorous discipline in performance marked the reading. Moreover, he was ably accompanied by Mr. Copland, whose handling of the orchestra in the middle movement — with its tremolos and subtle colors — was first-rate.

The Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn were treated with genial amplitude in a warm and expressive reading, and set forth happily. And Mr. Copland gave his own "Music For a Great City" a congenial sweep.

It is quite an uneven score, I think, ranging from orotund cinematic rhetoric to splendid and vital stylization of jazz polyrhythm pervading the tonal mood of an urban landscape. The section called "Subway Jam" is especially evocative in its sonorities and movement. The work is a combination of the magnificent and the trite, and just as the listener gets carried away by its drive, delightful syncopations and texture in one instant, he topples into noisy banality the next. But I doubt if anyone could conduct it as well as its composer, contrary to the usual case.

The final concert of the season, on Good Friday, begins at 3:30 next week; and Mr. Leinsdorf schedules the Prelude "Lohengrin" and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8, in C minor.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Aaron Copland guest conductor, presented 23rd program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Sidney Foster pianist, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Rondo Arlecchinesco," Op. 46. Busoni
"Portals," for String Orchestra. Ruggles
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 3 .... Bartok
Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a .... Brahms
"Music for a Great City" .... Copland

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

APR 15 1965

At Symphony Hall

COPLAND CONDUCTS BSO

By ROBERT GUSTAFSON

Some years ago I was part of a small band of die-hards who sat in the rain at the Boston Arts Festival to hear Aaron Copland conduct a program of his own works. On another occasion I heard him both speak and conduct at a Boston Symphony open rehearsal. In both instances Mr. Copland's joy and zest for music, indeed for life, created memorable listening experiences.

Last Saturday evening Mr. Copland again stepped to the podium to conduct a program of Busoni, Ruggles, Bartok, Brahms and Copland and once again he gave us superb listening.

For some reason, however, the audience was unresponsive to the point of rudeness and this behavior took the edge off the entire evening. The works performed were, to be sure, largely unfamiliar. They were also exciting. Despite their inherent qualities and the quality of performance, the fact that they were unfamiliar seemed to be the audience's criterion. The most popular offering was the Brahms "Variations on a Theme of Haydn" which received a most enthusiastic ovation. Yet it was not performed with any more skill or any better intepretation than the other works.

Sidney Foster, soloist for the Bartok "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra," also received a fine ovation for his flashing performance. While this particular work received its first hearing at these concerts, Bartok, in this day and age, is hardly an unfamilar composer.

The evening began with a bright reading of Busoni's "Rondo Arlecchinesco, a spritely delineation of the moods and pranks of Harlequin — now imperious, now thoughtful, now amorous.

Ths was followed by Carl Ruggles' "'Portals' for String Orchestra." Ruggles, like Charles Ives, was one of the real innovators in American music. He experimented with the twelve-tone scale while giving his music a distinctive American flavor. It was given a wholly successful performance.

Mr. Copland's own work was last. Given its first reading at these concerts it is a dramatic, sweeping piece and is entitled "Music for a Great City." Highly rhythmic in places, grand and sweeping in others, it masterfully evokes the moods of New York. Needless to say Mr. Copland did full justice to his composition.

Yet the audience, again, was neither moved nor impressed. The Orchestra members, however, applauded vigorously, and I felt somehow that they were trying to save Boston's reputation musically. As I watched the audience scurrying out I was not at all sure the orchestra had succeeded.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

[illegible]

Copland and four premières

By Harold Rogers

Aaron Copland -- here as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony — has prepared a smorgasbord for his audiences at the penultimate weekend concerts of this season.

Four first performances are listed for this week on Mr. Copland's program — an odd assortment that sometimes pleased, sometimes displeased, sometimes amused, and at times repelled. They are Busoni's "Rondo Arlecchinesco," Carl Ruggles' "Portals," Bartok's Piano Concerto No. 3, and Mr. Copland's "Music for a Great City."

The only easily digestible item — apart from the Busoni -- was the Brahms Variations on a Theme of Haydn. And this Mr. Copland conducted with grace and sensitivity. (What an eloquent left hand!)

Good guidance

Since Mr. Copland is one of the few composers who is also a good conductor, we can assume that he was equally adept in his readings of the unfamiliar items. Busoni's Harlequin danced, pranced, was glad or sad. It is an engaging work, skillfully composed: one wonders why Busoni is not revived more often.

And the Ruggles! Here, indeed, was a surprise. Here is a New England composer five years older than the Boston Symphony (he was born in 1876), and Friday afternoon marked the first time one of his works had been played by this orchestra.

His "Portals" is good strong writing, lean and spare, with a dissonant content that could have been considered high for 1926 when first heard. While it may now sound mild to most modern ears, there is a fine virile character to this music, a vitality that speaks to our day and still to the future.

The Concerto No. 3—Bartók's last score—proves to embody the composer's great sincerity and skill, yet without that special private vision that gives distinction to most of his earlier writings. One feels that had he had more time to refine, he would have achieved a true masterwork.

The opening Allegretto moves with inexorable momentum as the piano strikes off peppery figures. In the middle Adagio religioso we hear some of Bartók's strong linear writing, the score spare, the piano at times in chorale-like passages or again in trills and runs, embellishing a simple and poignant songfulness.

The Allegro vivace employs accented rhythms with a toccata piano that makes its rollicking way to a brilliant and joyous finale. Sidney Foster handled the piano role with good clean technique and an incisive touch.

But it was Mr. Copland's own "Music for a Great City" that galvanized most of the listeners out of their indifference. The four sections — "Skyline," "Night Thoughts," "Subway Jam," and "Toward the Bridge"—are self-explanatory.

One need then only imagine Mr. Copland at his urbanistic best to get an idea of what goes on—except that one might add that he keeps the battery busy with all kinds of razzmatazz. He again lets a lonely trumpet sing a nostalgic song (remember "Quiet City"?). And he splays out his harmonies in radiant American moods.

Sidney Foster

. . soloist in Bartók's Third Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony at the weekend concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 4 1965

Copland Reminisces

The '20s, When Every 5-8 Bar Was a Drama

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Aaron Copland will conduct the Boston Symphony at the coming Friday-Saturday pair of concerts, and there will be the first performance here on his recent "Music for a Great City." The piece was written for the 60th anniversary of the London Symphony Orchestra, and Copland led the American premiere at a concert of that orchestra in Washington last Fall.

The music is derived from the 1961 film score for "Something Wild." The movie did not do well in the theaters, but the composer throught the music was too good just to be buried with it, and he resolved to salvage what he could.

"That isn't always possible," he explained. "Sometimes it's just too fragmentary, but 'Something Wild' had all these scenes where the girl is just left alone in her room with her thoughts. There are long scenes when I had an absolutely free screen for minutes at a time." In sum, it made a good material for a concert piece, and lent itself to the filling of the English orchestra's commission.

The title, "Music for a Great City," originated in London. The film was set in New York, but it didn't seem tactful to indicate that in the name of a piece for London. "This way, every city can identify with it. They even did in Rochester when I conducted it there a while ago."

Murder is Next

Conducting the Boston Symphony put Copland in an anniversary mood. He recalled that it was just over 40 years ago, in February, 1925, that Koussevitzky, then in his first season here, had first conducted a piece of his. It was the Symphony with Organ. Walter Damrosch had given the world premiere in New York a month earlier, with Copland's teacher, Nadia Boulanger, as organ soloist.

That was when Damrosch had turned to the audience and said, "If a young man can write music like that at 23, in another five years he'll be ready to commit murder." Every time after that when Damrosch encountered Copland, he would say, "Now, you understood what I meant, didn't you?"

In Nov., 1925, Koussevitzky led Copland's "Music for the Theater," first here, then in New York at a League of Composers concert. In New York, Ravel's "Scheherazade" was on the same program, and something by Prokofiev. Copland remembers that "all of it got terrible reviews. Olin Downes said about my Theater Music, "We never want to hear this piece again.' "

In the twenties, most of the reviewers were consistently hostile to the new music. "Downes was always holding Sibelius up to us as an example. It was very irritating. Not that one couldn't admire Sibelius, but we just couldn't think of it as 20th century music." Henderson on The Sun was less bad than the others apparently, "but Paul Rosenfeld was our man. We used to wait for each issue of The Dial."

In Boston, H.T.P. on The Transcript was the least likely to be intolerant. Copland still remembers the scandal caused by his Piano Concerto, "all that jazz in Symphony Hall. People who liked it were ostracized from Boston Society. Edward Burlingame Hill wrote a favorable review in Modern Music, and it was obvious from his tone that I was to understand this took great courage."

KOUSSEVITZKY

More important are Copland's recollections of Koussevitzky, not merely of his tireless pioneering on behalf of American composers, but the way in which it was done.

"He really made us feel that the whole week revolved around us and our performance. He didn't always take the tempo one liked, but he had an electric beat, and it was always exciting." Of the other conductors of the time special gratitude, Copland feels, should go to Fritz Reiner and Eugene Goossens, "and, of course, Stokowski, though he didn't happen to do much of my music."

Among the pieces on Copland's Symphony programs is Busoni's "Rondo Arlecchinesco," which he came to know through Toscanini's performances. Another piece is "Portals" by the 89-year-old Carl Ruggles. This performance is, in a sense, a by-product of another project that is keeping Copland occupied this Spring, a series of 12 half-hour programs for educational television, entitled "Music in the Twenties."

The programs are being taped in Boston at WGBH, four in the middle of March, four after the symphony concerts, four more in May. They grew out of a series of lectures Copland gave at Harvard some years ago. He might write a book on the music of the period some day, and he remembered that all his books had thus grown out of lectures.

He has enjoyed his visit to the twenties. "I grew up in that period, and it's very vivid to me. One always thinks history began with oneself anyway. But I was alive then, and it makes me feel like an authority, and there's no one at all around the station who remembers the time. It's nice to be around people who've never heard 'Pierrot lunaire' before and to see them stunned by it."

Enjoys Conducting

Copland looks forward to conducting the Boston Symphony again. In general he finds conducting very tempting, "and it's especially hard when one is offered an orchestra like the Boston."

He had enjoyed working up a repertory of works not his own, Haydn, Brahms, Mendelssohn, Purcell, among others. "No Beethoven though. The only Beethoven I've ever done was the Fourth Concerto with Charles Rosen in Scotland last year."

When was the first time he ever conducted? The piece was "Music for the Theater." "It was one of the Copland-Session concerts, maybe around 1929. No, we couldn't have afforded an orchestra then, more likely something like 1931. And of course that was in the days when every measure was a drama."

108 WED. #3. FRI.-SAT #24 TUES #10

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, April 16, at 3:30 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, April 17, at 8:30 o'clock

Wagner . . . . Prelude to "Lohengrin"

INTERMISSION

Bruckner . . . . Symphony No. 8 in C minor

- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Scherzo
- III. Adagio
- IV. Feierlich (nicht schnell)

These concerts will end about 5:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon;
10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The Friday afternoon concerts at 2:00 are broadcast direct from Symphony Hall by Station WGBH-FM; the Saturday evening concerts at 8:30 by Station WCRB, AM and FM, and by WGBH-FM; the Tuesday evening concerts at 8:30 by Station WBUR-FM; the Tuesday evening "Cambridge Series" concerts at 8:30 by Station WGBH-FM and likewise televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR–SIXTY-FIVE

Tenth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, April 20, at 8:30 o'clock

Beethoven . . . . Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

- I. Allegro vivace e con brio
- II. Allegretto scherzando
- III. Tempo di minuetto
- IV. Allegro vivace

Stravinsky . . . . Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

- I. Toccata
- II. Aria I
- III. Aria II
- IV Capriccio

INTERMISSION

Tchaikovsky . . . . *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

- I. Andante sostenuto
- II. Andantino in modo di canzona
- III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
- IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOU

Third Program

WEDNESDAY EVENING, April 14, at 8:30 o'cloc

Beethoven . . . . Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

- I. Allegro vivace e con brio
- II. Allegretto scherzando
- III. Tempo di minuetto
- IV. Allegro vivace

Stravinsky . . . . Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

- I. Toccata
- II. Aria I
- III. Aria II
- IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

Tchaikovsky . . . . *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

- I. Andante sostenuto
- II. Andantino in modo di canzona
- III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
- IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 11 1965

Symphony Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will give ~~the final~~ concerts in five of its regular Boston series this week, and its final open rehearsal of the season. The sixth Sunday afternoon concert will be today at 3; the sixth "Cambridge" concert Tuesday evening at 8:30; the third Wednesday evening concert Apr. 14 at 8:30; the eighth open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30, and the 24th pair of Friday-Saturday concerts Apr. 16 at 3:30 p.m. and Apr. 17 at 8:30. Leinsdorf will conduct all the performances.

The program this afternoon will include Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, K. 287; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The "Cambridge" concert Tuesday evening, which will be telecast by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, will include Stravinsky's "Agon"; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist; and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6.

The final Wednesday concert will include the Symphony No. 8, by Beethoven; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The Friday concert will begin at the later hour of 3:30 because of Good Friday. Saturday's program will begin at the regular hour of 8:30 p.m. The program will include the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin," and the Bruckner Symphony No. 8 in C minor. In announcing this program Leinsdorf said:

"The moving spirit of Good Friday makes it desirable and mandatory to have a work which would fit this spirit. Nothing seemed to me more fitting than one of the cathedral-like symphonies of Bruckner, and that is why I have chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 for performance on this Good Friday."

At the open rehearsal on Thursday night the orchestra will make its final preparations for the Friday-Saturday concerts.

Six members of the Boston Symphony will play their last Boston concerts in these final days of the 1964-65 Winter season. They will retire from the orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Aug. 22. The players are: Einar Hansen, first violin, who has been with the orchestra since 1926; George Madsen, flute, since 1935; Pierre Mayer, second violin, since 1925; Bernard Parronchi, cello, since 1945; Manuel Valerio, clarinet, since 1933, and Manuel Zung, second violin, since 1925.

NewEngland N
Box 2078, Boston

Sunday H
BOSTON,
Circ. 176

APR 1 1

Final Wee

Sym
Ends

The Boston S chestra, ~~Erich Le~~ director, will gi concerts in five Boston series this final open rehe season.

The sixth Sund concert will be thi
3:00; the sixth concert this Tuesd
8:30; the third
Evening concert
8:30; the eighth next Thursday
15) at 7:30 p.m. a fourth pair of F concerts next F p.m. and Satur
Erich Leinsdorf w
the performances.

The program will begin with M timento in B-f continue with t
Violin Concerto,
stein, soloist; and
Tchaikovsky's Sy

The "Cambri
Tuesday evening,
telecast by WGB
2, will consist
"Agon"; the Str
Concerto, Josep soloist; and Pro
phony No. 6.

THE FINAL W cert will open
phony No. 8,
continue with Violin Concerto,
stein, soloist; and Tchaikovsky's Sy

The Friday co at the later hour of Good Frida program will regular hour of program will Prelude to Wa grin," and the phony No. 8 i announcing this Leinsdorf said:

"The moving
Friday makes mandatory to which would Nothing seeme fitting than one like symphonie and that is wh
Bruckner's Sym performance
Friday."

At the ope
Thursday nigh will make its

108 WED. #3. FRI.-SAT #24 TUES #10

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-SIXTY-FIVE

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 16, at 3:30 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 17, at 8:30 o'clock

WAGNER .... Prelude to "Lohengrin"

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER .... Symphony No. 8 in C minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Scherzo
III. Adagio
IV. Feierlich (nicht schnell)

These concerts will end about 5:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The Friday afternoon concerts at 2:00 are broadcast direct from Symphony Hall by Station WGBH-FM; the Saturday evening concerts at 8:30 by Station WCRB, AM and FM, and by WGBH-FM; the Tuesday evening concerts at 8:30 by Station WBUR-FM; the Tuesday evening "Cambridge Series" concerts at 8:30 by Station WGBH-FM and likewise televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-SIXTY-FIVE

Tenth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 20, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di minuetto
IV. Allegro vivace

STRAVINSKY .... Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

I. Toccata
II. Aria I
III. Aria II
IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY .... *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-FOURTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-FOUR-SIXTY-FIVE

Third Program

WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di minuetto
IV. Allegro vivace

STRAVINSKY .... Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra

I. Toccata
II. Aria I
III. Aria II
IV. Capriccio

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY .... *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 11 1965

Symphony Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will give ~~the final~~ concerts in five of its regular Boston series this week, and its final open rehearsal of the season. The sixth Sunday afternoon concert will be today at 3; the sixth "Cambridge" concert Tuesday evening at 8:30; the third Wednesday evening concert Apr. 14 at 8:30; the eighth open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30, and the 24th pair of Friday-Saturday concerts Apr. 16 at 3:30 p.m. and Apr. 17 at 8:30. Leinsdorf will conduct all the performances.

The program this afternoon will include Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, K. 287; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The "Cambridge" concert Tuesday evening, which will be telecast by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, will include Stravinsky's "Agon"; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist; and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6.

The final Wednesday concert will include the Symphony No. 8, by Beethoven; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The Friday concert will begin at the later hour of 3:30 because of Good Friday. Saturday's program will begin at the regular hour of 8:30 p.m. The program will include the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin," and the Bruckner Symphony No. 8 in C minor. In announcing this program Leinsdorf said:

"The moving spirit of Good Friday makes it desirable and mandatory to have a work which would fit this spirit. Nothing seemed to me more fitting than one of the cathedral-like symphonies of Bruckner, and that is why I have chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 for performance on this Good Friday."

At the open rehearsal on Thursday night the orchestra will make its final preparations for the Friday-Saturday concerts.

Six members of the Boston Symphony will play their last Boston concerts in these final days of the 1964-65 Winter season. They will retire from the orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on Aug. 22. The players are: Einar Hansen, first violin, who has been with the orchestra since 1926; George Madsen, flute, since 1935; Pierre Mayer, second violin, since 1925; Bernard Parronchi, cello, since 1945; Manuel Valerio, clarinet, since 1933, and Manuel Zung, second violin, since 1925.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

Final Week's Programs

Symphony Season Ends Saturday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will give the final concerts in five of its regular Boston series this week, and its final open rehearsal of the season.

The sixth Sunday Afternoon concert will be this afternoon at 3:00; the sixth "Cambridge" concert this Tuesday evening at 8:30; the third Wednesday Evening concert Wednesday at 8:30; the eighth open rehearsal next Thursday evening (April 15) at 7:30 p.m.; and the twenty-fourth pair of Friday-Saturday concerts next Friday at 3:30 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct all the performances.

The program this afternoon will begin with Mozart's Divertimento in B-flat, K. 287; continue with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist; and conclude with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The "Cambridge" concert Tuesday evening, which will be telecast by WGBH-TV, Cannel 2, will consist of Stravinsky's "Agon"; the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist; and Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6.

THE FINAL Wednesday concert will open with the Symphony No. 8, by Beethoven; continue with the Stravinsky Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, soloist; and conclude with Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The Friday concert will begin at the later hour of 3:30 because of Good Friday. Saturday's program will begin at the regular hour of 8:30 p.m. The program will consist of the Prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and the Bruckner Symphony No. 8 in C minor. In announcing this program Erich Leinsdorf said:

"The moving spirit of Good Friday makes it desirable and appropriate to have a work which would fit this spirit. Nothing seemed to me more fitting than one of the cathedral-like symphonies of Bruckner, and that is why I have chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 for performance on this Good Friday."

At the open rehearsal of [illegible] the Orchestra [illegible] preparations for the Friday-Saturday concerts.

SIX MEMBERS of the Boston Symphony will play their last Boston concerts in these final days of the 1964-65 winter season. They will retire from the Orchestra at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood on August 22.

The players are: Einar Hansen, first violin, who has been with the Orchestra since 1926; George Madsen, flute, a member of the Boston Symphony since 1935; Pierre Mayer, second violin, who joined the Orchestra in 1925; Bernard Parronchi, cello, a member of the Orchestra since 1945; Manuel Valerio, clarinet, who has been with the Boston Symphony since 1933; and Manuel Zung, second violin, who joined the Orchestra in 1925.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 13 1965

CLOSING concert of the Boston Symphony series on Friday, is scheduled for 3:30 p. m., at Symphony Hall. Carrying on the Easter tradition, the orchestra will include in its program works of Bach, Wagner, Bruckner and other composers who have written music especially appropriate for the great feast day. Apropos of this, Harry Ellis Dickson, in his talk at the closing pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn (beginning at 1:15 instead of the usual 12:15) will discuss "Easter Music—Inside the BSO."

Among those invited to attend the special luncheon (traditional dishes from various countries are planned) are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo, Norman P. Shirk, Harry J. Kraut, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fiedler, and the Joseph Silversteins. The public is welcome to make reservations (CO 2-1000) and free parking is offered to those attending church services before the luncheon

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 17 1965

SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf Finale of Season Is Performance to Cherish

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Erich Leinsdorf saved the best for last. The Bruckner Eighth, which he conducted at the final concert of The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday - Saturday series yesterday, is the undoubted highlight of the season.

The last time it was done in this series, early in 1962, William Steinberg was the guest conductor. Steinberg made a few cuts in the development of the Adagio, but edited the score restrainedly by comparison with Koussevitzky whose performance entailed a cut of a full eight minutes in the same section—some of the loveliest music in the Symphony—from one E major chord to another.

Played in Entirety

Erich Leinsdorf, according to his scrupulous custom, played the stupendous work entire — and it was a performance to cherish. He is an uncommonly gifted Bruckner interpreter as he has shown in his treatment of the Seventh. The Eighth, however, is a vastly intricate structure by comparison with the relatively straightforward romanticism of its predecessor, for it marks a return to the tensions of the classical symphonic pattern in a Wagnerian melodic style, and requires nothing less than the total of a conductor's insights into the master's music.

Like all the Bruckner Symphonies, the Eighth is laid out on a generous scale in broad, long-breathed lines of expressive lyricism and bright ceremonial grandeur flooding through the brass. In the early part of this century it used to be critical custom to think of the score as a combination of the exalted and the lamentable: and even so astute a listener as Ernest Newman was led astray by the particular in Bruckner's musical speech here to think that he had planned more than he could properly execute.

This, however, is to miss the point about the way the Eighth is connected. Its sharply dotted rhythms and pauses give the music superficially a pointillistic surface, as though the composer were groping for coherence: but, in fact, the hesitations, repetitions and magisterial bursts of energy, comprise an exactly graduated idiom in which each phrase ends one note higher than the next in working out the design.

So it is by a series of smaller climaxes through which the composer heralds a towering climax, each one sweeping forward and then receding. It was the grandeur of the Leinsdorf reading yesterday that made one feel this as a colossal, cumulative experience, the intensity of the gathering forces gradually merging into heroic exaltation.

The most debatable part of the performance concerned the final movement where the tempi moved at a fast yet plausible pace. Otherwise the consummate musical skill of the account could not be gainsayed. The conductor gave it an unbroken arch, his handling of the tonal element impressive. The mellow sonorities of the Bruckner brasses celestial in their sunbursts, the tremolo strings and vivid woodwinds received a close-knit ensemble; but furthermore, the atmosphere of the mysterious hush that enfolds the work, accented by the rhythmic pedal-point of Schubertian accompaniment, was wonderfully realized.

The net result was profound. A Leinsdorf interpretation is often characterized by the clarity of its phrasing and his chief limitation is sometimes a lack of involvement due to the stress on proportioned detail. But this performance was not the application of formulae, the precision of typical values of, say, two crochets followed by a group of three, rather it was the splendor of emotive power realized in the imaginative handling of these elements — quite simply, magical and inspired conducting.

The afternoon began with a finely-grained performance of the Prelude to "Lohengrin," and ended with the introduction from the stage of six retiring musicians, who leave the BSO after the Tanglewood season. They are Einar Hansen, violin, who has been with the orchestra since 1926, Pierre Mayer, violin, since 1925, Manuel Zung, violin, since 1925, Manuel Valerio, clarinet, since 1933, and Bernard Parronchi, 'cellist since 1945. Mr. Leinsdorf remarked felicitously that the audience might wish to express its thanks, which it did, ending the 84th season in a stirring yet wistful farewell. Godspeed gentlemen.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 24th program of the 84th season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.
Prelude to "Lohengrin" . . . Wagner
Symphony No. 8 in C minor . Bruckner

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR Saturday, April 17, 1965 ▲ 7

Bruckner's Eighth

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf nodded in the direction of Good Friday yesterday afternoon by conducting the Prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Bruckner's Eighth Symphony. Lohengrin, after all, was the son of Parsifal; and Bruckner was a devout Roman Catholic. These two facts may thus have a Christian bearing on the program, if not a true paschal one.

Though Mr. Leinsdorf's nod may have been oblique, he at least was clear in his own thought of the unity of Bruckner with Easter. "Nothing seemed to me more fitting than one of the cathedral-like symphonies of Bruckner," he said in an earlier statement to the press, "and that is why I have chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 for performance this Good Friday."

Cathedral-like it is—all one-hour-and-a-quarter of it; yet Mr. Leinsdorf reared up its magnificent architecture without filling it completely with the commensurate spirit.

But spirit was not entirely lacking. He did some lovely things with the Adagio, especially with the eloquent colloquy between the violins and cellos. This movement is beautifully composed, containing some of Bruckner's most simple and heartfelt devotion.

"He is master of the restraining gesture," my seat companion observed of Mr. Leinsdorf after the concert. And his remark sums up Mr. Leinsdorf's past three seasons as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Few indeed have been the times when the music was given its head and listeners were excited out of their skins. There has been a prevailing wind of restraint. And there is little to indicate a future change in the weather vane.

110

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 17 1965

At Symphony

Globe

Bruckner Eighth Concludes Season

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

To conclude the season on a grandly festive note and at the same time to touch something of the solemnity of the Good Friday spirit, Erich Leinsdorf chose Anton Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 in C minor. Before it came the prelude to Wagner's "Lohengrin." The season ended was the Boston Symphony's 84th and Mr. Leinsdorf's third.

At the end of the concert, in a welcome restoration of a warmly human tradition that had been dropped in recent seasons, the conductor brought forward and introduced to the audience the players who are retiring at the end of the season. Their engagements include the Summer at Tanglewood, but this was their last Friday afternoon subscription concert.

Six players retire this year. They are violinists Einar Hansen, Pierre Mayer, and Manuel Zung (39, 40, and 40 years service respectively), cellist Bernard Parronchi (20 years), piccolo player George Madsen (30 years), and clarinetist Manuel Valerio (32 years).

All were warmly applauded. Leinsdorf wished them well on behalf of their Friday listeners, specifically that they might "eat up their pensions in good health," and assured the audience that the players would be presented with their traveling clocks after Tanglewood.

In spite of the compositional problems Bruckner chose not to solve—though they remain problems for the listener—the Eighth Symphony is a great work. Its advance on its predecessors is in the breadth of its harmonic design.

The first theme is presented as though at an oblique angle to its proper key of C minor, and its appearance firmly on and in C—by then it is a triumphal C major—is reserved until the finale's last pages. This alone helps to establish a large-scale harmonic sweep Bruckner and not achieved previously, but the magnificently eloquent Adagio and even a smaller lyric like the Trio is given an extraordinary energy and grandeur by the powerful harmonic design.

The performance was on the whole very good. Occasionally it became a little pallid for a lack of rhythmic definition. Conductors have attempted the most curious solutions to the problem of giving a convincing performance of this piece, a task that both its length and its sectional construction render difficult. William Steinberg, for example, tries to deal with the piece by leaving large hunks of it out; Eugen Jochum tries to enliven things by making a new tempo for each phrase.

Leinsdorf is far more responsible than that, and his performance was a thoroughly serious approach to the piece, altogether on Bruckner's own terms.

He used the Haas edition, a surprising and at least a controversial decision, for which it would be interesting to know the reason. I would suppose that the later edition by Nowak is both better music and better scholarship. And far from being helpful in explaining the problem of the various versions of the Eighth, the program notes tended rather to muddy the waters.

The playing of the "Lohengrin" Prelude was notable for its beautiful, that is texturally perfectly integrated, brass and percussion playing at and after the climax. More regrettably it was remarkable also for rhythmic vagueness, and the playing never came close to the ethereal pianissimo that is the most special characteristic of this wonderful piece.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

APR 12 1965

Good Concert Concludes Boston Symphony Series

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

BOSTON, April 12—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1964-65 Sunday afternoon series came to to an enjoyable conclusion yesterday in Symphony Hall with a program that included Mozart's charming "Divertimento in B Flat Major for Strings and Two Horns," Stravinsky's "Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra," with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and Tschaikovsky's "Symphony No. 4 in F Minor."

The Mozart work is one of those divertimenti, serenades, cassations, composed for festive occasions, which Mozart provided on the shortest notice (Kochel's catalog lists 33 of them as surviving). The standing wonder of Mozart's genius is that he often gave something infiniteley better than was asked of him. In fact, he frequently squandered on these passing gaities some of his most precious and undying musical thoughts.

In the "Divertimento in B Flat Major," there is happy evidence of this generosity. The opening allegro is all sunshine and joy. There are two thoroughly delightful menuettos, a lovely adagio, and a lively and tuneful finale.

Strings Crisp, Sharp

The orchestra's string section was in fine form—crisp in phrasing, sharp in its attacks, winning in tone quality—and Mr. Silverstein, the concertmaster, shone especially in solo work in the last two movements.

Mr. Silverstein continued his busy afternoon in the Stravinsky, a work with considerable variety. Somewhat dry and cerebral in its opening toccata, but interestingly orchestrated, it is warmer and more singing in its two arias, and driving technically difficult again in its closing capriccio. Although Mr. Silverstein is not a violinist of great power, he is notable for his firm control of his instrument and for the digital skill necessary to meet the demands of the work. His reading was intelligent and understanding. As he proved in the Bartok concerto earlier in the season, he has an affinity for this sort of work.

In a message to subscribers in yesterday's program, music director Erich Leinsdorf noted that one of the objectives of his programming is "to keep the greatest masterworks fresh and to prevent their being taken for granted." Mr. Leinsdorf brilliantly achieved this objective with his reading of the Tschaikovsky.

Although this symphony is as familiar to most of us as the palms of our hands, Mr. Leinsdorf and his musicians made it sound fresh and new. The reason for this lies in Mr. Leinsdorf's meticulous shaping of the architecture of the work and the orchestra's remarkable response to every nuance of his interpretation.

Virile Reading

It is easy to over-sentimentalize Tschaikovsky, to make him neurotic and saccharine. What Mr. Leinsdorf managed was a virile and powerful reading—particularly of the opening andante and the rafter-rousing finale. In the andantino, the notes literally sang with a haunting loveliness. And in the ingratiating scherzo, the pizzicatto work of the strings was a miracle of precision—sounding as one. The only other string section capable of this finesse and polish is perhaps that of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The cordial audience gave a merited ovation to Mr. Leinsdorf and his players at the end of the program.

Summary Of Works Performed.

WORKS PERFORMED AT THIS SERIES OF CONCERTS DURING THE SEASON 1964–1965

			PAGE
Bach: Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174, "Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüte"	XV	January 29–30	907
Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra (In Memory of Sir Winston Churchill) (Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips)	XV	January 29–30	908
Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor	XX	March 12–13	1227
Bartók: Concerto No. 3 for Piano and Orchestra ([illegible] Foster)	XXIII	April 9–10	1434
Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68	I	September 25–26	38
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 (Isaac Stern)	XIV	January 15–16	857
Overture to "Leonore" No. 2	XVI	February 5–6	971
Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93	XVI	February 5–6	978
Berg: "Le Vin," Concert Aria (To a text by Charles Baudelaire) (Phyllis Curtin)	XVI	February 5–6	991
Berger: Polyphony	II	October 2–3	86
Berlioz: Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9	V	October 30–31	267
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23	XVII	February 12–13	1035
Brahms: "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80	I	September 25–26	11
Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73	X	December 11–12	627
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102 (Joseph Silverstein and Jules Eskin)	XI	December 18–19	695
Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (Grant Johannesen)	XIX	March 5–6	1204
Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra, Op. 53 (Shirley Verrett)	XXI	March 19–20	1305
Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56a	XXIII	April 9–10	1454
Bruckner: Symphony No. 8 in C minor	XXIV	April 16–17	1516
Busoni: Rondo Arlecchinesco, Op. 46	XXIII	April 9–10	1419
Carter: Variations for Orchestra	III	October 9–10	146
Copland: Music for a Great City	XXIII	April 9–10	1458
Debussy: Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)	XVII	February 12–13	1042
Delius: "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"	V	October 30–31	276

Dvořák: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)	IX	November 27–28	536
Elgar: Symphony No. 2, in E-flat major, Op. 63	VI	November 6–7	364
Fine: Toccata Concertante	XI	December 18–19	671
Gluck: Music of the Blessed Spirits in the Elysian Fields from "Orpheus and Eurydice" (In Memory of James J. Reed)	XX	March 12–13
Haydn: Symphony in G major, "Oxford," No. 92	VI	November 6–7	345
Symphony in A major, No. 21	IX	November 27–28	523
The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")	XII	January 1–2	715
Honegger: Symphony No. 4, "Deliciae Basilienses"	XVIII	February 19–20	1120
Huggler: "Sculptures," Op. 39 (Bethany Beardslee)	VII	November 13–14	395
Kodály: Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"	VIII	November 20–21	459
Suite from the Comic Opera, "Háry János"	XVI	February 5–6	1012
Lewis: "Designs for Orchestra"	X	December 11–12	604
Liszt: Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2 (Van Cliburn)	VIII	November 20–21	468
Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1 (Van Cliburn)	VIII	November 20–21	468
Mahler: Symphony No. 6, in A minor	VII	November 13–14	400
Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56	II	October 2–3	108
Symphony No. 5, in D minor, "Reformation," Op. 107	XVIII	February 19–20	1108
Menotti: "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi," for Chorus, Children's Chorus, Bass and Soprano Solo and Orchestra	IV	October 16–17	220
Moussorgsky: "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)	III	October 9–10	172
Mozart: Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504	II	October 2–3	75
Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319	X	December 11–12	587
Divertimento in D major, for Strings, K. 136	XVIII	February 19–20	1099
Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns, K. 287	XXI	March 19–20	1291
Piston: Symphony No. 8	XIX	March 5–6	1183

Prokofiev: Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111	XIV	January 15–16	850
"Alexander Nevsky," Cantata for Chorus and Orchestra, with Mezzo-Soprano, Op. 78	XXI	March 19–20	1324
Purcell: Suite from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell (Arranged by Barbirolli)	VI	November 6–7	331
Ravel: "Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2	XVII	February 12–13	1062
"Rapsodie Espagnole"	XVIII	February 19–20	1135
Respighi: "Vetrate di Chiesa" ("Church Windows"), Four Impressions for Orchestra	IV	October 16–17	217
Rossini: Overture to "La Scala di Seta"	XIII	January 8–9	779
Roussel: Symphony No. 4, Op. 53	XVII	February 12–13	1056
Ruggles: "Portals"	XXIII	April 9–10	1430
Schoenberg: Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder" (Part I) (Lili Chookasian)	IV	October 16–17	206
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 36 (Joseph Silverstein)	XXII	March 26–27	1362
Schubert: Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"	III	October 9–10	139
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"	XX	March 12–13	1230
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee	VIII	November 20–21	499
Schumann: Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115	IV	October 16–17	203
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Rhenish," Op. 97	XI	December 18–19	651
Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 1, Op. 10	I	September 25–26	16
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99 (Leonid Kogan)	IX	November 27–28	566
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47	XX	March 12–13	1258
Sibelius: Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43	V	October 30–31	311
Strauss: "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20	XIX	March 5–6	1163
The Awakening of Helen from "The Egyptian Helen," Op. 75 (Leontyne Price)	XXII	March 26–27	1365
Excerpts from "Salome," Op. 54: Dance of the Seven Veils; Interlude; Final Scene (Leontyne Price)	XXII	March 26–27	1370
Stravinsky: "Pulcinella," Ballet with Song in One Act	XIII	January 8–9	794
"Agon," Ballet	XV	January 29–30	924

Tchaikovsky: Prelude to "The Queen of Spades"	XIV	January 15–16	843
Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36	XV	January 29–30	947
Vaughan Williams: Symphony No. 6	V	October 30–31	280
Wagner: Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung" (Dawn; Siegfried's Rhine Journey; Interlude, Act I; Prelude to Act II; Siegfried's Death; Conclusion)	XIII	January 8–9	812
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	XXIV	April 16–17	1490
Weber: Overture to "Oberon"	XXII	March 26–27	1355

GUEST CONDUCTORS

Richard Burgin (Associate Conductor): October 9–10
Sir John Barbirolli: October 30–31; November 6–7
Charles Munch: February 12–13; 19–20
Leopold Stokowski: March 12–13
Aaron Copland: April 9–10

WORKS PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN THE FRIDAY–SATURDAY SERIES

Bach	Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174
Bartók	Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 3
Berger	Polyphony
Busoni	†Rondo Arlecchinesco
Carter	Variations for Orchestra
Copland	Music for a Great City
Dvořák	†Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10)
Haydn	†Symphony No. 21, in A major The Seasons ("Die Jahreszeiten")
Huggler	*"Sculptures," Op. 39
Kodály	Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"
Lewis	†Designs for Orchestra
Mahler	†Symphony No. 6, in A minor
Menotti	†The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi
Mozart	Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319
Piston	*Symphony No. 8
Prokofiev	†"Alexander Nevsky"

PURCELL	†Suite from the Dramatick Music of Henry Purcell (Arranged by Barbirolli)	1
ROSSINI	Overture to "La Scala di Seta"
RUGGLES	†"Portals"
SCHOENBERG	†Introduction and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder"
	†Violin Concerto
SHOSTAKOVITCH	†Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99
STRAUSS	†The Awakening of Helen from "The Egyptian Helen" Interlude and Final Scene from "Salome"
STRAVINSKY	†"Pulcinella," Ballet with Song, in One Act
TCHAIKOVSKY	Prelude to "The Queen of Spades"

---

* First performance

† First performance in Boston

NUMERICAL SUMMARY OF WORKS PERFORMED

Works by Brahms – 6; Mozart – 5; Beethoven – 4; Bach, Haydn, Shostakovitch, Strauss – 3; Berlioz, Kodály, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Prokofiev, Ravel, Schoenberg, Schubert, Schumann, Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky, Wagner – 2; Bartók, Berg, Berger, Bruckner, Busoni, Carter, Copland, Debussy, Delius, Dvořák, Elgar, Fine, Gluck, Honegger, Huggler, Lewis, Mahler, Menotti, Moussorgsky, Piston, Purcell, Respighi, Rossini, Roussel, Ruggles, Schuller, Sibelius, Vaughan Williams, Weber – 1 each. Total: 80 works by 48 composers.

ARTISTS WHO HAVE APPEARED AS SOLOISTS

BETHANY BEARDSLEE (Huggler: Sculptures). November 13–14. Sketch . . . 389

HELEN BOATWRIGHT (Haydn: The Seasons). January 1–2. Sketch . . . 709

CHARLES BRESSLER (Haydn: The Seasons). January 1–2. Sketch . . . 709

LILI CHOOKASIAN (Schoenberg: Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder"; Menotti: The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi). October 16–17. Sketch . . . 197

VAN CLIBURN (Liszt: Piano Concertos in A major and E-flat major). Sketch . . . 453

PHYLLIS CURTIN (Berg: "Le Vin"). February 5–6.

JULES ESKIN (Brahms: Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello). December 18–19. Sketch . . . 645

*SIDNEY FOSTER (Bartók: Piano Concerto No. 3). April 9–10. Sketch . . . 1349

GRANT JOHANNESEN (Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2). March 5–6. Sketch . . . 1157

LEONID KOGAN (Shostakovitch: Violin Concerto). November [illegible] Sketch . . . 517

ALFRED KRIPS (Bach: Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and [illegible] Orchestra). January 29–30. Sketch . . . 901

GEORGE LONDON (Menotti: The Death of the Bishop of Bri[illegible] October 16–17. Sketch . . . 197

*THOMAS PAUL (Haydn: The Seasons). January 1–2. Sketch . . . 709

(Stravinsky: "Pulcinella"). January 8–9. Sketc[illegible] . . . 774

LEONTYNE PRICE (Strauss: The Awakening of Helen from "The [illegible]tian Helen"; Final Scene from "Salome"). March 2[illegible] Sketch . . . 1350

JEROLD SIENA (Stravinsky: "Pulcinella"). January 8–9. Sketch . . . 773

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN (Brahms: Concerto in A minor for Violin [illegible] Violoncello; Bach: Concerto in D minor for Two Violins [illegible] String Orchestra; Schoenberg: Violin Concerto). Decem[illegible] 18–19; January 29–30; March 26–27).

ISAAC STERN (Beethoven: Violin Concerto). January 15–16. Sketc[illegible] . . . 837

HELEN VANNI (Stravinsky: "Pulcinella"). January 8–9. Sketch . . . 773

*SHIRLEY VERRETT (Brahms: Rhapsody for Contralto; Prokofiev: "Alexander Nevsky"). March 19–20. Sketch . . . 1285

---

* Artists who have appeared for the first time with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ARTISTS WHO HAVE ASSISTED IN PERFORMANCES

Choruses:	HANDEL AND HAYDN SOCIETY CHORUS, EDWARD F. GILDAY, Director (Haydn: The Seasons)
	HARVARD GLEE CLUB and RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY, ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor (Brahms: Rhapsody for Contralto Solo, Male Chorus and Orchestra; Prokofiev: "Alexander Nevsky")
	NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS, LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Conductor (Menotti: The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi)
	Members of the CATHOLIC MEMORIAL and ST. JOSEPH'S HIGH SCHOOLS GLEE CLUBS, BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN, Music Director (Menotti: The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi)
Cimbalom:	TONI KOVES-STEINER (Kodály: Suite from "Háry János")
Harpsichord:	LUISE VOSGERCHIAN (Haydn: The Seasons)

ERICH LEINSDORF played the harpsichord continuo in Haydn's Symphony in A major, No. 21, and Bach's Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174.

ENTR'ACTES

		PAGE
BURK, JOHN N.	The Boyhood of Shostakovitch	25
	Mendelssohn Today	92
	Schoenberg at the Crossroads	154
	Vaughan Williams	298
	England's Greatest Composer	336
	Beethoven, Thayer and Elliot Forbes	356
	The Well-Intentioned Annotator	424
	The Mismating of Bruckner and Mahler	435
	Liszt and the "Eternal Feminine"	476
	"A Simple Bohemian Musikant"	546
	Mozart and the Symphony	598
	The Virtuoso Conductor	679
	Pergolesi — A Frail Dreamer	806
	Beethoven's Vienna	870
	Bach's Years of Chamber Music at Cöthen	914
	Some Operas That Never Got Written	934
	Alban Berg	1000
	The Impressionists and Debussy	1048
	Mozart's Entertainment Music	1102
	A September Idyll in Wales	1114
	Ravel and "Les Apaches"	1139
	Strauss at the Crossroads	1168
	Brahms' "Bridal Song"	1310
	Prokofiev as a Russian Artist	1332
	Salome Via Oscar Wilde	1391
	Vive L'Amateur	1444
	Aaron Copland	1460
	Bruckner — The Lone Symphonist	1496
	The Quest for the Original Bruckner	1527
BUSONI, FERRUCIO	Mozart — Aphorisms	1300
CARDUS, NEVILLE	Edward Elgar	372
HUGHES, SPIKE	How to Write an Overture	782
KELLER, HANS	Simply a Great Composer	1266
LEINSDORF, ERICH	The Role of the Musical Director	607
	A Letter to the Subscribers	1483
LONGUS	A Tale of Young Love	1071
RICH, ALAN	Stuffed Owls and Stiff Composers	1194
SCHOENBERG, HAROLD C.	Our Changing Musical Language	1248
SCHUMANN, ROBERT	Aphorisms	656
SHAWE-TAYLOR, DESMOND	Haydn — The Contented Genius	526

PENSION FUND CONCERTS

The 134th Pension Fund Concert took place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 4. Artur Rubinstein was the soloist in the following program: Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3, and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1.

Eight regular Open Rehearsals at Symphony Hall during the past season (October 15, November 12, December 17, February 4 and 11, March 18 and 25, April 15) and a previous Pop Concert on June 27 benefited the Pension Fund.

The eight Saturday morning rehearsals of the Berkshire Festival were open to the public for the benefit of the Pension Fund.

MEETING OF THE FRIENDS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The 31st annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held in Symphony Hall on Thursday, April 8, 1965, at 4:00 o'clock. Hen[illegible]abot, President of the Trustees, addressed the meeting, after which Mr. Lei[illegible] conducted a rehearsal of the Orchestra in Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin" [illegible] trustees received the members at tea.

The Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mrs. Le[illegible]abot and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, Co-Chairmen, have continued their acti[illegible]hering interest in the Orchestra.

PROGRAMS OF THE SUNDAY AFTERNOON SERIES

Six concerts were given in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoons. R[illegible]RGIN conducted the concert on December 20 and CHARLES MUNCH on Febru[illegible]

September 27. BRAHMS: "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; SHOST[illegible] Symphony No. 1, Op. 10; BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 6, in F maj[illegible]al," Op. 68.

November 15. HUGGLER: "Sculptures," Op. 39 (BETHANY BEARDSLEE); [illegible] Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

December 20. SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"; C[illegible] Variations for Orchestra; MOUSSORGSKY: "Pictures at an Exhibition" [illegible] for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel).

February 14. BERLIOZ: Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23; DE[illegible] Iberia ("Images," No. 2); ROUSSEL: Symphony No. 4, Op. 53; RAVEL: [illegible] Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

March 7. STRAUSS: "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. [illegible] PISTON: Symphony No. 8; BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. [illegible] GRANT JOHANNESEN).

April 11. MOZART: Divertimento in B-flat major, for Strings and Two Horns, K. 287; STRAVINSKY: Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra (JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN); TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36.

PROGRAMS OF THE TUESDAY EVENING SERIES

Ten concerts were given in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evenings. SIR JOHN BARBIROLLI conducted the concert on November 3; RICHARD BURGIN conducted on December 22, and CHARLES MUNCH on February 16.

September 29. BRAHMS: "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; SHOSTAKOVITCH: Symphony No. 1, Op. 10; BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68.

No... Berlioz: Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9; Delius: "The W... the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"; ... Williams: Symphony No. 6; Sibelius: Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op...

Now... Schumann: Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115; Mahler: ... No. 6, in A minor.

De... Kodály: Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"; ...: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Dvořák: Symphony No. 3, ...jor (Op. 10).

De... ...chubert: Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic"; Carter: Varia... ...rchestra; Moussorgsky: "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Arranged for ... Maurice Ravel).

Jan... ...: The Seasons (Helen Boatwright, Charles Bressler, Thomas ... and Haydn Society Chorus).

Feb... ...: Sinfonia from Cantata No. 174; Bach: Concerto in D minor for ...nd String Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein, Alfred Krips); Stravin- ... Ballet; Wagner: Excerpts from "Götterdämmerung."

Febr... ...ioz: Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23; Debussy: Ibéria ... 2); Roussel: Symphony No. 4, Op. 53; Ravel: "Daphnis et ... Suite No. 2.

Mar... "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20; Piston: ... 8; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (...nesen).

Apri... ...en: Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93; Stravinsky: Concerto ...lin and Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein); Tchaikovsky: Symphony ...nor, Op. 36.

...ams OF THE TUESDAY EVENING "CAMBRIDGE" SERIES

Six co... the "Cambridge" Series formerly held in Sanders Theatre, Harvard Univers... were given in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evenings.

October 1... Brahms: "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 1, Op. 10; Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op...

November 10. Mozart: Symphony No. 38, in D major, "Prague," K. 504; Berger: Polyphony; Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

December 15. Schumann: Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115; Mahler: Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

January 12. Mozart: Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319; Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Brahms: Concerto in A minor for Violin and Violoncello, Op. 102 (Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin).

March 16. Strauss: "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20; Piston: Symphony No. 8; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (Grant Johannesen).

April 13. Stravinsky: "Agon," Ballet; Stravinsky: Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein); Prokofiev: Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111.

PROGRAMS OF THE WEDNESDAY EVENING SERIES

A new series of three concerts in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evenings.

November 25. Kodály: Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"; Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 3, in A minor, "Scottish," Op. 56.

January 27. Dedicated to the Memory of Sir Winston Churchill. Schumann: Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115; Mahler: Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

April 14. Beethoven: Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93; Stravinsky: Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein); Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36.

PROGRAMS OF THE THURSDAY EVENING SERIES

Six concerts were given in Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings. Sir John Barbirolli conducted the concert on November 5 and Charles Munch on February 18.

October 1. Brahms: "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 1, Op. 10; Beethoven: Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Op. 68.

November 5. Berlioz: Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Op. 9; Delius: "The Walk to the Paradise Garden," Intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet"; Vaughan Williams: Symphony No. 6; Sibelius: Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 43.

January 14. Schumann: Overture to Byron's "Manfred," Op. 115; Mahler: Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

January 28. Bach: Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra (In Memory of Sir Winston Churchill) (Joseph Silverstein, Alfred Krips); Mozart: Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319; Brahms: Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73.

February 18. Berlioz: Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23; Debussy: Ibéria ("Images," No. 2); Roussel: Symphony No. 4, Op. 53; Ravel: "Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

March 11. Strauss: "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20; Piston: Symphony No. 8; Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (Grant Johannesen).

CONCERTS OUTSIDE BOSTON

NEW YORK CITY

Five Wednesday evening concerts in Philharmonic Hall: October 21 — Brahms, "Academic Festival" Overture, Op. 80; Mendelssohn, Symphony No. 3, in A minor, Op. 56; Menotti, "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" (New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, Director, Catholic Memorial and St. Joseph's High Schools Glee Clubs, Berj Zamkochian, Director, George London, Lili Chookasian). December 2 — Huggler, "Sculptures," Op. 39 (Bethany Beardslee); Mahler, Symphony No. 6, in A minor. January 20 — Tchaikovsky, Introduction to "The Queen of Spades"; Prokofiev, Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111; Beethoven, Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 (Isaac Stern). February 24 (Charles Munch, Conductor) — Berlioz, Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Op. 23; Debussy, Ibéria ("Images," No. 2); Roussel, Symphony No. 4, Op. 53; Ravel, "Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2. March 31 — Brahms, Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (Grant Johannesen); Strauss, "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20; Piston, Symphony No. 8; Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg."

Five Friday evening concerts in Philharmonic Hall: October 23 — Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 1, Op. 10; Schoenberg, Excerpt and Song of the Wood-Dove from "Gurre-Lieder" (Lili Chookasian); Mendelssohn, Symphony No. 3, in A minor, Op. 56. December 4 — Kodály, Variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock"; Liszt, Piano Concerto in A major, No. 2 (Van Cliburn); Schuller, Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Liszt, Piano Concerto in E-flat major, No. 1 (Van Cliburn). January 22 — Mozart, Symphony No. 33, in B-flat major, K. 319; Fine, Toccata Concertante; Prokofiev, Symphony No. 6, in E-flat minor, Op. 111. February 26 — Mozart, Divertimento in D major, K. 136; Mendelssohn, Symphony No. 5, in D minor, Op. 107; Honegger, Symphony No. 4; Ravel, "Rapsodie Espagnole." April 2 — Brahms, Piano Concerto No. 2, in B-flat major, Op. 83 (Grant Johannesen); Strauss, "Don Juan," Tone Poem (after Nikolaus Lenau), Op. 20; Piston, Symphony No. 8; Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg."

Four concerts were given on Saturday evenings in Carnegie Hall as part of the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras, sponsored by The Carnegie Hall Corporation: December 5 — Haydn, Symphony in A major, No. 21; ...ořák, Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major (Op. 10); Shostakovitch, Con...rto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 99 (Leonid Kogan). January 23 — ...ossini, Overture to "La Scala di Seta"; Stravinsky, "Pulcinella" (Helen ...nni, Jerold Siena, Thomas Paul); Wagner, Excerpts from "Götter...mmerung." February 27 — Bach, Concerto in D minor for Two Violins ...d String Orchestra (Joseph Silverstein, Alfred Krips); Berg, "Le Vin" (...yllis Curtin); Brahms, Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73. April 3 ...choenberg, Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 36 (Joseph Silver...n); Mahler, Symphony No. 6, in A minor.

CONCERTS IN OTHER CITIES

Five Su... afternoon concerts in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence: ...tober 11, November 22, December 13 (Richard Burgin, Conductor), ...uary 10, March 21.

Five Th...day evening concerts in the Brooklyn Academy of Music: October 22, ...cember 3 (Richard Burgin, Conductor), January 21 (Joseph Silver...in, Jules Eskin), February 25 (Charles Munch, Conductor), April 1.

The foll...ing additional concerts: Newark, October 24; Storrs, October 25; New ...ndon, November 1 (Sir John Barbirolli, Conductor); Washington, ...vember 30 and December 1 (Bethany Beardslee); New Haven, January ... (Richard Burgin, Conductor; Helen Vanni, Jerold Siena, Thomas ...ul); Northampton, February 23 (Charles Munch, Conductor); Baltimore, February 28 (Joseph Silverstein, Jules Eskin); New Brunswick, March 2; Hartford, March 30 (Joseph Silverstein); Springfield, April 6.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS

This ensemble, formed under the advisory direction of Erich Leinsdorf, consists basically of the first chair players of the Orchestra. Concerts were given as follows in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Sunday evenings: November 8 — Beethoven, Serenade for Flute, Violin and Viola, Op. 25; Mozart, Quartet for Oboe, Violin, Viola and Cello, K. 370; Beethoven, Septet, Op. 20. February 7 — Copland, Vitebsk; Fine, Fantasia for String Trio; Mozart, Quintet for Piano and Winds, K. 452; Brahms, Piano Quartet, Op. 60 (Claude Frank, Piano Soloist). March 14 — Piston, Divertimento for Nine Instruments; Mozart, Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; Carter, Woodwind Quintet; Spohr, Nonet.

Concerts were given at the Hunter College Playhouse, New York, on December 7, February 1 and March 22, and at Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, D. C. on April 12.

114

ANNUAL FRIENDS MEETING

April 8th

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 450,303

APR 4 1965

BSO Annual Report

The annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at 4 p. m. Thursday at Symphony Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

APR 8 1965

Friends to See Symphony Rehearsal

Herald 4/8/65

A SHIRTSLEEVE REHEARSAL of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be witnessed this afternoon by Friends of the Orchestra at their annual meeting in Symphony Hall, at 4 o'clock. After this informal rehearsal, the 31st meeting of the Friends will be held. Afterwards, the trustees, headed by Henry B. Cabot, president, will receive in the foyer and tea will be served.

Co-chairmen of the meeting are Mrs. Arthur J. Livingston of Whittier Place and Mrs. Henry A. Morss Jr. of Otis Place. Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline are co-chairmen of the Council of Friends.

Among the hostesses will be Mrs. Lewis Cabot of Manchester, Mrs. Carlton O. Fuller and Mrs. Hans Kroto of Belmont, Mrs. Erick Kauders of Marblehead, Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard and Mrs. Samuel A. Levine of Newton Centre, Mrs. Richard Ely of Weston, Mrs. John Rich and Mrs. Charles Kingsley Jr. of Lexington, and Mrs. Bernard Zighera of Newton.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 9 1965

"YOUNG COMPOSERS must be encouraged," Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf tells a B.S.O. friend, and Women's Council Symphony co-chairman Mrs. Louis Cabot nods her agreement at tea and reception Thursday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 12 1965

An innovation for the recent annual meeting of Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra was the "shirtsleeves" rehearsal of "Prelude to Lohengrin" by Symphony musicians conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Henry B. Cabot, president of the B. S. O. trustees, welcomed the Frien with a brief talk and Mr. a Mrs. Leinsdorf gave a receptio in the Huntington avenue foye attractively decorated with "Springtime in the City" moti Hostesses assisting Mrs. Loui W. Cabot and Mrs. Norman Cahners, co-chairmen, include Mrs. Samuel A. Levine, Mr Carlton Perry Fuller, Mr Lewis Cabot, Mrs. Eric Kauders, Mrs. Hans Krot Mrs. John Rich, Mrs. Charle Kingsley, Jr., Mrs. Robert M. P Kennard, Mrs. Richard Ely Mrs. Bernard Zighera and Mrs Frank W. Whitty.

HOSTESSES—Serving on the hostess committee for the annual meeting of the Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall were, left to right, Mrs. Norman Cahners of Brookline, Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard of Newton, and Mrs. Hans Kroto of Belmont.

(Record American Photo, John F. Murphy)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

APR 9 1965

Dislike Symphony's Music? Don't Squawk to Pres. Cabot

Today in Society

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

After assuring 600 Friends of Symphony that without their understanding and help (financial) "there wouldn't BE any Boston Symphony Orchestra," Pres. Henry Cabot of the orchestra's trustees, went on to say yesterday at the Friends' annual meeting that the end of the season always brings letters from "the squawkers." He admonished the Friends, "If you don't like the music, don't write to me."

He then added that the trustees were mostly Brahms, Bach, and Beethoven men like himself, but that they also shared his feeling that new works were vital to the field of music today. And, anyway, he continued, the entire programming was strictly the bailiwick of the conductor.

He extolled the gifts to the orchestra — many of them sizeable — but took time to praise and to read the letter from a member of the orchestra (unnamed) who sent a check for $50 because he wanted to "share the responsibility for this great orchestra, not only as a performer, but as a patron, too."

Mentioning we were all familiar with having to pay bills, he said he had to pay —and there were more to out $197,000 in B.S.O. bills come.

He gave high praise to the Women's Council for their ingenious luncheons, dinners, and other fund-raisers.

Mr. Cabot also told his intent audience that there was going to be a "real party" at Symphony Hall next Sept. 24 —the Golden Trumpet Ball and 85th anniversary of Symphony's founding (mentioned in this column last week).

Mr. Cabot provoked a slight gasp from the audience when he announced the price of tickets for this lustrous occassion, which is to bring the great names in music from every capital in the world to Boston.

Single tickets will be $150 and boxes for 10 will be $1000.

This will be the council's big project to bridge the deficit gap, and the president urged its support, adding, "We need every friend of music."

He also warned his listeners not to write in about the $10 million arts foundation Federal grant, and proceeded to expertly break the grant down into its various divisions and hand-outs. Boston Symphony would get $2300, "if that," he said.

The orchestra always plans a surprise program for the annual Friends' meeting, and a shirt-sleeves rehearsal was yesterday's surprise. (Mr. Cabot apologized for not removing his own coat, saying that Mrs. Cabot wouldn't let him).

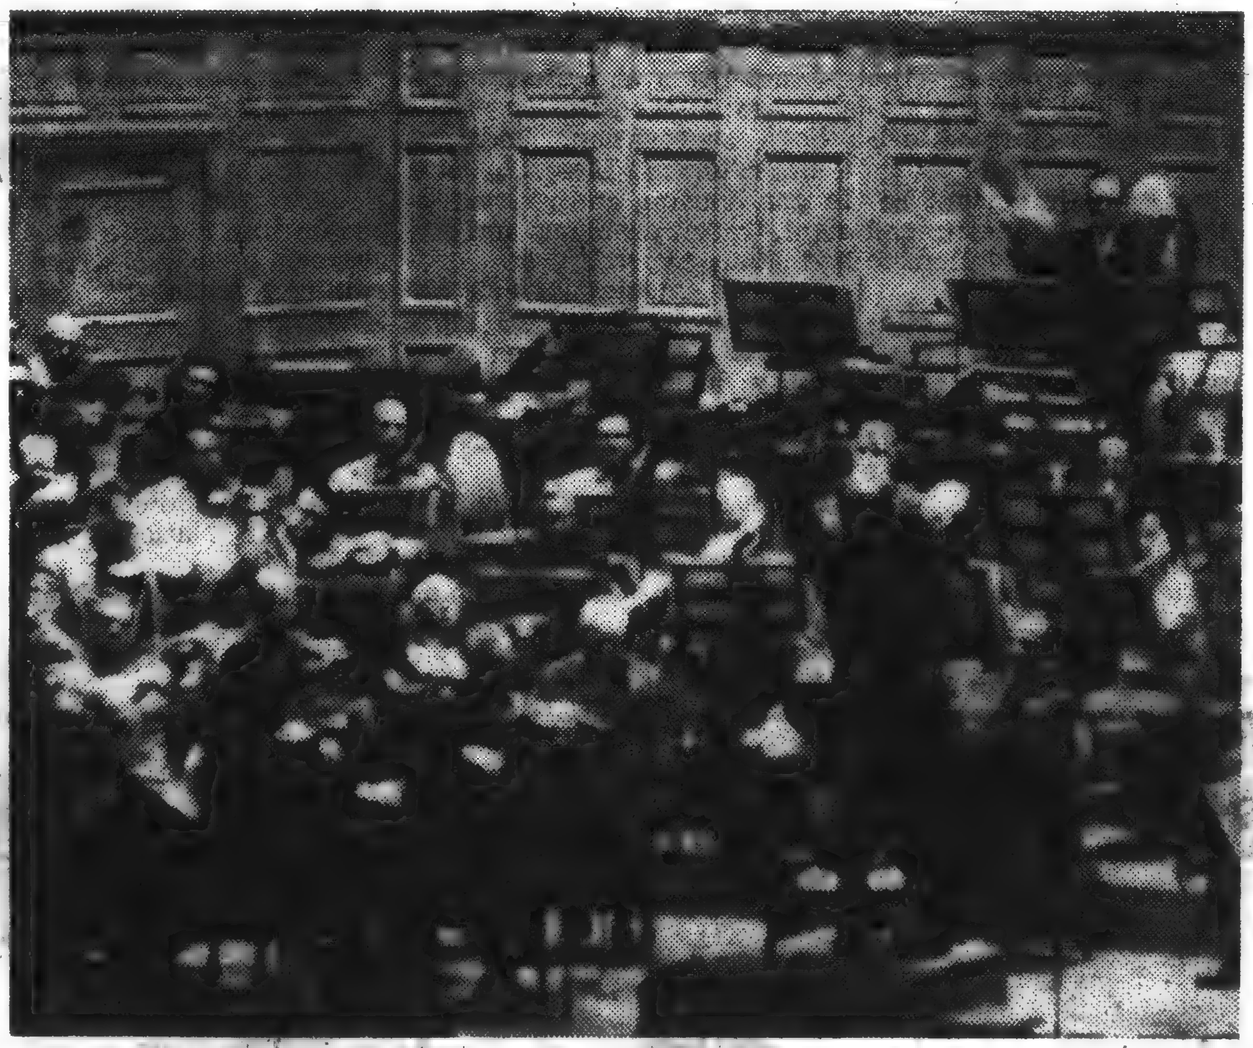
The audience did see an actual rehearsal, too; Mr. Leinsdorf and the B.S.O.'s good men and true haven't had time to go over the Wagner for next week's concert because Aaron Copland has been rehearsing for today's concert, which he is to guest-conduct.

Guests then adjourned to the front foyer for a lavish and lovely tea contributed by the Women's Council. As an earnest of decorative things to come—and their plans for an 1881 setting for the Great Ball are fabulous —yesterday's charming topiary trees and pale pink geraniums were perfect, and the long inviting tables an attractive, cordial council hostesses, headed by co-chairmen Mrs. Louis Cabot and Mrs. Norman Cahners, made this a very pleasant occasion indeed.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his wife took pains to shake hands and exchange a few words with each guest.

Joining them in greetings were a number of the trustees like E. Morton Jennings Jr. and his decorative wife; Theodore Ferris; Francis Hatch; only woman trustee in the orchestra's 85-year history, Mrs. James H. Perkins; Emeritus trustee Oliver Wolcott; Edward Taft; Palfrey Perkins and their wives.

Also: Russell Codman; the Ralph Lawsons; another young and lovely Mrs. Lewis Cabot; blonde, pretty Mrs. Charles F. Hovey; chic, dark-haired Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, already deep in plans for the ball; Mrs. Charles E. Bacon; Mrs. Edward Francis.



SHIRTSLEEVE REHEARSAL by Boston Symphony Orchestra was staged as a treat for Friends of the B.S.O., who held their annual meeting Thursday.

(Globe Photo by Sam Hammat)

AWARDS

MUSIC BUSINESS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
E. O. WEEK - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DE 2 6 1964 Bykoller

USIC BUSINESS

Cla al Awards—1964

ER H LEINSDORF

Mus ian Of The Year

It was in the fall of 1962 that Erich Leinsdorf took over his present post as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Critics and audiences were particularly eloquent in their unanimous endorsement of the conductor at that time. Today, with over two years, hundreds of performances and several RCA Victor recordings behind him as the BSO's leader, we feel, there is much more to shout about. He is, therefore, our choice as Musician Of The Year.

It is customary to reserve tribute to an artist for those happy accidents in time which provide the special occasion—the birthday, anniversary, newly signed contract—all of which are unfortunately extra-musical. But the business of being a musician is not unlike other professions. It is the product of the artist's day-to-day conscientious attention to his craft; of promises fulfilled and faiths upheld. Leinsdorf is such a musician.

In Boston, on tour, and in the studio, Leinsdorf has maintained exceptionally high performance standards. At Tanglewood he has personally participated in revitalizing the ambitions of student performers and composers. He has pursued new areas in programming concerts, in effect expanding the repertoire of the BSO. He has put excitement and anticipation into concert-going. On records he has had a remarkable [illegible] record of superior quality and intelligent interpretation.

For the [illegible]ngs, and much more, Erich Leinsdorf is our choice for Musician Of The Year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

APR 27 1965

Music Federation Award to Leinsaori

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the recipient of the National Citation by the National Federation of Music Clubs on Saturday. The award, the Federation's highest honor, was made in recognition of Mr. Leinsdorf's distinguished service to the nation and the world through music. Mr. Leinsdorf was unable to be present at the ceremonies due to recording commitments with the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall.

The citation was announced at the Honors Luncheon of the National Federation of Music Clubs at its annual convention in Miami Beach. Robert Cosgrove, of the Baldwin Piano Company, accepted the award in Mr. Leinsdorf's absence.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

JAN 27 1965

Awards Given Leinsdorf And Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Several recordings by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~have~~ received ~~top~~ awards in the 1964 polls of best orchestral recordings of the year.

For Mahler's Fifth

The Saturday Review annual poll of American music critics named the Leinsdorf-Boston Symphony performance of Mahler's Fifth Symphony as the best orchestral recording of the year.

In the New York Times' listing by Martin Bookspan of the 10 best tape recordings of the year, two Leinsdorf-Boston Symphoney recordings were included, the Mahler Fifth Symphony and the Mozart Requiem which was recorded live during the memorial service for John F. Kennedy in Boston's Holy Cross Cathedral last January. Music Business magazine reported that the Mozart was listed by the recording company as its second best-selling classical release of 1964. In addition, the orchestra's recording of the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofiev was listed by Time Magazine as the first of the three best orchestral recordings of 1964.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the BS, received yet another honor. Music Business Magazine elected him musician of the year in 1964. The magazine made this statement: "The business of being a musician is not unlike other professions. It is the product of the artist's day-to-day conscientious attention to his craft; of promises fulfilled and faiths upheld. Leinsdorf is such a musician.

"In Boston, on tour, and in the studio, Leinsdorf has maintained exceptionally high performance standards. At Tanglewood he has personally participated in revitalizing the ambitions of student performers and composers. He has pursued new areas in programming concerts, in effect expanding the repertoire of the BSO. He has put excitement and anticipation into concert-going. On records he has had a remarkable track record of superior quality and intelligent interpretation."

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 652,135 SUN. 1,355,614

APR 15 1965 Bykoller

GRAMMYS GIVEN FOR TOP RECORDS

Armstrong, Bernstein and Boston Symphony Honored

By ALBERT ASHFORTH

"Hello, Dolly!" the title song of the Broadway musical, won 2 of the 47 Grammys presented by the National Academy of Recording Artists Tuesday night. The award for the best male vocal performance went to Louis Armstrong for his rendition of the song (Kapp Records), and Jerry Herman, its composer, received the lumbia), was voted the year's outstanding.

Leonard Bernstein's Symphony No. 3 ("Kaddish"), with the composer conducting the New York Philharmonic (Co- voted the year's outstanding

The presentation ceremonies were held in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Nashville. Here they took place in the Grand Ballroom of the Astor Hotel before an audience of more than 800 persons prominent in the recording industry.

This was the seventh time the Grammys were awarded. The gold-plated statuette in the shape of an old-fashioned gramophone carries the same meaning for the record industry as the Oscar does for the film world.

In the classical field, the best recording by an orchestra was by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Mahler's Fifth Symphony (RCA-Victor) and excerpts from Berg's opera "Wozzeck." The pianist Vladimir Horowitz was cited as the best instrumental soloist for his performance of works by Debussy, Beethoven and Chopin.

The best opera recording was Bizet's "Carmen" (RCA-Victor), played by Herbert von Karajan and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and Chorus. The award for choral performance went to the Robert Shaw Chorale for Benjamin Britten's "A Ceremony of Carols" (RCA-Victor).

Stan Getz shared the jazz award for "the record of the year" with Astrud Gilberto for their recording of "The Girl From Ipanema." The "non-classical album of the year" award went to Mr. Getz and João Gilberto for "Getz/Gilberto" (Verve).

The Beatles' performance of "A Hard Day's Night" was judged the best performance by a vocal group.

Henry Mancini was a triple Grammy winner for his recording (RCA-Victor) of the "Pink Panther" theme of the motion picture. The disk was cited for instrumental composition, instrumental arrangement and instrumental performance.

Barbara Streisand's "People" (Columbia) was also a triple winner—for vocal performance by a female, accompaniment arrangement and album cover.

"Mary Poppins," sung by Julie Andrews, Dick Van Dyke and the original film cast (Buena Vista), was voted the best recording for children. In the spoken-word category, the British Broadcasting Corporation's tribute to President Kennedy by the cast of "That Was the Week That Was" (Decca) was the winner.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 817,087 SUN. 1,144,326

APR 14 1965 Bykoller

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

APR 24 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

APR 24 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 26 1965

Citation Goes To Leinsdorf For Music Role

MIAMI BEACH (AP)—The National Federation of Music Clubs awarded citations today to 11 individuals and groups for their contributions to the world of music.

Federation citations were presented to Dr. Bertha Foster, the University of Miami's first dean of music; Dr. Erich Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor; the University of Texas, and the Ford Foundation.

Presidential citations went to Dr. Henry Hobart, founder-director of Inspiration Point Fine Arts Academy, Eureka Springs, Ark., and Ted Shawn, New York dance director.

Recipients of Recognition Citations were Dr. Arturo Di Filippi, founder-director of the Junior and Senior Opera Guilds of Miami; Lukas Foss, Rochester, N.Y., composer and conductor; Mu Phi Epsilon and Delta Omicron, international music fraternities, and the U.S. Army.

AWARDS

MUSIC BUSINESS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
E. O. WEEK - CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 2 6 1964 Byfeller

MUSIC BUSINESS

Cla cal Awards—1964
ER H LEINSDORF
Mus ian Of The Year

It was in the fall of 1962 that Erich Leinsdorf took over his present post as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Critics and audiences were particularly eloquent in their unanimous endorsement of the conductor at that time. Today, with over two years, hundreds of performances and several RCA Victor recordings behind him as the BSO's leader, we feel, there is much more to shout about. He is, therefore, our choice as Musician Of The Year.

It is customary to reserve tribute to an artist for those happy accidents in time which provide the special occasion—the birthday, anniversary, newly signed contract —all of which are unfortunately extra-musical. But the business of being a musician is not unlike other professions. It is the product of the artist's day-to-day conscientious attention to his craft; of promises fulfilled and faiths upheld. Leinsdorf is such a musician.

In Boston, on tour, and in the studio, Leinsdorf has maintained exceptionally high performance standards. At Tanglewood he has personally participated in revitalizing the ambitions of student performers and composers. He has pursued new areas in programming concerts, in effect expanding the repertoire of the BSO. He has put excitement and anticipation into concert-going. On records he has had a remarkable track record of superior quality and intelligent interpretation.

For these things, and much more, Erich Leinsdorf is our choice for Musician Of The Year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453
APR 27 1965

Music Federation Award to Leinsdorf

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the recipient of the National Citation by the National Federation of Music Clubs on Saturday. The award, the Federation's highest honor, was made in recognition of Mr. Leinsdorf's distinguished service to the nation and the world through music. Mr. Leinsdorf was unable to be present at the ceremonies due to recording commitments with the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall.

The citation was announced at the Honors Luncheon of the National Federation of Music Clubs at its annual convention in Miami Beach. Robert Cosgrove, of the Baldwin Piano Company, accepted the award in Mr. Leinsdorf's absence.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193
JAN 27 1965

Awards Given Leinsdorf And Boston Symphony

BOSTON — Several recordings by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~have~~ received top awards in the 1964 polls of best orchestral recordings of the year.

For Mahler's Fifth

The Saturday Review annual poll of American music critics named the Leinsdorf-Boston Symphony performance of Mahler's Fifth Symphony as the best orchestral recording of the year.

In the New York Times' listing by Martin Bookspan of the 10 best tape recordings of the year, two Leinsdorf-Boston Symphoney recordings were included, the Mahler Fifth Symphony and the Mozart Requiem which was recorded live during the memorial service for John F. Kennedy in Boston's Holy Cross Cathedral last January. Music Business magazine reported that the Mozart was listed by the recording company as its second best-selling classical release of 1964. In addition, the orchestra's recording of the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofiev was listed by Time Magazine as the first of the three best orchestral recordings of 1964.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the BS, received yet another honor. Music Business Magazine elected him musician of the year in 1964. The magazine made this statement: "The business of being a musician is not unlike other professions. It is the product of the artist's day-to-day conscientious attention to his craft; of promises fulfilled and faiths upheld. Leinsdorf is such a musician.

"In Boston, on tour, and in the studio, Leinsdorf has maintained exceptionally high performance standards. At Tanglewood he has personally participated in revitalizing the ambitions of student performers and composers. He has pursued new areas in programming concerts, in effect expanding the repertoire of the BSO. He has put excitement and anticipation into concert-going. On records he has had a remarkable track record of superior quality and intelligent interpretation."

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 652,135 SUN. 1,355,614

APR 1 5 1965 Byfeller

GRAMMYS GIVEN FOR TOP RECORDS

Armstrong, Bernstein and Boston Symphony Honored

By ALBERT ASHFORTH

"Hello, Dolly!" the title song of the Broadway musical, won 2 of the 47 Grammys presented by the National Academy of Recording Artists Tuesday night. The award for the best male vocal performance went to Louis Armstrong for his rendition of the song (Kapp Records), and Jerry Herman, its composer, received the lumbia), was voted the year's outstanding.

Leonard Bernstein's Symphony No. 3 ("Kaddish"), with the composer conducting the New York Philharmonic (Co-voted the year's outstanding

The presentation ceremonies were held in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Nashville. Here they took place in the Grand Ballroom of the Astor Hotel before an audience of more than 800 persons prominent in the recording industry.

This was the seventh time the Grammys were awarded. The gold-plated statuette in the shape of an old-fashioned gramophone carries the same meaning for the record industry as the Oscar does for the film world.

In the classical field, the best recording by an orchestra was by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Mahler's Fifth Symphony (RCA-Victor) and excerpts from Berg's opera "Wozzeck." The pianist Vladimir Horowitz was cited as the best instrumental soloist for his performance of works by Debussy, Beethoven and Chopin.

The best opera recording was Bizet's "Carmen" (RCA-Victor), played by Herbert von Karajan and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and Chorus. The award for choral performance went to the Robert Shaw Chorale for Benjamin Britten's "A Ceremony of Carols" (RCA-Victor.

Stan Getz shared the last award for "the record of the year" with Astrud Gilberto for their recording of "The Girl From Ipanema." The "non-classical album of the year" award went to Mr. Getz and João Gilberto for "Getz/Gilberto" (Verve).

The Beatles' performance of "A Hard Day's Night" was judged the best performance by a vocal group.

Henry Mancini was a triple Grammy winner for his recording (RCA-Victor) of the "Pink Panther" theme of the motion picture. The disk was cited for instrumental composition, instrumental arrangement and instrumental performance.

Barbara Streisand's "People" (Columbia) was also a triple winner—for vocal performance by a female, accompaniment arrangement and album cover.

"Mary Poppins," sung by Julie Andrews, Dick Van Dyke and the original film cast (Buena Vista), was voted the best recording for children. In the spoken-word category, the British Broadcasting Corporation's tribute to President Kennedy by the cast of "That Was the Week That Was" (Decca) was the winner.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 817,087 SUN. 1,144,326

APR 1 4 1965 Byfeller

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819
APR 2 4 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855
APR 2 4 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
APR 2 6 1965

Citation Goes To Leinsdorf For Music Role

MIAMI BEACH (AP)—The National Federation of Music Clubs awarded citations today to 11 individuals and groups for their contributions to the world of music.

Federation citations were presented to Dr. Bertha Foster, the University of Miami's first dean of music; Dr. Erich Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor; the University of Texas, and the Ford Foundation.

Presidential citations went to Dr. Henry Hobart, founder-director of Inspiration Point Fine Arts Academy, Eureka Springs, Ark., and Ted Shawn, New York dance director.

Recipients of Recognition Citations were Dr. Arturo Di Filippi, founder-director of the Junior and Senior Opera Guilds of Miami; Lukas Foss, Rochester, N.Y., composer and conductor; Mu Phi Epsilon and Delta Omicron, international music fraternities, and the U.S. Army.

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 353,158 SUN. 421,847

APR 2 5 1965

Two Miamians Given Awards For Their Service to Music

Two of the 11 awards presented Saturday by the National Federation of Music Clubs went to Miamians: Dr. Bertha Foster, first dean of the University of Miami's School of Music, and Dr. Arturo di Filippi, director-manager of the Miami Opera Guild.

Mrs. Clifton J. Muir of Coral Gables, president, gave out the honors at the federation's national convention at the Deauville Hotel in Miami Beach. The citations were made for "distinguished service to the world of music."

Dr. Foster, a native of Indiana, studied at the Cincinnati School of Music and came to Florida in 1908 to establish the music department at Florida State College for Women, now Florida State University.

She also founded the School of Music Arts in Jacksonville, the Miami Conservatory of Music and the Musicians' Club of America.

The club is the only retirement home for musicians in the U.S. Miss Foster retired as director last year but she is still president and she still plays the organ.

Dr. Di Filippi, a native of Italy, worked his way to the U.S. on a freighter at the age of 13. He attended Kansas Wesleyan University of Music and Julliard School of Music before returning to Europe to study voice.

Dr. Di Filippi
. . . founded Opera Guild

Dr. Bertha Foster
. . . first dean

He made his American operatic debut in Cincinnati in 1928. When sudden illness interrupted his promising singing career, he came to the University of Miami as a teacher.

Dr. Di Filippi founded the Opera Guild 25 years ago. It presented its first opera in 1942 at the Miami Senior High School Auditorium with a budget of $1,000 and local talent including Dr. Di Filippi himself.

Next season the guild has scheduled three productions: "La Boheme," "Aida" and "Il Trovatore," with major stars.

Three different categories of awards for "distinguished service to the world of music" were given by the NFMC.

Federation citations went to Dr. Foster, Dr. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony; the University of Texas for its music program featuring works of young conposers, and the Ford Foundation for financial aid to operatic and symphonic groups.

Presidential citations were presented to Dr. Di Filippi, Dr. Henry Hobart, founder of the Inspiration Point Fine Arts Academy, Eureka Springs, Ark., and Ted Shawn, founder of the University of the Dance.

Recipients of recognition awards were the Army for promotion of American music; [illegible] Foss, composer and conductor, and international music fraternities, Mu Phi Epsilon and Delta Omicron.

DAILY SUN
MIAMI BEACH FLA.
D. 14,399 SUN. 14,399

APR 2 6 1965

* * *

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE . . . Of the seven recipients of citations given Saturday by the National Federaton of Music Clubs, two are from Miami The NFMC citation, presented at the Music Clubs' convention, were awarded Dr. Bertha Foster and a presidential citation to Dr. Arturo di Filippi.

Dr. Foster received the citation "in recognition of her distinguished service through music, as a nationally known organist, as founder and director of two conservatories of music, as one of the founders of the University of Miami and its first Dean of Music, and as founder of The Musicians Club of America with its provisions for happiness and well being for musicians of the nation."

Dr. di Filippi received a presidential citation "in recognition of his distinguished service to the world of music, as founder and artistic director of the Junior and Senior Opera Guilds of Greater Miami, as a concert artist, a master musician and as a philanthropist who has substantially helped many young artists."

Other recipients of the NFMC citations were Dr. Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the University of Texas and the Ford Foundation; Dr. Henry Hobart, Ted Shawn and the United States Army for "advancing national and world culture through distinguished service to music." The Adjutant General, Major General Lambert and Miss Margaret Lynn, director of the Army Entertainment Program, were present to accept the award for the Army.

Dr. Hobart was cited for his work as founder-irector of Inspiration Point Fine Arts Academy, Eureka Springs, Ark., and Ted Shawn for his distinguished service to the world of dance.

B.S.O MEMBERS ACTIVITIES

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

SEP 21 [illegible]

DINNER MEETING of the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra was held Sunday evening at the 88 Restaurant to launch the 1964-65 season. Seated are Mrs. Marion Casey, left, of Manchester, chairman and Miss Anabel Dodge of Manchester, treasurer. Standing from left are Georges Morin of Manchester, vice president; Conductor Rolland Tapley of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Walter Scheirer of Manchester, president. (Staff Photo)

Sixth Season Is Underway

Philharmonic Society Has Dinner

The sixth season of the New Hampshire Philharmonic Society was launched last night at a dinner meeting held at the 88 Restaurant, attended by approximately 75 members and guests. Present for the occasion, and speaker for the evening was Rolland Tapley of Boston, conductor for the past six years.

At the annual business meeting which preceeded the dinner, Walter B. Scheirer of Manchester was re-elected president, Ralph Bowie of Candia was elected vice president, and Elsie Schilling and Anabel A. Dodge, both of the Queen City, were re-elected secretary and treasurer respectively.

Elected directors were Carl Bartlett of Concord, Marion Casey, Claire Morrison, George Morin, Dr. H. L. Tung, all of Manchester, and Dr. Hermann Sander of Candia. The nominating committee included Richard W. Leavitt of Candia, chairman, Claire Morrison, Manchester, Evelyn Querfurth, Peterboro, Doris Whitney, Nashua, and Dr. Tung.

Reports were made by President Scheirer, Secretary Schilling and Miss Dodge. A report was also made by Miss Kathleen O'Brien of Candia, a member of a group of students of the Society who studied for six weeks with the N.H. Summer Music Festival at Center Harbor. Other students were Bruce Erskine, Nancy and Natalie Peterson, Scott Chase, Thomas Fiske, and Shirley Wallingford, all of Manchester, and William Fuller of Concord.

Conductor Tapley, who has been a member of the Boston Symphony for over 45 years, told of plans for the year, which will officially start next Sunday night at 7:30 with the first of a weekly series of rehearsals at Memorial High School. He discussed plans to bring to Manchester and Concord well-known guest artists, whose names will be made public as soon as details of their appearance are completed.

President Sheirer stated that the first concert will be held November 22 or 29 in Manchester. A total of four concerts will be given, two in Manchester and two in Concord.

Approximately 60 members are now included in the New Hampshire Philharmonic Society. There is need for additional members, persons playing orchestral instruments such as violas, cellos, oboes and English horns. Musicians desiring to join the Society are asked to contact Edward Mayberger, manager of the Society, whose telephone number is 622-7688.

At the present time, the majority of the membership comes from Manchester, with about a dozen members from Concord. Other communities represented include Nashua, Peterboro, Candia, Derry, and Center Barnstead.

Co-chairmen of last night's dinner were Marion Casey and George Morin.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Dennis
Yarmouth Register
YARMOUTHPORT,
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,318

OCT 23 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise
FALMOUTH, Mass.
Semi-Wkly Circ. 5,056

OCT 30 1964

Giora Bernstein of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be soloist, playing the Mendelssohn Concerto in E Minor, at the Cape Cod Symphony's fall concert Nov. 9 at the Barnstable High School auditorium.

---

ewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

OCT 5 1964

ROLLAND TAPLEY

Philharmonic Rehearses For Opening Concert

If you're a violinist, a cellist, a proficient performer on the viola, the oboe or the bass, you may be one of the new members needed by the New Hampshire Philharmonic Society, which is already rehearsing for its first concert late in November.

Conducted by Rolland S. Tapley of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the N. H. Philharmonic is beginning its sixth season of public performances with several vacancies.

Skill, Hard Work

Membership qualifications include skill, experience in ensemble playing and the willingness to work hard at each Sunday evening rehearsal, held in Memorial High School.

Interested musicians should get in touch with Edward F. Mayberger, the society's business manager. His home address is 52 Martins Ferry Road, and his telephone number is 622-7688. If you doubt your qualifications to play in the N. H. Philharmonic as a "regular," you may still wish to attend one of the rehearsals and, later on, the concert programs.

Mr. Tapley, a first violinist with the Boston Symphony, which he joined in 1920, is also the conductor of the North Shore Philharmonic Orchestra and concertmaster of the Esplanade concerts given each year by the Boston Pops Orchestra.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Cape Codder
ORLEANS, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,915

OCT 22 1964

Giora Bernstein, who has been chosen soloist for the November 9 concert of the Cape Cod Symphony Orchestra. A member of the Boston Symphony, and director of the Boston Chamber Music Society, Mr Bernstein will play the Mendelssohn Concerto in E Minor.

118

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

DEC 1 1964

NEW HAMPSHIRE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA members rehearse for anual winter concert to be given Sunday evening, Dec. 13 in Practical Arts Auditorium. Seventy musicians from throughout the state will appear on stage under the direction of Rolland Tappley, conductor. In panel at left Miss Dorothy Belisle and Mrs. Gabrielle Houle (left to right) follow music score which includes string fingering movement. In panels to the right of Conductor Tappley, youthful oboe soloist Peter Bowman runs through a passage while Kathleen O'Brien of Raymond, who plays trumpet, watches Conductor Tappley and awaits her entry.

(Photos by George Naum)

N. H. Philharmonic Soloists Chosen for Dec. 13 Concert

Two outstanding Greater Boston area vocalists and a 17-year-old Concord clarinet virtuoso will be the soloists Sunday evening, Dec. 13, when the N. H. Philharmonic presents its first Manchester concert of the season at the Practical Arts auditorium.

Conducted by Rolland Tapley of the Boston Symphony who also conducts the North Shore Philharmonic Orchestra, the N. H. Philharmonic is composed of skilled amateurs and professionals from many parts of the state. It will make its first public appearance Saturday night, December 12, at the Crotched Mountain Center in Greenfield. The same program will be presented both evenings.

New to listeners in this area will be John Ring, baritone, and Lesli Loosli, soprano. Both have performed with the Boston Opera Players, the Boston Comic Opera Company and the widely acclaimed "Showtoppers" at the Statler-Hilton. Mr. Ring has also appeared as soloist with the Boston and Cleveland Symphony Orchestras and on a CBS nationwide television hook-up. Miss Loosli has sung summer opera at Tanglewood under Boris Goldovsky and has performed three times as soloist with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra.

John Adams, a Concord High School senior who has been a regular member of the Philharmonic in recent years, has appeared as soloist twice before with this orchestra as well as with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony, in which he held the first chair as clarinetist. He has also conducted and made recordings.

Tickets for the Manchester concert are now on sale at Coll's Pharmacy and Holland's Drug Store. They will also be sold at Morin's Music Center after December 1.

---

ngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (e)
KEENE, N. H.
Circ. 7,894

D

Center Hosts Orchestra On Dec. 12

The New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra will present its first 1964-65 concert Saturday afternoon, Dec. 12 at 2:30 at the Crotched Mountain Center in Greenfield.

The Granite State ensemble, composed of amateurs and professionals from many parts of New Hampshire, is conducted by Rolland Tapley of the Boston Symphony, who also conducts the North Shore Philharmonic. It will be the first large orchestra ever to offer a public concert at Crotched Mountain.

Three soloists will be presented on the program—one of them a 17-year-old Concord musician John Adams, who has previously appeared as clarinet soloist with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony and the N.H. Philharmonic. He has performed in Jordan Hall, Boston, and on WENH-TV, and last summer was voted the outstanding music student at Dartmouth's Congregation of the Arts.

The other guest artists will be Lesli Loosli, soprano, and John Ring, baritone. Both have made noteworthy reputations with the Boston Opera Players, the Boston Comic Opera Company and the "Showtoppers" at the Statler-Hilton. Ring has also appeared as soloist with the Boston and Cleveland Symphony orchestras and on nationwide television hookups. Miss Loosli has sung opera at Tanglewood under Boris Goldovsky, and has three times been a soloist with Arthur Fiedler and the "Pops."

MUSICAL MERCHANDISE
REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,700

DEC 1964

Harold Thompson (right) of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, demonstrates the proper method of striking this large cymbal, similar models of which frequently can be found in the percussion sections of large orchestras. Thompson helped demonstrate cymbals at the Avedis Zildjian Co. display.

NewEngland Newscl
Box 2078, Boston 6 •

Monadnock L
JAFFREY, N
Weekly C

DEC 8

Concer

The big secre
the Crotched Mo
Greenfield will b sound of music, h day season, whe shire Philharmo presents its first Saturday, Dec. 1 an audience children at the c
The Granite composed of t and professionals of New Hampsh
by Rolland Tap
Symphony, who c
North Shore Phil
be the first large to offer a p
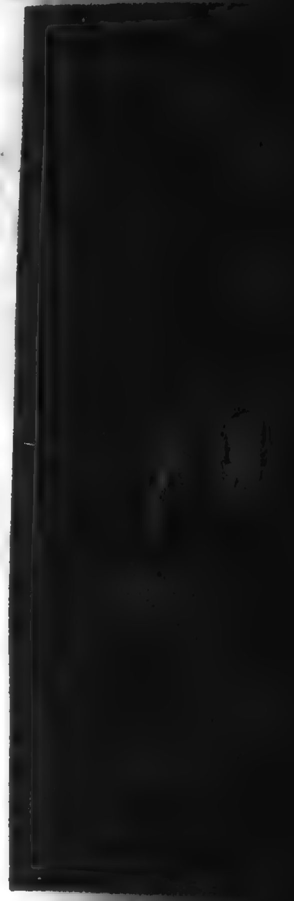
Crotched Mountai



ROLLAN

Three soloists ted on the progra
a 17-year old C
John Adams, w appeared as cl the Greater B
phony and the N. H
He has perform
Boston, and on WE summer was vote music student at D gregation of the A
The other gu
12 will be Lesli L and John Ring, bar made noteworthy
the Boston Oper

NewEngland
Box 2078, B

C WOON
Circ

Chambe Concert Friday

FRANKLIN — series of chamb certs by memb
Symphony Orc held Friday
Dean Junior Co
pel.
Members of phony Orches part of the Pr
Fredy Ostrov
Cauhape on Langendoen be assisted rector Giuse piano.
Selections
clude 'Pian nor," "Son
'Trio for Cello," "F Minor." The sponsored by the public.

119

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monadnock Ledger
JAFFREY, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 1,775

DEC 1964

Concert at Crotched

The big recreation building at the Crotched Mountain Center in Greenfield will be filled with the sound of music, heralding the holiday season, when the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra presents its first 1964-65 concert Saturday, Dec. 12 at 2:30, before an audience including crippled children at the center.

The Granite State ensemble, composed of talented amateurs and professionals from many parts of New Hampshire, is conducted by Rolland Tapley of the Boston Symphony, who also conducts the North Shore Philharmonic. It will be the first large orchestra ever to offer a public concert at Crotched Mountain.

ROLLAND TAPLEY

Three soloists will be presented on the program. . .one of them a 17-year old Concord musician John Adams, who has previously appeared as clarinet soloist with the Greater Boston Youth Symphony and the N. H. Philharmonic. He has performed in Jordan Hall, Boston, and on WENH-TV, and last summer was voted the outstanding music student at Dartmouth's Congregation of the Arts.

The other guest artists Dec. 12 will be Lesli Loosli, soprano, and John Ring, baritone. Both have made noteworthy reputations with the Boston Opera Players, the Boston Comic Opera Company, and the "Showtoppers" at the Statler-Hilton. Mr. Ring has also appeared as soloist with the Boston and Cleveland Symphony orchestras and on nationwide television hookups. Miss Loosli has sung opera at Tanglewood under Boris Goldovsky, and has three times been a soloist with Arthur Fiedler and the "Pops."

JOHN ADAMS

Arthur Fiedler, noted conductor of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, will appear as a guest to conduct one selection on the program for the benefit of the children's center.

Tickets are available from Beletete's Super Market, Mrs. Walter Greene and Mrs. D.D. Bean Jr.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 27,550

Chamber Music Concerts Start Friday At Dean

FRANKLIN — The first in a series of chamber music concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held Friday at 8 p.m. in the Dean Junior College Marvin Chapel.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra performing as part of the Pro Arte Quartet are Fredy Ostrovsky on violin; Jean Cauhape on viola, and Jacobus Langendoen on cello. They will be assisted by Dean Music Director Giuseppe deLellis at the piano.

Selections to be heard will include "Piano Quartet in E Minor," "Sonata in D Major," "Trio for Violin," "Viola and Cello," "Piano Quartet in F Minor." The concert series, sponsored by Dean, is open to the public.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

DEC 3 0 1964

Quartet Program

A string quartet composed by the "national hero of Basque music" will be performed by the Boston Symphony String Quartet in its Jan. 8 program in Jordan Hall. Quartet No. 1 by Juan Crisostomo Jacobo Antonio de Arriaga y Balzola will open the concert. Completing the program will be Schubert's Trio No. 2 in B flat major for violin, viola, and 'cello, and Hindemith's String Quartet No. 1 in F minor, op. 10. The performers, who are the quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, are Boston Symphony Orchestra men: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin. The Jan. 8 concert will begin at 8:30 p.m.; tickets are on sale at the Jordan Hall box office.

Arriaga's Quartet No. 1 is one of three quartets he published in Paris in 1824. He died in 1826 at the age of 19. Extraordinarily gifted, Arriaga had no previous musical training when, at 13, he wrote Los Esclavos Felices, an opera produced successfully in his native Bilbao. He was sent from Spain to study at the Paris Conservatory at the age of 15, and astonished his instructors with his precocity. Arriaga wrote a Mass, a Salve Regina and other church music, cantatas, songs, symphonies, and chamber music. The three string quartets were his only works published during his lifetime.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 2 4 1964

Boston Symphony String Quartet Performs Jan. 8

Works of Arriaga, Schubert and Hindemith will be performed by the Boston Symphony String Quartet in its Jan. 8 appearance in Jordan Hall. The ensmble, which is quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine and principal cellist Jules Eskin. The program will begin at 8:30 p.m.; tickets are on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office.

The Jan. 8 concert will include String Quartet No. 1 by Juan Arriaga, early nineteenth-century Spanish composer; Trio No. 2 in B flat major for violin, viola and 'cello by Franz Schubert; and String Quartet No. 1 in F minor, op. 10, written in 1919 by the late Paul Hindemith.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel
FRANKLIN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,370

DEC 1 0 1964

Dean Open Concert Series Scheduled

The first in a series of chamber music concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held Friday, Dec. 11, at 8 o'clock p.m. in the Dean Junior College Marvin Chapel.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra performing as part of the Pro Arts Quartet are Fredy Ostrovsky on violin, Jean Cauhape on viola, and Jacobus Langendoan on cello. They will be assisted by Dean music director, Giuseppe deLellis, on the piano.

Selections to be heard will include Piano Quartet in B Minor, Sonata in D Major, Trio for Violin, Viola and Cello, Piano Quartet in F Minor.

The concert series, sponsored by Dean, is open to the public.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Dennis
Yarmouth Register
YARMOUTHPORT,
Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,318

NOV 6 1964

Symphony plays Monday evening

The Cape Cod Symphony's fall concert Nov. 9 at Barnstable High School will present 65 musicians and a program of five selections.

The concert starts at 8:30 with the overture to Merry Wives of Windsor by Nicolai, Second is Haydn's Symphony No. 104.

Giora Bernstein, a second violinist of the Boston Symphony, will play the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto in E Minor following intermission. Mr. Bernstein is director of the Boston Chamber Music Society. He studied at the Israeli Academy of Music, graduated from Juilliard and Brandeis University.

The program winds up with Waltz from Sleeping Beauty Ballet by Tschaekowsky and the Intermezzo and Farandole from Bizet's L'Arlesienne Suite No. 2.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 2 7 1964

Program at Jordan Hall

SYMPHONY QUARTET TO PLAY ON JAN. 8

Works by Arriaga, Schubert, and Hindemith will be performed by the Boston Symphony String Quartet in its Friday, Jan. 8 appearance in Jordan Hall. The ensemble, which is quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin.

The program will begin at 8:30 p.m.; tickets are on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office.

The Jan. 8 concert will include String Quartet No. 1 by Juan Arriaga, early 19th century Spanish composer; Trio No. 2 in B flat major for violin, viola, and cello by Franz Schubert; and String Quartet No. 1 in F minor, op. 10, written in 1919 by the late Paul Hindemith.

The Arriaga Quartet No. 1 is one of three works—all string quartets—published while the precocious composer was still alive. He died in 1826 at the age

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

1964

String quartet

The Boston Symphony String Quartet, in residence at New England Conservatory, will play Friday Jan. 8, at Jordan Hall at 8:30. The program will comprise music by Arriaga, Schubert, and Hindemith. Tickets are available from the box office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105
NOV 1 5 1964

First Baroque Concert to Be All Bach

On Monday, Nov. 16, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform in the first of this year's series of Baroque concerts presented by the Cambridge Society for Early Music in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, at 8:30 p.m.

Silverstein will play Bach's Second Partita for solo violin, which ends with the famous Chaconne. Luise Vosgerchian, harpsichordist, will join him as continuo player in the Bach Partita in E minor and as partner in the last of the six Sonatas for violin and obbligato harpsichord.

Besides his duties as concert master for the Boston Symphony, Silverstein devotes much of his time performing with chamber groups. Miss Vosgerchian is on the Harvard University music faculty.

The Cambridge Society for Early Music will present its second concert on Nov. 23, with Ralph Kirkpatrick performing the entire First Book of the Well Tempered Klavier by Bach, and a third concert on Nov. 30, which will offer the St. John Passion by Schutz and two Bach cantatas. The Cambridge Festival Orchester will be under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

NOV 3 1964

BSO Quartet Plans Jordan Hall Debut

The newly-formed Boston Symphony String Quartet will perform chamber works of Haydn, Schubert and Brahms on Friday, Nov. 20 at 8:30 p.m., at Boston's Jordan Hall.

The ensemble includes BSO concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, violist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin. Tickets for the group's three-concert series are on sale at the Jordan Hall box office.

120

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,884

NOV 1 8 1964

Musicians From Area To Play In Wellesley

Six musicians from Norwood and Westwood are joining the Wellesley Symphony Orchestra for its Sixteenth Annual Pops Concert on Nov. 27, at 8:30 p.m. in the Wellesley Junior High School. They are Mrs. Jean Smyth, Anerew A. Parisi, Arthur Rodgers, Rev. Walton D. Moffit, Mrs. Ann Fleck, and Robert Fleck.

The Orchestra, conducted by Rolland Tapley, first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission, will present Leo Litwin, soloist, playing Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." It will also perform works by Tschaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Beethoven, deFalla, Rodgers and Richard Hayman.

The public is cordially invited to attend this Pops Concert, patterned after the famous Boston Symphony Pops Concerts. The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra has gained an outstanding reputation for the fine music and soloists presented each season. Larger and finer than ever before, the Orchestra will continue in this tradition with the Pops Concert on Nov. 27. Admission Free.

LAKE RONKONKOMA, N. Y.
REVIEW
W. 700

NOV 7 1964

AD-LIB

by Dr. Thomas L. Ramsey

It is most interesting during this age of space exploration and automation to find a person who leaves a technological field of endeavor to pursue a caree in one of the arts.

Such a man is Burton Fine, principal violist this year in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Fine's musical and scientific genius bloomed early in life and caused him a number of years of consternation. His parents were firmly against a musical career. As a result Mr. Fine was the possessor of a PHD in Chemistry at the age of 24.

As the result of an ad he read he finally gave in to his lifelong first love and auditioned for a job in the Boston Symphony as a second violinist. The next year, when the principal viola player announced that he was leaving, Mr. Fine auditioned for that position and got it. Such is the pull of art when one becomes its captive.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 18 1964

Trumpet Soloist With Brass Group

Roger Voisin of the Boston Symphony will appear as soloist in a brass ensemble program to be given Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. in Boston University Concert Hall under the auspices of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia chapters of both New England Conservatory and Boston University School of Fine and Applied Arts. The concert is open to the public without charge.

Voisin, an alumni member of the fraternity sponsoring this concert, will be featured in Vivaldi's Concerto for Two Trumpets in E Flat Major.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun. Circ. 488,105

NOV 22 1964

Wellesley Orchestra Pops Concert

Musicians from 20 communities are joining the Wellesley Symphony Orchestra for its 16th annual pops concert on Nov. 27 at 8:30 p.m. in Wellesley Junior High School.

Players will come from Framingham, Franklin, Holliston, Natick, Needham, Dedham, Westwood, Norwood, Newton, Watertown, Waltham, Cambridge, Arlington, Burlington, Sudbury, Weston, Wayland, Belmont, Weymouth and Wollaston.

The orchestra, conducted by Rolland Tapley, a first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission, will present pianist Leo Litwin playing Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." It will also perform works by Tchaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Beethoven, de Falla, Rodgers and Richard Hayman.

Litwin is the official pianist for the Boston Pops.

Admission is free.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

NOV 2 4 1964

Pops Concert In Wellesley

WELLESLEY — The 16th annual Pops Concert of the Wellesley Symphony Orchestra will be held at the junior high school Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Rolland Tapley, conductor of the orchestra, and a first violinist with the Boston Symphony, will present a program of selections from Tschaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Beethoven, deFalla, Rodgers and Richard Hayman.

Leo Litwin, pianist for the Boston Symphony Pops Orchestra, will be the soloist. He will play Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Pops atmosphere will be prevalent, with tables rimming the orchestra and light refreshments will be served.

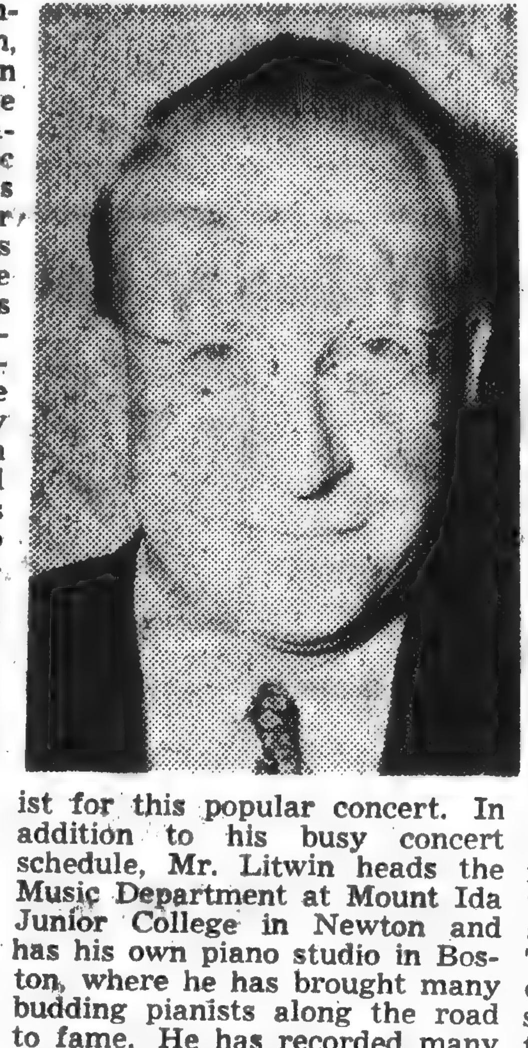
The concert is sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,469

NOV 1 9 1964

Leo Litwin, Piano Soloist For Wellesley Symphony Pops November 27



For the Sixteenth Annual Pops Concert, Rolland Tapley, conductor, has chosen Leo Litwin, official pianist of the Boston Symphony Pops Orchestra, to be soloist. Mr. Litwin, who is nationally known for his pianistic excellence, will play Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" — a number almost synonomous with his name and the Boston Pops. The Wellesley Symphony Pops is patterned closely after the popular concerts of the Boston Symphony Pops. For this evening, the Orchestra turns the Wellesley Junior High School Gymnasium into a gayly festive hall. Small tables for friends and guests give a delightful informality to the evening of musical entertainment. Refreshments are served by a Corps of Wellesley Junior High girls under the supervision of Mrs. R. White.

The Sixteenth Annual Pops Concert will be presented November 27 at 8:30 p.m. in the Wellesley Junior High School. There is no admission charge and all are welcome. Bleacher seats are available for those who prefer them, and for late-comers. Rolland Tapley, conductor of the orchestra since its beginning, has planned an entertaining evening featuring music of Tschaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Beethoven, deFalla, Rodgers and Richard Hayman.

Wellesley is particularly proud to welcome Leo Litwin as soloist for this popular concert. In addition to his busy concert schedule, Mr. Litwin heads the Music Department at Mount Ida Junior College in Newton and has his own piano studio in Boston, where he has brought many budding pianists along the road to fame. He has recorded many popular favorites with the Boston Symphony Pops Orchestra for RCA Victor. A recent release is a new version of "The Animals Carnival" performed by the Boston Pops, with Arthur Fiedler, conductor, Leo Litwin as piano soloist and Hugh Downs as the narrator. Among works he has premiered are such popular compositions as Addinsell's "Warsaw Concerto," Phillips' "Concerto in Jazz," Bath's "Cornish Rhapsody" and Addinsell's "Smoky Mountain Suite."

The following young ladies will serve light refreshments during the evening: Lucy Loscocoo, Kathy Burke, Shirley Mansfield, Jane Fumia, Nancy Kerr, Elizabeth Craig, Penny Pounder, Andrea Duggan, Bernadette Jarvis, Kate Jewett, Jenny Frency, Sally Muther, Betsy Talbot, Martha Ewing, Ellen Minster, Lee Dusenbury, Mary Lou Sullivan, Pat Nahass, Betsy Gardner, Marcia Blount, Kathy Greer, Donna Power, Harriett Hoffman, Nancy Brown, Bronwen Day, Jody Frost, Betsy Taylor, Jill Kearney, Marilyn Wilton, and Jeanmarie Early.

If you know of people who are new to our Town festivities why not invite them to join you at the concert? All are welcome. The concert is free of admission charge. The Orchestra is sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission and supported by the many Friends of the Orchestra. Friday, November 27 at the Wellesley Junior High School at 8:30 p.m. is the time. Be early!

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 17 1964

Cello Soloist

Richard Kapuscinski of the Boston Symphony will be guest artist in Bloch's "Schelomo" Thursday evening with the New England Conservatory Orchestra under Frederik Prausnitz.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 8 1964

B.S.O. Quartet To Play Haydn, Schubert, Brahms

Haydn, Schubert and Brahms will be performed by the Boston Symphony String Quartet ~~at its first~~ concert Nov. 20 at Jordan Hall. Other concerts will be on Jan. 8 and Mar. 19.

The quartet is composed of Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; violist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin.

The Nov. 20 program includes Haydn's Quartet in E flat major, op. 76, no. 6, Schubert's Quartet in E major, op. 125, no. 2, and Brahms' Quartet in B flat major, op. 67.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY STRING QUARTET gives its premiere performance in Jordan Hall on Friday, Nov. 20 at 8:30 p.m. The quartet is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra virtuosi (left to right) concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal cellist Jules Eskin and principal violist Burton Fine. The quartet, which is in residence at the New England Conservatory, will perform Haydn's Quartet, op. 76, no. 6, Schubert's Quartet in E major, op. 125, no. 2 and Brahms' Quartet, op. 67. Tickets are on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office, 30 Gainsboro Street, Boston.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

NOV 24 1964

Symphony's String Quartet Opens Season

The Boston Symphony String Quartet began its three-concert season in Jordan Hall on Friday evening. Essentially, the group is the old Nova Arte Quartet risen from the flames of the great Philadelphian raid on our Symphony. The two violinists, Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, are the veteran members of the group; now Burton Fine is the violist and Jules Eskin the cellist.

For their first concert, the Quartet chose a conservative program consisting of Haydn's Quartet in E flat, Opus 76, No. 6, Schubert in E, Opus 125, No. 2, and the Brahms B flat, Opus 67. The Haydn is not one of the greatest of the late quartets, but the minuet and finale are a great delight with their mad metric quirks. The first movement, a set of variations, is rather regular; the Fantasia sounds less fantastic than its scheme of repeating a simple in an increasingly remote series of keys would suggest.

Schubert's very early quartet is striking enough at once to raise the question of why it is not more often heard. Juxtaposition with Haydn put Schubert's weaknesses very much in evidence, the squareness of the phrasing, and the tendency immediately to repeat literally his bons mots.

The Boston Symphony Quartet shares, though to a milder degree, some of the problems of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Expert instrumental playing and a sound routine must to some extent take the place of the sort of intense living with the music and with each other that is necessary for first-rate chamber playing.

There is tension and attention in the playing, but still, the pall of a fundamental rhythmic slackness hangs over most of the Quartet's work, tending to make everything a bit bland and shapeless. In the first Variation of the Haydn, for example, the second violin plays the original melody while the first violin adds a new counterpart. The second violinist could never bring himself to let go of his phrase endings, habitually stretching eighth notes into quarters and even beyond. I single out the fault not for its own sake, but because it is so characteristic of the rhythmic insipidity that was apt to take over the performances at any time.

Most of the playing was agreeably straightforward, and what happened was in general dominated by a certain level of intelligence and taste, whose vigilance was only occasionally relaxed, for example, in the fussy phrasing at the beginning of the Brahms Andante, or in the sentimental slowing down of the G flat Variation in the finale.

And clearly the whole operation is at a high enough level—one can tell what the character of the pieces is, and one can enjoy listening — so as to deserve greater public support than was suggested by Friday's sparse attendance.

M.S.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

NOV 6 1964

Boston Symphony String Quartet Makes Debut

Works by Haydn, Schubert, and Brahmn will be featured in the premiere performance of the Boston Symphony String Quartet Jordan Hall on Friday, November 20 at 8:30 p.m. The quartet, which is in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra virtuosi: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violinist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin.

The November 20 concert will include Haydn's Quartet, op. 76, no. 6, Schubert's Quartet in E major, op. 125, no. 2, and Brahms' Quartet, op. 67.

Tickets for the group's three-concert series are on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office; the performances are scheduled for Friday evenings – November 20, January 8, and March 19.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 21 1964

New quartet makes its debut

By John Marshall Cuno

Joseph Silverstein, George Zazofsky, Burton Fine, and Jules Eskin, having fulfilled their Friday afternoon commitment at Symphony Hall, put away their instruments only long enough to have dinner and then set up shop again in a different location —stage center at Jordan Hall.

Together these gentlemen constitute the Boston Symphony String Quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory. On Friday evening the new group made its debut with a classical program.

A Haydn, ingeniously delightful and courteous; a Schubert, using warm color combinations, always discovering new ones; and a Brahms undaunted by Beethoven's example but rather uplifted and perfected by it—these old friends of chamber music lovers came to life in vibrant and magical ways for an enthusiastic audience.

Of pure delight was Haydn's Quartet in E-flat major, Op. 76, No. 6. The lilting first movement happened so effortlessly! And after the Adagio of the second movement, how important to wait, as the players did, for the silence to make itself felt before relaxing the instruments! The music slipped softly backward out of the mind like a receding tide, but the mood was still there.

Spirited is the word for the other movements, especially the Finale, but rather than sudden contrasts in the Finale, there is gradual building and diminishing. Lots of rapid, short bowing and an abrupt flourish bring it to a close. Here too was togetherness.

We then heard a strongly felt and melodious expression of Schubert's Quartet in E major, Op. 125, No. 2 in which combinations of coloring in the instruments is more important than individuality of the voices. The second movement is slow but anything but static, and the group rendered it with a noticeably intense inner excitement.

Less exciting, though more complex and busy, are the final two movements, though the players did achieve a striking fabric of tones and tempo.

Brahms is quoted as having said in his diary that the third movement of his Quartet in B flat major, Op. 67, was the most tender thing he had ever written. The ensemble imparted this tenderness, as well as other qualities — above all an intense happiness — throughout.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Herald
Morn. Circ. 176,483

NOV 21 1964

SYMPHONY'S QUARTET: BLENDED VIRTUOSITY

By McLAREN HARRIS

What one expects from first chair Symphony men stems from their standing, experience and duties in a large and superior organization: high individual standards of musicianship and leadership. What the Boston Symphony String Quartet provided last night at Jordan Hall was something even more.

Having shed the cloak of orchestral environment earlier yesterday afternoon, Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola, and Jules Eskin, cello, settled into the problems of small ensemble with more audible affinity of purpose than I had frankly anticipated. The program consisted of familiar names, yet not making up a network of beaten paths: mature Haydn, flowering Schubert and middle Brahms.

From our expectations we may submit as foregone conclusions the players' pointed discipline and energy for such moments as the Menuetto from Schubert's Quartet in H major, Op. 125, No. 2, or the finale to Haydn's flat major, Op. 76, No. 6. But the string quartet in its ultimate glory is a seamless fabric, and glimpses of this achievement in the slower movements were the most gratifying.

The dynamic contrast in Haydn's Adagio ranged from full-bodied sonority to a delicate whisper; from the BZrahms B flat Quartet, Op. 67, the tenderly urgent Agitate and accompanying Allegretto were a rapture of muted timbres. Only in the Schubert Menuetto and Rondeau were there protrusions from tonal context as with the first violin, not altogetther accountable by the natural prominence of register.

Straightforward Haydn, passionate Schubert without the earmarks of strain and truly opulent Brahmn are worthy accomplishments, and beside the moments where technique could serve adequate function, if not its zenith, the treasured phrases showed up in lasting impression.

The Program

The Boston Symphony String Quartet, consisting of Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello, were presented last night in Jordan Hall by the New England Conservatory of Music.

Quartet in E flat major, Op. 76, No. 6 . . . . Haydn
Quartet in E major, Op. 125, No. 2 . . . . Schubert Quartet in B flat Major, Op. 67 . . . . Brahms

192

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

NOV 21 1964

BSO String Quartet Bows

By Peter M. Knapp

The Boston Symphony String Quartet, quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory of Music, made its debut last night at Jordan Hall.

For a disappointingly small audience, the new quartet performed Haydn's Quartet in E flat, Opus 76, No. 6; Schubert's Quartet in E, Opus 125, No. 2, and Brahms' Quartet in B flat, Opus 67. Members of the ensemble are principal string players of the Boston Symphony: Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola, and Jules Eskin, cello.

The quartet shows evidence of developing into an excellent chamber group, but it is not at that point yet. Like any endeavor requiring exquisite teamwork and precise timing, a string quartet takes time to develop, regardless of the individual excellence of its players. A good quartet is considerably more than the sum of its parts. With more working experience together, the Boston Symphony group should progress considerably this season.

Uneven Performances

Last night's concert was quite uneven. There were moments of beautiful playing, as in the second movement of the Haydn in which tone and subtlety of dynamics were elegantly balanced, or in the rondo of the Schubert.

On the other side, the last two movements of the Haydn were rough, with rhythm and accenting the chief problem in the former and an initial lack of agreement on the tempo marring the latter, along with some course ensemble passages.

In the Brahms, though, things generally went better. There was more of an emotional commitment to the score. The Brahms, too, is a more substantial work than the lighter and more direct Haydn and Schubert quartets.

Brahms' intricate polyphony in the first movement, the rapturous mood and marvelous harmonies of the second, the change of pace in the third section with its rhapsodic viola passages, and the artful variations of the finale rank among the composer's finest achievements.

The balance and blend of the Boston Symphony Quartet were exemplary here. At its best, the quartet has a wonderfully warm sound, and the occasional stiffness in phrasing and problems of transition in tempo and meter could be forgiven during the outpouring of sumptuous tone.

Among the highlights of the program, Mr. Fine's eloquent solos in the third movement of the Brahms; and Mr. Eskin's sensitive, unobtrusive playing throughout should be mentioned. Mr. Zazofsky was as usual steady and reliable, while Mr. Silverstein has developed considerably as a leader since last season.

Globe 11/17/64

Silverstein: Evening Of Mixed Excellence

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Music Critic

The Cambridge Society for Early Music opened its current Sanders Theater series Monday evening with a concert at which that master fiddler Joseph Silverstein, with Louise Vosgerchian at the harpsichord, addressed himself to the problem of playing Bach. He gave one piece in each of three categories: the E-Minor Partita With Figured Bass, the D-Minor Partita for Unaccompanied Violin and the G-Major Sonata for Violin with Harpsichord Obbligato.

The program book contained a thoughtful essay by Silverstein on "The Violinist's Dilemma in Baroque Music." It said in part: "It would be foolish indeed for a performer to reject all knowledge of the past in playing this music. It would be equally foolish for him to attempt to eradicate every vestige of the modern style from his playing in order to achieve a rather dubious authenticity. We must bring something of ourselves into the music when performing, and our playing is, after all, a product of the 20th century."

There, in essense, is the review of Monday's concert. Silverstein brought to Bach's music the qualities that characterize his playing in general. Of these perhaps the most conspicuous is a rare and brilliant mastery of the violin. There is also in his playing a studied seriousness that insures that nothing happens except on purpose.

The reservations I have about Silverstein's playing of Bach are essentially those I have about his playing of Mozart or Bartok also. His style is one of a certain nervous intensity, and its symptoms are a near anxiety lest the sounds stop, a sense almost of rushing into the next phrase so that the musical flow is deprived of all tranquillity.

He tends to equalize, even to streamline music. In the great D-Minor Chaconne he showed that he had considerable tonal resources, but he used them rarely. The predominant sound is a sweet and even one with a fast vibrato, spelled now and again by some good lusty digging into the G string.

He is apt to apply the same glossy varnish to his phrasing that he imposes upon his tone. There is the tendency, already mentioned, to try to eliminate spacious breathing between phrases, and rapid passages like the brilliant scales in the Chaconne conveying almost no sense of melodic or harmonic contour.

All this produced a generally quite effective performance of the E-Minor Partita. In parts, at least, of the D-Minor Partita, the playing was most impressive. Silverstein treated the Chaconne quite freely, articulating the changes of mood and the structural divisions with considerable liberties of tempo.

The G-Major Sonata was a display for the most part only of the less attractive side of Silverstein's playing. There was little sense of direction, and the endless and bland legato where an alert sort of articulation was needed made it a painful bore to hear.

While Miss Vosgerchian is an excellent pianist, she is, like many good pianists, quite a poor harpsichordist. She does not achieve a proper legato, and her rubato makes an anguished, hobbled effect that I cannot imagine her tolerating in her own piano playing.

It was in all an evening of mixed excellence. Once at least, in the Chaconne, it reached a level of really high attainment. It also demonstrated that the problems of playing Bach are not altogether unrelated to those of playing more recent music.

The second concert in the series will take place next Monday evening in Sanders Theater. Ralph Kirkpatrick will play the entire First Book of Bacvh's "Well-Tempered Clavier." Because of the length of the program the starting time for this concert will be 8 o'clock.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222

NOV 13 1964

THE MAYOR IS INVITED to the 1964-65 art and music series sponsored by Newton Junior College which opens Wednesday with a concert by the Boston Symphony Trio at College Hall, Washington Park, Newtonville. Mayor Gibbs is shown greeting Joseph Silverstein, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles W. Dudley, president of Newton Junior College. Wednesday's concert will feature Mr. Silverstein together with Burton Fine, viola and Jules Eskin, cello. (News-Tribune photo by W. B. Hay.)

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 3 1964

Musical Chairs

Orchestra's New Drum Goes More Than Bang

By MARGO MILLER

One of the newest members of the Boston Symphony is the gong drum built for the orchestra's percussion section and in use since the last weeks of the Tanglewood season.

Harold Thompson and Thomas Gauger who are in charge of the gong are equally as pleased with the new mallets which can be used on the gong drum, the bass drum and the Chinese gong.

At first glance, the mallets, somewhat over a foot long, look like paint rollers. One side of the cylindrical head is covered in sheep skin. But the other half is pieced out with heavy felt. The entire mallet cloth is laced on the cylinder, and as Gauger pointed out, can be loosened to insert more stuffing under either fleece or felt for soft work on the drum head.

That's not all. On one end of the mallet head is a piece of plush. On the other is a coil of gum rubber. The rubber is especially valuable for playing staccato passages. Instead of beating each note, the player now rubs the gum across the drum head. All sorts of dynamics and textures can be produced with any of the quadripartite mallets.

The gong drum is a great big thing, something over four feet in diameter. It has a single head, so that the sound issues forth with great power. Gauger tunes the drum with a key inserted in heavy-duty screws; other drum screws require only the turning of a handle affixed to them.

The shell of the new drum, bought from L.W. Hunt of London, is made of marine plywood and steel bands and was built by an organ maker.

Thompson says his new toy has a whole range of different colors. Drums go more than bang, as was evident in his and Gauger's demonstrations of passages from Stravinsky's "Firebird," the Verdi Requiem and a bit of foolery called doing an airplane propeller.

Correction

In the interview in Saturday's Globe with Sir John Barbirolli, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, it was stated that the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6 was having its first performance in Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky gave the work its American premiere at Tanglewood in August, 1948 and repeated it that October in Boston.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

DEC 1964

ONGGG

Boston's New "Gong Drum"

By Harold J. Thompson

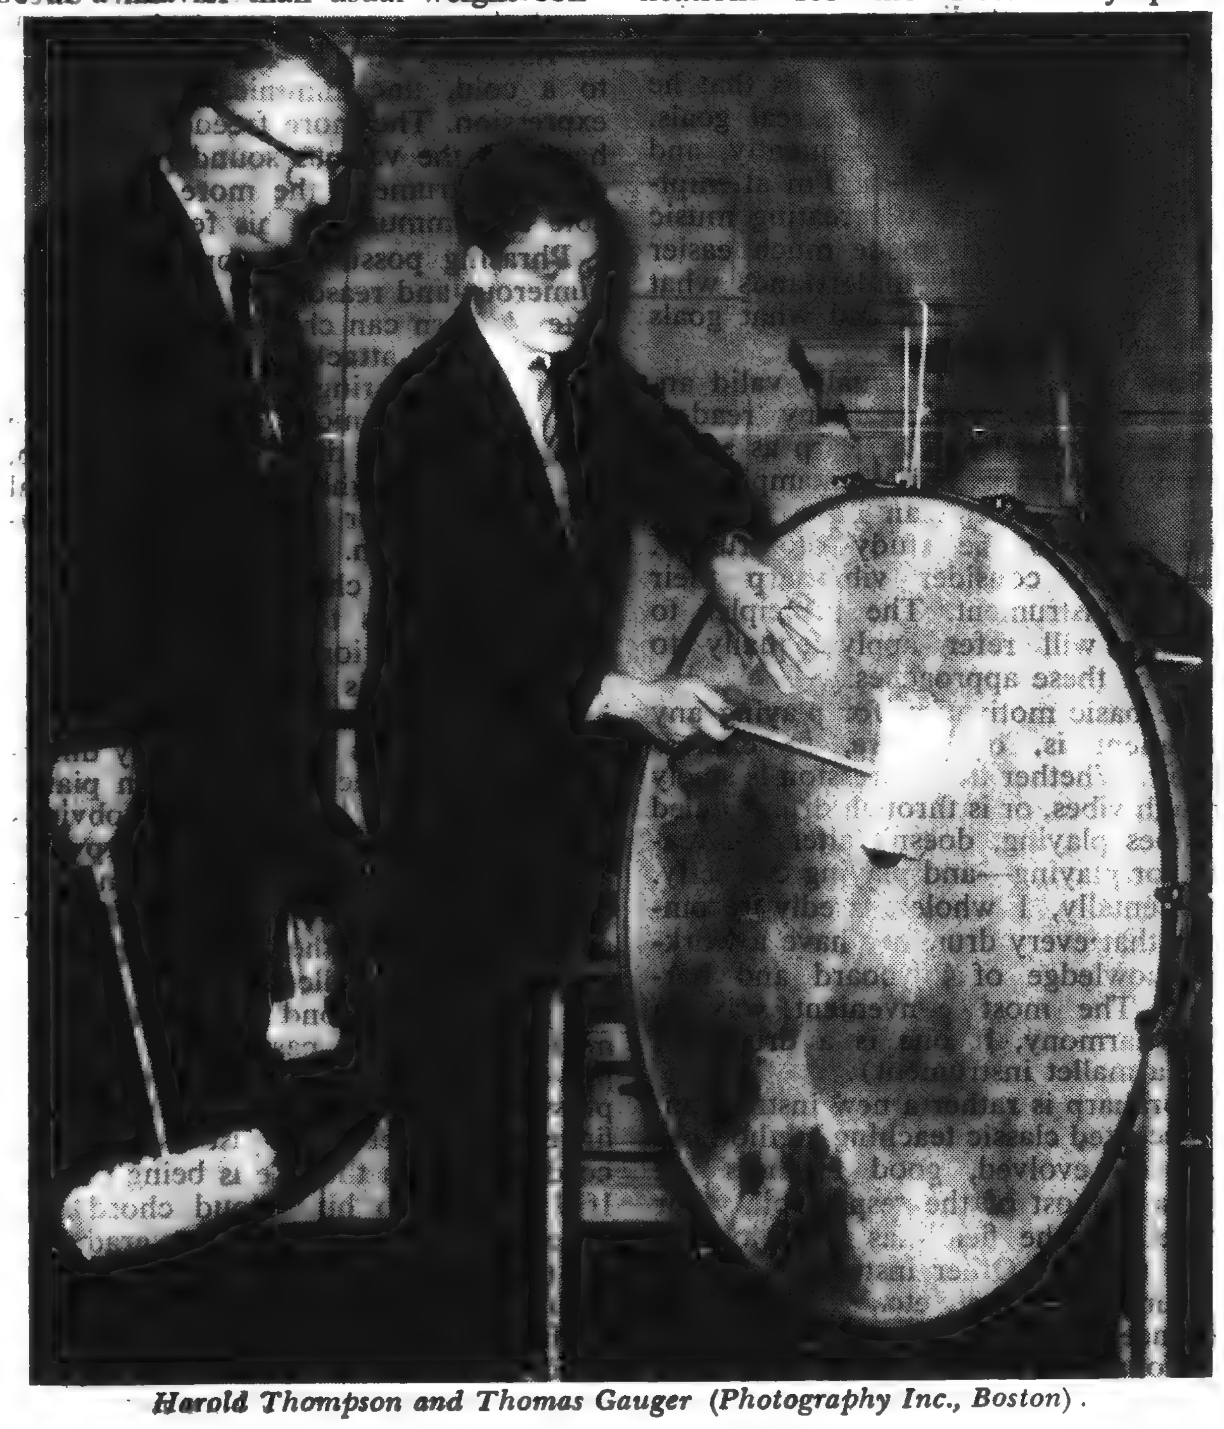
Harold Thompson has been a percussionist with the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops Orchestras since 1952. Throughout this period he has been instrumental in conducting experiments with various percussive devices. It is natural that among his hobbies he numbers the making of percussion instruments and sticks to improve the sound of particular instruments. He is presently at work on an instruction book for high school players and is preparing a guide book for professional cymbal playing. Prior to coming to Boston he was a member of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and studied at that city's Conservatory of Music. His teachers have included Charles Wilcoxon, Roy Knapp, George Carey and Fred Noak. Mr. Thompson is a native of Akron, Ohio. MUSIC JOURNAL is pleased to publish the author's own description of this controversial new gong drum and personally devised mallets.—ED.

"Bomb bursts" and "like blows into the pit of the stomach" is the manner in which music writer Howard Klein of the New York Times (Aug. 24, 1964) described the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new drum, used for the first time during the final concerts of the 1964 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.). Generally one would not consider a drum to be the cause of special mention in a critic's review, but the Orchestra's new drum is unusual—being a custom-made one-headed drum.

The two-headed bass drum produces a sound that is commonly used in orchestral music. In the realm of sounds of extraordinary magnitude, however, natural limitations will exist. An entirely different range of bass drum effects are able to be created upon a drum that is more heavily constructed and uses only one head. This construction allows the head to vibrate freely and not be inhibited. In the case of a two-headed drum, having a batter or striking side and its opposite which vibrates in sympathy when the batter is struck, some of its vibrations are expended by having to activate the opposite head, thereby restricting or limiting the length of vibration.

The single-headed drum is not so restricted and thus produces a sound of different character. The construction of this drum must be substantially larger in diameter (ours is four feet, with ox-hide head), thus requiring a larger membrane capable of greater lower pitch variations. The shell must be of a heavier than usual weight construction, making it a fulcrum strong enough to hold the larger membrane stationary. Should the shell also vibrate, certain of the vibrations would be absorbed by it, making a less effective drum.

As all membranes have minute but sometimes very different characteristics, the tension system on the new drum is most important. In presenting the specifications for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's drum to the manufacturer, the Hunt Drum Company of London, we asked that our drum have a heavier tension system to allow more critical tuning, especially when membranes are interchanged.



Harold Thompson and Thomas Gauger (Photography Inc., Boston).

Our first use of the single-headed drum from the Hunt Company was in a performance of Verdi's Requiem at Tanglewood last summer. The "Gong Drum," as we now call it, is most effective in a work of this nature since it creates a longer vibration and more solemn sound than the conventional two-headed drum. The sound might be described as a Basso Profundo color or Te Deum sound. We have used it, however, with equal success for notes of greater booming power and soft notes.

Again, to quote Mr. Klein's New York Times article mentioned above: "The new drum, which arrived last Tuesday (August 18, 1964), is four feet across and has a single ox-hide head which sounded like bomb bursts in the 'Dies Irae' (Verdi Requiem) . . . when lightly tapped, as in the 'Lachrymosa,' like blows in the pit of the stomach."

Coupled with the use of the new drum, Boston Symphony Orchestra percussionists are experimenting with a new concept of percussion-beater, the invention of the author, who has applied for patents. This stick consists of a cylinder, with carrying handle fitted in the center and at a right angle, allowing the player to use four different impact points of an extended area, each presenting a different quality of sound when applied to the drum. The cover of the cylinder is held by a lace and eyelet arrangement, is removable and adjustable. The two long sides of the cylinder enable extended lateral points of impact to vibrate the membrane to its fullest extent. The two ends, one of gum rubber, the other of felt rubber, produce a static-vibration, in effect a one-handed tremolo, and a staccato sound respectively.

The illustration shows the new "Gong Drum" and the author's invention. We would be pleased to pass on to any interested percussionists further details.

123

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

DEC 1964

GONGGG

Boston's New "Gong Drum"

By Harold J. Thompson

Harold J. Thompson has been a percussionist with the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops Orchestras since 1952. Throughout this period he has been instrumental in conducting experiments with various percussive devices. It is natural that among his hobbies he numbers the making of percussion instruments and sticks to improve the sound of particular instruments. He is presently at work on an instruction book for high school players and is preparing a guide book for professional cymbal playing. Prior to coming to Boston he was a member of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and studied at that city's Conservatory of Music. His teachers have included Charles Wilcoxon, Roy Knapp, George Carey and Fred Noak. Mr. Thompson is a native of Akron, Ohio. MUSIC JOURNAL is pleased to publish the author's own description of this controversial new gong drum and personally devised mallets.—ED.

"Bomb bursts" and "like blows in the pit of the stomach" is the manner in which music writer Howard Klein of the New York Times (August 24, 1964) described the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new drum used for the first time during the final concerts of the 1964 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.). Generally one would not consider a drum to be the cause of special mention in a critic's review, but the Orchestra's new drum is unusual—being a custom-made one-headed drum.

The two-headed bass drum produces a sound that is commonly used in orchestral music. In the realm of sounds of extraordinary magnitude, however, natural limitations will exist. An entirely different range of bass drum effects are able to be created upon a drum that is more heavily constructed and uses only one head. This construction allows the head to vibrate freely and not be inhibited. In the case of a two-headed drum, having a batter or striking side and its opposite which vibrates in sympathy when the batter is struck, some of its vibrations are expended by having to activate the opposite head, thereby restricting or limiting the length of vibration.

The single-headed drum is not so restricted and thus produces a sound of different character. The construction of this drum must be substantially larger in diameter (ours is four feet with ox-hide head), thus requiring a larger membrane capable of greater low pitch variations. The shell must be of a heavier than usual weight construction, making it a fulcrum strong enough to hold the larger membrane stationary. Should the shell also vibrate, certain of the vibrations would be absorbed by it, making a less effective drum.

As all membranes have minute but sometimes very different characteristics, the tension system on the new drum is most important. In presenting the specifications for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's drum to the manufacturer, the Hunt Drum Company of London, we asked that our drum have a heavier tension system to allow more critical tuning, especially when membranes are interchanged.

Harold Thompson and Thomas Gauger (Photography Inc., Boston).

Our first use of the single-headed drum from the Hunt Company was in a performance of Verdi's Requiem at Tanglewood last summer. The "Gong Drum," as we now call it, is most effective in a work of this nature since it creates a longer vibration and more solemn sound than the conventional two-headed drum. The sound might be described as a Basso Profundo color or Te Deum sound. We have used it, however, with equal success for notes of greater booming power and soft notes.

Again, to quote Mr. Klein's New York Times article mentioned above: "The new drum, which arrived last Tuesday (August 18, 1964), is four feet across and has a single ox-hide head which sounded like bomb bursts in the 'Dies Irae' (Verdi Requiem) . . . when lightly tapped, as in the 'Lachrymosa,' like blows in the pit of the stomach."

Coupled with the use of the new drum, Boston Symphony Orchestra percussionists are experimenting with a new concept of percussion-beater, the invention of the author, who has applied for patents. This stick consists of a cylinder, with carrying handle fitted in the center and at a right angle, allowing the player to use four different impact points of an extended area, each presenting a different quality of sound when applied to the drum. The cover of the cylinder is held by a lace and eyelet arrangement, is removable and adjustable. The two long sides of the cylinder enable extended lateral points of impact to vibrate the membrane to its fullest extent. The two ends, one of gum rubber, the other of felt rubber, produce a static-vibration, in effect a one-handed tremolo, and a staccato sound respectively.

The illustration shows the new "Gong Drum" and the author's invention. We would be pleased to pass on to any interested percussionists further details.

124

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397

DEC 30 1964

PEMBROKE MAN SYMPHONY VIOLINIST Einar Hansen of High St., Pembroke, performs on violin for his wife. He is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Pembroke

Correspondent, Mrs. Peter Fraser
Tel. CY 3-2385 - News and Advts.

Einar Hansen 39 Years With Boston Symphony

PEMBROKE. — "Please don't run away," were the words used by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to ~~Einar B. Hansen~~ of High St., back in 1926 when Mr. Hansen, at the age of 37, arrived in this country and played in the hotel room of the famed conductor. He was then invited to play before a large group of artists and was immediately accepted as a violinist in the Boston Symphony. That was 38 years ago and now Mr. Hansen, in his 39th season, is having a short vacation over the holiday season but preparing for the Friday and Saturday performances.

His story is an interesting one. He was born in Copenhagen and being a born musician started playing the violin at the age of seven. He inherited his artistry from his father who, also a musician and artist, was never allowed to realize his dreams. He received a scholarship for study in Germany and graduated with honors.

At the beginning of his career he had several positions as first concert master in Dresden, Bremen and Hamburg. He traveled through all of Europe as a soloist, appeared at the Metropolis in Athens and played under Arthur Nikisch. These are only a few of the highlights of his life in Europe. He came alone to this country, leaving his wife and son in Germany, and if he had not been accepted for the Boston Symphony he undoubtedly would have returned immediately. The magic words of Serge Koussevitzky marked the beginning of these many years with the Boston Symphony. Although both are of Danish nationality, Mrs. Hansen was born in Hamburg, Germany. They were married in 1919 but she was not able to join her husband until 1931. It took six years for her to get her quota number so that she could come to this country following his arrival in the latter part of 1925. Their son, Harald, was graduated from the Juilliard School in New York and is clarinetist with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and he and his wife have one daughter

Several Positions

At the beginning of his professional career he had several positions, traveling through all of Europe as a soloist. He was first concert master in Dresden, Bremen and Hamburg and played under Arthur Nikish, who was also at one time a conductor of the Boston Symphony; the Metropolis in Athens and also n many other countries.

He came alone to this country, eaving his wife and son, and if he had not been accepted for he Boston Symphony he undoubtedly would have returned o his native land immediately. The magic words of Serge Koussevitzky marked the beginning of his many years in this country. Although both of Danish nationality, Mrs. Hansen was born in Hamburg, Germany. They were married in 1919 but t took six years for her to get her quota number for her to join her husband in this country following his arrival in the latter part of 1925.

Mr. Hansen has a busy schedule — including 30 weeks with he Symphony, 10 weeks with he Symphony Pops and eight weeks at Tanglewood in Lenox n the Berkshires during the two summer months. Special performances in New York, Washington and Chicago, for instance, require the "rush" of plane trips in between Boston performances. Mrs. Hansen also has a busy schedule as chauffeur for her husband. She drives him from Pembroke to Boston for rehearsals and for the Symphony. Since coming to this country they lived in the Back Bay in Boston but in November of 1963, seeking a quieter place of residence, purchased the former Carl Peterson property on High St., where they moved in April of this year.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

JAN 1 1965

BASQUE MUSIC BY SYMPHONY QUARTET

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will perform a string quartet by "the national hero of Basque music" in its January 8 program at Jordan Hall. "Quartet No. 1" by Juan Crisostomo Jacobo Antonio de Arriaga y Balzola will open the concert. Also on the program are works by Schubert and Hindemith.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

JAN 6 1965

Photography, Inc.

The ~~Boston Symphony~~ String Quartet —Joseph Silverstein, George Zazofsky, Jules Eskin, and Burton Fine—will be heard on Friday night at Jordan Hall.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 12 1965

BSO String Quartet In Jordan Hall Concert

By MARGO MILLER

The Boston Symphony String Quartet ~~put together a~~ very interesting program for its concert Friday evening in Jordan Hall. So often chamber music programs are made up or works by composers whose lives overlap only slightly, whatever the influence of the elder on the younger may have been. The Boston Symphony Quartet chose to begin with Juan Arriaga and Franz Schubert, very near of an age. The program concluded in the 20th Century with Hindemith's Quartet No. 1 (1919).

Arriaga's life was over before it began. The Spaniard died in 1826 in Paris at 20, but behind him were three quartets, a symphony, the opera he wrote as a tad, and a considerable promise as a violinist. Schubert was his elder by nine years. Curiously, certain fragments of melody in the final movement of the Arriaga Quartet No. 1 suggest Schubert's "Death and the Maiden." But a comparison is more interesting for how they differ Arriaga really seems the earlier composer.

Both were engaging melodists. Arriaga liked showier work for the quartet leader and generally a more ornamented line. Schubert's only String Trio, also on Friday evening's program, is more evenly divided among the strings.

His melodies are stretched out, he plays with dynamics. Arriaga finds variation more in piquant tunes and a kind of strumming in the trio of the minuet which suggests some well-bred gypsies had wandered by.

Performances were good. The quartet members are violinists Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky (who sat out the Schubert), violist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin. They have a couple of concerts now behind them and they are now riding the music instead of it them.

The finale of the Hindemith, another tuneful piece with some fascinating sounds, colors and moods, was played heads-up, eliciting vocal applause from the audience.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 9 1965

~~BSO~~ QUARTET CONCERT: HINDEMITH PLEASES

By McLAREN HARRIS

The Boston Symphony String Quartet, ~~as heard in its~~ second concert last night at Jordan Hall, is not a particularly lush-voiced instrument. Occasionally the listener was reminded too directly that it is not an instrument at all, but four instruments and four players — Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola, and Jules Eskin, cello — each with slightly divergent conceptions or capabilities or both.

The works on the program were not patsies as regards relative difficulty, though one may point to Schubert's Trio No. 2 as being technically the least demanding; nor were they uncommonly masterful as to artistic excellence, though the Schubert contains much familiar beauty and Hindemith's F minor Quartet draws interest with its contrast of material and presentation.

The other work was the Quartet No. 1 in D minor of Juan Cristostomo Jacobo Antonio Arriagaif Balzola, a precocious Spaniard who died in 1825 at the age of 19. His three published quartets are said to hold his best writing, and the first quartet bears a passionate spirit in its lyric lines, though the latter are laden with a bustle of ornamentation and elaboration, sometimes to the point of hampering the effect. This quartet is not of the type that promotes unity where it is not presupposed, but whatever the cause, the players at this point did not have enough of it. Equality of efforts did not signify coincidence of intents in the opening Allegro, while some echoed Spanish rhythmic play in the final movements was spread with imprecision.

The Schubert Trio, while of similar romantic inclination to the Arriaga was its textural opposite—almost a vision of what the Arriaga might have been, but for the interference of superfluous pen strokes. Messrs. Silverstein, Fine and Eskin found it more to their liking, but their best endeavors were reserved for Hindemith.

His Quartet, Op. 10, is a miniature marvel of conventional materials in an updated perspective—diatonic spans of melody spun over shifting tonal centers, interspersed with canonic sections and separated by sharply rhythmic utterances. The forcefulness caused the musicians insufficiently alert to the effects of pressure upon tone quality and intonation—that is, they sagged and the music suffered. Nevertheless, a grasp of the muscular mood and sustenance of the finale's con moto feeling qualified the Hindemith quartet as the evening's finest product.

The Program

The Boston Symphony String Quartet, consisting of Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello, presented the second of its season's three concerts last night at Jordan Hall.
Quartet No. 1 in D minor ... Arriaga
Trio No. 2 in B flat major ... Schubert
Quartet No. 1 in F minor, Op. 10 ... Hindemith

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-42
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 31 1965

Wellesley Symphony on Next Sunday

The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra, Roland Tapley conductor, will perform its 16th annual winter concert next Sunday, Feb. 7, at 8 p.m. in the Wellesley Junior High School auditorium. Musicians from 20 suburban communities will perform works by Toch, Piston, Sibelius and Dvorak.

Louis Speyer, for 45 years English hornist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~will be~~ soloist in Sibelius' "The Swan of Tuonela" an din Piston's "Fantasy for English Horn, Strings and Harp," the latter with Therese J. Mueller, harpist. Admission is free and the public is invited.

NewEngland Newsclip Age
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmo
Advertiser
SAUGUS, Mas
Weekly Circ. 6

JAN 14

NS Philharm
Orchestra P
In Lynn Sun

The Winter Conc
North Shore Phi
Orchestra Sunday
January 17, at 7:30
Lynn City Hall Au
will present as solo
Ostrovsky, violin, of ton Smyphony O
Rolland ~~Tapley~~ will
Mr. Ostrovsky wi violin concerto in Opus 61, by Saint-Sa soloist has play
Boston Pops and the concerts under Fiedler. He has made ings of the Paganin guitar sonatas in Cla tions, New York, and recorded some of compositions for the
The program w include Overture to by Massenet, the Kin tian Suite II by Sibeli Parisienne by Offenb
the selection from Lady by Loewe.
Edward W. Rhodes
dent of the orchestr
F. Shute, treasurer, a
L. Jones Jr., vice-p and business manag
kets are availab officers, members orchestra and at the bo
Tickets are also a from members of the W Associations of the co sors of the concert, t ton Street Methodist and the First Church o Congregational, Lynnf
Lynn. Mrs. Doris G is membership ch

NEW JERSEY MUSIC A
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

FEB 1965

Fine Arts Symp
Feature Rare

New Jersey audien rare opportunity of "Concerto in F M and orchestra when Symphony performs on its Spring Conce
the Symphony's fou
tor, will be the solo
Joining Mr. Ervin
whi will be held
Regional High Schoo
Sunc , Mar. 14 a
John Sant Ambrogio list now with the who will perform th
Concerto in B Minor
ak.
The Ravel conce
its very complex rhythmical patterns
liance and subtlety.
nical resources of in the orchestra to capacity, requiring play ie notes as w
sage for the bassoo piccolo, trumpet an especially difficult.
The Fine Arts S
four season, is a
of very fine musicia
ly. el that they a leng

125

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Advertiser
SAUGUS, Mass.
Weekly Circ 6,000

NS Philharmonic Orchestra Plays In Lynn Sunday

The Winter Concert of the North Shore Philharmonic Orchestra , Sunday evening, January 17, at 7:30 PM at the Lynn City Hall Auditorium, will present as soloist, Fredy Ostrovsky, violin, of the Boston Smyphony Orchestra. Rolland Tapley will conduct.

Mr. Ostrovsky will play the violin concerto in B Minor, Opus 61, by Saint - Saens. This soloist has played in the Boston Pops and the Esplanade concerts under Arthur Fiedler. He has made recordings of the Paganini violin-guitar sonatas in Classic Editions, New York, and has also recorded some of his own compositions for the violin.

The program will also include Overture to Phedre by Massenet, the King Christian Suite II by Sibelius, Gaite Parisienne by Offenbach and the selection from My Fair Lady by Loewe.

Edward W. Rhodes is president of the orchestra; Ralph F. Shute, treasurer, and Frank L. Jones Jr., vice-president and business manager. Tickets are available from officers, members of the orchestra and at the box office. Tickets are also available from members of the Women's Associations of the co-sponsors of the concert, the Boston Street Methodist Church, and the First Church of Christ Congregational, Lynnfield St., Lynn. Mrs. Doris Garofano is membership chairman.

ONCERT-ASES

e cause, the players a d not have enough o
of efforts did not sig
ence of intents in the Allegro, while some nish rhythmic play in movements was spread cision.
hubert Trio, while of mantic inclination to a, was its textural op-nost a vision of what a might have been, interference of super-strokes. Messrs. Sil-Fine and Eskin found their liking, but their avers were reserved
mith,
tet, Op. 10, is a minia
el of conventional ma an updated perspectiv spans of melody s p u ng tonal centers, inte
th canonic sections an by sharply rhythmic u
he forcefulness caugh ans insufficiently ale ects of pressure upo ty and intonation—tha gged and the music su ertheless, a grasp of th mood and sustenance o s con moto feeling qua Hindemith quartet as th finest product.

ogram
n Symphony String Quarte of Joseph Silverstein a ofsky, violins; Burton Fin
Jules Eskin, cello, presente of its season's three conce
t Jordan Hall.
1 in D minor ..... Arria in B flat major ..... Schu
1 in F minor, Op. 10 Hindem

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

FEB 1965

Fine Arts Symphony Will Feature Rare Ravel Work

New Jersey audiences will have the rare opportunity of hearing Ravel's "Concerto in F Major" for piano and orchestra when the Fine Arts Symphony per ms the virtuoso work on its Spring c ncert. Jack Ervin, the Symphony founder and conductor, will be th soloist.

Joining Mr. Ervin for the program which will held at West Essex Regional Hi hool, North Caldwell, Sunday, Ma 4 at 4 p.m. will be John Sant A gio, Bloomfield cellist now w e Boston Symphony who will p the familiar "Cello ncerto i nor" of Anton Dvor-

The Ra ncerto is noted for its very ex style, intricate rhythmica ns, dynamic brilance and y. It uses the techal res of each instrument the or to the limit of its capacity ng virtuosity just to the s written. Solo passages for ssoon, clarinet, flute, olo, t and percussion are specially ult.

The F ts Symphony, in its th s a small orchestra ry f icians who, obvious- feel are up to the chal-

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,469

FEB 11 1965

Chandler Gregg Reviews

Symphony's Mid-Season Concert Wins Praise for Precision, Programming

By Chandler Gregg

The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra, Rolland Tapley, conductor, presented its Mid-Season Concert ,part of its Sixteenth Season, last Sunday evening February 7th, at the Junior High School.

The program, which featured Louis Speyer, English Horn, as guest soloist consisted of the "Pinocchio" overture of Ernst Toch, Walter Piston's "Fantasy" for English Horn, Harp, and Strings, "The Swan of Tuonela" by Sibelius, and the Dvorak Eighth Symphony.

In many respects this was the best played and most well programmed concert the orchestra has presented over the years. All of the music was important repertoire yet none of it was hackneyed. The opening Toch overture, played with unusual precision, was a delightful curtain-raiser and provided good contrast for the more somber works which followed.

Walter Piston's "Fantasy," composed for Mr. Speyer and premiered by him with the Boston Symphony in 1953 is a haunting evocative composition exploring the limits of the sonority of the English Horn. The very beautiful harp part was extremely well played by Therese Mueller and the strings played as though inspired both by the beauty of the music and the artistry of Louis Speyer. A word of gratitude is due Mr. Tapley both for bringng us Mr. Speyer and for programming this vintage Piston that is all too infrequently heard.

Perhaps the Sibelius "Swan" would have been more effective without the preceding Piston work of similar mood and tone color, but it too was done superbly by both soloist and orchestra. Karen Mumma, first cellist, in her important solo role, revealed an excellent tone throughout.

This work by the way, was performed in memory of Winston Churchill whose connection with music was remote to say the least. For this listener thoughts of Pierre Monteux were uppermost, since he and Mr. Speyer played this work in the last appearance of "le maitre" with the BSO six months before his death last June.

After the interval Dvorak's delightful Eighth Symphony (No. 4 under the old numbering system) received a very creditable reading. One could have wished for more tone in the woodwind solos, particularly the flute solo early in the first movement and again in the finale (at letter D), as well as the clarinet motives in thirds of the first movement. Perhaps a judicious doubling of parts might have resulted in a better balance of forces. The violin solo in the Adagio, the best played movement, was handled very ably by Josephine Smith, concert mistress of the symphony.

Throughout the evening Robert Mackow, first horn, and Roe Goodman, first bassoon, were a credit to the ensemble, as was the cello section especially in such beautiful moments as the opening of the corner movements of the Dvorak.

All in all, the concert was a great success and Rolland Tapley, conductor of the WSO for all of its sixteen years again achieved a notable triumph, one of which Wellesley has every reason to be proud.

Mention must also be made of the lovely camillias raised by Walter Wheeler of the cello section, which bedecked the podium with stunning effect and the new acoustical backing which not only improved the decor but helped to project the sound more effectively into the auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,681

FEB 3 1965

Area Musicians To Be In Wellesley Symphony Winter Concert Sunday

The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra will present its sixteenth annual Winter Concert on Sunday evening at 8:00 p. m. in the Wellesley Junior High School Auditorium. Musicians from twenty suburban communities will join Rolland Tapley in performing works by Toch, Piston, Sibelius, and Dvorak. Participants from the Norwood-Westwood area are Mrs. Jean Smyth, Andrew A. Parisi, Arthur Rodgers, Rev. Walton D. Moffitt, Mrs. Ann Fleck, and Robert Fleck.

Rolland Tapley, conductor of the Orchestra since its inception sixteen years ago, proudly presents Louis Speyer, English Horn, as special guest artist. Throughout his forty-five years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Speyer gained a unique achievement for which he is well known. He was never tardy, never missed a rehearsal, and never missed a performance. Mr. Speyer who has served under five BSO conductors has had more compositions written for him than any other English Horn artist. After retiring his chair at the close of last year's Berkshire Festival, he became Music Coordinator f the Berkshire Music Cente.

Featured Harp soloist in the Piston and Sibelius will be Miss Therese J. Mueller, Wellesley Symphony member, and Music Librarian at Wellesley College. The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra is sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 18 1965

String Quartet

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will give its final concert of the season Thursday evening, Apr. 22, at 8:30 in Jordan Hall. The program has not yet been announced.

The ensemble, quartet-in-residence at the New England Conservatory, is made up of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
D. 91,000 S. 120,000

MAR 25 1965

Burgin Due For Concert

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor tonight for the next-to-last concert of the Florida Symphony Orchestra's 1964-65 season.

He will conduct Finnish composer Jean Sibelius' "Symphony No. 1 in E," Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Tsar Saltan Suite."

Burgin has been concertmaster of the Boston Symphony for 45 years, was appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor since 1943. He was born Oct. 11, 1892, in Warsaw, Poland.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,450

MAR 4 1965

Winthrop Temple To Host Pops Concert

The Sisterhood of Temple Tifereth in Winthrop, will sponsor the first Winthrop appearance of the Boston Pops Orchestra Group, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson on Sunday evening, April 4, at 8:30 p.m.

A champagne hour for sponsors will precede the concert to be held in the new Temple Tifereth Israel Social Hall. Soloist of the concert will be the Temple's Cantor H. Leon Masovetsky. One of the works of the late Irving Fine of Winthrop will be performed.

Chairman of the evening is Mrs. Marshall Traibman; co-ordinator is Mrs. Louis Rudginsky. Secretary is Mrs. Adolphe Goldschmidt and treasurer is Mrs. George Katz. Other committee members who are helping to raise funds to support Temple Tifereth Israel Hebrew School are Mmes. Jacob Groman, Melvin Mael, Harold Young, Davic Levy, and Sylvan Katz, Sisterhooc presidents.

Also on the committee are: Mmes William Greenblatt, Irving Ginsberg Harold Kovitz, Henry Sayder, Hubert Stone, Jacob Selig, A. Natha Caplan, Joseph Hirsch, and Berth Kurland, all of Winthrop.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,822

MAR 26 1965

SYMPHONY STRING QUARTET PLAYS APR. 22

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will present its final concert of the season in Jordan Hall on Thursday, April 22, at 8:30 p.m. The ensemble, quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra virtuosi: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin. Tickets for the April 22 program are now on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office, KE 6-2412.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Advertiser
SAUGUS, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,000

JAN 14 1965

NS Philharmonic Orchestra Plays In Lynn Sunday

The Winter Concert of the North Shore Philharmonic Orchestra, Sunday evening, January 17, at 7:30 PM at the Lynn City Hall Auditorium, will present as soloist, Fredy Ostrovsky, violin, of the Boston Smyphony Orchestra. Rolland Tapley will conduct.

Mr. Ostrovsky will play the violin concerto in B Minor, Opus 61, by Saint-Saens. This soloist has played in the Boston Pops and the Esplanade concerts under Arthur Fiedler. He has made recordings of the Paganini violin-guitar sonatas in Classic Editions, New York, and has also recorded some of his own compositions for the violin.

The program will also include Overture to Phedre by Massenet, the King Christian Suite II by Sibelius, Gaite Parisienne by Offenbach and the selection from My Fair Lady by Loewe.

Edward W. Rhodes is president of the orchestra; Ralph F. Shute, treasurer, and Frank L. Jones Jr., vice-president and business manager. Tickets are available from officers, members of the orchestra and at the box office. Tickets are also available from members of the Women's Associations of the co-sponsors of the concert, the Boston Street Methodist Church, and the First Church of Christ Congregational, Lynnfield St., Lynn. Mrs. Doris Garofano is membership chairman.

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

FEB 1965

Fine Arts Symphony Will Feature Rare Ravel Work

New Jersey audiences will have the rare opportunity of hearing Ravel's "Concerto in F Major" for piano and orchestra when the Fine Arts Symphony performs the virtuoso work on its Spring Concert. Jack Ervin, the Symphony's founder and conductor, will be the soloist.

Joining Mr. Ervin for the program which will be held at West Essex Regional High School, North Caldwell, Sunday, Mar. 14 at 4 p.m. will be John Sant Ambrogio, Bloomfield cellist now with the Boston Symphony who will perform the familiar "Cello Concerto in B Minor" of Anton Dvorak.

The Ravel concerto is noted for its very complex style, intricate rhythmical patterns, dynamic brilliance and subtlety. It uses the technical resources of each instrument in the orchestra to the limit of its capacity, requiring virtuosity just to play the notes as written. Solo passages for the bassoon, clarinet, flute, piccolo, trumpet and percussion are especially difficult.

The Fine Arts Symphony, in its fourth season is a small orchestra of very fine musicians who, obviously, feel that they are up to the challenge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,469

FEB 11 [illegible]

Chandler Gregg Reviews

Symphony's Mid-Season Concert Wins Praise for Precision, Programming

By Chandler Gregg

The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra, Rolland Tapley, conductor, presented its Mid-Season Concert ,part of its Sixteenth Season, last Sunday evening February 7th, at the Junior High School.

The program, which featured Louis Speyer, English Horn, as guest soloist consisted of the "Pinocchio" overture of Ernst Toch, Walter Piston's "Fantasy" for English Horn, Harp, and Strings, "The Swan of Tuonela" by Sibelius, and the Dvorak Eighth Symphony.

In many respects this was the best played and most well programmed concert the orchestra has presented over the years. All of the music was important repertoire yet none of it was hackneyed. The opening Toch overture, played with unusual precision, was a delightful curtain-raiser and provided good contrast for the more somber works which followed.

Walter Piston's "Fantasy," composed for Mr. Speyer and premiered by him with the Boston Symphony in 1953 is a haunting evocative composition exploring the limits of the sonority of the English Horn. The very beautiful harp part was extremely well played by Therese Mueller and the strings played as though inspired both by the beauty of the music and the artistry of Louis Speyer. A word of gratitude is due Mr. Tapley both for bringng us Mr. Speyer and for programming this vintage Piston that is all too infrequently heard.

Perhaps the Sibelius "Swan" would have been more effective without the preceding Piston work of similar mood and tone color, but it too was done superbly by both soloist and orchestra. Karen Mumma, first cellist, in her important solo role, revealed an excellent tone throughout.

This work by the way, was performed in memory of Winston Churchill whose connection with music was remote to say the least. For this listener thoughts of Pierre Monteux were uppermost, since he and Mr. Speyer played this work in the last appearance of "le maitre" with the BSO six months before his death last June.

After the interval Dvorak's delightful Eighth Symphony (No. 4 under the old numbering system) received a very creditable reading. One could have wished for more tone in the woodwind solos, particularly the flute solo early in the first movement and again in the finale (at letter D), as well as the clarinet motives in thirds of the first movement. Perhaps a judicious doubling of parts might have resulted in a better balance of forces. The violin solo in the Adagio, the best played movement, was handled very ably by Josephine Smith, concert mistress of the symphony.

Throughout the evening Robert Mackow, first horn, and Rod Goodman, first bassoon, were a credit to the ensemble, as was the cello section especially in such beautiful moments as the opening of the corner movements of the Dvorak.

All in all, the concert was a great success and Rolland Tapley, conductor of the WSO for all of its sixteen years again achieved a notable triumph, one of which Wellesley has every reason to be proud.

Mention must also be made of the lovely camillias raised by Walter Wheeler of the cello section, which bedecked the podium with stunning effect and the new acoustical backing which not only improved the decor but helped to project the sound more effectively into the auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,681

FEB 3 1965

Area Musicians To Be In Wellesley Symphony Winter Concert Sunday

The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra will present its sixteenth annual Winter Concert on Sunday evening at 8:00 p. m. in the Wellesley Junior High School Auditorium. Musicians from twenty suburban communities will join Rolland Tapley in performing works by Toch, Piston, Sibelius, and Dvorak. Participants from the Norwood-Westwood area are Mrs. Jean Smyth, Andrew A. Parisi, Arthur Rodgers, Rev. Walton D. Moffitt, Mrs. Ann Fleck, and Robert Fleck.

Rolland Tapley, conductor of the Orchestra since its inception sixteen years ago, proudly presents Louis Speyer, English Horn, as special guest artist. Throughout his forty-five years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Speyer gained a unique achievement for which he is well known. He was never tardy, never missed a rehearsal, and never missed a performance. Mr. Speyer who has served under five BSO conductors has had more compositions written for him than any other English Horn artist. After retiring his chair at the close of last year's Berkshire Festival, he became Music Coordinator for the Berkshire Music Center.

Featured Harp soloist in the Piston and Sibelius will be Miss Therese J. Mueller, Wellesley Symphony member, and Music Librarian at Wellesley College. The Wellesley Symphony Orchestra is sponsored by the Wellesley Recreation Commission.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 18 1965

String Quartet

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will give its final concert of the season Thursday evening, Apr. 22, at 8:30 in Jordan Hall. The program has not yet been announced.

The ensemble, quartet-in-residence at the New England Conservatory, is made up of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
D. 91,000 S. 120,000

MAR 25 1965

Burgin Due For Concert

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor tonight for the next-to-last concert of the Florida Symphony Orchestra's 1964-65 season.

He will conduct Finnish composer Jean Sibelius' "Symphony No. 1 in E," Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Tsar Saltan Suite."

Burgin has been concertmaster of the Boston Symphony for 45 years, was appointed assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor since 1943. He was born Oct. 11, 1892, in Warsaw, Poland.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,450

MAR 4 1965

Winthrop Temple To Host Pops Concert

The Sisterhood of Temple Tifereth in Winthrop, will sponsor the first Winthrop appearance of the Boston Pops Orchestra Group, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson on Sunday evening, April 4, at 8:30 p.m.

A champagne hour for sponsors will precede the concert to be held in the new Temple Tifereth Israel Social Hall. Soloist of the concert will be the Temple's Cantor H. Leon Masovetsky. One of the works of the late Irving Fine of Winthrop will be performed.

Chairman of the evening is Mrs. Marshall Traibman; co-ordinator is Mrs. Louis Rudginsky. Secretary is Mrs. Adolphe Goldschmidt and treasurer is Mrs. George Katz. Other committee members who are helping to raise funds to support Temple Tifereth Israel Hebrew School are Mmes. Jacob Groman, Melvin Mael, Harold Young, David Levy, and Sylvan Katz, Sisterhood presidents.

Also on the committee are: Mmes. William Greenblatt, Irving Ginsberg, Harold Kovitz, Henry Sayder, Herbert Stone, Jacob Selig, A. Nathan Caplan, Joseph Hirsch, and Bert Kurland, all of Winthrop.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,822

MAR 26 1965

SYMPHONY STRING QUARTET PLAYS APR. 22

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will present its final concert of the season in Jordan Hall on Thursday, April 22, at 8:30 p.m. The ensemble, quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of Boston Symphony Orchestra virtuosi: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin. Tickets for the April 22 program are now on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office, KE 6-2412.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

MAR 24 1965

QUINTET OF TALENT shown here includes Jesus Maria Sanroma, Puerto Rican pianist, and four members of Boston Symphony string section, reunited Tuesday night for informal "jam session" after rehearsal of N. H. Philharmonic Orchestra at Memorial High School. Standing, left to right, are Carl Zeise, cello; Stanley Benson, second violin; Rolland Tapley, first violin (and conductor of the N. H. Philharmonic); George Humphrey, viola. The four Boston musicians joined Sanroma to perform the Shostakovich Quintet. Sanroma will be the guest artist with the Philharmonic Friday evening in Concord and Sunday evening in Manchester.

(Staff Photo by Naum)

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

MAR 29 1965

Sanroma Featured Performer

Pop Concert Well Received Here

An audience of more than 1,300 filled Practical Arts auditorium last night to hear the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra's annual Pop Concert.

The program opened with Camille Saint-Saens' "March Militaire Francaise." The orchestra's performance allowed for a good deal of expression, thus creating a mood such as Saint-Saens would have appreciated.

"London Every Day" by Eric Coates followed. Doris Whitney performed especially well the cello solo work in "Westminster," a meditative movement, and the orchestra showed its adaptability to different tempos by swiftly switching to "Knightsbridge," a gay and rather rollicking march.

Sanroma Appears

A brief pause allowed the stage hands to move the concert grand Baldwin to the front of the stage, for the featured performer and guest soloist.

Sanroma strode quickly to the piano, and the audience was hushed as he began Edvard Grieg's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in A Minor, Opus 16." Sanroma was the first official orchestra-pianist in America, having played under Serge Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is also Puerto Rico's most famous musician. He knew just what he wanted to bring out of the music, and he had the technical "know-how" to do it.

After a brief intermission, the orchestra played the first performance of Robert W. Manton's "A Song at Sunrise." Mr. Manton has been well known for his musical endeavors in the Granite State for some years, having recently retired from the University of New Hampshire's music department.

Following the Manton work came a sprightly selection of medleys from the musical "Gypsy" by Jules Styne. Familiar tunes arose from various sections of the orchestra, and it was difficult to keep the feet from tapping, the hands from clapping, and the lips from whistling. A thoroughly enjoyable treat which left the audience in a most receptive mood for the final number on the program.

Concert Ends

To conclude the concert with a perennial favorite, the orchestra accompanied Sanroma in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" — undoubtedly one of Gershwin's best musical works, in which he was able to link the popular world of music with the concert world. Once again Sanroma's sure hands and quick imagination re-created the music in such a stirring way, that at its end, the entire audience accorded him a standing ovation.

Joining Sanroma in the bows for the Gershwin performance were 13-year-old Peter Bowman who will probably one day be one of the finest oboists in the country; John Adams, the young clarinet virtuoso from Concord; Ralph Bowie, French horn; and Melvin Whitcomb, solo trumpet.

So enthusiastic was the audience, that Sanroma consented to more than one encore. He fluently played sections from Bach's First Partita and the "Can-Can" from Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne."

The New Hampshire Philharmonic has established itself in the Granite State as a medium for amateur and professional musicians to gather together and produce music in a professional manner. And under the baton of Roland Tappley from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the orchestra seemingly improves with each concert. As a member of the audience was heard to remark last night: "It's truly amazing how these housewives and job-holders can get together and produce an evening of wonderful music such as this."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun - Transcript
WINTHROP, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,270

MAR 18 1965

SIGNS CONTRACT — Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra Group signs contract for the group's one-night appearance at the new Temple Tifereth Israel, Sunday, April 4, at 8:30 P.M., sponsored by Winthrop Hebrew Ladies Auxiliary Sisterhood, Temple Tifereth Israel. Looking on is Chairman, Mrs. Marshall Traibman of Winthrop. (Story on Page 8.)

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 132,711 SUN. 196,874

MAR 11 1965 Buffalo

Eastman 'Cellist Gets New 'Chair'

STEPHEN GEBER

Stephen Geber, Eastman School student member of the Rochester Philharmonic, could hardly believe his musical ear yesterday when notified that he had been selected from a field of 120 candidates to fill a vacancy in the 'cello section of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will take up his duties there next fall after completing his course here.

Geber spotted a bulletin at the Eastman School some weeks ago announcing a vacancy in the Boston orchestra and inviting applications. He filled out a form, was told to report last week for an audition at Boston Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor and former Rochesterian, was one of the judges. Geber, however, had never met him.

Of the original 120 applicants, all but 18 were eliminated, and of these five were selected for final trials. They were put through a rigorous test of performance and sight reading. Geber came out on top.

In Boston he will have a fulltime 52-week schedule. He is promised the role of principal 'cellist in the summer Tanglewood orchestra. He is married to the former Judith Ryder, Eastman School student pianist, and is a student of Ronald Leonard.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

3 12 965

Take To Wings For Pleasure

Flying Like Music To Symphony Players

By CHARLES H. BALL
Traveler Aviation Editor

[illegible] live in a world of [illegible] masterpieces.

[illegible] two members of the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] of a finely tuned airplane engine also is a thing of [illegible].

TAKING WING ON MUSIC

When not taking wing on music, William Waterhouse of 99 Grove St., Westwood, a violinist, and Joseph Hearne of 106 Leland Rd., Chestnut Hill, a double bass player, do it in their own plane.

The craft, a green and white Cessna 140, is kept at Mansfield Municipal Airport—which appears to be benefitting from the experience esthetically as well as materially.

One morning this week, for instance, Mendelssohn's concerto was the offering, the full, rich tones of Waterhouse's violin overflowing into the airport office from an adjoining room.

In the [illegible], the regulars leaned [illegible] in their chairs with [illegible] contentment than usual, it seemed—soaking up the experience.

Waterhouse, who was waiting for Hearne, emerged from the room. "I had the violin along," he said, "so I thought I'd get in some practice. I wanted to try some landings, but there's too much crosswind."

The 47-year-old musician started playing the violin at the age of four—his father is still a teacher in Winnipeg—and he has wanted to fly for almost as long.

"I've had it in my mind ever since I was a child," he explained. "I started taking flying lessons about three years ago, but I was building a house then and decided I couldn't do both."

Now taking instruction again regularly, he hopes to get his license by the end of the summer.

YOUNGEST MEMBER OF ORCHESTRA

Hearne, who at 22 is the youngest member of the orchestra, already is a licensed pilot. And it was Waterhouse who infected him with the flying bug.

"I've always talked airplanes with anyone who'd listen," Waterhouse said, "and he responded. He really got bitten and went right at it."

Hearne started flying about a year ago with the Tech Flying Club at Hanscom Field in Bedford, then went on to take lessons at Wiggins Airways in Norwood, during the winter concert season, and at Great Barrington Airport during the summer, when the orchestra was at Tanglewood.

He got his license in November, and bought the used Cessna with Waterhouse the next month for $2,500. He has logged about 102 hours, and is looking forward to obtaining an instrument rating.

"We flew to New York for one concert," Hearne said, "and we plan to take the plane down to New York and Baltimore on the next trip, if the weather holds. Then I'm going to take it down to Miami in June, when I have my vacation."

Hearne is single. Waterhouse said his wife, Gilly, "encouraged me to get going again with flying."

What does Erich Leinsdorf, the symphony conductor, think of it?

"Oh, I'm pretty certain he approves," said Waterhouse. "We're pretty much immersed in music, and I think he agrees that a diversion like this is a good thing. He even jokes about it.

"During a rehearsal about a week ago, I had to move to make room for the player next to me. When he saw it, he said, 'Ha, you're used to the pilot's seat.' "

Although Waterhouse and Hearne are the only active fliers in the orchestra, their colleagues have a wide range of interests in other fields outside music—something the public may not appreciate.

MANY SKIERS
IN ORCHESTRA

"There are a lot of skiers in the orchestra," Hearne said, "as well as some amateur astronomers who have built their own telescopes. Boating and fishing also are popular."

The two fliers, however, are keeping a sharp eye for potential pilots.

"The first bassoonist, Sherman Walt, was a test pilot in World War II," Hearne said, "and Martin Hoherman, the second cellist, flew a glider in Poland."

Waterhouse laughed. "We've been working on them. We manage to leave our aviation magazines around where they'll find them."

"When we're done, the orchestra may be renting a fleet of small planes for its trips instead of chartering an airliner."

(This column appears Monday, Wdnesday and Friday.

(Traveler Staff Photo by James K. O'Callaghan)

JOE HEARNE and Bill Waterhouse have some fun for the camera. Joe's double bass won't really fit in the plane.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

965

BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orches[illegible] conducted by Harry Ellis [illegible] will present a program of Pops music Sunday, April 25, at 3 [illegible] the high school auditorium [illegible] the Sea Church will sponsor the concert for the third [illegible].

The [illegible] will be Ronald L. Gerbrands, widely known baritone from Boston. He performed the lead role in the first telecast of [illegible], "The Secret of Suzanne" and has appeared with [illegible] Opera Theater and [illegible] Caldwell's Boston opera [illegible].

In a[illegible] to his many operatic [illegible] Gerbrands has sung [illegible] roles in musical comedy [illegible] starred in supper [illegible] the famed "Show[illegible]stette.

The [illegible] Rosenkranz is general [illegible]man. He is assisted [illegible] Mrs. Herbert Stackhouse, [illegible] Peter Sorrentino, Mrs. Joseph Walker and Miss Mary C[illegible]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,822

APR 9 1965

the tests.

TWO STRING QUARTETS BY BOSTON GROUP

Bartok's String Quartet No. 6 and Tchaikovsky's Quartet in E flat minor, op. 30 compose the final program of the season by the Boston Symphony String Quartet. The group, composed of virtuosi from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform in Jordan Hall on Thursday, April 22 at 8:30 p.m. Tickets for the concert are now on sale at the Jordan Hall Box Office, KE 6-2412.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

APR 1 6 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 1 4 1965

BSO String Quartet Ticket Sale Open

Tickets for the final performance of the season by the Boston Symphony String Quartet are now on sale at the Jordan Hall box office. The ensemble, quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, will play in Jordan Hall on Thursday, April 22, at 8:30 p.m.

The quartet is composed of virtuosi from the Boston Symphony Orchestra: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin. The April 22 program will include Bartok's String Quartet No. 6 and Tchaikovsky's Quartet No. 3 in E flat minor, op. 30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

547

NEWBURGH-BEACON NEWS
Thursday, April 1, 1965

Educators Hold Clinic

TUXEDO — The Orange County Music Educators Association held an instrumental music clinic at the Tuxedo High School on Rt. 17 in Tuxedo. The general chairman was Roland K. Persson, Director of Music at Tuxedo.

Rosario Mazzeo, clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, demonstrated the new Mazzeo clarinet for the benefit of the student clarinetists. Demonstrations and clinics of other instruments were held at the same time in other rooms.

The clinicians were as follows: John Giacco of Valley Central Junior High School, Montgomery, flutist; Charles Arena of Highland Falls Central Schools, trumpeter; George Perna of the Chester Public Schools, french horn; Dr. Steven Fochios of Tuxedo Park, violin and Jacob Kelas of the Newburgh elementary schools, cello and double bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 4 1965

Bartok, Tchaikovsky By Symphony Quartet

Bartok's String Quartet No. 6 and Tchaikovsky's Quartet in E flat minor, op. 30 compose the final program of the season by the Boston Symphony String Quartet. The group, composed of virtuosi from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform in Jordan Hall on Thursday, April 22, at 8:30 p.m. Tickets for the concert are now on sale at the Jordan Hall box office, KE 6-2412.

The ensemble, quartet in residence at the New England Conservatory, is composed of four Boston Symphony Orchestra players: concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, violinist George Zazofsky, principal violist Burton Fine, and principal cellist Jules Eskin.

128

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

APR 8 1965

Pops Night at Mishkan Tefila

On Sunday, April 11, Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct the nucleus of the Boston Pops Orchestra in the Temple Mishkan Tefila Social Hall, 300 Hammond Pond Parkway, Chestnut Hill. Mr. Dickson is assistant conductor of the Boston Pops and Esplanade Concerts and conductor of the Brookline Youth Concerts and Symphony Hall Youth Concerts.

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON

As an added feature of the program, a talented young violin soloist, Lynn Chang, an 11-year-old Newton student, will also perform. He was selected by Mr. Dickson through competitive audition.

Parents and children will be able to enjoy the music with refreshments served at each table. Alan J. Tichnor is president of the Forum. Mrs. George Levy is chairman of Pops Night and reservations are being handled by Mr. and Mrs. Jean Paul Weinstein. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the Temple office. The concert will start at 7:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 23 1965

Bartok's 6th Played by BSO Quartet

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

The Boston Symphony String Quartet (Joseph Silverstein, George Zazofsky, Burton Fine, Jules Eskin) ended its Jordan Hall series with a concert on Thursday evening at which it played Bartok's Sixth Quartet and the Quartet in E flat minor, Opus 30, by Tchaikovsky.

The Bartok is a familiar and beautiful classic, and it was smoothly played.

Tchaikovsky's quartet was written in 1876, a year before the Fourth Symphony. Its unfamiliarity is explained by acquaintance. It has attractive moments both in scoring and in melodic invention, especially in the funereal third movement.

It is also structurally ramshackle, with many sequences and mechanical repetitions, and there is here no orchestral gorgeousness behind which the compositional vacuity can hide.

It is odd, in fact, that except in a few moments, Tchaikovsky does not write very gracefully for quartet. He seems not to have known how to be lush with only four instruments, and much of the music sounds like a reduction from something bigger.

The overall shape is odd, too. The first and third movements are very expansive; the second, a scherzo, is quite brief; and the finale is so short, and at the same time so discursive, as to give the impression of something quite misshapen. Again the performance was competent and smooth without being in any way especially persuasive.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,565

MAY 20 1965

Clarinetist to Perform Here

IPSWICH — School children will be introduced to the clarinet family at the last PTA-sponsored Saturday entertainment this season. Plans are to have clarinetist Rosano Mazzeo from the Boston Symphony Orchestra conduct the program, scheduled for 1 p.m., May 29, at the Winthrop School.

Any child, in school may attend for 25 cents, to be paid at the door.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
IPSWICH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,386

MAY 20 1965

Clarenetist To Play For Children

The Boston Symphony and Boston Pops first clarinetist will play for Ipswich youngsters Saturday, May 29.

Rosario Mazzeo, well known instrumentalist and also an Ipswich summer resident, will introduce the youngsters not only to the clarinet but also to other woodwinds.

The program will be the final one in a series which have been held for elementary and junior high school children by the combined elementary schools PTA.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,548

MAY 13 1965

Boston Symphony String Quartet to play at First Parish Sunday

A string quartet, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be a featured part of the 10 a.m. service at the First Parish in Plymouth on Sunday, May 16. Those performing will be: Einar Hansen, first violin; Minot Beale, second violin; Earl Hedberg, viola; and Karl Zeise, cello.

The program will consist of a pre-church concert of "Andante Cantabile" by Tschaikowski and "Adagio Cantabile" from String Quartet No. 35 by Haydn.

The offertory will be "Larghetto" by Handel-Pochon; and the postlude "Moment Musicale" by Schubert-Pochon.

Einar Hansen has been the first violinist with the Boston Symphony for many years and is well known in Plymouth. He appeared several times at the First Parish.

Minot Beale, also a familiar performer in Plymouth, was formerly a member of the faculty at the New England Conservatory of Music, and is a noted artist throughout the New England area.

Earl Hedberg is a former member of the Minneapolis Symphony, where he occupied first chair in the viola section. He studied in New York with Sascha Jacobson.

Karl Zeise studied with Alwin Schroeder, and has played with both the Philadelphia and Cleveland orchestras. He joined the Boston Symphony in 1939.

The public is most cordially invited to attend.

NEW ENGLAN
Box 2078, Boston

PITTSFIELD
Berkshire E
Eve. Circ

OCT -8

New BS
Chambe
Sets Ina

The Boston Sym tra announced to ural concert b formed Boston Sy ber Players wil
Sanders Theater,
Nov. 8 at 8:30. T phony Chamber sists of the princ
the Boston Sym tra and is unde
ment of the orche
Members of the ers to be heard include Joseph S
lin; Burton Fine
Eskin, cello; Ge bass; Doriot An flute; Ralph Gom
no Cioffi, clar
Walt, bassoon; an liano, horn.
The program
concert will inc
Quartet in F for Viola, and Cello, chamber music c
Beethoven, the S
for Flute, Violin, and the Septet
Strings and Winds
Although the fi
the chamber play formed in Sanders
ets will be sold at Hall box office.
$2.50, $3, $3.50, an orders will be a Symphony Hall B
phony Hall, Bost

England Newsclip
2078, Boston 6 • RIc

Sunday Glo
BOSTON, M
Circ. 465,6

OCT 11

Boston S
Chambe
To Mak

The Bosto Chamber Pla
ble formed fr players in the make their
Nov. 8, at 8:
Theater, Ca
Chamber Play
the manageme ton Symphony Personnel fo cert include stein, violin;
viola; Jules
Georges Mole
Anthony Dwye
Gomberg, obo clarinet; Sher soon; and Ja horn.
The progra
8 concert
Mozart's Qua
Oboe, Violin, V
K. 370, and music compos thoven, the Se Flute, Violin, and the Septe
Strings and W

129

CHAMBER PLAYERS.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
Berkshire Eagle
Eve. Circ. 2?,304

OCT -8 1964

New BSO Chamber Group Sets Inaugural

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced today the inaugural concert by the newly formed Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be given in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Nov. 8 at 8:30. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players consists of the principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and is under the management of the orchestra.

Members of the chamber players to be heard in this concert include Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

The program for the Nov. 8 concert will include Mozart's Quartet in F for Oboe, Violin, Viola, and Cello, K. 370, and two chamber music compositions of Beethoven, the Serenade in D for Flute, Violin, Viola, Op. 25, and the Septet in E flat for Strings and Winds, Op. 20.

Although the first concert by the chamber players will be performed in Sanders Theater, tickets will be sold at the Symphony Hall box office. Tickets are $2.50, $3, $3.50, and $4, and mail orders will be accepted at the Symphony Hall Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

---

eEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 465,653

Boston Symphony Chamber Players To Make Debut

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, ~~an ensem~~ensemble formed from first desk players in the orchestra, will make their debut Sunday, Nov. 8, at 8:30 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. The Chamber Players are under the management of the Boston Symphony.

Personnel for the first concert include Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

The program for the Nov. 8 concert will include Mozart's Quartet in F for Oboe, Violin, Viola, and Cello, K. 370, and two chamber music compositions of Beethoven, the Serenade in D for Flute, Violin, Viola, Op. 25, and the Septet in E flat for Strings and Winds, Op. 20.

New York Herald Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

OCT 9 1964

MUSIC NOTES

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a chamber music group formed from principal members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give its first concerts this season in Boston, New York and Washington. Incorporating a string trio and quartet and a wind quintet formerly affiliated with the orchestra, the new organization will perform next summer at the Berkshire Festival and appear as a unit in conjunction with the Boston Symphony's year-round activities.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

OCT 10 1964

Chamber group formed as BSO diversifies

Ever mindful of the ingredients that make for excellence in a musical organization, the Boston Symphony is taking further steps to expand its service to the community and to the musical world.

At a recent press luncheon Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, and Erich Leinsdorf, musical director, shared the pleasant dual task of disclosing the foresighted plans.

One announcement concerned a newly formed ensemble, the Boston Chamber Players, made up of principal players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its inaugural concert will take place at Sanders Theater in Cambridge on Sunday, Nov. 8, at 8:30 p.m.

The other announcement had to do with a composer-in-residence project. John Huggler has been awarded a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for study with the orchestra. He is the first recipient of such a grant.

* * *

Mr. Huggler, present at the luncheon, spoke briefly in appreciation for the privilege of studying in this unique capacity with the orchestra, and said that he was sure that fruits of such an effort would be forthcoming. He has, however, no other duties than those of research and study.

Mr. Cabot, in announcing the new organization within the orchestra, said, "Heretofore many players have played chamber music on their own. Now the orchestra itself undertakes to provide chamber music for the public. This is possible because our first players do not play in the Pops. This new activity, therefore, not only provides the public with more music but our players with more employment."

Mr. Leinsdorf said, "Chamber music is the natural outlet for instrumentalists to maintain their identity. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is fortunate to have among its members a number of splendid chamber music players, to whom the cultivation of this most refined form of music is an artistic necessity. I rejoice that we can give to the public, as well as to the players, the most complete coverage of music.

Mr. Leinsdorf is not going to rehearse with them. He feels that they are a group that will be musically self-governed and will not be expected to reflect the orchestra director as an individual interpreter.

Tickets will be sold at the Symphony Hall box office starting at 1 p.m., Oct. 12.

J. M. C.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

OCT 23 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS, composed of principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rehearse the Beethoven Septet in E-flat for Strings and Winds, Op. 20, which will conclude their inaugural Concert in Sanders Theatre, Sunday evening, Nov. 8. L. to R. are Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine, Jules Eskin, Georges Moleux, James Stagliano, Sherman Walt, and Gino Cioffi. Tickets for this concert are now on sale at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

Berkshire Eagle Oct 12, 1964

BSO Creates New Activity For Its Principal Players

BOSTON—The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of a new activity, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor.

The new project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. The repertoire for the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will include chamber music written for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets and wind quintets. With the wide variety of instrumentation available among the solo players of the Boston Symphony, the Chamber Players will be drawing from the broadest range of the chamber music repertoire from the prebaroque to contemporary periods.

Two Purposes

The trustees gave two general purposes for the establishment of the Chamber Players: Musically, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will now be able to take advantage of the special abilities and free time of its principal players outside of their regular playing with the orchestra; financially, the Boston Symphony Players will be given the opportunity to add substantially to their income from the orchestra. Three other groups have also been incorporated into the Chamber Players. These are the Boston Symphony String Trio, the Boston Symphony String Quartet and the Boston Symphony Wind Quintet.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give concerts during their first season in Boston, New York and Washington. The inaugural concert will take place on Sunday, Nov. 8, at Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Nest summer the group will perform at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Other concerts will be scheduled as time permits within the Boston Symphony Orchestra's year round activities.

Personnel

The personnel of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will consist of Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and all other principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; George Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon: James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson trombone; and Everett Firth, tympani.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's trustees, in announcing the new organization within the orchestra, said, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra recently formed a chamber music group called the Boston Symphony Chamber Players made up of the various sections of the orchestra. Heretofore many players have played chamber music on their own. Now the orchestra itself undertakes to provide chamber music for the public. This is possible because our first players do not play in the Pops. This new activity, therefore, not only provides the public with more music but our players with more employment."

Erich Leinsdorf, who is responsible for the musical direction of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, said, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra is fortunate to have among its members a number of splendid chamber music players, to whom the cultivation of this most refined form of music is an artistic necessity. As music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I rejoice that we can give to the public, as well as to the players, the most complete coverage of music. We feel that this project is very much within our over-all philosophy, and we trust that it will be durable and successful."

130

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

OCT 1 1 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

ATTLEBORO, MASS.
Sun
Eve. Circ. 11,177

OCT 17 1964

Principal Players of Symphony

Chamber Group Organized

The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of a new activity, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor.

The new project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. The repertoire for the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will include chamber music written for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets, and wind quintets. With the wide variety of instrumentation available among the solo players of the Boston Symphony, the Chamber Players will be drawing from the broadest range of the chamber music repertoire from the pre-Baroque to Contemporary periods.

The Boston Symphony Chamber players will give concerts during their first season in Boston, New York, and Washington. The inaugural concert will take place on Sunday, Nov. 8, at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge. Next summer the group will perform at the orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Other concerts will be scheduled as time permits within the orchestra's year round activities.

The personnel of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will consist of Joseph Silverstein concertmaster, and all other principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; and Everett Firth, tympani.

The program for the Nov. 8 concert will include Mozart's Quartet of Beethoven, the Serenade in D for Flute, Violin, Viola Op 25 and the Septet in E flat for Strings and Winds, Op. 20.

Although the first concert by the Chamber Players will be performed in Sanders Theatre, tickets will be sold at the Symphony Hall box office beginning at 1 p.m. tomorrow. Tickets are $2.50, $3, $3.50, and $4, and mail orders will be accepted at the Symphony Hall Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 228,833 SUN. 255,955

OCT 1 3 1964

Chamber Players Form at Boston

BOSTON, Mass. (Sp.) — Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of a new activity, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor.

The new project of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. The repertoire will include chamber music written for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets, and wind quintets.

The Chamber Players will give concerts during their first season in Boston, New York and Washington. The inaugural concert will take place on Sunday, Nov. 8, at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Mass.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 219,257 SUN. 312,266

OCT 1 8 1964

WITH OTHER ORCHESTRAS

Boston Symphony Sets Up A Chamber-Players Group

The Boston Symphony has formed the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, from the principal musicians of the orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor.

The new project, so the Boston Symphony Orchestra claims, is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. However, the Baltimore Symphony, under Peter Herman Adler, two seasons ago established somewhat comparable groups — the Baltimore Symphony Woodwind String Quartet and Baltimore Symphony Woodwind Quintet, comprising first-chair musicians.

The repertoire for the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will include chamber music written for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets, and wind quintets.

The Cincinnati Symphony has signed an extended recording contract with Decca Records. Under its terms, recordings will be distributed both in the United States and abroad, and one release each year will feature an outstanding soloist.

The first recording was made last week when Ruggiero Ricci recorded the Concerto in B Minor for Violin and Orchestra by Paganini and the Concerto No. 1 in A major for Violin and Orchestra by Saint-Saens.

The Cincinnati Symphony was the third American orchestra ever to record, beginning in 1917 with Columbia Records. Max Rudolf is now beginning his seventh season as the Cin[illegible]'s musical director.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 1 3 1964

Musical Chairs

Chamber Music Players Formed by Orchestra

By MARGO MILLER

There will be even more Boston Symphony concerts and recordings this season. But the orchestra's new project does not involve the whole band.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players have been formed from orchestra principals. The Chamber Players, dubbed at Symphony Hall the BosChaps, can split into smaller ensembles—string quartet, string trio or wind quintet—or into any combination of instruments the music dictates.

Thus the Chamber Players' first concert, Nov. 8, at 8:30 p.m. in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, will use an oboe quartet (for K. 370 of Mozart), a flute trio (Beethoven's Serenade, Op. 25) and a mixed septet (Beethoven's Op. 20 for strings and winds).

All this has come about because Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees and a former clarinetist, now plays the cash registrar, and because, in conductor Erich Leinsdorf's words, most musicians consider the playing of chamber music the "ne plus ultra" of pastimes.

The new project of the Boston Symphony is thought to be the only such activity sponsored by a major American orchestra for its solo players. The Philadelphia Chamber Orchestra, now in its fourth season, enjoys the encouragement but not the management facilities of its patent organization.

B.S.O. principals, traditionally, have not played the nine-week Pops seasons. Added employment at BosChaps will come from three Boston concerts, one at the orchestra's Summer home, Tanglewood, and several programs given on the orchestra tours to New York and Washington.

Joseph Silverstein, B.S.O. concertmaster, says the group will have musical autonomy. As its guiding light, he is also pleasantly aware of the flexibility in programming and rehearsal time such a group allows. A trio, for example, can practice just about anywhere without tieing up other players.

Then, too, he's pleased that the Chamber Players' programs will offer music not often done by the average quartet. Instruments added to the quartet mean elaborate scheduling of rehearsals and, of course, fees for guest artists.

RCA-Victor is backing the new project by recording initially four LPs. Among the works will be the Beethoven Septet, three aboe Romanzen by Schumann, a Mozart collection and various Hindemith pieces. Schoenberg's "Pierrot lunaire" and Stravinsky's "L'Histoire du soldat" will require the engagement of voices, the former a speech-singer, the latter a narrator.

The Chamber Players are now auditioning pianists. Asked if he might sit in occasionally, Leinsdorf allowed that he was badly out of practice for performance purposes. He did offer his services, though, as a scout for whatever actor or actress the BosChaps might need for future programs.

Now You Hear It

Mahler's Symphony No. 6 had its first U.S. performance under Mitropoulos' direction in New York in 1948. No one touched it again until this season, when four orchestras will get into the act. Leinsdorf will conduct the Sixth in Boston, Eleazar de Carvalho in St. Louis, William Steinberg with the New York Philharmonic and Sir John Barbirolli in Houston.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
Standard-Times
Sun. Circ. 55,328

OCT 18 1964

Boston Symphony Forms New Chamber Group

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of a new activity, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The group will give several concerts each season and will record chamber music for RCA-Victor.

Repertoire for the new group will include chamber music for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets, and wind quintets. Personnel of the group includes Joseph Silverstein, concert-master; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone, and Everett Firth, tympani. Inaugural concert of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will be performed on Nov. 8 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Concerts also will be played in New York and Washington and next Summer at Tanglewood.

Erich Leinsdorf, who is responsible for the musical direction of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, notes, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra is fortunate to have among its members a number of splendid chamber music players to whom the cultivation of this refined form of music is an artistic necessity. As music director of the Boston Symphony, I rejoice that we can give to the public, as well as the players, the most complete 'coverage' of music. We feel this project is very much within our overall philosophy, and we trust that it will be durable and successful."

St. Petersburg Times
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
D. 133,936 SUN. 143,454

OCT 2 4 1964

THE TRUSTEES OF THE Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The new project is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in the United States for its solo players. Incorporated in the group are the Boston Symphony String Trio, String Quartet, and Wind Quintet.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

OCT 3 1 1964

Boston Symphony Players Schedule Chamber Series

The newly organized Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give three concerts at Hunter College Playhouse this season.

The group will make its New York debut on Dec. 7 and return on Feb. 1 and March 22. All the dates are Mondays.

Made up of first desk players of the symphony, the group will give chamber music for strings, winds, and brasses in various combinations. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the symphony, also counsels the players.

The first program will include the Beethoven Serenade for Flute, Violin and Viola; Mozart's Oboe Quartet and his Septet in E flat for Strings and Winds.

Subscriptions for the series are available from the Hunter College Concert Bureau, 695 Park Avenue.

St. Petersburg Times
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
D. 133,936 SUN. 143,454

OCT 2 4 1964

THE TRUSTEES OF THE Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The new project is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in the United States for its solo players. Incorporated in the group are the Boston Symphony String Trio, String Quartet, and Wind Quintet.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

OCT 1 8 1964

Plan for BSO Chamber Players Is Well Received

Group Intends to Perform Music Seldom Heard According to Silverstein, Concertmaster

By R. C. HAMMERICH

The announcement of the formation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a group made up of the 12 first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and organized to perform chamber music publicly, was heard in this little corner with great glee.

A[illegible] the group has scheduled [illegible] in Boston, [illegible] New York and Washington, [illegible] has been [illegible] of [illegible] by [illegible], Weber, Mozart and [illegible] for four RCA recordings.

Special Interest

There are several [illegible] the formation of [illegible] of special interest.

One is that there [illegible] reason to doubt [illegible] claim that the pro[illegible] only such activity sp[illegible] a major symphony orchestra in this country.

The orchestra's music director, Erich Leinsdorf, is in charge; the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., is responsible for such things as extra pay and special rehearsal time; the standard of performance and number of performances during the season will be determined by time available from the orchestral schedule.

Another reason is that the group does not intend to form string trios and quartets and woodwind quintets to compete regularly with existing groups although such traditional instrumental combination probably will not be avoided.

Seldom Heard

The group's interest, said Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, last week, will tend toward using the group as a pool from which members can be drawn to make unusual combinations to play music seldom heard.

An illustration is Mozart's quartet for oboe, violin, viola and cello, K. 370, which four members of the group will play during its first public appearance Nov. 8 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge.

Not the least of the reasons for the group's special interest, to us anyway, is the possibility that it may conduct instrumental clinics at universities if it can find space in the time schedule of the orchestra.

Such a project is not planned, but it is contemplated, and it is comparable to an idea toyed with in this space on a couple of occasions.

The idea is that a city no larger than Springfield could well use a chamber orchestra during the school year to serve as instructor and demonstrator and educator in the school system, as a small orchestra to accompany stage, civic and industrial events and as the nucleus of a large symphony orchestra.

Special Department

It could be, in other words, a special department of the city's educational plant, available for [illegible] of paying for [illegible].

[illegible], for the record, [illegible] names of the first-chair Boston musicians who [illegible] a project— [illegible] direction and [illegible]:

Joseph S[illegible], concertmaster, vi[illegible] Fine, viola; Jules E[illegible]lo; George Moleux, [illegible]; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino C[illegible], clarinet; Sherman Walt, [illegible]; James Stagliano, [illegible] Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, tympani.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 102,435

OCT 25 1964

Music

Chamber

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

In addition to their solid 48-week schedule this season, principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been offered a new activity to be performed in their spare time.

Boston Symphony Chamber Players has been formed for the purpose of giving several concerts and recording chamber music.

This is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. The repertory will include chamber music written for strings, winds and brasses, as well as string trios, quartets and wind quintets.

Two General Purposes

The orchestra's trustees gave two general purposes for the establishment of the Chamber Players: 1. to take advantage of special abilities and free time of its principal players outside of their regular playing with the orchestra; 2. to give these players the opportunity to add substantially to their income from the orchestra.

Personnel of the Chamber Players will consist of Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voison, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, timpani.

Minneapolis Tribune
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
D. 215,803 SUN. 651,844

NOV 1 1964

Twelve principals of the Boston Symphony, headed by concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, have formed the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a new group that will give several concerts each season and record chamber music for RCA Victor . . . The Czech Philharmonic Orchestra will make its first American tour in the fall of 1965, playing in cities in the eastern United States and Canada . . .

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 1 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 5 19

New chamber group to make debut

Photography, Inc.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, composed of principals of the Boston Symphony, will give their inaugural concert at Sanders Theater on Sunday evening at 8:30.

SUBURBAN LIFE
ORANGE, N. J.
7 Tl. a YR. 8,500

NOV 1964

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a chamber music group formed from principal members of the Boston Symphony, will give its first concerts this season in Boston, New York and Washington. The new organization will perform next summer at the Berkshire Festival.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N. J.
MONTHLY 245.100

NOV 1964

Orchestral Innovations

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is forming and managing its own Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is to be a nucleus of twelve principal first-desk men, to which will be added other instrumentalists as needed. The group will encompass a string trio, string quartet, woodwind and brass quintets. Additional salaries are guaranteed the men in addition to an agreement to play a certain number of concerts and to record for RCA Victor. The Chamber Players, as they will be called, will present their inaugural concert on November 8, in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The nucleus of the Chamber Players will include Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and other principals of the orchestra: Burton, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Goberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Bigson, trombone; and Everett Firth, tympani.

The new activity not only provides the public with more music but the Boston Symphony first-desk players with more employment.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

NOV 1964

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the Orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor. The group will give concerts during this first season in Boston, New York and Washington. The repertoire will include chamber music written for strings, winds and brasses.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 768,503 SUN. 1,094,990

NOV 2 2 1964

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new subsidiary — the Boston Symphony Chamber Players — formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony String Trio, String Quartet and Wind Quintet will be subdivisions of the Chamber Players.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 15,900

NOV 1964

The Boston Symphony has announced the creation of a new chamber group formed from the orchestra's solo players and to be called the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. They will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor. The repertory will include chamber music for strings, winds, brasses, as well as string trios, quartets and wind quintets taken from pre-baroque to contemporary periods.

France-Amérique 8 Novembre 1964.

Débuts de l'ensemble de musique de chambre

La direction de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston a eu l'heureuse idée de former, au sein de l'Orchestre, un groupe de musique de chambre, composé des chefs de pupitres.

Le premier concert de ce groupe aura lieu ce dimanche, 8 novembre, à 20h.30, au Théâtre Sanders de Cambridge. Au programme: Quatuor en fa de Mozart pour hautbois, violon, alto et violoncelle; Sérénade en ré de Beethoven pour flûte, violon, alto; Septuor en mi bémol pour cordes et vents, de Beethoven également.

Les membres de ce groupe sont: Joseph Silverstein, violon (concertmaster); Burton Fine, alto; Jules Eskin, violoncelle; Georges Moleux, contrebasse; Mme Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flûte; Ralph Gomberg, hautbois; Gino Cioffi, clarinette; Sherman Walt, basson; James Stagliano, cor.

Les billets sont en vente au guichet de Symphony Hall à 2 dollars 50, 3 dollars, 3 dollars 50 et 4 dollars.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Herald
Sun. Circ. 281,586

NOV 8 1964

SANDERS THEATER — Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Mozart, Quartet in F for Oboe and strings, K. 370; Beethoven, Serenade in D for Flute, violin and viola, Op. 25; Beethoven, Septet in D for strings and winds, Op. 20. 8:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

OCT 18 1964

Plan for BSO Chamber Players Is Well Received

Group Intends to Perform Music Seldom Heard According to Silverstein, Concertmaster

By R. C. HAMMERICH

The announcement of the formation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a group made up of the 12 first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and organized to perform chamber music publicly, was heard in this little corner with great glee.

Already the group has scheduled performances at Boston, Cambridge, New York, Washington and Tanglewood and has begun preparation of music by Schumann, Weber, Mozart and Hindemith for four RCA recordings.

Special Interest

There are several reasons why the formation of this group is of special interest.

One is that there seems to be no reason to doubt the orchestra's claim that the project is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country.

The orchestra's music director, Erich Leinsdorf, is in charge; the orchestra's manager, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., is responsible for such things as extra pay and special rehearsal time; the standard of performance and number of performances during the season will be determined by time available from the orchestral schedule.

Another reason is that the group does not intend to form string trios and quartets and woodwind quintets to compete regularly with existing groups although such traditional instrumental combination probably will not be avoided.

Seldom Heard

The group's interest, said Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, last week, will tend toward using the group as a pool from which members can be drawn to make unusual combinations to play music seldom heard.

An illustration is Mozart's quartet for oboe, violin, viola and cello, K. 370, which four members of the group will play during its first public appearance Nov. 8 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge.

Not the least of the reasons for the group's special interest, to us anyway, is the possibility that it may conduct instrumental clinics at universities if it can find space in the time schedule of the orchestra.

Such a project is not planned, but it is contemplated, and it is comparable to an idea toyed with in this space on a couple of occasions.

The idea is that a city no larger than Springfield could well use a chamber orchestra during the school year to serve as instructor and demonstrator and educator in the school system, as a small orchestra to accompany stage, civic and industrial events and as the nucleus of a large symphony orchestra.

Special Department

It could be, in other words, a special department of the city's educational plant, available for hire as a means of paying for part of its own way.

Well, anyway, for the record, here are the names of the first-chair Boston musicians who have started such a project—from the opposite direction and at the top level:

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; George Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, tympani.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 102,435

OCT 2 5 196

Music

Chamber

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

In addition to their solid 48-week schedule this season, principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been offered a new activity to be performed in their spare time.

Boston Symphony Chamber Players has been formed for the purpose of giving several concerts and recording chamber music.

This is the only such activity sponsored by a major symphony orchestra in this country for its solo players. The repertory will include chamber music written for strings, winds and brasses, as well as string trios, quartets and wind quintets.

Two General Purposes

The orchestra's trustees gave two general purposes for the establishment of the Chamber Players: 1. to take advantage of special abilities and free time of its principal players outside of their regular playing with the orchestra; 2. to give these players the opportunity to add substantially to their income from the orchestra.

Personnel of the Chamber Players will consist of Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voison, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, timpani.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 1 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 5 1964

New chamber group to make debut

Photography, Inc.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, composed of principals of the Boston Symphony, will give their inaugural concert at Sanders Theater on Sunday evening at 8:30.

SUBURBAN LIFE
ORANGE, N. J.
7 Tl. a YR. 8,500

NOV 1964

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a chamber music group formed from principal members of the Boston Symphony, will give its first concerts this season in Boston, New York and Washington. The new organization will perform next summer at the Berkshire Festival.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N. J.
MONTHLY 245.100

NOV 1964

Orchestral Innovations

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is forming and managing its own Boston Symphony Chamber Players. This is to be a nucleus of twelve principal first-desk men, to which will be added other instrumentalists as needed. The group will encompass a string trio, string quartet, woodwind and brass quintets. Additional salaries are guaranteed the men in addition to an agreement to play a certain number of concerts and to record for RCA Victor. The Chamber Players, as they will be called, will present their inaugural concert on November 8, in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The nucleus of the Chamber Players will include Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and other principals of the orchestra: Burton, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Goberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Bigson, trombone; and Everett Firth, tympani.

The new activity not only provides the public with more music but the Boston Symphony first-desk players with more employment.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 15,900

NOV 1964

The Boston Symphony has announced the creation of a new chamber group formed from the orchestra's solo players and to be called the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. They will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor. The repertory will include chamber music for strings, winds, brasses, as well as string trios, quartets and wind quintets taken from pre-baroque to contemporary periods.

France-Amérique 8 Novembre 1964

Débuts de l'ensemble de musique de chambre

La direction de l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston a eu l'heureuse idée de former, au sein de l'Orchestre, un groupe de musique de chambre, composé des chefs de pupitres.

Le premier concert de ce groupe aura lieu ce dimanche, 8 novembre, à 20h.30, au Théâtre Sanders de Cambridge. Au programme: Quatuor en fa de Mozart pour hautbois, violon, alto et violoncelle; Sérénade en ré de Beethoven pour flûte, violon, alto; Septuor en mi bémol pour cordes et vents, de Beethoven également.

Les membres de ce groupe sont: Joseph Silverstein, violon (concertmaster); Burton Fine, alto; Jules Eskin, violoncelle; Georges Moleux, contrebasse; Mme Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flûte; Ralph Gomberg, hautbois; Gino Cioffi, clarinette; Sherman Walt, basson; James Stagliano, cor.

Les billets sont en vente au guichet de Symphony Hall à 2 dollars 50, 3 dollars, 3 dollars 50 et 4 dollars.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

NOV 1964

The trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the creation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the Orchestra. The Chamber Players will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor. The group will give concerts during this first season in Boston, New York and Washington. The repertoire will include chamber music written for strings, winds and brasses.

Minneapolis Tribune
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
D. 215,803 SUN. 651,844

NOV 1 1964

Twelve principals of the Boston Symphony, headed by concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, have formed [illegible] the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, a new group that will give several concerts each season and record chamber music for RCA Victor . . . The Czech Philharmonic Orchestra will make its first American tour in the fall of 1965, playing in cities in the eastern United States and Canada

---

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 768,503 SUN. 1,094,990

NOV 22 1964

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new subsidiary — the Boston Symphony Chamber Players — formed from the principal players of the orchestra. The Boston Symphony String Trio, String Quartet and Wind Quintet will be subdivisions of the Chamber Players.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Herald
Sun. Circ. 281,586

NOV 8 1964

SANDERS THEATER — Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Mozart, Quartet in F for Oboe and strings, K. 370; Beethoven, Serenade in D for Flute, violin and viola, Op. 25; Beethoven, Septet in D for strings and winds, Op. 20. 8:30 p.m.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02103 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn, Circ. 202,711

NOV 9 1964

Boston Symphony Chamber Group Disappointing in Debut

A friendly audience filled Sanders Theater on Sunday evening for the inaugural concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an organization of 12 of the orchestra's principals. The participants this time were Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola, Jules Eskin, cello, Georges Moleux, bass, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. And that leaves the Messrs. Voisin, Gibson and Firth yet to be unveiled.

It is natural for orchestral musicians to feel the need to make music without a conductor before them, and in the natural course of things they were apt to frequently get together to play chamber music for their own pleasure. The uniqueness of the situation here rests in the fact that the Boston Symphony is the only major orchestra in the country officially to sponsor such activity for its solo players.

The desire to play chamber music and an interest in it do not necessarily guarantee excellent results. While Sunday night's concert showed once again that our Symphony soloists are in many respects highly accomplished players, it was on the whole a bland and disappointing affair.

The choice of program was partly at fault. The music played was Beethoven Serenade, Opus 25 for flute, violin, and viola; Mozart's Oboe Quartet; and the Beethoven Septet. The composers' names are formidable, but this music is not. The two Beethoven pieces are genial and agreeable enough, to be sure, but they are so slight as to make their presence in the repertory highly unlikely were it not for the composer's name.

The Mozart is on a higher level, but still miles below his most beautiful chamber music.

In other words, it was all music that one does not mind hearing — though I am sure that at best the Beethoven pieces are more amusing to the players and to listeners — but one missed having something really substantial on the program.

The players make beautiful sounds together. Throughout the evening there was ample evidence of impressive technical resources, even though neither Mr. Gomberg nor Mr, Stagliano was from this point of view at his excellent best. The players are also skilled enough to have achieved a generally satisfactory ensemble.

It is; however, of the essence in chamber music to expect more than having the participants arrive at the same place simultaneously. That something more was consistently lacking. In places where the utmost calm and poise is necessary, for example, the last two movements of Beethoven's Serenade, nerves began to dominate, and the playing became tense, breathless, rushed.

In both Beethoven pieces the interpretation was one of uneventful neutrality. Rhythmic and phraseological solutions were not wrong, but they were not especially right either. They were not illuminating and they were almost invariably obvious, unsettled, unvaried. The Septet was the more successful in performance: it had some pleasant moments of relaxed and lively playing and in Mr. Eskin's solo in the scherzo, there was the only really enlivening phrasing heard during the evening.

The Mozart performance was in a different style. Here the three string players provided an unobtrusively neutral background against which Mr. Gomberg projected an extravaganza of tricky and tasteless overphrasing.

A rich repertory awaits these 12 gifted musicians. I hope they will come into that inheritance and that at their future concerts they will give pleasures barely hinted at in their debut.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093
NOV 9 1964

New chamber group

By John Marshall Cuno

We are fortunate and grateful to have a chamber music group in Boston of the finest stature, made up of first-chair members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sponsored by its parent organization, the musical offspring is called the Boston Symphony Chamber Players ("Boschaps" for short). Nine of its 12 members appeared in an inaugural concert Sunday evening at Sanders Theater.

The chamber orchestra is designed to be broken up into smaller groups and odd combinations of instruments. We heard, for example, a Beethoven serenade for flute, violin, and viola (Op. 25 in D major), a Mozart quartet for oboe, violin, viola, and cello (K. 370 in F major), and a Beethoven septet for violin, viola, cello, double bass, clarinet, horn, and bassoon (Op. 20 in E flat).

Not the most richly rewarding selection of music, but delightful, nevertheless, to hear.

This cream of United States orchestral musicianship included Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; George Moleux, bass; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn—all of whom appeared to enjoy their new assignment.

An audience obviously eager for the intimate and subtle harmonies of chamber works warmly greeted and applauded the already eminent performers, expecting much from them. Judging from the final ovation, one would believe them not to have been disappointed.

Initially modest was this first effort, and perhaps rightfully so, when one considers the amount of work with which these musicians are otherwise employed. Of course, if they are going to play chamber music at all, they are going to be expected to play the best, the most beautiful, difficult, and demanding. But a modest start is no indication of mediocrity or of an unambitious repertoire.

Time and again throughout the program were heard strains of exquisite tonal and textural harmonies. Here was lyric and quiet loveliness. Here was lively, sharp brilliance, precisely controlled in dynamics.

A better group sound issued from the Beethoven trio than from the Mozart quartet or the Beethoven septet, except that in the first movement of the trio, the flute could have kept its clarity and individuality without quite such obvious prominence. At other times it blended beautifully.

One of the most engagingly lovely passages is in the second movement of the trio when the flute and strings together, with long, legato notes, address the heart of the listener. Mr. Fine played his viola in such a manner as to make one feel that he was thoroughly at one with the music and yet also fully aware of the individual differences of the other performers. Mr. Silverstein was a little more routinely excellent.

At one point in the Allegro of the trio, Mr. Silverstein's instrument seemed to be almost talking, nonmusically, with the other instruments for a few measures. It sounded curiously appropriate.

In the Mozart trio was hardly a balance of instruments, and the music, at least in the first movement, does not help to create one. The oboe, taking a too strong lead in the Allegro, never let up for the rest of the piece.

However in the Adagio the fuller, sustained notes of the strings provided a stronger framework of support for the almost unquenchable nasality of the oboe.

The Beethoven septet, occupying the final portion of the program, gave the clarinet an opportunity to be sweet. The horn could have its fling at some solo passages (not all of which it achieved with tonal excellence), and the bassoon could keep coming to the front ranks effectively, like an advancing infantry flag.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 9 1964

INAUGURAL CONCERT BY CHAMBER PLAYERS

By McLAREN HARRIS

With one of the heaviest concert schedules around, extensive rehearsing and rceording sessions thrown in from time to time, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is thought of as a very busy organization. Indeed, it is sometimes difficult to see how the members find space for gainful activity of their own, outside orchestral duties.

Yet the time is found, and the latest example of this diversification lies in the establsihment of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, who presented their inaugural concert last night at Sanders Theater.

Welcome Addition

The Chamber players are a welcome addition to the parent function. Beyond the realm of string trios and quarterts the formidable aggregate musicianship of the Symphony lay relatively untapped for the service of chamber music. The accomplishments of these principals are hardly a secret, and the prospects are equally bright.

It would be premature, however, to state that the ultimate vision of chamber artistry had been achieved at the outset. In a Beethoven trio, a Mozart quartet and Beethoven's Septet, Op. 20, both potential excellence and temporal afflictions were noticable.

Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, sustained an easy balance and generally quite acceptable ensemble precision for Beethoven's Serenade in D major, Op. 25, and were able to show what an inventive piece it is, being written for two soprano and an alto, as it were.

Mrs. Dwyer's work was properly nimble as needed and dynamically on the light side, almost retiring; Mr. Silverstein took the lead in forthright fashion, though turning up some tonal harshness and inaccurate placement in the process

Pitfall Noted

Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Jules Eskin, cello, joined Messrs. Silverstein and Fine for Mozart's Quartet in F major, K. 370, resulting the most successful total effort of the evening. Mr. Gomberg treated his dominant oboe lines with an enlightened siprit, holding the roles a leader but never as a ruler.

In comparison the Beethoven Septet for strings and winds was a disappointment. Unintentioned individualism was the byword, serving to underline the weaknesses rather than the merits of the work; the mood rambled from instrument to instrument, and one was inclined to notice James Stagliano's uneven low horn register, Sherman Walt's prominent bassoon lines of Mr. Silverstein's lack of blend more than an integration of sound.

Alone now they may conquer; together will take some more labor.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, including Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn, presented the first of three concerts at Sanders Theater last night.

Serenade in D major for flute, violin and viola, Op. 25 .... Beethoven Quartet in F major, for oboe and strings, K. 70 .... Mozart Septet in E flat major for strings and winds, Op. 20 .... Beethoven

---

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 29 1964

Frank Pianist for B.S.O. Chamber Players

Claude Frank will be the pianist in the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. He will join the newly-formed ensemble for its second concert this season, Feb. 7 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge.

The program of Feb. 7 will begin with Mozart's Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K. 452, and will continue with Gunther Schuller's Music for Violin, Piano and Percussion (7957). This will be followed by the Woodwind Quartet (1948) of Elliott Carter, and the program will conclude with the Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings, in C minor, Op. 60.

On March 14 the Chamber Players' program will open with two works by Mozart, the Quartet for Flute and Strings K. 285, and the Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292. Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio will then be heard, followed by Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946). The program will close with Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31.

Claude Frank has appeared several times in the past few years as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Boston, New York and Tanglewood. One of the last pupils of Artur Schnabel, he has been closely associated with Rudolf Serkin and the Marlboro Festival and School since 1953. He has also appeared throughout North America and Europe with orchestras, chamber ensembles, and as soloist on radio and television as well as in the concert hall.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

DEC 2 1964

Judson, O'Neill, Beall, and Steinway touring newly formed Boston Symphony Chamber Players which makes its N.Y. debut at Hunter College, Dec. 7.

. Mr. Fine played such a manner one feel that he ghly at one with and yet also fully he individual dif-
the other per-
r. Silverstein was excel-

int in the Allegro
Mr. Silverstein's seemed to be al-
ng, nonmusically,
other instruments ew measures. It
riously appropri-

Mozart trio was balance of instruthe music, at e first movement,
elp to create one.
aking a too strong
Allegro, never let rest of the piece.
in the Adagio the ained notes of the vided a stronger of support for the uenchable nasal-
boe.
thoven septet, oc-
e final portion of n, gave the clarpportunity to be horn could have some solo pas-
all of which it with tonal excelthe bassoon could ing to the front
tively, like an ad-
fantry flag.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

N. 1964

Concerts Feb. 7, March 14

TWO MORE PROGRAMS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

The programs for the second and third appearances in Boston this season by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players have been announced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra also has made known that Claude Frank will join the newly formed Chamber Players as pianist.

The program of Feb. 7 will begin with Mozart's Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K. 452, and will continue with Gunther Schuller's Music for Violin, Piano and Percussion (1957). This will be followed by the Woodwind Quintet (1948) of Elliott Carter, and the program will conclude with the Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings, in C minor, Op. 60.

On March 14 the Chamber Players' program will open with two works by Mozart, the Quartet for Flute and Strings, K. 285 and the Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292. Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio will then be heard, followed by Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946). The program will close with Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31.

Claude Frank has appeared several times in the past few years as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Boston, New York and Tanglewood. One of the last pupils of Artur Schnabel, he has been closely associated with Rudolf Serkin and the Marlboro Festival and School since 1953.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Chamber Players' second and third concerts in Sanders Theatre are available now at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
, Boston 02105 - 742-4200

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Republican
Sun. Circ. 114,397

NOV 16 1964

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLI

Inaugural BSO Chamber Concert Has Its Rewards

Players Fail to Live Up to Expectations; Choice Of Music Proves Monotonous

By R. C. HAMMERICH

The inaugural concert given by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in Sanders Theater at Harvard University a week ago may have been the most memorable musical event of the month in Massachusetts, but it couldn't have been the most auspicious musically.

For one thing the program didn't include much substance and for another the players didn't display the sort of ensemble unity expected from chamber groups of the very first class.

Has Significance

On the same day in Boston there were performances by the Warsaw Philharmonic and by the Juilliard String Quartet, a quartet that is universally recognized as of the very first class.

But the formation and first performance of the Chamber Players, the first such group sponsored, managed and staffed by a large, front-running symphony orchestra, is a newsworthy event of historical significance.

The 12 members of the Players are the first-desk players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of their purposes is to present small-group music not commonly heard because of its unusual instrumentation.

The program of their first performance illustrated this purpose: the Beethoven Septet in E flat Op. 20, was written for violin, viola, cello, double bass, clarinet, horn and bassoon; the Beethoven Serenade in D, Op. 25 was written for violin, viola and flute; the Mozart Quartet in F (K. 370), was written for violin, viola, cello and oboe.

Most established chamber music groups are string or piano quartets or trios and woodwind or brass quintets. Very seldom is a group with a fixed combination of wind with strings being organized because there isn't enough music to keep such odd combinations busy.

But there is a great deal of music written for many kinds of combinations, especially contemporary music, and the principle behind the formation of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players is that the large orchestra has within it all combinations for small groups.

Those that played the inaugural concert were Joseph Silverstein, violin (concertmaster); Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; George Moleux, double bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Gioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, French horn; Sherman Walt, bassoon.

Those yet to be heard are Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone, and Everett Firth, Uympani.

Two more performances are planned for Sanders Theater in Cambridge, Feb. 7 and March 14, and performances are planned at Hunter College in New York City Dec. 7, Feb. 1 and March 22 and at Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, D. C., April 5 and at Tanglewood next summer.

Their first performance was in some ways highly satisfying and in others mildly disappointing.

Part of the disappointment came with the choice of music. No complaint is made of any of the specific pieces, but an element of monotony became obvious because all three pieces were similar in style.

The early Beethoven (Op. 20 and 25) lightweight music was much like the middle Mozart (K.370), and the two-hour program seemed much the same at the end and middle as it was at the beginning.

The other element of disappointment, like the choice of program, is easily cured. The Chamber Players are eminent professionals widely known outside the orchestra for solo and ensemble concerts and recordings. Their moments of looseness and conflicts of phrasing and emphasis, slight as they were, were very likely a result of their newness as a unit.

As for the virtues of their first performance, they are really too numerous to report (now that we have used up all of our space) except to contradict the aforementioned slight disappointment (the well-coordinated, cohesive passages far outnumbered the loose connections) and to say that small-group 18th Century lightweight music is great entertainment when played well.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1964.

Music: Boston Ensemble

Chamber Players Give Hunter Concert—Symphony Can Be Proud of Offspring

THE august Boston Symphony Orchestra has produced a small ensemble, a quite legitimate offspring that has its parent's name and protection. It is called the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, and was proudly introduced to New York audiences Monday night at the Hunter College Playhouse.

It is made up primarily of the principal players in each section of the orchestra. Many such ensembles develop haphazardly among orchestra musicians, but they are usually orphans. The Boston Symphony is the first major orchestra to form and sponsor its own chamber group. Only a few non-major orchestras, such as the one in Louisville, Ky., have done so in the past.

•

With a dozen first-rate performers among its members, the new group can perform varied and unusual works. Monday night they were able to offer three that are seldom met with in the concert hall, although they have been recorded—in two instances several times—and could in no way be considered esoteric. They were Beethoven's Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola (Op. 25) and Septet in E flat for Violin, Viola, Cello, Double Bass, Clarinet, Horn, and Bassoon (Op. 20) and Mozart's Quartet in F for Oboe, Violin, Viola and Cello (K. 370).

The choice was shrewd. The Beethoven scores are among his happiest, inspired without trying to plumb the emotional depths of this world. The Mozart is equally felicitous, although its central slow movement has tragic implications.

The music also showed off the superb technical equipment of the Boston instrumentalists. They are virtuosos—they have to be or they would not hold their positions. But just as much they are ensemble musicians. Although a fledgling group, they already play with the give and take of more mature organizations and with no sense of domination by any one member.

•

Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Burton Fine, violist, were the busiest players of the evening, but they could afford to be since they were the youngest. There was extraordinarily skillful playing by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, and Ralph Gomberg, oboist, in the works where they were the only wind instrumentalists.

But the high point of the evening came with the Beethoven septet, notably in the Adagio cantabile, where the ensemble could not have sounded more beautiful. Here, besides Mr. Silverstein and Mr. Fine, the group included Jules Eskin, cellist; Georges Moleux, double-bass player; Gino Cioffi, clarinetist; James Stagliano, horn player, and Sherman Walt, bassoonist. They were all wonderful.

The ensemble will give two more concerts at Hunter this season, and they should not be missed.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 496,980 S. 492,211

DEC 1 1964

5454

Music Notes

SOLOISTS of the Boston Symphony have formed the Boston Symphony Chamber Players to present concerts each season in addition to recording for RCA Victor. The project is believed to be the only such activity sponsored by a major orchestra for its solo players. Incorporated into the group will be the Boston Symphony String Trio, Boston Symphony String Quartet and the Boston Symphony Wind Quintet. This season the new chamber ensemble will give concerts in Boston, New York and Philadelphia and will play at Tanglewood next summer.

HULL HOUSE Sheridan Theater's Monday night series of free concerts comes to an end on Dec. 7 when "An Evening of Bach Cantatas" will be given under the leadership of Ray Still, principal oboist of the Chicago Symphony. Other soloists for the program, at 8 p.m., are soprano Peggy Smith, baritone Michael Cousins and violinist Francis Akos. The concert series is sponsored by the Kate Maremont Foundation, Hull House Theater and the Chicago Federation of Musicians.

FLAMENCO guitarist Juan Serrano gives a recital on Saturday, Dec. 5, at 8:30 p.m. in the Sherry-Brener music hall, 3145 W. 63d St.

GUITARIST Irving Wilkins performs a Vivaldi concerto with the DuPage Symphony under the direction of Russell Harvey at Willowbrook High School, Villa Park, on Sunday, Dec. 6, at 3:30 p.m. The concert, which also features the Christmas portion of Handel's "Messiah," will be repeated at North Central College, Naperville, on Thursday, Dec. 10, at 8:15 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

DEC 6 1964

Chamber Group Schedules Debut

NEW YORK, N. Y. — Judson, O'Neill, Beall, and Steinway will tour the newly formed Boston Symphony Chamber Players which makes its New York City debut at Hunter College, December 7.

With the formation of its first desk men into the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, the Boston Symphony Orchestra becomes the only major symphony in the United States to sponsor such an activity for its solo players. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, also serves as music director of the new ensemble.

In addition, the players will act as visiting faculty at universities and will make recordings.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 2,949,646

DEC 6 1964

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

DEC 4 1964

Boston Symphony Chamber Players to Make Debut

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will make their N. Y. debut Monday at Hunter College Playhouse at 8.40. Two more performances will follow Feb. 1 and March 22.

The Chamber group is made up of first desk men including Joseph Silverstein, violin; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, and James Stagliano, French horn. The program on Monday will include works by Mozart and Beethoven.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JAN 14 1965

Boston Chamber Group

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, consisting of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform at the Hunter College Playhouse on two Monday evenings, February 1 and March 22, at 8:40 p.m. The newly formed Chamber Players made its New York debut on December 7 at the Hunter College Playhouse.

14x

Herald NEW YORK Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

DEC 8 1964 Bykeller

Superb Chamber Music From Boston

By John Gruen

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players made their New York debut last night at the Hunter College Playhouse. It was—to come to the point at once—an occasion to cherish. Lest anyone think they missed out on it, we hasten to say that two more concerts are scheduled for February 1 and March 22, and anyone interested in chamber music superbly performed should lose not one moment in obtaining his reservations.

Drawn from the Boston Symphony Orchestra's complement of first players, the group will, in the course of this series, perform chamber works written for strings, winds, and brasses as well as string trios, quartets, and wind quintets. Last evening's program included Beethoven's Serenade in D major for Flute, Violin and Viola, Mozart's Quartet in F Major for Oboe, Violin, Viola and Cello, and Beethoven's Septet in E flat major for Violin, Viola, Cello, Double Bass, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon.

In chamber music, nothing succeeds like consistency of ensemble playing under one single, guiding hand. Erich Leinsdorf, regular conductor of the Boston Symphony has provided both the consistency and this guidance. Functioning as Music Director of the new ensemble, Mr. Leinsdorf, absent in body but present in spirit, made manifest the virtues of chamber playing par exellence.

The answer, of course, lies in knowing the difference between playing in a large symphony orchestra and playing works expressly written for small combinations. This the orchestra's first players understood full well.

They easily attuned themselves to matters of balance, color and dynamics—inevitable by-products of their orchestral experience. Yet what gave the evening its special distinction was the lucidity of their interpretation.

Aside from choice of program, which was superb, they responded, with singular awareness, to the inherent values found in the music itself. It was, we suspect, a matter of sheer love that contrived to produce the sounds they garnered. It was fresh, spontaneous and, when called for, deeply tender.

The players' rapport with one another—and each is of solo caliber — was never marred by the soloist approach which flaws many another ensemble. In each work the music itself led the way. Whether in the crispness or impishness of the Beethoven Serenade, the brilliance and suavity of the Mozart Quartet or the episodic discursiveness of Beethoven's Septet, the Boston Symphony Players proffered jewels cut in the loveliest of shapes and most beautiful of colors.

Each player must be named, and last evening they included Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, french horn, and Sherman Walt, bassoon.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 31 1964

NEW YEAR'S LUNCHEON with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players is planned at the Midtown Motor Inn. This pre-Symphony luncheon will launch the 1965 season. The Chamber Players will be guests of honor.

Harry Ellis Dickson will present the program, to which the public is invited.

Among those invited have been Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. Stephen Ames, Mrs. John Bishop Jr., Mrs. Charles E. Bacon and Mrs. Richard Ely.

Principals of the Chamber Players are Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster; Burton Fine, Jules Eskin, Georges Meleux, Mrs. Doriot A. Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin, William Gibson and Everett Firth.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,565

DEC 29 1964

Gala Plans For New Year Symphc

Musical anecdotes, multi-colored balloons, Gourmet dishes is the theme of the gala New Year's Day Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, Boston.

The Luncheon will inaugurate the 1965 Season with the members of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players as guests of honor.

performed by already-existing chamber ensembles.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453
DEC 30 1964

Social

This newly-formed group by the Boston Symphony is composed of 12 principal players of the orchestra with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster among them. Their aim is to present the most refined form of music which would not normally be

---

Chamber Players

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Members of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will help Symphony-goers usher in the New Year 1965 at the Midtown Motor Inn's pre-Symphony luncheon this Friday.

The celebration will feature musical anecdotes, multi-colored balloons and gourmet dishes. And witty Harry Ellis Dickson will be on hand to present the entertaining program—with an assist from his Symphony colleagues.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players is a newly formed group of 12 principal players of the Orchestra with Concertmaster Joseph Silver stein among them.

Their aim is to present the most refined form of music which would not be performed normally by already-existing chamber ensembles.

Among those invited to meet the Players are Toni Peabody, Mrs. Stephen Ames, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. J. Clark Boas, Mrs. Stephen R. Casey, Mrs. Julian Rogers, Mrs. Julius Stratton, Mrs. Lucius Thayer and Mrs. Albert Titcomb.

The festivities start at the stroke of 12:15 p.m. and the public is invited to make reservations to attend even if they don't plan to go on to Symphony afterwards.

Socially Speaking

The Flint Journal
FLINT, MICH.
D. 101,023 S. 100,920

JAN 3 1965 Bykeller

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra has formed its own Chamber Players, a nucleus of 12 principal first-desk men to which other instrumentalists are added as needed.

The group encompasses a string trio, a string quartet, and woodwind and brass quintets. The players agree to give a certain number of concerts and make recordings and are guaranteed additional salary.

The Baltimore and Boston moves compare with the establishment of chamber and woodwind ensembles as integral functions of the Flint Philharmonic Orchestra.

BOSTON RECORD AMERICAN, MONDAY, JAN 25, 1965 23

CAMBRIDGE RAMBLER

BSO Chamber To Perform Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that some changes have been made in the programs of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players for appearances on February 7 and March 14 at Sanders Theater, Cambridge. The newly-formed Chamber Players, consisting of principals of the Boston Symphony, gave its debut on Nov. 8 at Sanders Theater. The February 7 and March 14 programs will complete its first season.

Claude Frank continues as pianist with the Chamber Players and will appear in the concert of February 7. The program will open with Aaron Copland's Vitebsk for Violin, 'Cello and Piano, and will continue with Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio which has been scheduled for the third program. This will be followed by Mozart's Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K 452. After an intermission the program will conclude with the Brahms Quartet for Piano and Strings, in C minor, Op. 60.

The concert of March 14 will begin with Elliott Carter's Woodwind Quintet (1948), which was previously announced for the second program. It will continue with Mozart's Quartet for flute and strings, K. 285, followed by Walter Piston's Divertimento for nine instruments (1946). After the intermission Mozart's Sonata for bassoon and cello, K. 292, will be heard, and the concert will close with Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 21.

Tickets for the concerts of February 7 and March 14 are still available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

The complete programs:

Sunday, February 7, 8:30 p. m., Boston Symphony Chamber Players, Sanders Theater.

COPLAND—Vitebsk for Violin, Cello and Piano.

FINE—Fantasia for String Trio.

MOZART—Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon, K. 452.

BRAHMS—Quartet for Piano and Strings, in C minor, Op. 60.

Sunday, March 14, 8:30 p. m., Sanders Theater.

CARTER—Woodwind Quintet (1948).

MOZART—Quartet for Flute and Strings, K. 285.

PISTON—Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946).

MOZART—Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292.

SPOHR—Nonet, Op. 31.

Boston Chamber Group

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, consisting of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will perform at the Hunter College Playhouse on two Monday evenings, February 1 and March 22, at 8:40 p.m. The newly formed Chamber Players made its New York debut on December 7 at the Hunter College Playhouse.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
JAN 26 196[illegible]

Program changes

Boston Symp[illegible] ber Players ha[illegible] changes in their program[illegible] for Feb. 7 and Marc[illegible] The revised programs are — Feb. 7: Copland's "Vitebsk" for [illegible]olin, cello, and piano; Fantasia for String Trio; Mozart's Quintet for piano, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon, K. 452; Brahms' Quartet for piano and strings in C minor, Op. 60.

March 14: Carter's Woodwind Quintet (1948); Mozart's Quartet for flute and strings, K. 285; Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for bassoon and cello, K. 292; Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31.

Both concerts will be held in Sanders Theater, at 8:30.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICIAN
NEWARK, N. J.
MONTHLY 245.100

JAN 1965

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, formed from the principal players of the orchestra, will give several concerts each season in addition to recording chamber music for RCA Victor. The formation of the ensemble accomplishes two purposes. It allows the Boston Symphony to make use of the special abilities and free time of its principal players outside of their regular playing with the orchestra and it gives the players an opportunity of adding substantially to their income. Incorporated into the Chamber Players are three other groups: the Boston Symphony String Trio, the Boston Symphony String Quartet, and the Boston Symphony Wind Quintet.

The personnel of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players consists of Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, horn; Roger Voisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; Everett Firth, tympani; and Claude Frank, pianist. They gave their inaugural concert November 8, and will give further concerts at the Sanders Theatre on February 7 and March 14.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

FEB 5 1965

Ensemble Pianist

Claude Frank will join Boston Symphony Chamber Players at Sanders Theater concert Sunday evening at 8:30.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

FEB 8 1965

Program of Chamber Music

Copland, Fine Work Played

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players opened last night's Sanders Theater Program with two works by contemporary American composers. The "Vitebsk" represents one of Copland's excursions into the realms of atonality, and is an extremely well written and well balanced work.

Similarity of Style

The piece opens with a short, strongly rhythmic section based on a two-note motive supported by tone clusters and typically Copland chords on the piano, and might be described as an atonally conditioned theme with strong tonal landmarks. After a slow, lyrical section, the rhythmic motive returned in a somewhat more extended form to complete the work.

The "Fantasia" by Fine reversed the plan of the previous piece, with a Scherzo "framed" by two slow movements. The contrapuntal technique demonstrated in the slow movements was of an exceptionally high quality, and showed a strong influence, as did the Copland work, of the string techniques of Bartok.

Although the performance of these pieces provided the vigor and drive demanded by the first, and the phrasing and balance required by the second, the similarity of style of the two works made them rather unfortunate program companions.

The performance of the Mozart Quinteta was characterized by a relaxed, lyrical treatment, and was notable for fine tone quality, especially by Mr. Stagliano.

The Brahms Quartet, which filled the second half of the program was by far the best effort of the evening, and displayed extraordinary strength and vigor by the performers, as well as striking phrasing and dynamic contracts.

Special lauds should go to Mr. Frank, who carried a lion's share of the work, with exceptional energy and style. K. L.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Claude Frand, piano; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn, appeared at Sanders Theater last night as part of the Boston Symphony Chamber Music Series.

Vitebsk for Violin, Cello and Piano	Copland
Fantasia for String Trio	Fine
Quintet for Piano, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon and Horn, K. 452	Mozart
Quartet for Piano and Strings in C minor, Opus 60	Brahms

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, January 12, 1965

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Chamber Players made up of first desk men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is being toured by Judson, O'Neill, Beall and Steinway of New York city. The group made its premiere appearance at Harvard University last Nov. 8. Its New York city debut was at Hunter College Dec. 7.

The repertoire includes music written for strings, winds and brasses as well as for string trios, quartets and wind quintets. The group plans to span the entire history of music from the pre-Baroque to the contemporary period. In addition the players will act as a visiting faculty at universities and will make recordings for RCA Victor.

Members include Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; George Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; James Stagliano, French horn; Roger Coisin, trumpet; William Gibson, trombone; and Everett Firth, tympani. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, serves as music director of the new ensemble.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855
FEB 8 1965

At Sanders

Boston Symphony Chamber Players

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Claude Frank, deplorably little known, is one of the very best pianists and musicians now to be heard in this country. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players have reached outside of the family, as it were, to include him as guest. I hope he will be a frequent one, for he provided a large part of such pleasures as were to be had at the Chamber Players' Sunday night concert in Sanders Theater.

The program included Aaron Copland's "Vitebsk," a study on a Jewish theme for violin, cello, and piano; the Fantasia for String Trio by the late Irving Fine; Mozart's Quintet for piano and winds; and the Brahms C minor Quartet for Piano and strings. The participants, along with Mr. Frank, were Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola, Jules Eskin, cello, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn.

The opening gestures of "Vitebsk," with the strongly dissonant collision of major and minor triads and the agonized quarter tones, are promising. There is some diverting rhythmic play in the fast middle section of the piece also. The general impression is that of Bloch gone somehow very granitic.

Fine's Fantasia is actually a work in three distinct movements, and as in the Copland, the fast music is surrounded by the slow. It is well made and clear music, but far from being in any way fantastic, it seemed academic and predictable. Perhaps a less bland performance would have helped.

Given the popularity of Brahms both with audiences and with players, it is odd that the A major and C minor piano quartets are done so rarely. The C minor is subtle especially so in its involved and understated finale, and not easy to put over to an audience. It is one of the greatest works of Brahms, and it was a pleasure to have the chance to hear it in concert. It was, moreover, well played.

Mr. Frank really plays chamber music, listens to what goes on about him, and modulates his tone accordingly. The string playing was good also, though Mr. Fine's tone is notably less pure than that of his colleagues.

In Mozart's beautiful Quintet, Mr. Frank tended to underplay — I refer both to volume and to rhetoric—but still his playing exhibited musicianship, continence, and taste, if no great distinction. In spite of that, and in spite also of a few lovely details from Mr. Stagliano, the performance was largely calamitous.

The most elementary problems of ensemble and interpretation were left unsolved, and Mr. Cioffi's playing was shockingly gross in tone and phrasing. One could have supposed one was hearing five experienced musicians reading together a piece each had played before, were it not for the paralysing timidity that characterized the playing, and which is certainly not a characteristic of readings for fun.

This second concert of the Chamber Players' three-concert series represented a great and welcome advance over the first, especially in the playing of the Copland and Brahms pieces.

There is, as before, no question that these players possess instrumental skills of a very high order, and that some are musicians of impressive perception. There is also no question that they are still far from playing chamber music consistently with distinction.

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 8 1965

Today in Society

Chamber Season Opens With Old Families There

A fitting end to a remarkable week of music first in Boston, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players performs the first 1965 program of this season's new series at Sanders Theatre, and Harvard and M.I.T. families who don't always have the chance to go to Symphony together, gathered happily in the chilly hall to applaud vigorously a sizeable program.

There were a good number of students some, like Saarabay Ganjes, taking time before the concert to read the dedication of Sander Theater to the Harvard sons who gave their lives to preserve the union and the wall plaques that record the battle deaths of those war-torn 1860's—a Coolidge at Chickamauga, a Crowninshield and a Cabot and a Paine at Gettysburg, names still found in audiences that fill the ancient hall today.

Pres. Henry Cabot of the Boston Symphony and his wife, and the Thomas Perrys of Symphony and clarinetist Rosario Mazzeo were taking a busman's holday to hear his fellow players and join the prolonged applause that brought back Claude Frank, Ralph Gomberg, Sherman Walt, Gino Cioffi and James Stagliano for three bows after the Mozart.

Mrs. James Wigglesworth, the Harry Coolidges, Mrs. Stanwood Calderwood, Mrs. James Perkins, Harvard's Paines and M.I.T.'s Halls, a Japaneese student hearing her first American music—an audience symbolic of the changing patterns on music today and well pleased with what they heard.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114.100

FEB 1965

In Boston, the resident orchestra became the proud parent in November of a new offspring: the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. The BSCP is made up of BSO first desk men (and ladies—pardon us, Doriot Anthony Dwyer) who will unite in all combinations for any piece requiring up to twelve instruments. The premiere performance took place amid the Gothic arches of Harvard's Sanders Theatre on the 8th. The Players, who are the only group of their kind sponsored by a major symphony, plan to tour the country and act also as visiting faculty at universities.

136

NewEnglandNew Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston hmond 2-4200

Su lay Globe
BC TON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

FEB 2 8 1965

Chamber Players List 3d Program

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will present their third and final Boston concert this season in Sanders Theatre Sunday evening, Mar. 14, at 8:30 p.m. The new organization of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's principal players will continue its plan to offer chamber ensemble repertoire which would not ordinarily be performed by existing chamber groups in Boston.

The program will begin with Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946), performed by Joseph Silverstein and Alfred Krips, violins; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, French horn. This will be followed by the Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292 of Mozart, played by Walt and Eskin. The program will continue with the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliott Carter, performed by Mrs. Dwyer and Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano.

After the intermission the Chamber Players will present the rarely heard Nonet by Ludwig (Louis) Spohr, for violin, viola, cello, double-bass, woodwinds and horn. A celebrated German violinist, composer and conductor, Spohr wrote in a style characteristic of the transition between Classicism and Romanticism. His Nonet, considered one of his more experimental works, will be performed by Mrs. Dwyer and Silverstein, Fine, Eskin, Georges Moleux, Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano.

---

vEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 1 5 1965

Boston Symphony Chamber Players in Final Concert

By MARGO MILLER

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, composed of the orchestra's principals, gave the final of three concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Sunday evening.

The venture, began this season, has been laudable in its aims but has looked better on paper than it sounds on the stage. "The most complete coverage of music," says Erich Leinsdorf in the program, "has turned up some good, and familiar works, and a lot which, because they are for ad hoc ensembles have been played anyway."

Sunday's program included, for example, a Mozart Sonata, K. 292, for which a bassoonist and cellist may be grateful, but not this listener. It is a perfectly pleasant piece; the performance would have benefited by less reticence on the part of cellist Jules Eskin, particularly in the opening allegro. And though it is nice to hear a bassoon, especially Sherman Walt's, the Sonata is a trifle.

Elliott Carter's Woodwind Quintet (1948) brought out Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, French horn, and bassoonist Walt. This piece is made up of two allegros.

The involvement for instruments is a mosaic of sound which seems finally reduced to toot-toot. Then the horn comes along with a few lofting calls, in what seemed like desperation (although Stagliano played them beautifully). Then everybody puts in a little ragtime and it is over.

The concert began and ended with pieces for nine instruments. They were Walter Piston's Divertimento (1946) and the Nonet, Op. 31, by Louis Spohr, famous German violinist and prolific composer of all sorts of things including a number of potpourris.

On stage, both works lined up the strings (a quartet in the Piston) on the left, the winds (woodwinds plus horn in the Spohr) on the right, contrabassist Moleux being at the end of the aisle.

For the Piston, this arrangement was symbolic, as though for the winds and strings it were an Us-against-Them proposition. And it was a kind of musical succotash, dollops of this wind (or winds) with an answer or two from the lower strings. The middle movement, marked tranquillo, had a fine solo for oboist Ralph Gomberg. Piston was on hand to take a bow.

Sophr's Nonet is a contredanse in its combination of instruments. Both sides move together and in and out of the lines. There are groundswells of melody, especially in the scherzo, and the sonorities are gracious and not the least bit adventuresome.

Four orchestra principals—trumpet, trombone, timpani and piano—did not appear in the final concert. Were they elsewhere polishing the kind of Quartet one hears once and hopefully not again? It's probably been written. Bring back the string quartet.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 1 4 1965

Chamber Players In Final Concert

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will present their final Boston concert of the season tonight at 8:30 in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge.

The program will include Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments (1946); Mozart's Sonata for Bassoon and Cello, K. 292; the Woodwind Quintet (1948) by Elliot Carter; and the Nonet, Opus 31, of Ludwig Spohr, one of the composer's bolder works, written about 1815.

COUNCIL OF FRIENDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 15 1965

VIOLINIST HONORED — Planning a reception to honor Isaac Stern, guest violinist, after Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Symphony Hall on Saturday evening, are members of the Council of Friends of Symphony. Serving on the committee are (l. to r.) Mrs. Robert H. Cain, Brookline; Mrs. Samuel A. Levine, Newton; Mrs. Arthur Josiah Livingston nd Mrs. S. Abbot Smith, both of Boston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

ISAAC STERN, eminent violinist who will be soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts next Friday and Saturday, will be honored at a reception Saturday.

The Council of Friends of the Orchestra will give the reception, the first of three planned for this season.

The Boston committee of the council is headed by Mrs. Arthur J. Livingston and general chairman of the council is Mrs. George A. Parson.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 448,810

1965

Council of BSO To Fete Violinist

Isaac Stern, famed violinist who has had long and warm association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be soloist at the B. S. O. concerts next weekend.

A receptionist honoring him will be held Saturday evening, after the concert, in the Ancient Instrument Room of Symphony Hall, under the direction of the Greater Boston Committee of the Council of Friends of the B. S. O. Mrs. Arthur Joshua Livingston of Boston is chairman.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 10 1965

Reception to Honor Isaac Stern, Jan. 16

A reception honoring Isaac Stern, who will be soloist at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts next weekend, will be held at Symphony Hall, Saturday evening, Jan. 16, in the Ancient Instrument Room after the concert. The noted violinist has been associated with the orchestra since 1948.

This reception is the first of a series of three to be given this season by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. George A. Parson of Boston is general chairman.

The reception for Mr. Stern will be under the direction of the Greater Boston Committee of the Council. The chairman is Mrs. Arthur Joshua Livingston of Boston. Members of the Council of Friends and invited guests will attend.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Traveler
Eve. Circ. 161,453

SEP 25 1964

Symphony

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor 047

Tea in the Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall tops off today's first Symphony concert of the season. The executive committee of the Orchestra's Council of Friends are entertaining.

Invited are the Council's area chairmen, members of the Orchestra's Board of Trustees and their wives. Also attending are Toni Peabody and Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the Orchestra's musical director whom the guests will meet.

---

wEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
: 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

FEB 17 1966

Reception

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Socially Speaking

It's hard enough to get a symphony ticket. But after the symphony on Friday it will be even harder to attend a special reception in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall.

It will be given by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to honor the 12 Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Only council members and invited guests will attend.

The players, now at mid-point in their first concert season, are all principal players of the orchestra.

Mrs. George A. Parson of Boston, general chairman of the council, is co-chairman of the reception with Mrs. Richard H. Solomon of Boston.

PLANNING A RECEPTION to honor Boston Symphony Chamber Players Feb. 19 in Symphony Hall are members of the Symphony's Council of Friends. From left, seated, Mrs. Ferdinand Strauss II, Mrs. George A. Parson, co-chairman, Mrs. Donald F. Harding, Mrs. John L. Grandin and Mrs. Walter J. Cohners. Standing, Mrs. Charles E. Mason Jr., Mrs. John Dane Jr., and Mrs. Richard H. Solomon, co-chairman.

138

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

MAR 6 1965

Symphony Friends Plan Events

TWO RECEPTIONS in the next two weeks will be given by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They will honor the pianist, Grant Johannesen, who will make six concert appearances with the orchestra in Boston and two at Philharmonic Hall in New York this month.

The first reception will be tomorrow afternoon after the symphony concert, and the second will take place Tuesday evening, March 16, after the "Cambridge" concert. Both receptions will be held in the Ancient Instruments Room at Symphony Hall.

Due to the small capacity of the reception room, the council has been able to invite only a limited number of subscribers and Friends of the Symphony. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, will address the guests tomorrow and John L. Thorndike, a member of the board of trustees, will speak March 16.

Mrs. William Loomis is chairman of tomorrow's reception. Her committee includes Mrs. Eduard H. Bullerjahn, Mrs. Houlder Hudgins, Mrs. Harold B. Hebbard and Mrs. Albert Titcomb.

The chairman of the "Cambridge" concert reception is Mrs. Michael M. White. Assisting her are Mrs. Lewis P. Cabot, Mrs. John Coolidge, Mrs. Charles Kingsley, Mrs. Herbert Lee and Mrs. Thatcher P. Luquer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

MAR 5 1965

committee planning the "Favorite Things with Flowers" show.

TWO RECEPTIONS in the next fortnight have been planned by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for pianist Grant Johannesen. He will appear in six concerts with the Orchestra in Boston and two in Philharmonic Hall in New York this month.

Mrs. William Loomis is chairman of the first reception which will be in the Ancient Instrument Room following this Sunday's Symphony concert. Mrs. Michael White is chairman of the Tuesday evening, Mar. 16, reception after the "Cambridge" concert, also in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall.

Reason for the twin receptions is the small capacity of the reception room. The council has been able to invite only a limited number of subscribers and Friends of the Symphony. About 100 guests will attend each event, the final ones of this nature for the current season.

OPEN REHEARSALS.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 24 1964

Eight Orchestra Rehearsals Open Again to Public

The Boston Symphony Orcestra's traditional open rehearsals will again be offered this season and series tickets will go on sale at the Symphony Hall box office Monday at 10 a.m.

The open rehearsals will take place at Symphony Hall on eight Thursday evenings throughout the season and will provide the audience with an opportunity to hear the orchestra make final preparations for the week-end concerts.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, will conduct the majority of rehearsals, with Charles Munch, Leopold Stokowski and soloists to be heard. Leinsdorf will conduct the first open rehearsal on Oct. 15, and the remaining open rehearsals will take place on Nov. 12, Dec. 17, Feb. 4, Feb. 11, March 18, March 25, and April 15.

Originated by Charles Munch in 1950, the open rehearsals are designed primarily for students in the Boston area who are not able to take advantage of the Spring subscription sales to the orchestra's regular Boston concerts and then find themselves unable to hear the orchestra because all concerts are completely sold out.

Admission prices are lower than those of regular con-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

SEP 17 196

BSO To Sell Tickets For Open Rehearsals

Series tickets to eight open rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will go on sale at the Symphony Hall box office next Monday at 10 a.m. A subscription costs $15.

The open rehearsals are booked for Thursday evenings at 7:30 at Symphony Hall. They feature the same program, conductors and soloists scheduled to perform the following Friday and Saturday. They were originated by Charles Munch in 1950, primarily to give students an opportunity to hear the BSO. Students who arrive at Boston's colleges and universities in September find the regular series of concerts already sold out.

All seats at the open rehearsals are unreserved, and proceeds benefit the orchestra's pension fund. BSO musical director Erich Lensdorf will conduct the first rehearsal on Oct. 15. Others are scheduled for Nov. 12, Dec. 17, Feb. 4, Feb. 11, March 18, March 25, and April 15.

Mail orders are accepted at the box office — check or money order payable to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with an addressed and stamped return envelope enclosed. Mail to Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115. No telephone reservations are accepted.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Monitor
Eve. Circ. 174,093

SEP 25 1964

Open rehearsals tickets

Tickets for Boston Symphony's open rehearsal series for the new season are now on sale at the box office. The rehearsals will be held Oct. 15, Nov. 12, Dec. 17, Feb. 4, and 11, March 18 and 25, and April 15. All seats are unreserved and proceeds benefit the orchestra's pension fund. There are also still some tickets available for the new series of three Wednesday evening concerts.

OBITUARIES

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

SEP 22 1964

Musical Chairs

B.S.O. Quartet Plays At Funeral of Trustee

By MARGO MILLER

The Boston Symphony String Quartet will play this noon in New York at a memorial service for C. D. Jackson, a trustee of the orchestra. Mr. Jackson died of cancer Friday at age 62.

The slow movement of Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 135, will be performed in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church by Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello.

The Boston delegation will include Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's conductor, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., orchestra manager, and Mrs. Perry. They will return in time for the first rehearsal today of the program opening the Boston Symphony's 84th season Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Jackson held several important offices in Time, Inc., publishers of Time, Life and Fortune magazines. His leaves of absence for civic service were so frequent that the staff of Time, Inc., formed the Fun and Games Committee of the C.D. Jackson Hello & Goodbye Society to arrange the kind of parties he so enjoyed.

He was responsible for the suggestion to then Gen Eisenhower that Ike announce during the 1952 Presidential campaign his intention of going to Korea if elected. Mr. Jackson's work during World War II in pyschological warfare continued into the Cold War through several quasi-governmental jobs.

His name on the roster of Boston Symphony trustees probably meant little to local concert goers. A native of New York and a Summer resident of Lenox, he represented other areas in which the orchestra gave concerts—Carnegie Hall and Lincoln Center, which he served also as trustee; and Berkshire County, site of Tanglewood. He was on the board of the Metropolitan Opera as well.

His connections in New York and Washington were valuable to the orchestra in planning the three State Department-sponsored overseas tours, to Europe in 1952 and 1956 and to the Orient in 1960. Ironically, at the time of the 1956 trip, Time Magazine was personna non grata in Russia, preventing his going along with the orchestra.

But Mrs. Jackson, was given the title of "social adviser," and made the trip. The Jacksons entertained the orchestra at a supper party later that year in New York at their apartment in the Dakota, one of the early luxury apartment houses in Manhattan.

The appearance at Mr. Jackson's funeral of the Boston Symphony String Quartet will be the first under its present name.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

SEP 20 1964

Charles D. Jackson, 63, Vice-President of 'Time'

NEW YORK — Charles Douglas Jackson, 63, senior vice-president of Time, Inc. and former publisher of Fortune and Life magazines, died Friday night in New York Hospital.

He had made his home in New York City and Lenox Mass., served on the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Association and the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, and was a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Jackson had been associated with Time, Inc. since 1931. The Corporation publishes six magazines — Time, Life, Fortune, Sports Illustrated, Architectural Forum and House & Home.

A onetime speech writer and special assistant to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Jackson had advised the White House on international affairs and "cold war" planning.

During the period from 1952-54, he atended the Bermuda three-power and the Berlin four-power conferences.

After returning to Time, Inc. he served in 1954 as a member of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations' General Assembly.

At the start of this year Jackson helped organize the international Executive Service Corps, a private organization designed along the lines of the Peace Corps. Its purpose was to assist developing businesses overseas by providing management advice and personnel.

Jackson is survived by his widow, Grace; his mother, Eda and a brother, Alan.

A memorial service will be held at Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church at noon Tuesday, with interment at Stockbridge, Mass Cemetery.

(Associated Press)

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Herald
Morn. Circ. 176,483

SEP 25 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574

SEP 26 1964

GEORGES LAURENT, 78, OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

Georges Laurent, former first flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died Wednesday in Vichy, France. He was 78 years old.

Mr. Laurent, for many years one of the leading figures of the Boston Symphony, retired in 1952. He joined the orchestra in 1921 as head of the flute section, under the conductorship of the late Pierre Monteux. His playing became one of the distinct characteristics of the orchestra.

On many occasions he was soloist with the orchestra, in works of both classic and contemporary composers.

In 1924 Mr. Laurent founded the Boston Flute Players' Club, which presented many diversified programs. In 1951 he and Sylvia Marlowe, pianist, and Alfred Zighera, playing a viola da gamba, presented programs of chamber music at The Breakers, the former Cornelius Vanderbilt mansion in Newport, R. I. Theirs were the first public concerts given there.

Mr. Laurent was born in France. He had won a first prize at the Paris Conservatory of Music.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397

OCT 23 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 9,016

OCT 23 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

OCT 23 1964

Musician, 87, Dies In Hub

BOSTON (AP)—Julius Theodorowicz, 87, of Newton, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 48 years, died in Hahnnemann Hospital Thursday.

He was assistant concert master ofthe Boston Symphy for 27 years and served as concertmaster of the Boston Pops Orchestra from 1916 to 1936. He retired in 1946.

He leaves his widow, the former Hazel Newell L'Africain of Medford, a member of the American String Quartet; a daughter, Mrs. Anne Young of Northport, N.Y., and a son, David, ofAgawam. Funeral services will be held Monday in Newton.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Herald
Sun. Circ. 281,586

NOV 8 1964

Robert Taylor's Notes

Ernst Toch Death Recalls His Links To Boston Music

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The recent death of the distinguished composer, Ernst Toch, recalls the Boston contributions made by a man who began his career as a member of the avant-garde, and who ended as a conservative modernist, dividing his efforts between the concert hall and Hollywood films.

I was reminded of the fact that Toch had Boston associations by coming across a postcard in an old filing envelope into which Philip Hale had tossed a number of clippings devoted to composers whose names commenced with T. It was addressed to Alexander Williams, then music editor of The Herald, and read: Train, Boston-New York, 22 Dec. 1934. While riding home I enjoyed very much your "moral fantasy on modern music"! Greetings, Ernst Toch.

One cannot consider this a very important or even illuminating document, and yet it recalled, in the manner of old postcards, yellowed, poignant, transitory, Toch's brief Boston affiliations.

HE CAME to this country as a refugee from Nazi tyranny in 1933, and later proceeded from New York to Hollywood. Coming out of the Austro-Germanic tradition, he achieved a formidable reputation at a time when 12-tone composers were considered fearsomely advanced; but as the years wore on his original astringency wore off, and he was later prized for the slender, pure lyricism that his work contained, rather than for his modernistic architecture.

Toch wrote five symphonies, in 1950, 1952, 1955 and 1957, the fifth and final receiving its world premiere here on March 13th 1964. With his Third, introduced by the Pittsubrgh Orchestra in 1955 he won the Pulitzer Prize. Of his four operas, or so, the only one I remember encountering is "The Princess and the Pea," which Sarah Caldwell presented in a perky student production at B.U. several years ago.

HIS INCIDENTAL music and chamber scores comprised an interesting ouevre, and his book of theory, "The Shaping Forces in Music," published in 1948 discloses a musical outlook influenced by his early background. Toch was unsystematically taught, a virtual autodidact until his young manhood; he learned from studying scores; and his major touchstones were supplied at the beginning by Mozart, and later on by Mahler, Schoenberg and Hindemith.

The Boston Symphony introduced his variation fantasy on the Westminster Chimes, titled "Big Ben," candidly narrative in purpose, in 1935. The piece is good fun, cleverly sustained and ingeniously composed; and an amusing review of that period by "W.J.H." is indicative both of the critical prose and musical techniques popular during that decade.

"HE CONCEIVED the music on a foggy night in London, and he has endeavoured to create the impression of the chimes fading away in the fog . . . The variations are uneven in merit. Some of them are just ingenious pieces of instrumentation and some arouse memories of other composers, notably Tchaikowsky's pizzicato obstinato, and in one place there was a suggestion that Don Quixote's sheep and Southdown mutton were related."

Toch was widely criticized for being a "Hollywood" composer; and, yet the period of his symphonic composition came well after he had supposedly corrupted himself by writing for films. His Third Symphony, however, strikes me as being of a higher order than the Fifth, which Mr. Leinsdorf played last year; I am afraid that the mannerisms in the latter are somewhat Hollywoodesque for comfort.

EITHER HIS idiom had acquired the filmic cliches or he himself suffered from occasional lapses of taste, for like Strauss, passages of exceeding loveliness topple into passages of the banal.

Nevertheless, despite the limitations of his symphonic output, Ernst Toch to the end was a composer of remarkable interest.

Even such a piece as his little "Pinocchio" overture (though it has more dazzle than merriment) seems likely to survive the troughs of the immediate posthumous reputation. His best work had much to communicate and will continue to do so.

140

ORGAN CONCERTS

Fifth Concert . . . SUNDAY, MARCH 28

John Ferris

Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN
Trombone: WILLIAM GIBSON
Percussion: EVERETT FIRTH

DIETRICH BUXTEHUDE......................Toccata and Fugue in F Major

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH..............."O Mensch, bewein' dein Sünde gross" from the Orgelbüchlein

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH............Toccata, Adagio and Fugue in C Major

OLIVIER MESSIAEN.................Verset pour la fête de la dédicace (1960)

CÉSAR FRANCK......................................Chorale in A Minor

WILLIAM HIBBARD....Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion

---

E. POWER BIGGS was born in Essex, England, and studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London. He is well known throughout the world through radio, television and recordings.

ALLAN BIRNEY was the winner of the 1964 Organ Competition sponsored by Boston Chapter of American Guild of Organists. He is a native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has studied at Yale, Oberlin, Coe College and Salzburg.

GEORGE FAXON is the Organist and Choirmaster of Trinity Church in Copley Square, Boston, and Associate Professor of Church Music at Boston University. He studied with Harold Drake at Kings College, Cambridge, and with Carl Dolmetsch. He has recorded extensively and is well known by his recitals throughout the country.

DONALD WILLING is the Choir Director of the First Congregational Church in Wellesley. He is a graduate of the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore. He has given organ recitals in various parts of the country and toured Europe in 1957. He is now at the head of the Organ Department at the New England Conservatory.

JOHN FERRIS is the University Organist and Choirmaster at Harvard University and lecturer on Liturgical Music in the Divinity School. He was born in Michigan, a pupil of Marcel Dupré and a graduate of the School of Sacred Music at Union Theological Seminary.

THE ORGAN was dedicated in 1950 and celebrated the 50th anniversary of Symphony Hall. It was designed by G. Donald Harrison, head of Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company, Boston. It consists of 4 manuals, 6 divisions, 81 ranks, approximately 4800 pipes.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

OCT 15 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,000

OCT 1[illegible] 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Boston Roxbury
City News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

OCT 14 1965

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ANNOUNCES SYMPHON HALL ORGAN CONCERTS

During the 1965-1966 season and for the sixth consecutive year the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a series of five organ recitals at Symphony Hall, Boston. The first concert will be given at 8:30 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 31. All other programs will be presented in Symphony Hall at 6:00 p.m. on the following Sundays: Dec. 5, Jan. 30, Feb 13, and Mar. 13. The opening recital at the end of this month will be given by Simon Preston, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, London, England.

Three of the four remaining recitalists appearing on the Symphony Hall series this season are well known Boston organists, and the fourth, Bruce Bennett, is the winner of the 1965 Organ Competition co-sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. E. Power Briggs will play his first recital in this country following a European tour on Dec. 5, and George Faxon, Organist and Choirmaster at Trinity Church, Boston will be heard on Jan. 30. Mr. Bennett will give his recital on Feb. 13. The series will close on Mar. 13 with a concert by Donald Willing, Choir Director of the First Congregational Church, Wellesley, Mass.

The sixth season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts carries on a suggestion made in 1960 by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that the orchestra sponsor a series of recitals on its magnificent Aeolian-Skinner organ to enable the public to share the great wealth of organ literature and hear the capacity of the Symphony Hall organ present this music performed by outstanding organists. Season subscriptions to the five concerts at $5.00 will be available at the Symphony Hall Box Office beginning tomorrow (Monday, Oct. 11) at 10:00 a.m. and be sold until Oct. 31. After that date tickets for single concerts will be $1.50. All seats will be unreserved, and, with the exception of Mr. Preston's concert, each program will begin at 6:00 p.m. and last approximately one hour. hour.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

Programs Planned By AGO Chapter

To mark its 60th anniversary, the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists plans a series of varied organ and choral programs. Under its newly elected Dean, Daniel Pinkham, the chapter will again sponsor a Young Artists' Competition in collaboration with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jack Fisher, Sub Dean, will be in charge of courses in music history and theory to be offered to chapter members.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536

OCT 23 1965

Organ series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its sixth season of five organ recitals at Symphony Hall on Sunday, Oct. 31, at 8:30. Simon Preston, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, London, will be the artist.

Subsequent programs will be at 6 o'clock on Sundays and will take place on Dec. 5 Jan. 30, Feb. 13, and March 13. Season subscriptions are available at the box office. Single concert tickets go on sale after Oct. 31.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 15 1964

Hibbard Commission

Radio station WCRB has joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter, American Guild of Organists, to commission a work for trumpet, trombone, percussion and organ from composer William Hibbard of Iowa City, Iowa.

The music, commissioned in recognition of the 60th anniversary of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O., will be given its first performance at the Symphony Hall organ concert in Boston, Mar. 28, 1965. It will be played by John Ferris, Harvard University organist, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hibbard, a former Bostonian, carried out both his undergraduate and master's degree work at the New England Conservatory. He studied contemporary techniques for a year in Germany and is presently teaching and working for an advanced degree in Iowa. The selection of Hibbard for the commission was made with the advice of Mr. Ferris, Donald Willing and Daniel Pinkham, dean of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O.

140 ORGAN CONCERTS

Fifth Concert . . . SUNDAY, MARCH 28

John Ferris

Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN
Trombone: WILLIAM GIBSON
Percussion: EVERETT FIRTH

DIETRICH BUXTEHUDE . . . . Toccata and Fugue in F Major

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . "O Mensch, bewein' dein Sünde gross" from the Orgelbüchlein

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Toccata, Adagio and Fugue in C Major

OLIVIER MESSIAEN . . . . Verset pour la fête de la dédicace (1960)

CÉSAR FRANCK . . . . Chorale in A Minor

WILLIAM HIBBARD . . . . Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion

E. POWER BIGGS was born in Essex, England, and studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London. He is well known throughout the world through radio, television and recordings.

ALLAN BIRNEY was the winner of the 1964 Organ Competition sponsored by Boston Chapter of American Guild of Organists. He is a native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has studied at Yale, Oberlin, Coe College and Salzburg.

GEORGE FAXON is the Organist and Choirmaster of Trinity Church in Copley Square, Boston, and Associate Professor of Church Music at Boston University. He studied with Harold Drake at Kings College, Cambridge, and with Carl Dolmetsch. He has recorded extensively and is well known by his recitals throughout the country.

DONALD WILLING is the Choir Director of the First Congregational Church in Wellesley. He is a graduate of the Peabody Conservatory, Baltimore. He has given organ recitals in various parts of the country and toured Europe in 1957. He is now at the head of the Organ Department at the New England Conservatory.

JOHN FERRIS is the University Organist and Choirmaster at Harvard University and lecturer on Liturgical Music in the Divinity School. He was born in Michigan, a pupil of Marcel Dupré and a graduate of the School of Sacred Music at Union Theological Seminary.

THE ORGAN was dedicated in 1950 and celebrated the 50th anniversary of Symphony Hall. It was designed by G. Donald Harrison, head of Aeolian-Skinner Organ Company, Boston. It consists of 4 manuals, 6 divisions, 81 ranks, approximately 4800 pipes.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

OCT 15 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,000

OCT 15 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Boston Roxbury
City News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000

OCT 14 1965

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ANNOUNCES SYMPHON HALL ORGAN CONCERTS

During the 1965-1966 season and for the sixth consecutive year the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a series of five organ recitals at Symphony Hall, Boston. The first concert will be given at 8:30 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 31. All other programs will be presented in Symphony Hall at 6:00 p.m. on the following Sundays: Dec. 5, Jan. 30, Feb 13, and Mar. 13. The opening recital at the end of this month will be given by Simon Preston, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, London, England.

Three of the four remaining recitalists appearing on the Symphony Hall series this season are well known Boston organists, and the fourth, Bruce Bennett, is the winner of the 1965 Organ Competition co-sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. E. Power Briggs will play his first recital in this country following a European tour on Dec. 5, and George Faxon, Organist and Choirmaster at Trinity Church, Boston will be heard on Jan. 30. Mr. Bennett will give his recital on Feb. 13. The series will close on Mar. 13 with a concert by Donald Willing, Choir Director of the First Congregational Church, Wellesley, Mass.

The sixth season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts carries on a suggestion made in 1960 by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that the orchestra sponsor a series of recitals on its magnificent Aeolian-Skinner organ to enable the public to share the great wealth of organ literature and hear the capacity of the Symphony Hall organ present this music performed by outstanding organists. Season subscriptions to the five concerts at $5.00 will be available at the Symphony Hall Box Office beginning tomorrow (Monday, Oct. 11) at 10:00 a.m. and be sold until Oct. 31. After that date tickets for single concerts will be $1.50. All seats will be unreserved, and, with the exception of Mr. Preston's concert, each program will begin at 6:00 p.m. and last approximately one hour. hour.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

OCT 28 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 21 1964

Programs Planned By AGO Chapter

To mark its 60th anniversary, the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists plans a series of varied organ and choral programs. Under its newly elected Dean, Daniel Pinkham, the chapter will again sponsor a Young Artists' Competition in collaboration with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jack Fisher, Sub-Dean, will be in charge of courses in music history and theory to be offered to chapter members.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536

OCT 23 1965

Organ series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its sixth season of five organ recitals at Symphony Hall on Sunday, Oct. 31, at 8:30. Simon Preston, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, London, will be the artist.

Subsequent programs will be at 6 o'clock on Sundays and will take place on Dec. 5 Jan. 30, Feb. 13, and March 13. Season subscriptions are available at the box office. Single concert tickets go on sale after Oct. 31.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 15 1964

Hibbard Commission

Radio station WCRB has joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter, American Guild of Organists, to commission a work for trumpet, trombone, percussion and organ from composer William Hibbard of Iowa City, Iowa.

The music, commissioned in recognition of the 60th anniversary of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O., will be given its first performance at the Symphony Hall organ concert in Boston, Mar. 28, 1965. It will be played by John Ferris, Harvard University organist, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hibbard, a former Bostonian carried out both his undergraduate and master's degree work at the New England Conservatory. He studied contemporary techniques for a year in Germany and is presently teaching and working for an advanced degree in Iowa. The selection of Hibbard for the commission was made with the advice of Mr. Ferris, Donald Willing and Daniel Pinkham, dean of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O.

140

ORGAN CONCERTS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,600

First Concert . . . SUNDAY, JANUARY 10

E. Power Biggs

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Fugue in C Major
(The "Fanfare" Fugue)

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Trio Sonata No. 1, in E Flat
Moderato Adagio Allegro

PAUL HINDEMITH . . . . Sonata No. 1 (1937)
Mässig schnell Sehr langsam Phantasie, frei Ruhig bewegt

PAUL HINDEMITH . . . . Sonata No. 2 (1937)
Lebhaft Ruhig bewegt Fuge: Mässig bewegt, heiter

JAMES HEWITT . . . . The Battle of Trenton
"A Favorite Historical Military Sonata dedicated to General Washington"

CHARLES IVES . . . . Variations on "America"
Introduction, Chorale, and Five Variations

Second Concert . . . SUNDAY, JANUARY 24

Allan Birney

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Prelude and Fugue in E Flat

ROBERT SCHUMANN . . . . Canon in B Minor

OLIVIER MESSIAEN . . . . Serene Alleluias
Outburst of Joy

RICHMOND BROWNE . . . . Intersections for Organ (1964)
(First Boston Performance)

CÉSAR FRANCK . . . . Grande pièce symphonique

Third Concert . . . SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 14

George Faxon

Trumpets: ROGER and PETER VOISIN

JOHN DUNSTABLE . . . . Agincourt Hymn
Arranged by E. Power Biggs

LOUIS-NICOLAS CLERAMBAULT . . . . Suite in the Second Tone
Plein jeu Duo Trio Basse de cromorne
Recit de nazard Caprice sur les grands jeux

JOHANN PACHELBEL . . . . Ciacona (Aria and Variations)

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Fantasia in G Minor

HENRY PURCELL . . . . Voluntary in C Major
Arranged by E. Power Biggs (for Two Trumpets and Organ)

FRANZ LISZT . . . . Introduction, Allegro and Chorale from the Fantasia on "Ad nos, ad salutarem undam"

NANCY PLUMMER FAXON . . . . Suite for Two Trumpets and Organ
Maestoso Scherzo Allegro
(First Performance)

MAURICE DURUFLÉ . . . . Scherzo, Opus 2

RAFFAELE MANARI . . . . Studio da Concerto

Fourth Concert . . . SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 28

Donald Willing

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Prelude and Fugue in A Minor
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Fugue À la Gigue
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH . . . . Prelude and Fugue in B Minor
DEREK HOLMAN . . . . Prelude, Air, Fugue
THOMAS ARNE . . . . Gigue
CÉSAR FRANCK . . . . Cantabile
CÉSAR FRANCK . . . . Final

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536

OCT 23 1965

Organ series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its sixth season of five organ recitals at Symphony Hall on Sunday, Oct. 31, at 8:30. Simon Preston, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, London, will be the artist.

Subsequent programs will be at 6 o'clock on Sundays and will take place on Dec. 5 Jan. 30, Feb. 13, and March 13. Season subscriptions are available at the box office. Single concert tickets go on sale after Oct. 31.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 15 1964

Hibbard Commission

Radio station WCRB has joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter, American Guild of Organists, to commission a work for trumpet, trombone, percussion and organ from composer William Hibbard of Iowa City, Iowa.

The music, commissioned in recognition of the 60th anniversary of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O., will be given its first performance at the Symphony Hall organ concert in Boston, Mar. 28, 1965. It will be played by John Ferris, Harvard University organist, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Hibbard, a former Bostonian carried out both his undergraduate and master's degree work at the New England Conservatory. He studied contemporary techniques for a year in Germany and is presently teaching and working for an advanced degree in Iowa. The selection of Hibbard for the commission was made with the advice of Mr. Ferris, Donald Willing and Daniel Pinkham, dean of the Boston Chapter, A.G.O.

---

that the orchestra sponsor a series of recitals on its magnificent Aeolian-Skinner organ to enable the public to share the great wealth of organ literature and hear the capacity of the Symphony Hall organ present this music performed by outstanding organists. Season subscriptions to the five concerts at $5.00 will be available at the Symphony Hall Box Office beginning tomorrow (Monday, Oct. 11) at 10:00 a.m. and be sold tion with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Jack Fisher, [illegible] Dean, will be in charge of courses in music history and theory to be offered to chapter members.

---

141

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

[illegible]EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
[illegible] 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

[illegible]gan Concerts to Start Jan. 10

[illegible] ton Symphony Or[illegible] present a series [illegible] ony Hall Organ Con[illegible] the fifth consecutive [illegible] Jan. 10.

[illegible] certs will be given, [illegible] 6 p.m., on Jan. [illegible] Feb. 14, Feb. 28, [illegible]

[illegible] asis this season [illegible] the organists of [illegible] n. Four of the [illegible] be given by Bos- [illegible] and the fifth will [illegible] the winner of the [illegible] Competition spon- [illegible] the Boston Chapter of th[illegible] American Guild of Organ[illegible].

A new work by William Hibbard, [illegible] native of Newton, will re[illegible] its world premi[illegible] at [illegible] final program on Mar. 28.

Written for organ, trumpet, trombone and percussion, it was commissioned by the Boston Symphony in cooperation with Radio Station WCRB and by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in recognition of the chapter's 60th anniversary.

E. Power Biggs will open the fifth season series on Jan. 10. The recital of Jan. 24 will be given by Allan Birney, winner of the 1964 competition by the Boston Chapter of A.G.O., who is now in graduate study at Boston University.

choirmaster at Trinity Church in Copley sq., will give the concert of Feb. 14.

George Faxon, organist and On Feb. 28 the artist will be Donald Willing, organist and choir director of the First Congregational Church of Wellesley.

The final concert on Mar. 28 will be given by John Ferris, University organist and choirmaster at Harvard. Members of the Boston Symphony will assist at the Feb. 14 and Mar. 28 concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 20 1964

Organ Concert On Jan. 10

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the program which E. Power Biggs will play to open the Fifth Season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts on Sunday, Jan. 10. Biggs' recital will be the first of five programs in the series, which will take place from January through March on Sundays at 6 p.m. Each program will be approximately one hour long, with no intermission, and all seats will be unreserved.

Biggs will open his concert with two works by J. S. Bach: the Fugue in C major (The "Fanfare" Fugue) and the Trio Sonata No. 1, in E-flat. He will continue with Paul Hindemith's Sonata No. 1 and Sonata No. 2, both composed in 1937, to be followed by "The Battle of Trenton" by James Hewitt, who was organist at Trinity Church in Boston around 1792. This descriptive piece is dedicated to General Washington and enjoyed a considerable vogue in the concerts of the day. Mr. Biggs' closing work will be the Variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

In addition to Biggs' opening concert on Janm 10, four other artists of the Greater Boston area will be heard: Jan. 24, Alan Birney, winner of the 1964 Competition by the Boston Chapter of the A.G.O. and currently in graduate study at Boston University; Feb. 14, George Faxon, Organist and Choirmaster at Trinity Church in Copley Square; Feb. 28, Donald Willing, organist and choir director of the First Congregational Church of Wellesley; March 28, John Ferris, organist and choirmaster at Harvard University, assisted by members of the Boston symphony. Series tickets are now available at the Symphony Hall box office, CO 6-1492.

On Vacation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will take a one-week vacation beginning this Wednesday and there will be no Symphony Hall concerts this Friday and Saturday. The orchestra will give two concerts, however, before adjourning Richard Burgin will conduct the third programof the Sunday afternoon series this afternoon and the fifth program of the Tuesday evening series on Tuesday at 8:30.

Burgin's program for both concerts will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic," and will continue with the first performance in each of the series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. He will conclude with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will take place on Jan 1 and 2, when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program will consist of a complete performance of "The Seasons" ("Die Jahreszeiten") by Franz Josef Haydn. Mr. Leinsdorf has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to join the orchestra for this performance, in recognition of the 150th season of the chorus, which is the oldest active choral society in America. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

JAN 14 1965

Organ Recitals Launched at Symphony Hall

By ALLAN SLY

The Boston Symphony is continuing its recently established mid-winter series of Symphony Hall organ recitals, on certain Sundays at 6. The public has responded best when the performers have been identified with Boston — by residence or career. Last Sunday's recital, by E. Power Biggs, struck this note squarely, at the same time bringing a resonance from the world outside, which Mr. Biggs has long since made his own.

I have often wanted to define, if possible, the elements of a Biggs recital that set it apart from other organ performances, however excellent, and align it more with music as it is known to concert audiences in general. Concert goers are missing something if they are not familiar with Mr. Biggs' confident and bouncy way with Bach, Handel and Purcell; with his fearlessly independent approach to Hindemith, his fabulously funny rarities like the James Hewitt Battle of Trenton, or his curiouser bits of Americana, like Ives' Variations on "America."

He also uses the organ with aplomb, finding teasing little solo voices—fluffy flutes and tangy reeds, singly or in juxtaposition. And just when one thinks the organ is not, after all, going to be heard in toto, wham, bang, there it is, well aimed and overridingly potent!

A knowledge of the instrument's potentialities hardly prepares one for all of Mr. Briggs' surprises; neither does previous exposure to what he plays prepare one for his unique, original readings. But it is not easy to disagree with him; his manner is logical, consistent and persuasive. I find a Biggs recital illuminating and very refreshing, and last Sunday's was one of the best.

The Bach "fanfare" fugue gave way to the first sonata—delightfully intimate and lithe. Then, incredibly, Hindemith's first two sonatas, the Hewitt (1792) and the Ives (1891). In response to cordial urging Mr. Biggs played his (very) own Harmonious Blacksmith (long after Handel) and the so-called Trumpet Voluntary by somebody or other (Purcell? Jeremiah Clarke?). The flippancy is hard-earned; it springs from joy wedded to thoroughly directed study. It is the hallmark of a Biggs recital. Do not miss the next one!

The series continues on January 24, when Allan Birney makes his debut under these same auspices.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22,500

OCT 1964

Allan Birney has joined the concert management of Ingeborg Noack. Winner of the organ competition of the Fort Wayne, Ind. Presbyterian Church and also of that at the Southern New England AGO regional in 1963, he went on to win the competition of the Boston Symphony and AGO Chapter in 1963. As a result of this latter award he will appear in the Boston Symphony Hall organ series this season.

A native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mr. Birney received his bachelor's degree from Oberlin and his master's from the Yale University school of music. Among his organ teachers have been Donald Heath, Eleanor Taylor, Fenner Douglass, Arthur Poister, Franz Sauer and Frank Bozyan. He has also studied piano with John Elvin and Ward Davenny and harpsichord with Isolde Ahlgrimm.

NO FIRST PRIZE winner was selected in classification 2, a work for chorus, in the annual competition of the National Federation of Music Clubs. A second prize was given to Ralph C. Verdi, 19, Rensselaer, Ind. and honorable mention to Jack Eric Williams, 21, Odessa, Tex. No other works were in our categories of organ and choral music. Judges were Kent Kennan, University of Texas, Thomas Canning, West Virginia University, and Paul Creston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 17 ,965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 17 ,965

Orchestra on Tour

Birney at Console In Symphony Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its third tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct concerts in New Haven on Tuesday evening, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday evenings, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday and Carnegie Hall in New York on Saturday evening.

The next Symphony Hall concert will take place Wednesday evening, Jan. 27, and the next weekend programs will be Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 29-30.

The orchestra announces the program for the second Symphony Hall Organ Concert, which will be given by Allan Birney on Sunday, Jan. 24, at 6 p.m. Mr. Birney was the winner of the 1964 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will open with J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat, and continue with Robert Schumann's Canon in B minor. Two works by Olivier Messiaen will follow, "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy." Mr. Birney will then play the first Boston performance of "Intersections for Organ" (1964) by Richmond Browne. He will conclude his program with the Grande piece symphonique of Cesar Franck.

141

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 6 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

1964

Organ Concerts to Start Jan. 10

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a series of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts for the fifth consecutive season beginning Jan. 10.

Five concerts will be given, on Sundays at 6 p.m., on Jan. 10, Jan. 24, Feb. 14, Feb. 28, and Mar. 28.

The emphasis this season will be on the organists of Greater Boston. Four of the concerts will be given by Boston artists and the fifth will be given by the winner of the 1964 Organ Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

A new work by William Hibbard, a native of Newton, will receive its world premiere at the final program on Mar. 28.

Written for organ, trumpet, trombone and percussion, it was commissioned by the Boston Symphony in cooperation with Radio Station WCRB and by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in recognition of the chapter's 60th anniversary.

E. Power Biggs will open the fifth season series on Jan. 10. The recital of Jan. 24 will be given by Allan Birney, winner of the 1964 competition by the Boston Chapter of A.G.O., who is now in graduate study at Boston University.

choirmaster at Trinity Church in Copley sq., will give the concert of Feb. 14.

George Faxon, organist and

On Feb. 28 the artist will be Donald Willing, organist and choir director of the First Congregational Church of Wellesley.

The final concert on Mar. 28 will be given by John Ferris, University organist and choirmaster at Harvard. Members of the Boston Symphony will assist at the Feb. 14 and Mar. 28 concerts.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

DEC 20 1964

Organ Concert On Jan. 10

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the program which E. Power Biggs will play to open the Fifth Season of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts on Sunday, Jan. 10. Biggs' recital will be the first of five programs in the series, which will take place from January through March on Sundays at 6 p.m. Each program will be approximately one hour long, with no intermission, and all seats will be unreserved.

Biggs will open his concert with two works by J. S. Bach: the Fugue in C major (The "Fanfare" Fugue) and the Trio Sonata No. 1, in E-flat. He will continue with Paul Hindemith's Sonata No. 1 and Sonata No. 2, both composed in 1937, to be followed by "The Battle of Trenton" by James Hewitt, who was organist at Trinity Church in Boston around 1792. This descriptive piece is dedicated to General Washington and enjoyed a considerable vogue in the concerts of the day. Mr. Biggs' closing work will be the Variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

In addition to Biggs' opening concert on Janm 10, four other artists of the Greater Boston area will be heard: Jan. 24, Alan Birney, winner of the 1964 Competition by the Boston Chapter of the A.G.O. and currently in graduate study at Boston University; Feb. 14, George Faxon, Organist and Choirmaster at Trinity Church in Copley Square; Feb. 28, Donald Willing, organist and choir director of the First Congregational Church of Wellesley; March 28, John Ferris, organist and choirmaster at Harvard University, assisted by members of the Boston symphony. Series tickets are now available at the Symphony Hall box office, CO 6-1492.

On Vacation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will take a one-week vacation beginning this Wednesday and there will be no Symphony Hall concerts this Friday and Saturday. The orchestra will give two concerts, however, before adjourning Richard Burgin will conduct the third programof the Sunday afternoon series this afternoon and the fifth program of the Tuesday evening series on Tuesday at 8:30.

Burgin's program for both concerts will begin with the Schubert Symphony No. 4, in C minor, "Tragic," and will continue with the first performance in each of the series of Elliott Carter's Variations for Orchestra. He will conclude with the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will take place on Jan 1 and 2, when Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program will consist of a complete performance of "The Seasons" ("Die Jahreszeiten") by Franz Josef Haydn. Mr. Leinsdorf has invited the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus to join the orchestra for this performance, in recognition of the 150th season of the chorus, which is the oldest active choral society in America. Soloists will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Thomas Paul, bass.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

JAN 14 1965

Organ Recitals Launched at Symphony Hall

By ALLAN SLY

The Boston Symphony is continuing its recently established mid-winter series of Symphony Hall organ recitals, on certain Sundays at 6. The public has responded best when the performers have been identified with Boston — by residence or career. Last Sunday's recital, by E. Power Biggs, struck this note squarely, at the same time bringing a resonance from the world outside, which Mr. Biggs has long since made his own.

I have often wanted to define, if possible, the elements of a Biggs recital that set it apart from other organ performances, however excellent, and align it more with music as it is known to concert audiences in general. Concert goers are missing something if they are not familiar with Mr. Biggs' confident and bouncy way with Bach, Handel and Purcell; with his fearlessly independent approach to Hindemith, his fabulously funny rarities like the James Hewitt Battle of Trenton, or his curiouser bits of Americana, like Ives' Variations on "America."

He also uses the organ with aplomb, finding teasing little solo voices—fluffy flutes and tangy reeds, singly or in juxtaposition. And just when one thinks the organ is not, after all, going to be heard in toto, wham, bang, there it is, well aimed and overridingly potent!

A knowledge of the instrument's potentialities hardly prepares one for all of Mr. Briggs' surprises; neither does previous exposure to what he plays prepare one for his unique, original readings. But it is not easy to disagree with him; his manner is logical, consistent and persuasive. I find a Biggs recital illuminating and very refreshing, and last Sunday's was one of the best.

The Bach "fanfare" fugue gave way to the first sonata—delightfully intimate and lithe. Then, incredibly, Hindemith's first two sonatas, the Hewitt (1792) and the Ives (1891). In response to cordial urging Mr. Biggs played his (very) own Harmonious Blacksmith (long after Handel) and the so-called Trumpet Voluntary by somebody or other (Purcell? Jeremiah Clarke?). The flippancy is hard-earned; it springs from joy wedded to thoroughly directed study. It is the hallmark of a Biggs recital. Do not miss the next one!

The series continues on January 24, when Allan Birney makes his debut under these same auspices.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22,500

OCT 1964

Allan Birney has joined the concert management of Ingeborg Noack. Winner of the organ competition of the Fort Wayne, Ind. Presbyterian Church and also of that at the Southern New England AGO regional in 1963, he went on to win the competition of the Boston Symphony and AGO Chapter in 1963. As a result of this latter award he will appear in the Boston Symphony Hall organ series this season.

A native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mr. Birney received his bachelor's degree from Oberlin and his master's from the Yale University school of music. Among his organ teachers have been Donald Heath, Eleanor Taylor, Fenner Douglass, Arthur Poister, Franz Sauer and Frank Bozyan. He has also studied piano with John Elvin and Ward Davenny and harpsichord with Isolde Ahlgrimm.

NO FIRST PRIZE winner was selected in classification 2, a work for chorus, in the annual competition of the National Federation of Music Clubs. A second prize was given to Ralph C. Verdi, 19, Rensselaer, Ind. and honorable mention to Jack Eric Williams, 21, Odessa, Tex. No other works were in our categories of organ and choral music. Judges were Kent Kennan, University of Texas, Thomas Canning, West Virginia University, and Paul Creston.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

JAN 17 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 17 1965

Orchestra on Tour

Birney at Console In Symphony Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its third tour of the season. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct concerts in New Haven on Tuesday evening, Philharmonic Hall in New York Wednesday and Friday evenings, Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday and Carnegie Hall in New York on Saturday evening.

The next Symphony Hall concert will take place Wednesday evening, Jan. 27, and the next weekend programs will be Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 29-30.

The orchestra announces the program for the second Symphony Hall Organ Concert, which will be given by Allan Birney on Sunday, Jan. 24, at 6 p.m. Mr. Birney was the winner of the 1964 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will open with J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat, and continue with Robert Schumann's Canon in B minor. Two works by Olivier Messiaen will follow, "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy." Mr. Birney will then play the first Boston performance of "Intersections for Organ" (1964) by Richmond Browne. He will conclude his program with the Grande piece symphonique of Cesar Franck.

142

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,200

JAN 21 1965

To Play In Symphony Hall

ALLAN BIRNEY of 107 Cambridge Street, organist and choirmaster at the Church of the Epiphany since September, will be the performer in the second Symphony Hall Organ Concert announced this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr Birney, a native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is also doing graduate work at Boston University.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,200

JAN 21 1965

Local Organist To Play Second Concert For BSO

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces the program for the second Symphony Hall Organ Concert, which will be given by Allan Birney of 107 Cambridge Street on Sunday, January 24, at 6 p.m. Mr. Birney is organist and choirmaster for the Church of the Epiphany.

Mr. Birney was the winner of the 1964 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was held at Symphony Hall last May 4. In addition to the invitation to perform in the Organ Concert series, Mr. Birney received a cash award of $500.

The program will open with J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E-flat, and continue with Robert Schumann's Canon in B minor. Two works by Olivier Messiaen will follow, "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy." Mr. Birney will then play the first Boston performance of "Intersections for Organ" (1964) by Richmond Browne. He will conclude his program with the Grande piece symphonique of Cesar Franck.

Born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mr. Birney has studied at Oberlin College, Coe College, Yale University, and the Academy in Salzburg. He was the winner of the 1963 National Organ Competition in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and winner of the 1963 Southern New England Regional Competition sponsored by the A.G.O.

For the past two years he has appeared in the M.I.T. chapel series organ recitals, and has given other recitals on the east coast and in the midwest. He is currently engaged in graduate study at Boston University and is organist and choirmaster of the Parish of the Epiphany here.

Tickets for the January 24 Symphony Hall Organ Concert by Allan Birney are now available at the Sympony Hall box office. All seats for the one-hour program are unreserved and there will be no intermission.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

JAN 28 1965

Birney Gives Symphony Hall Organ Recital

By ALLAN SLY

Last Sunday's dirty weather did not daunt those devotees of organ music who were determined to hear Allan Birney's Symphony Hall recital. They were rewarded with an excellent program, pleasingly presented. In fact, Mr. Birney's status as a virtuoso is readily conceded; he was last year's winner in the annual competition conducted jointly by the B.S.O. and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

The Bach E-flat prelude and fugue was more than a formal opener; it showed Mr. Birney's meticulous sense of style wedded to a fastidious keyboard manner. Ornaments, phrasing, timing, clarity of polyphonic textures, all were exemplary.

These qualities made two of Schuman's ingenious canons quite entrancing, and Messiaen's "Serene Alleluias" and "Outburst of Joy" even more entertaining than they usually are.

The musical felicities of these classics, old and new, were not, however, to suffice: they but quickened our perceptions to the point where we were sitting ducks for Richmond Browne's "Intersections (1964)." As Mr. Birney conjured the pages of his score (the rest of the program was played without notes), forwards and backwards, we held our breath between beeps, giggled a bit, marveled at some of the growls, shuddered, quailed; was the performer playing on the organ, or on his auditors? Whose leg was Mr. Browne pulling? Or are we to concede that this composer has harnessed an element of chance and turned to artistic account the random sounds of rocket telemetry, of computer by-products?

Perhaps Mr. Birney's generation has a clue withheld from the heirs of Mahler, of Delius. May it bring them, it not joy, whatever it is they set such store by — the head not the heart—the psyche not the emotions, maybe. It will be seen that Mr. Birney's way with Richmond Browne's tour de force, though it occupied but a few minutes, poses questions that tend to outbalance the more normal parts of the program. He should follow these new paths and share his findings with us.

Cesar Franck's Grand Piece Symphonique may have served as a comfort to many, but I confess to me it spells ennui. I found the encores—Vierne's Scherzo and the Bach Wachet Auf—more palatable. All were splendidly played.

Mr. Birney's use of the Symphony Hall organ rather emphasized its electric character; an effective concert instrument indeed, but one of uncertain identity. At times it seemed to lead in the direction of meretricious or at least of entertaining, ear-tickling sounds. But there was no hint that Mr. Birney would take that road. His program remained anchored in the nobler traditions and he attained his audience's unrestrained goodwill.

C.S.M. 1/25/65 Arts—Entertainment

Allan Birney at console

By Merelice Kundratis

It was well worth the effort to "brave the wintry blasts" Sunday night for Allan Birney's organ concert at Symphony Hall. The young artist gave his happy audience an impressive recital—tasteful, without bombast, sincere.

First of all, Mr. Birney's technique is good—crisp and effortlessly subordinate to the music. It was a technique that could be admired but also taken for granted.

* * *

Bach's large Prelude in E flat was a stately opening; it set the tone for an unflustered, controlled hour of organ music. The Fugue followered. Contrasts between manuals were unjarring while still effectively distinctive.

A fat flutey sound was the backdrop for more brilliant reedy entries of the themes which led with increasing rhythmic animation to a heavier and throatier build-up at the conclusion.

In contrast to the glorious Bach was a lovely little piece by Robert Schumann, Canon No. 6 in B major from six pieces in canon for pedal piano. The first section was almost devout in its repose; the second had an attractive innocence about its lilting manual parts and lightly staccato pedal part.

* * *

Mr. Birney then selected two pieces by the neo-romantic 20th-century French composer, Olivier Messiaen —"Serene Alleluias" with emphasis on "serene") and "Outburst of Joy" (with emphasis on "outburst").

"Serene Alleluias" is Oriental and mystical (characteristics common to Messiaen's music) with lyrical melodies couched in soft quavers and chromatic chords.

"Outburst of Joy" was an insistent, almost belligerent, trumpeting forth. The final outburst was like a resounding viola! or ecco! or amen!

* * *

There was also a first Boston performance to amuse the audience — Intersections for Organ by Richmond Browne. The piece is reminiscent of electronic music. (Or does it simply remind one of the traffic sounds at the intersection of Tremont and Boylston streets?)

It had low pedal rumblings, piccolo pips, tricky eruptions, and snapping blips as Mr. Birney went through the manuscript first forwards, then backwards.

César Franck's Grande pièce symphonique is not one of his best organ works, perhaps, but Mr. Birney's profound performance raised it to emyprean heights. His encores were then played with the same dignified charm and polish of everything which had preceded them.

143

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 11 1965

Peter Voisin, 15, and his father Roger, principal Boston Symphony trumpet, will assist Sunday at 6 p.m. in the Symphony Hall organ recital by George Faxon. Roger Voisin's father, the late Rene Louis Voisin, was also a B.S.O. trumpeter.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

FEB 10 1965

Photography Incorporated

Roger Voisin, principal trumpet of the ~~Boston Symph~~ony, gives pointers to his son Peter. Both will assist George Faxon at his organ recital Sunday evening at Symphony Hall. The program begins at 6 o'clock.

CSM 2/15/65

Family affair

By William Saunders

At Sunday's Symphony Hall organ concert the bright sonorities of organ with trumpets evoked the colors of pomp and pageantry. In a double family affair, George Faxon was joined by trumpeters Roger and Peter Voisin—father and son—for the first performance of a Suite (1965) by Nancy Plummer Faxon, the organist's wife.

Mr. Faxon's solos reaffirmed that he is an organist's organist, a complete master of his craft. (In his post at Boston's Trinity Church, he is a leading exponent of service-playing, which is an art within an art). His sympathies are unhampered by self-imposed limitations; he is attuned to a wide gamut of musical styles.

* * *

In projecting the simple eloquence of a Suite by Clerambault, Mr. Faxon showed a gift for tasteful and imaginative registrations. His ability to shape a phrase and set forth the over-all architecture of a composition clarified the broad symmetry of Pachelbel's Ciacona.

Mr. Faxon underscored similarities between Bach's Fantasia in G minor and Liszt's "Ad Nos" Fantasia: the declamatory chromatic style, the bold chord progressions, the compelling contrasts in mood. Into the Bach, Mr. Faxon incorporated dotted rhythms and additional ornaments, in line with theories of his teacher, Carl Dolmetsch.

At the service of the recitalist's insight was a polished technique that skittered effortlessly through Duruflé's witty Scherzo and Raffaele Manari's surging "Concert Study." In fact, Mr. Faxon's authoritative approach, coupled with his modesty, made this listener forget that the program was—at least on paper—a potpourri.

* * *

Having warmed up with Dunstable's expansive "Agincourt Hymn" and a jubilant Voluntary by Purcell, trumpeters and organist performed Nancy Plummer Faxon's Suite with singleness of purpose and mutual understanding.

The Suite showed Mrs. Faxon to be a distinct musical personality. Harmonically, the work seemed forward-looking, though it pivoted around definite tonal centers. Its chief interest lay in an abundance of melody, rather than powerful rhythms.

The first movement, alternating between moods of assertion and contemplation, drew a remarkable palette of colors and nuances from the trumpeters. In the Scherzo they deftly embellished the intricate tonal web of the organ part. And they lent charm as well as strength to the finale, which came complete with a carefully disguised salute to St. Valentine's Day.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 1 1965

Donald Willing proves a point

By William Saunders

Donald Willing's Symphony Hall organ concert shed light on the question that other musicians most frequently ask organists. Namely, is the organ capable of plumbing the greatest depths of emotion? With all the mechanism separating the performer from the source of sound, can organ music search the listener's heart as affectingly as a symphony of Beethoven or Bruckner?

Mr. Willing, who heads the organ department of the New England Conservatory, proved that the answer is a definite "yes," provided two conditions are met.

First, the music obviously must have a rich expressive content. In the Prelude and Fugue in B minor Mr. Willing chose probably the profoundest utterance of Bach's master period. Its chains of dissonances and insistent rhythms grow into a grandiose tonal edifice. It is melancholic, dramatic, sublime. Later in the program came Cesar Franck's poignant song without words, entitled simply "Cantabile." The message within its graceful contours consoles and uplifts. At its core is tenderness, not mawkishness.

The second condition is that the organist must understand what the composer felt and communicate it so that the listener, too, becomes totally involved. The details of Mr. Willing's interpretations were not superimposed, but grew naturally out of poetic moods that ranged from hushed contemplation to fiery intensity.

An ample expressive content was again evident in the pleasant contemporary acidity of Derek Holman's Prelude, Air and Fugue. It permeated the vigorous rhythms of the terse fast movements as well as the plaintive, quietly flowing Air.

In other works of Bach, Franck, and Arne that filled out the program, Mr. Willing consistently made himself a faithful sounding board for the composers' inspiration.

Last of season

Boston ~~Symphony~~ Chamber Players will give their final concert of the season in Sanders Theater Sunday evening, March 14, at 8:30. The program will include chamber music by Walter Piston, Mozart, Elliott Carter, and Spohr. Tickets are available at Symphony Hall box office and the Harvard Coop.

New Piston symphony

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the first performances of Walter Piston's new symphony, commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last fall, at the regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening Symphony concerts March 5 and 6.

Grant Johannesen will be guest piano soloist. In addition to Mr. Piston's Symphony No. 8, the program will include works by Strauss and Brahms.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

FEB 21 1965

Symphony Away; Willing at Orgar

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its fourth tour of the season.

The next Symphony Hall concerts will take place Friday and Saturday, March 5-6.

Donald Willing, head of the organ department of the New England Conservatory and organist and choir director of the First Congregational Church of Wellesley, will be the artist for the next Symphony Hall Organ Concert on Sunday evening, Feb. 28, at 6 p.m. It will be the fourth of five recitals in the fifth season of these concerts, during which the emphasis is on the many fine organists of the Greater Boston area.

FADED TEXT

164

IOWA CITY, IOWA
IOWAN
D. 7,300

MAR 2 5 1965 Burrelle's

Grad To Conduct Own Composition In Boston Recital

William Hibbard, G, Boston, is in Boston to be present at the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists, with co-sponsorship by radio station WCRB, Boston.

Hibbard will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion." He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of sections of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the work Sunday at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists in Symphony Hall, Boston.

IOWA CITY, IOWA
PRESS-CITIZEN
D. 13,500

MAR 2 5 1965 Burrelle's

Student To Hear His Composition Played in Boston

William Hibbard, Boston, graduate student at the University of Iowa, has gone to Boston to be present for the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

The composer will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion." He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of the sections of the Boston Symphony orchestra will play the work at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists Sunday in Symphony hall, Boston.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA
GAZETTE
D. 66,600 S. 69,700

MAR 2 8 1965 Burrelle's

Boston Symphony Will Play Work By U. of Iowan

IOWA CITY—William Hibbard, Boston, Mass., a graduate student at the University of Iowa, has gone to Boston to be present for the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists, with co-sponsorship by radio station WCRB, Boston.

The U. of I. composer will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion". He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of sections of the Boston Symphony orchestra will play the work at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists today in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Hibbard came to the U. of I. in September as the holder of the Sutherland Dows graduate scholarship in music composition for 1964-65. The $3,000 Dows scholarship was established in 1961 by Sutherland Dows, sr., of Cedar Rapids.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22,500

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

FEB 1965 Burrelle's

RADIO STATION, SYMPHONY BOSTON CHAPTER PROJECT

Radio station WCRB (am and fm) has joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston AGO Chapter to commission a work for trumpet, trombone, percussion and organ from William Hibbard, Iowa City, Iowa. The music, commissioned in recognition of the 60th anniversary of the Boston Chapter, will be given its first performance at the Symphony Hall organ concert March 28, played by John Ferris and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Hibbard, the composer, has undergraduate and master's degrees from the New England Conservatory. He studied in Germany and is presently teaching and working for an advanced degree in Iowa. The selection of Mr. Hibbard was made with the advice of Mr. Ferris, Donald Willing and Daniel Pinkham, dean of the Boston Chapter.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 2 9 1965

Hibbard Organ Work Premiered by Ferris

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

William Hibbard is clearly a significant compositional talent. That much was amply clear from hearing his "Fantasy for organ, trumpet, trombone, and percussion." This new work by the 25-year-old composer was commissioned by the American Guild of Organists, the Boston Symphony, and Station WCRB. It was given its first performance on Sunday afternoon's Symphony Hall organ concern by John Ferris, organ, Roger Voisin, trumpet, William Gibson, trombone, and Everett Firth and Thomas Gauger, percussion.

The commission had specified that the brasses and percussion were to be used with organ, and it is no easy task for a composer to integrate instruments whose speech and articulation characteristics vary so, and which furthermore, because of the high location of the organ pipes, are so widely separated as actual physical sound sources.

Before Hibbard's "Fantasy," Ferris had played music by Buxtehude, Bach, Franck, and Messiaen. Hibard's music was therefore compositionally the most "difficult" to apprehend, and, since it had not been played before, it was certainly the least familiar. Yet it was, with Messiaen's "Verset pour la fete de la dedicace," the piece to be heard most clearly. Hibard composed his work with a clear understanding of the hazards, and the advantages, of the organ.

Beyond that, Hibbard clearly knows what it means to compose.

His "Fantasy" is not "fantastic" in the manner of Bach's chromatic harpsichord fantasy or the great G minor organ fantasy. Rather it evokes the viol fantasies of the English Elizabethans and Jacobeans like Bull and Jenkins, and later on, Purcell.

Hibbard's "Fantasy" is sectional, and it becomes a drama of interruptions and, eventually, reconciliation of contrasted harmoic, rhythmic, and textural elements. It is a precisely worked music. There is not a note or a gesture too many, and one could imagine even that some of the highly compressed events long for expansion.

To begin with, then, it is impressive that Hibbard succeeded so well in imagining uses to which the concerted sound of the prescribed ensemble might be put. If one of the main difficulties is the contrast betw[illegible] articulating brasses and the slow-speaking organ, the composer evidently found that the percussion could provide him with a sloution to the difficulty.

The solution lies in exploiting the wide and continuous gamut of articulation speeds the percussion instruments provide, so that we have at one extreme the bongos, whose precision of attack matches Mr. Voisin's and at the other the gongs, whose patterns of attack and decay are even more diffuse than those of the romantic organ.

The neo-Romantic organ, of which G. Donald Harrison's instrument in Symphony Hall is a typical and undistinguished example, is apt to create any amount of reverberation and confusion, with few compensating qualities of timbre or articulation to provide clarity. This becomes particulary hazardous when the instrument is placed in a room as acoustically live as Symphony Hall.

Much of the interplay is rhythmic. It produces some of the most interesting things in the work, and in the repeated use of certain devices—for example, successive beats of eighths, sixteenths, eighth triplets, sixteenth sextolets—some of the more obvious and less interesting moments.

The overwhelming impression is, though, of a work that moves ahead with assurance, with a sense of growth, contrast, form, and with a feeling for the sort of development the material demands.

Moreover, Hibbard is developing a fastidious ear for timbres and intervals. He may not be writing masterpieces yet, but he is a real composer.

CSM 3/29/65

Hibbard fantasy

By William Saunders

In his Symphony Hall organ concert on Sunday evening John Ferris proved to be equally at home in works of Buxtehude, Bach, Franck, and Messiaen. He projected the music with a deeply satisfying blend of vigor and emotional warmth.

The program also featured the first performance of Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone, and Percussion by William Hibbard, a graduate of the New England Conservatory and doctoral candidate at the University of Iowa. The work was the outcome of a tripartite commission from the Boston Symphony, radio station WCRB, and the American Guild of Oragnists' Boston Chapter, now marking its 60th anniversary.

Mr. Ferris was joined by trumpeter Roger Voisin, trombonist William Gibson, and percussionists Everett Firth and Thomas Gauger. The latter two presided over a battery comprising gongs, temple blocks, tom-toms, and vibraphone. The composer conducted.

No home key

Mr. Hibbard's Fantasy is a serial composition; that is, it does not center around a "home key" or use traditional harmonies to achieve feelings of resolution or finality. The work reflects the fantasia form as Purcell knew it—having varied sections woven together with subtle transformations of material.

The composer pointed out during an interview that one basic characteristic of the organ—building up volume by addition of octave pitches—presented a crucial problem in the design of his tonal fabric. Also, he deliberately avoided a customary feature of organ writing—a solid bass line to be played on the pedals. Instead, he developed his tone lines outward from the center of the texture.

Complex interplay

The Fantasy's chief appeal was in constantly changing tone-colors, produced in part by a variety of mutes on the brass. At the same time, the transparent texture threw the complex interplay of rhythms into sharp relief.

The Fantasy proceeded with a mathematical logic, offering much the same sort of pleasure as an intriguing abstract painting. According to Mr. Hibbard, the jagged melodic intervals, the rhythmic elements and even the tempos were all in simple mathematical relationships to one another.

The listener could perceive feelings of opposition and affirmation, though generally the contrast was between more and less dissonance—all essential to the composer's purpose. The members of the ensemble worked hand-in-glove and were warmly applauded.

IOWA CITY, IOWA
PRESS-CITIZEN

APR 1 4

Hibbard Composition To Be Given

WILLIAM H[illegible]

[illegible]

PROFESSOR [illegible]
Hibbard [illegible] Boston at a [illegible] American G[illegible] being [illegible] Hibbard's "Fa[illegible] Trumpet, Tro[illegible] sion" [illegible] Symphony Orche[illegible] composer cond[illegible]

Assisting [illegible] City presentation [illegible] Swift, David G[illegible] Stephen Tillapa[illegible] graduate studen[illegible] L. Davis of the [illegible] with the composer [illegible]

Hibbard received a [illegible] sion to write the w[illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] the Boston chapter of the A[illegible] Guild of Organists [illegible]

FADED TEXT

144

IOWA CITY, IOWA
IOWAN
D. 7,300

MAR 2 5 1965

Grad To Conduct Own Composition In Boston Recital

William Hibbard, G, Boston, is in Boston to be present at the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists, with co-sponsorship by radio station WCRB, Boston.

Hibbard will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion." He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of sections of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the work Sunday at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists in Symphony Hall, Boston.

IOWA CITY, IOWA
PRESS-CITIZEN
D. 13,500

MAR 2 5 1965

Student To Hear His Composition Played in Boston

William Hibbard, Boston, graduate student at the University of Iowa, has gone to Boston to be present for the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

The composer will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion." He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of the sections of the Boston Symphony orchestra will play the work at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists Sunday in Symphony hall, Boston.

CSM 3/29/65

Hibbard fantasy

By William Saunders

In his Symphony Hall organ concert on Sunday evening John Ferris proved to be equally at home in works of Buxtehude, Bach, Franck, and Messiaen. He projected the music with a deeply satisfying blend of vigor and emotional warmth.

The program also featured the first performance of Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone, and Percussion by William Hibbard, a graduate of the New England Conservatory and doctoral candidate at the University of Iowa. The work was the outcome of a tripartite commission from the Boston Symphony, radio station WCRB, and the American Guild of Oragnists' Boston Chapter, now marking its 60th anniversary.

Mr. Ferris was joined by trumpeter Roger Voisin, trombonist William Gibson, and percussionists Everett Firth and Thomas Gauger. The latter two presided over a battery comprising gongs, temple blocks, tom-toms, and vibraphone. The composer conducted.

No home key

Mr. Hibbard's Fantasy is a serial composition; that is, it does not center around a "home key" or use traditional harmonies to achieve feelings of resolution or finality. The work reflects the fantasia form as Purcell knew it—having varied sections woven together with subtle transformations of material.

The composer pointed out during an interview that one basic characteristic of the organ—building up volume by addition of octave pitches—presented a crucial problem in the design of his tonal fabric. Also, he deliberately avoided a customary feature of organ writing—a solid bass line to be played on the pedals. Instead, he developed his tone lines outward from the center of the texture.

Complex interplay

The Fantasy's chief appeal was in constantly changing tone-colors, produced in part by a variety of mutes on the brass. At the same time, the transparent texture threw the complex interplay of rhythms into sharp relief.

The Fantasy proceeded with a mathematical logic, offering much the same sort of pleasure as an intriguing abstract painting. According to Mr. Hibbard, the jagged melodic intervals, the rhythmic elements, and even the tempos were all in simple mathematical relationships to one another.

The listener could perceive feelings of opposition and affirmation, though generally the contrast was between more and less dissonance—all essential to the composer's purpose. The members of the ensemble worked hand-in-glove and were warmly applauded.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA
GAZETTE
D. 66,600 S. 69,700

MAR 2 8 1965

Boston Symphony Will Play Work By U. of Iowan

IOWA CITY—William Hibbard, Boston, Mass., a graduate student at the University of Iowa, has gone to Boston to be present for the premiere of a new composition which he was commissioned to write by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists, with co-sponsorship by radio station WCRB, Boston.

The U. of I. composer will conduct the presentation of his work, entitled "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion". He received the $500 commission for the composition last fall. Musicians in first chairs of sections of the Boston Symphony orchestra will play the work at a public concert of the American Guild of Organists today in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Hibbard came to the U. of I. in September as the holder of the Sutherland Dows graduate scholarship in music composition for 1964-65. The $3,000 Dows scholarship was established in 1961 by Sutherland Dows, sr., of Cedar Rapids.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 2 9 1965

Hibbard Organ Work Premiered by Ferris

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

William Hibbard is clearly a significant compositional talent. That much was amply clear from hearing his "Fantasy for organ, trumpet, trombone, and percussion." This new work by the 25-year-old composer was commissioned by the American Guild of Organists, the Boston Symphony, and Station WCRB. It was given its first performance on Sunday afternoon's Symphony Hall organ concern by John Ferris, organ, Roger Voisin, trumpet, William Gibson, trombone, and Everett Firth and Thomas Gauger, percussion.

The commission had specified that the brasses and percussion were to be used with organ, and it is no easy task for a composer to integrate instruments whose speech and articulation characteristics vary so, and which furthermore, because of the high location of the organ pipes, are so widely separated as actual physical sound sources.

Before Hibbard's "Fantasy," Ferris had played music by Buxtehude, Bach, Franck, and Messiaen. Hiberd's music was therefore compositionally the most "difficult" to apprehend, and, since it had not been played before, it was certainly the least familiar. Yet it was, with Messiaen's "Verset pour la fete de la dedicace," the piece to be heard most clearly. Hibard composed his work with a clear understanding of the hazards, and the advantages, of the organ.

Beyond that, Hibbard clearly knows what it means to compose.

His "Fantasy" is not "fantastic" in the manner of Bach's chromatic harpsichord fantasy or the great G minor organ fantasy. Rather it evokes the viol fantasies of the English Elizabethans and Jacobeans like Bull and Jenkins, and later on, Purcell.

Hibbard's "Fantasy" is sectional, and it becomes a drama of interruptions and, eventually, reconciliation of contrasted harmoic, rhythmic, and textural elements. It is a precisely worked music. There is not a note or a gesture too many, and one could imagine even that some of the highly compressed events long for expansion.

To begin with, then, it is impressive that Hibbard succeeded so well in imagining uses to which the concerted sound of the pretcribed ensemble might be put. If one of the main difficulties is the contrast [illegible] ticulating brasses and the slow-speaking organ, the composer evidently found that the percussion could provide him with a solution to the difficulty.

The solution lies in exploiting the wide and continuous gamut of articulation [illegible] the percussion instruments provide, so that we have at one extreme the bongos, whose precision of attack matches Mr. Voisin's and at the other the gongs, whose patterns of attack and decay are even more diffuse than those of the romantic organ.

The neo-Romantic organ, of which G. Donald Harrison's instrument in Symphony Hall is a typical and undistinguished example, is apt to create any amount of reverberation and confusion, with few compensating qualities of timbre or articulation to provide clarity. This becomes particulary hazardous when the instrument is placed in a room as acoustically live as Symphony Hall.

Much of the interplay is rhythmic. It produces some of the most interesting things in the work, and in the repeated use of certain devices—for example, successive beats of eighths, sixteenths, eighth triplets, sixteenth sextolets—some of the more obvious and less interesting moments.

The overwhelming impression is, though, of a work that moves ahead with assurance, with a sense of growth, contrast, form, and with a feeling for the sort of development the material demands.

Moreover, Hibbard is developing a fastidious ear for timbres and intervals. He may not be writing masterpieces yet, but he is a real composer.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONNTHLY 22,500

PAGE ONE
CERTIFIED

EEB 1965

RADIO STATION, SYMPHONY BOSTON CHAPTER PROJECT

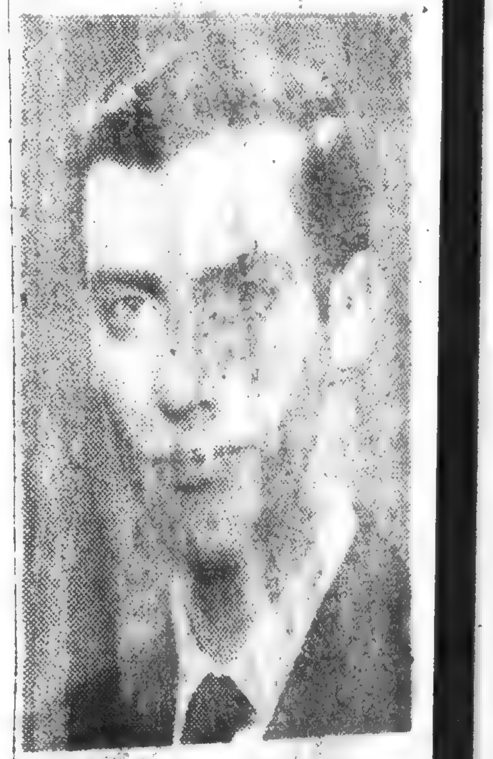
Radio station WCRB (am and fm) has joined with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston AGO Chapter to commission a work for trumpet, trombone, percussion and organ from William Hibbard, Iowa City, Iowa. The music, commissioned in recognition of the 60th anniversary of the Boston Chapter, will be given its first performance at the Symphony Hall organ concert March 28, played by John Ferris and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Hibbard, the composer, has undergraduate and master's degrees from the New England Conservatory. He studied in Germany and is presently teaching and working for an advanced degree in Iowa. The selection of Mr. Hibbard was made with the advice of Mr. Ferris, Donald Willing and Daniel Pinkham, dean of the Boston Chapter.

IOWA CITY, IOWA
PRESS-CITIZEN
D. 13,500

APR 1 4 1965

Hibbard Composition To Be Given



WILLIAM HIBBARD

The first midwest performance of a new composition by William Hibbard, current holder of the Sutherland Dows graduate scholarship in music composition at the University of Iowa will be featured during an organ recital which will be a highlight of a Church Music conference to be held at the U. of I. April 21. The composition was praised by music critics following its premiere in Boston March 28.

The recital will be presented by Prof. John Ferris, Harvard university organist and choirmaster, at 8 p.m. April 21 in the Gloria Dei Lutheran church. The recital will be the closing feature of the conference.

* * *

PROFESSOR Fe[illegible] Hibbard work its [illegible] Boston at a public co[illegible] American Guild of Orga[illegible] being assisted in presenta[illegible] Hibbard's "Fantasy for Organ, Trumpet, Trombone and Percussion" by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the composer conducting.

Assistng Ferris in the Iowa City presentation will be Arthur Swift, David Glassmire and Stephen Tillapaugh, all U. of I graduate students, and Thomas L. Davis of the music faculty, with the composer conducting.

Hibbard received a commission to write the work from the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Boston chapter of the American Guild of Organists. An honor graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, Hibbard is studying for a Ph.D. degree at the U. of I. while holding the Sutherland Dows scholarship.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 114,397

PENSION FUND CONCERT LISTED

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the complete program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 133d Pension Fund Concert April 4, 3.30 p. m., at which pianist Arthur Rubinstein will be guest artist.

The concert will open with Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger." Mr. Rubinstein will then join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra for a performance of the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor. Intermission will follow, and the program will concude with Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor, Mr. Rubinstein soloist.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

MAR 7 1965

Rubinstein to Play Two Piano Concertos

For the third season in a row, pianist Artur Rubenstein will be soloist with the Boston Symphony at the orchestra's annual pension fund concert.

He will play the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor and the Brahms First in D minor, during the program on Sunday afternoon, April 4, at 3:30 in Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The orchestra invited Rubenstein to join them in their pension fund concert during Leinsdorf's first season, 1962-63, and the invitation was extended again for last year's pension fund concert, RCA Victor issued recordings of both collaborations. Rubenstein's association with the orchestra goes back many years. His first guest appearance was in 1921 with Pierre Monteux conducting; and in 1910, fourteen years before Serge Koussevitzky came to Boston he was soloist for Koussevitzky in St. Petersburg.

For the pension fund concert the members of the orchestra and Leinsdorf will donate their services and the net proceeds will go to the pension fund, which in 1964 paid $234,452 to 97 Boston Symphony pensioners and widows.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAR 7 1965

Rubinstein Back In Fund Concert

Erich Leinsdorf and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have invited pianist Artur Rubinstein to be guest soloist for the third successive year at the orchestra's Pension Fund Concert. The concert will be given in Symphony Hall Sunday, April 4, at 3:30 p.m. Mr. Rubinstein will be heard in two works, the Beethoven "Piano Concerto in D minor, Op. 15."

Public sale of tickets for the April 4 concert will begin tomorrow at 10 a.m. at the Symphony Hall box office.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

PLANNING PENSION FUND CONCERT are Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Artur Rubinstein, the great piano virtuoso, who will be soloist at the concert Sunday afternoon, April 4, at Symphony Hall for the orchestra's pension fund.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

MAR 3 0 1965

Musical Chairs

Concert Aids Retired Symphony Musicians

By MARGO MILLER

The Boston Symphony has ne statistic of which it is very roud. The orchestra's pension und helps support almost as any persons — 97 pensioners nd widows — as are actively laying concerts.

The Pension Institution, to ive it its formal name, distributed more than $234,000 in 1964 and more than $1 million in the last five years. The coffers will be replenished in part Sunday afternoon at the annual pension fund concert, for which conductor and orchestra give their services. The soloist will be pianist Artur Rubinstein, in the Third Beethoven and First Brahms.

Pensioners receive a little under $5000 a year. This figure is roughly half the basic salary of an orchestra player. The Boston Symphony is the first orchestra, and among the first corporations in the country, to scale pensions to cost-of-living: as cost-of-living increases, pensions increase.

Players become eligible for pensions after they have been in the B.S.O. for 15 years. Should a musician leave before that time, he gets back the money he has put into the fund. Should he play here for 15 years and then transfer to another orchestra, his B.S.O. pension money lies dormant until he finally retires. Unless a musician's widow remarries, she gets half the pension her husband had received.

The annual pension fund concert—Sunday's will be the 133d, for in some years there have been two or three programs—is not the only source of money. There are bequests to the fund, contributions from the Boston Symphony corporation, proceeds from the Winter season's open rehearsals and Tanglewood's public rehearsals, and rentals of the orchestra's concert radio tapes. There is also a kind of tything arrangement in which the fund itself puts one-third of its annual income into a permanent endowment fund.

Rosario Mazzeo, the orchestra's personnel manager, says the premise of the pension fund, begun in 1903, is to stabilize a man's life after he retires. "When a man is not able to continue playing in the orchestra, he really isn't able to do much by way of earning a living as a performer. His training has been so specialized that he's not really adapted to do anything else."

At rehearsals last week for the Schoenberg Violin Concerto which he introduced at Boston Symphony concerts Friday and Saturday, soloist Joseph Silverman wore appropriate garb. It was a green sweat shirt imprinted with the seal of the University of Vienna.

Schoenberg was a Viennese. But Silverstein has had the sweatshirt since Erich Leinsdorf's first season with the Boston Symphony. One morning at Tanglewood several members of the orchestra greeted their conductor, a U. V. alumnus, wearing sweatshirts they had had made to order.

Harvard University Press says it has it on "good authority that if a lutenist lives 7 years, he will spend 35 o them tuning his instrument. The publisher's newsletter, th work of Kit Reed, continue "To be strung along like tha for half a lifetime is enoug to make anyone fret. But th plight of the harpsichordis seems worse. Without an inkling of the ancient tradition of design and constructio which have fashioned his instrument, he may never pluc a note, or never a good one."

Harvard has set an Apri publication date for Frank T Hubbard's "Three Centuries o Harpsicord Making." The boo contains 41 plates illustratin typical harpsichords. Detail of construction are shown i drawings.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

Rubinstein Concert on Monteux Birthday

The Boston Symphony's pension fund concert this afternoon at 3:30 falls on the 90th birthday of Pierre Monteux, who died last July.

He was scheduled to conduct, just as he has conducted his 80th and 85th birthday pension fund concerts. Arthur Rubinstein, today's soloist, first appeared with the Boston Symphony 44 years ago, in 1921, when Monteux was music director.

Rubinstein will be heard in two piano concertos, the Beethoven No. 3 and the Brahms No. 1. Erich Leinsdorf and the members of the orchestra, who will contribute their services for this special concert, will open the program with Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

[illegible] 3 0 1965

NEXT SUNDAY'S Boston Symphony Pension Fund Concert, in which one grand old performer, Artur Rubinstein, will play a Beethoven and a Brahms concerto, was to have been conducted by another grand old exponent of music, Pierre Monteux. It would have been his 90th birthday. He died last July. Rubinstein first played with the Boston Symphony in 1921, when Monteux was the orchestra's official conductor.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 4 1965

Today, the Boston Symphony's Pension Fund Concert will bring Artur Rubinstein as soloist and nostalgic memories of former Boston conductor Pierre Monteux, who would have been 90 today and was to conduct this concert today, as he did his 80th and 85th birthday Pension Fund concerts. Mr. Monteux, who was in Boston shortly before his death last Summer, first presented Mr. Rubinstein with the Boston Symphony 44 years ago when he was music director.

Pub

Herald 4/5/65

Symphony Hall

Rubinstein Is Warmly Received

By McLAREN HARRIS

Yesterday marked the third consecutive appearance by pianist Artur Rubinstein as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf at the annual Pension Fund Concerts. The union produced, as before, most gratifying results and the reception was again purely adoring, indicating that at least as long as Mr. Rubinstein wishes to return, the Fund is assured unabated prosperity.

The two concerti which were played, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, are beloved giants in separate but related languages, representing classicism in differing perspectives. Beethoven's C minor is close to the center of classic tradition through every bone with the first movement's undisturbed double expansion, the characteristic cadential resolutions and familiar piano texture, except for an expanded left-hand role. Symphonic context is secure and one may trace the seams of formal structure now and then through the modulations.

Yet a principle facet of the original conception was the opportunity for virtuosic display, and Mr. Rubinstein applied a touch of extroversion to his rendition. Themes stood out boldly and through statement or transition the piano never shirked its position as vanguard for the whole. His manner was not dominant but gently assertive, now robust and now cajoling, while his approach to the Largo bespoke an almost reverent calm.

Brahms' D minor Concerto is the more formidable of the giants; through a three-quarter-hour length it progresses like a kaleidoscopic succession of color and dynamics with the element of formal predictability. Everywhere is direction; even during the rapture of tender passages and the Adagio's broad arches of melody it is not forgetful of the large purpose, which reveals both sinister and majestic faces.

The integration of soloist and ensemble is avowed, yet identities are in no way lost. Mr. Rubinstein shared a truly eloquent role with the orchestra, each by turns forceful, reflective, impassioned. The pianist, by choice, is no pyrotechnician. His dynamism was tempered into understandable terms; indeed, on occasion he found himself waging an uphill campaign against orchestral preponderance. At others, as the Adagio's ethereal conclusion, the partnership was complete and silver linings prevailed.

The Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" opened the program. For all the excitement that was accorded Wagner's emergence as an oracle of the future during his own time, sometimes I feel that he has missed relegation to obscurity by only a small margin. However, a compelling, sensual flow pervading the Prelude's rather heavy orchestral substance, coupled with the grandiose sweep which Mr. Leinsdorf and his players accorded it makes me hope for the composer's continued endurance.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 134th Pension Fund Concert yesterday at Symphony Hall. Artur Rubinstein was was piano soloist.

Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" — Wagner

Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor Op. 37 — Beethoven

Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor Op. 15 — Brahms

Globe 4/5/65

Pension Fund Concert

Rubinstein Soloist Twice at Symphony

By MARGO MILLER

Pianist Artur Rubinstein was the star turn Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Boston Symphony's 134th Pension Fund Concert, and everybody was disposed to be openhanded financially (the top ticket price was $12) and musically (two big piano concertos).

Rubinstein was, in a way, a proxy for Pierre Monteux, who would have been 90 years old Sunday. He had spoken of conducting this year's Pension Fund Concert, as he had those on his 80th and 85th birthdays. Death intervened last July. We say proxy because Rubinstein, like Monteux, seems to get younger with the years. The pianist made his Boston Symphony debut in 1921.

Three years ago somebody had the bright idea of getting Rubinstein as soloist for the Pension Fund Concert. His name and art have drawn sell-out houses since. With the conductor and orchestra giving its services, Sunday's concert grossed about $18,000. Last year the Pension Institution, to give its formal name, distributed more than $234,000 to 97 pensioners and widows, and RCA-Victor has been able, in recording sessions later, to add the Rubinstein concertos to its catalogue.

The Rubinstein concertos this year were the Beethoven Third in C minor, Op. 37, and the Brahms First in D minor, Op. 15. Before them, Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, led a rousing performance of the Prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," during which marching in the aisles would have been appropriate. It was a grand curtain raiser for the soloist and several hundred persons stood up as he came in.

Now to the music. Rubinstein's general precision reminds one of the anecdote about the Swedish company which received a sample of an American manufacturer's fancy grade of ball-bearings and asked to reproduce it had to write to inquire which size was wanted. The Beethoven Concerto was an example of the varieties of keyboard technique. The cadenza showed gradation of dynamics, an exercise in scales of softs. Rubinstein was also demonstrating how in a repeated motif he could differentiate, and probably even more difficult, duplicate, a previous passage.

It was not fussy playing. Clean, clear, it was so beautifully organized that it was intensely exciting and very moving. Rubinstein has equal facility with the broad statement. His setting forth of much of the Brahms Concerto was quietly powerful. Both Concertos seemed reflectively played.

Perhaps because the orchestral sound in the Brahms is more of a blanket than in the Beethoven, Rubinstein's habit of listening to (even leaning into) an orchestral passage and then refining it on the piano is a lesson in concerto writing and playing.

The orchestra, just back from its New York tour, played pretty well. A pianist with the firm tone of a Rubinstein is likely to show up any fuzziness in the band, and the reception for everybody on stage should indicate to the management more of the same next year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

APR 5 1965

Rubinstein plays for pension fund

By John Marshall Cuno

Whenever Artur Rubinstein returns to play at Symphony Hall, a fresh wonder fills the air. If there is any sameness in his performance, it is the sameness of spiritedness, warmth, and expressiveness.

No exception to this rule was Sunday afternoon's pension fund concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was the same delightful man perched on the piano stool, his beatific face held high above the keys, his fingers moving with magnificent control.

After the orchestral opener, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," we heard Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor.

A similar freshness is not, unfortunately, apparent in Erich Leinsdorf's conducting. Hardly ever does he impart excitement to an established work.

Note what he did—or didn't do—with the Wagner. Here in Wagner something more human and less legendary comes out. But it didn't come out in Mr. Leinsdorf. He turned it into a Pops piece—with less charm than most things heard on the Esplanade.

Yet in the concertos we again found the fresh wonder, the almost childlike enthusiasm that Rubinstein kindles in the hearts of listeners.

Beethoven's No. 3 is a work of great breadth and forcefulness, and Mr. Rubinstein did not fail the composer. A few times, however, in the Allegro, he failed Mr. Leinsdorf in the tempo. Piano and orchestra simply were not precisely together. The same discrepancy was noticeable in the Rondo of the Brahms.

Of peculiar pleasure were Mr. Rubinstein's pianissimo passages in both concertos. They held the audience in a kind of breathless and keen expectancy. No doubt they were also of good influence upon the orchestra which rarely, if ever, produces a really stirring pianissimo sound.

At such times orchestra and piano achieved their best blending in dynamics.

In the Brahms work, Mr. Rubinstein gave the sense of a second orchestra answering the first and augmenting it in a masterful and comprehensive manner. None of the elaborate detail was lost in the drama.

The more orthodox Rondo, almost militant, brought Mr. Rubinstein characteristically off his stool five or six times. And his closing bars brought the audience to their feet.

Program

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Sunday Afternoon, April 4, at 3:30 o'clock

WAGNER . . . . Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"

BEETHOVEN . . . . Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, Op. 37
I. Allegro con brio II. Largo III. Rondo: Allegro

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor, Op. 15
I. Maestoso II. Adagio III. Rondo: Allegro non troppo

Soloist
ARTUR RUBINSTEIN
Mr. Rubinstein plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

pub

Symphony Hall

Herald 4/5/65

Rubinstein Is Warmly Received

By McLAREN HARRIS

Yesterday marked the third consecutive appearance by pianist Artur Rubinstein as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf at the annual Pension Fund Concerts. The union produced, as before, most gratifying results and the reception was again purely adoring, indicating that at least as long as Mr. Rubinstein wishes to return, the Fund is assured unabated prosperity.

The two concerti which were played, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, are beloved giants in separate but related languages, representing classicism in differing perspectives. Beethoven's C minor is close to the center of classic tradition through every bone with the first movement's undisturbed double expansion, the characteristic cadential resolutions and familiar piano texture, except for an expanded left-hand role. Symphonic context is secure and one may trace the seams of formal structure now and then through the modulations.

Yet a principle facet of the original conception was the opportunity for virtuosic display, and Mr. Rubinstein applied a touch of extroversion to his rendition. Themes stood out boldly and through statement or transition the piano never shirked its position as vanguard for the whole. His manner was not dominant but gently assertive, now robust and now cajoling, while his approach to the Largo bespoke an almost reverent calm.

Brahms' D minor Concerto is the more formidable of the giants; through a three-quarter-hour length it progresses like a kaleidoscopic succession of color and dynamics with the element of formal predictability. Everywhere is direction; even during the rapture of tender passages and the Adagio's broad arches of melody it is not forgetful of the large purpose, which reveals both sinister and majestic faces.

The integration of soloist and ensemble is avowed, yet identities are in no way lost. Mr. Rubinstein shared a truly eloquent role with the orchestra, each by turns forceful, reflective, impassioned. The pianist, by choice, is no pyrotechnician. His dynamism was tempered into understandable terms; indeed, on occasion he found himself waging an uphill campaign against orchestral preponderance. At others, as the Adagio's ethereal conclusion, the partnership was complete and silver linings prevailed.

The Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" opened the program. For all the excitement that was accorded Wagner's emergence as an oracle of the future during his own time, sometimes I feel that he has missed relegation to obscurity by only a small margin. However, a compelling, sensual flow pervading the Prelude's rather heavy orchestral substance, coupled with the grandiose sweep which Mr. Leinsdorf and his players accorded it makes me hope for the composer's continued endurance.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eric Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 134 Pension Fund Concert yesterday Symphony Hall. Artur Rubinstein w was piano soloist.

Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" Wagn

Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor Op. 37 Beethov

Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor Op. 15 Brahm

Globe 4/5/65

Pension Fund Concert

Rubinstein Soloist Twice at Symphony

By MARGO MILLER

Pianist Artur Rubinstein was the star turn Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Boston Symphony's 134th Pension Fund Concert, and everybody was disposed to be openhanded financially (the top ticket price was $12) and musically (two big piano concertos).

Rubinstein was, in a way, a proxy for Pierre Monteux, who would have been 90 years old Sunday. He had spoken of conducting this year's Pension Fund Concert, as he had those on his 80th and 85th birthdays. Death intervened last July. We say proxy because Rubinstein, like Monteux, seems to get younger with the years. The pianist made his Boston Symphony debut in 1921.

Three years ago somebody had the bright idea of getting Rubinstein as soloist for the Pension Fund Concert. His name and art have drawn sell-out houses since. With the conductor and orchestra giving its services, Sunday's concert grossed about $18,000. Last year the Pension Institution, to give its formal name, distributed more than $234,000 to 97 pensioners and widows, and RCA-Victor has been able, in recording sessions later, to add the Rubinstein concertos to its catalogue.

The Rubinstein concertos this year were the Beethoven Third in C minor, Op. 37, and the Brahms First in D minor, Op. 15. Before them, Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, led a rousing performance of the Prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," during which marching in the aisles would have been appropriate. It was a grand curtain raiser for the soloist and several hundred persons stood up as he came in.

Now to the music. Rubinstein's general precision reminds one of the anecdote about the Swedish company which received a sample of an American manufacturer's fancy grade of ball-bearings and asked to reproduce it had to write to inquire which size was wanted. The Beethoven Concerto was an example of the varieties of keyboard technique. The cadenza showed gradation of dynamics, an exercise in scales of softs. Rubinstein was also demonstrating how in a repeated motif he could differentiate, and probably even more difficult, duplicate, a previous passage.

It was not fussy playing. Clean, clear, it was so beautifully organized that it was intensely exciting and very moving. Rubinstein has equal facility with the broad statement. His setting forth of much of the Brahms Concerto was quietly powerful. Both Concertos seemed reflectively played.

Perhaps because the orchestral sound in the Brahms is more of a blanket than in the Beethoven, Rubinstein's habit of listening to (even leaning into) an orchestral passage and then refining it on the piano is a lesson in concerto writing and playing.

The orchestra, just back from its New York tour, played pretty well. A pianist with the firm tone of a Rubinstein is likely to show up any fuzziness in the band, and the reception for everybody on stage should indicate to the management more of the same next year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

APR 5 1965

Rubinstein plays for pension fund

By John Marshall Cuno

Whenever Artur Rubinstein returns to play at Symphony Hall, a fresh wonder fills the air. If there is any sameness in his performance, it is the sameness of spiritedness, warmth, and expressiveness.

No exception to this rule was Sunday afternoon's pension fund concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was the same delightful man perched on the piano stool, his beatific face held high above the keys, his fingers moving with magnificent control.

After the orchestral opener, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," we heard Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor.

A similar freshness is not, unfortunately, apparent in Erich Leinsdorf's conducting. Hardly ever does he impart excitement to an established work.

Note what he did—or didn't do—with the Wagner. Here in Wagner something more human and less legendary comes out. But it didn't come out in Mr. Leinsdorf. He turned it into a Pops piece—with less charm than most things heard on the Esplanade.

Yet in the concertos we again found the fresh wonder, the almost childlike enthusiasm that Rubinstein kindles in the hearts of listeners.

Beethoven's No. 3 is a work of great breadth and forcefulness, and Mr. Rubinstein did not fail the composer. A few times, however, in the Allegro, he failed Mr. Leinsdorf in the tempo. Piano and orchestra simply were not precisely together. The same discrepancy was noticeable in the Rondo of the Brahms.

Of peculiar pleasure were Mr. Rubinstein's pianissimo passages in both concertos. They held the audience in a kind of breathless and keen expectancy. No doubt they were also of good influence upon the orchestra which rarely, if ever, produces a really stirring pianissimo sound.

At such times orchestra and piano achieved their best blending in dynamics.

In the Brahms work, Mr. Rubinstein gave the sense of a second orchestra answering the first and augmenting it in a masterful and comprehensive manner. None of the elaborate detail was lost in the drama.

The more orthodox Rondo, almost militant, brought Mr. Rubinstein characteristically off his stool five or six times. And his closing bars brought the audience to their feet.

Program

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Sunday Afternoon, April 4, at 3:30 o'clock

WAGNER . . . . Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"

BEETHOVEN . . . . Piano Concerto No. 3, in C minor, Op. 37
I. Allegro con brio II. Largo III. Rondo: Allegro

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . Piano Concerto No. 1, in D minor, Op. 15
I. Maestoso II. Adagio III. Rondo: Allegro non troppo

Soloist
ARTUR RUBINSTEIN
Mr. Rubinstein plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Rub

Herald 4/5/65

Symphony Hall

Rubinstein Is Warmly Received

By McLAREN HARRIS

Yesterday marked the third consecutive appearance by pianist Artur Rubinstein as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf at the annual Pension Fund Concerts. The union produced, as before, most gratifying results and the reception was again purely adoring, indicating that at least as long as Mr. Rubinstein wishes to return, the Fund is assured unabated prosperity.

The two concerti which were played, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, are beloved giants in separate but related languages, representing classicism in differing perspectives. Beethoven's C minor is close to the center of classic tradition through every bone with the first movement's undisturbed double expansion, the characteristic cadential resolutions and familiar piano texture, except for an expanded left-hand role. Symphonic context is secure and one may trace the seams of formal structure now and then through the modulations.

Yet a principle facet of the original conception was the opportunity for virtuosic display, and Mr. Rubinstein applied a touch of extroversion to his rendition. Themes stood out boldly and through statement or transition the piano never shirked its position as vanguard for the whole. His manner was not dominant but gently assertive, now robust and now cajoling, while his approach to the Largo bespoke an almost reverent calm.

Brahms' D minor Concerto is the more formidable of the giants; through a three-quarter-hour length it progresses like a kaleidoscopic succession of color and dynamics with the element of formal predictability. Everywhere is direction; even during the rapture of tender passages and the Adagio's broad arches of melody it is not forgetful of the large purpose, which reveals both sinister and majestic faces.

The integration of soloist and ensemble is avowed, yet identities are in no way lost. Mr. Rubinstein shared a truly eloquent role with the orchestra, each by turns forceful, reflective, impassioned. The pianist, by choice, is no pyrotechnician. His dynamism was tempered into understandable terms; indeed, on occasion he found himself waging an uphill campaign against orchestral preponderance. At others, as the Adagio's ethereal conclusion, the partnership was complete and silver linings prevailed.

The Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" opened the program. For all the excitement that was accorded Wagner's emergence as an oracle of the future during his own time, sometimes I feel that he has missed relegation to obscurity by only a small margin. However, a compelling, sensual flow pervading the Prelude's rather heavy orchestral substance, coupled with the grandiose sweep which Mr. Leinsdorf and his players accorded it makes me hope for the composer's continued endurance.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 134th Pension Fund Concert yesterday in Symphony Hall. Artur Rubinstein was piano soloist.

Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" Wagner

Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor Op. 37 Beethoven

Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor Op. 15 Brahms

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

APR 5 1965

Rubinstein plays for pension fund

By John Marshall Cuno

Whenever Artur Rubinstein returns to play at Symphony Hall, a fresh wonder fills the air. If there is any sameness in his performance, it is the sameness of spiritedness, warmth, and expressiveness.

No exception to this rule was Sunday afternoon's pension fund concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There was the same delightful man perched on the piano stool, his beatific face held high above the keys, his fingers moving with magnificent control.

After the orchestral opener, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," we heard Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor.

A similar freshness is not, unfortunately, apparent in Erich Leinsdorf's conducting. Hardly ever does he impart excitement to an established work.

Note what he did—or didn't do—with the Wagner. Here in Wagner something more human and less legendary comes out. But it didn't come out in Mr. Leinsdorf. He turned it into a Pops piece—with less charm than most things heard on the Esplanade.

Yet in the concertos we again found the fresh wonder, the almost childlike enthusiasm that Rubinstein kindles in the hearts of listeners.

Beethoven's No. 3 is a work of great breadth and forcefulness, and Mr. Rubinstein did not fail the composer. A few times, however; in the Allegro, he failed Mr. Leinsdorf in the tempo. Piano and orchestra simply were not precisely together. The same discrepancy was noticeable in the Rondo of the Brahms.

Of peculiar pleasure were Mr. Rubinstein's pianissimo passages in both concertos. They held the audience in a kind of breathless and keen expectancy. No doubt they were also of good influence upon the orchestra which rarely, if ever, produces a really stirring pianissimo sound.

At such times orchestra and piano achieved their best blending in dynamics.

In the Brahms work, Mr. Rubinstein gave the sense of a second orchestra answering the first and augmenting it in a masterful and comprehensive manner. None of the elaborate detail was lost in the drama.

The more orthodox Rondo, almost militant, brought Mr. Rubinstein characteristically off his stool five or six times. And his closing bars brought the audience to their feet.

Globe 4/5/65

Pension Fund Concert

Rubinstein Soloist Twice at Symphony

By MARGO MILLER

Pianist Artur Rubinstein was the star turn Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Boston Symphony's 134th Pension Fund Concert, and everybody was disposed to be openhanded financially (the top ticket price was $12) and musically (two big piano concertos).

Rubinstein was, in a way, a proxy for Pierre Monteux, who would have been 90 years old Sunday. He had spoken of conducting this year's Pension Fund Concert, as he had those on his 80th and 85th birthdays. Death intervened last July. We say proxy because Rubinstein, like Monteux, seems to get younger with the years. The pianist made his Boston Symphony debut in 1921.

Three years ago somebody had the bright idea of getting Rubinstein as soloist for the Pension Fund Concert. His name and art have drawn sell-out houses since. With the conductor and orchestra giving its services, Sunday's concert grossed about $18,000. Last year the Pension Institution, to give its formal name, distributed more than $234,000 to 97 pensioners and widows, and RCA-Victor has been able, in recording sessions later, to add the Rubinstein concertos to its catalogue.

The Rubinstein concertos this year were the Beethoven Third in C minor, Op. 37, and the Brahms First in D minor, Op. 15. Before them, Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, led a rousing performance of the Prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," during which marching in the aisles would have been appropriate. It was a grand curtain raiser for the soloist and several hundred persons stood up as he came in.

Now to the music. Rubinstein's general precision reminds one of the anecdote about the Swedish company which received a sample of an American manufacturer's fancy grade of ball-bearings and asked to reproduce it had to write to inquire which size was wanted. The Beethoven Concerto was an example of the varieties of keyboard technique. The cadenza showed gradation of dynamics, an exercise in scales of softs. Rubinstein was also demonstrating how in a repeated motif he could differentiate, and probably even more difficult, duplicate, a previous passage.

It was not fussy playing. Clean, clear, it was so beautifully organized that it was intensely exciting and very moving. Rubinstein has equal facility with the broad statement. His setting forth of much of the Brahms Concerto was quietly powerful. Both Concertos seemed reflectively played.

Perhaps because the orchestral sound in the Brahms is more of a blanket than in the Beethoven, Rubinstein's habit of listening to (even leaning into) an orchestral passage and then refining it on the piano is a lesson in concerto writing and playing.

The orchestra, just back from its New York tour, played pretty well. A pianist with the firm tone of a Rubinstein is likely to show up any fuzziness in the band, and the reception for everybody on stage should indicate to the management more of the same next year.

THIS CONCERT brings memories of Pierre Monteux, for it falls upon his ninetieth birthday. Mr. Monteux, as a token of his warm affection for what was once his orchestra, conducted the spring Pension Fund concerts on the occasions of both his eightieth and eighty-fifth birthdays, and had spoken of doing so again on his ninetieth.

It is interesting to note that Artur Rubinstein first appeared with this Orchestra in 1921, when Pierre Monteux was Conductor. He has been soloist for the Pension Fund concerts in the last two seasons when Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

* * *

Today the Boston Symphony Pension Institution, established in 1903, pays pensions to 97 former members or widows — nearly the number of active players in the Orchestra. In 1964, $234,000 was paid to these people and in the last five years over $1,000,000 has been distributed to the retired members of the Orchestra.

RADIO + TV

147

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,551

BSO Concerts On College Radio

AMHERST — WFCR-Four College Radio begins another year of live Boston Symphony Orchestra broadcasts this week. The 1964-65 season starts Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. direct from Symphony Hall, Boton.

To inaugurate the symphony's 84th season, conductor Erich Leinsdorf has chosen three works: Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, the Pastoral; and Symphony No. 1 by Shostakovich.

Preceding each concert, G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will analyze the works to be performed.

WFCR broadcasts at 88.5 megacylces FM. A complete listing of programs broadcast over WFCR may be obtained through the office of the secretary, Amherst College.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,493

1964

Channel 2 Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert on Oct. 13

Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday, Oct. 13, at 8:30 p.m.

Broadcast simultaneously with WGBH-FM the concert marks the seventh consecutive year WGBH-TV has brought these full-length concerts to music lovers of New England.

Direct from Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf will open his program with the popular Academic Festival Overture by Johannes Brahms, followed by the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovich. After intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will return to the podium for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68, the "Pastoral."

For those who want to make a special note on their calendar, here is the schedule of succeeding Boston Symphony broadcasts: Nov. 10, Dec. 15, Jan. 12, Mar. 16, April 13.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,983

1964

Symphony on Two

Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday, Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

OCT 10 1964

Season's First Live Telecast

Boston Symphony To Give Concert On TV Channel 2

Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra teelcast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday at 8:30 PM.

Broadcast simultaneously with WGBH-FM the concert marks the seventh consecutive year WGBH-TV has brought these full-length concerts to music lovers of New England.

Direct from Symphony Hall Erich Leinsdorf will open his program with the popular Academic Festival Overture by Johannes Brahms, followed by the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovich. After intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will return to the podium for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, the "Pastoral."

Enthusiasm for these full-length live Boston symphony concerts grows with each passing year. Principle themes are brought out musically by the orchestra and visually by the television camera. Carefully integrated closeups of the orchestra and conductor make these telecasts an exciting musical experience, while WGBH-FM provides perfection in audio engineering.

For those who want to make a special note on their calendar here is the schedule of succeeding Boston Symphony broadcasts: Nov. 10, Dec. 15, Jan. 12, March 16, and April 13.

BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE
D. 14,300

OCT 17 1964 Buffalo

KBRG to Offer Symphony

One of the most popular radio series concert music is now heard weekly exclusively on KBRG (FM) in San Francisco. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts start tonight in "live" delayed stereocasts and will be heard for two hours every Wednesday evening from 7 to 9 at 105.3 on the FM dial.

Under their new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony has experienced a re-birth that in the opinion of many critics brings it to first place among U.S. orchestras.

This concert series on KBRG is the only symphony broadcast in FM stereo in Northern California.

The stereocasts are presently originating at the 1964 Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass. The new season from Boston's Symphony Hall begins Nov. 25. An impressive roster of guest soloists join Erich Leinsdorf, including Jorge Bolet, Van Cliburn and Isaac Stern. Program details will be published in the FM highlights sections.

Tonight's program includes:

Hindemith, Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Carl Maria von Weber; Schumann, Symphony No. 4 in D Minor Op. 120; R. Strauss, Parergon to the Sinfonia Domestica for Piano and Orchestra; Liszt, Fantasia on Themes from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" for Piano and Orchestra—soloist, Jorge Bolet.

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 53 190

OCT 5 1964 Buffalo

General Tel to Back Philadelphia, Boston Orchestras on WQXR

NEW YORK, Sept. 29—General Telephone & Electronics Corp. has expanded its heavy sponsorship of symphonic music on WQXR, New York, to include weekly taped concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Boston concerts will be aired each Saturday, 8:07-10 p.m. (EDT), starting Oct. 3. The following day, General Telephone will begin sponsoring a pre-season festival of pops concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra from 1:07-3 p.m. (EDT). In the same time period, beginning Oct. 25, General Telephone will present the Philadelphia's regular 1964-'65 season.

The new contract is in addition to General Telephone's sponsorship of WQXR's "Symphony Hall," Monday-through-Friday, 8:07-9 p.m. (EDT). The company began sponsoring three weekly programs of "Symphony Hall" last January and expanded its schedule to the full week in April, when its Sylvania subsidiary picked up the two remaining shows.

■ Since General Telephone began its campaign on WQXR, it has been issuing "Program for Good Music," a monthly guide listing the works to be played on each "Symphony Hall" program. The guide, which goes to General Telephone employes and WQXR listeners, henceforth will include the Boston and Philadelphia concerts.

Kudner Agency placed the General Telephone schedule. #

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W 53,190

OCT 5 1964 Buffalo

• North American Philips Co., New York, will be half-sponsor of the weekly two-hour taped broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on WCRB, Boston; WFMT (fm), Chicago; KFAC, Los Angeles; and a San Francisco station, yet to be selected. The 26-week series will be aired in nighttime, starting about Oct. 10. Sam Groden Inc. is the agency for Norelco tape recorders, which will be promoted on the show.

ARCADE, N. Y.
HOLLAND REVIEW
W. 1,500

OCT 29 1964 Buffalo

KANE, PA.
REPUBLICAN
D. 3,100

OCT 31 1964 Buffalo

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS,
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

HOLLAND REVIEW

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARDINIA CENSOR
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BLISS NEWS
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ARCADE HERALD
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

DELEVAN PRESS
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BELMONT DISPATCH
Thursday, October 29, 1964

Van Cliburn on Berkshire Festival Broadcast

Noted pianist Van Cliburn appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, in a performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1. The Berkshire Festival program, which also includes works by Strauss and Mozart, will be broadcast over WBEN-FM Wednesday night, Nov. 4, at 8 o'clock, and on WBEN-Radio Saturday night, Nov. 7, at 8:30.

RADIO & TV

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,551

1964

BSO Concerts On College Radio

AMHERST — WFCR-Four College Radio begins another year of live Boston Symphony Orchestra broadcasts this week. The 1964-65 season starts Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. direct from Symphony Hall, Boton.

To inaugurate the symphony's 84th season, conductor Erich Leinsdorf has chosen three works: Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, the Pastoral; and Symphony No. 1 by Shostakovich.

Preceding each concert, G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will analyze the works to be performed.

WFCR broadcasts at 88.5 megacylces FM. A complete listing of programs broadcast over WFCR may be obtained through the office of the secretary, Amherst College.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,493

OCT 8 1964

Channel 2 Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert on Oct. 13

TV Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday, Oct. 13, at 8:30 p.m.

Broadcast simultaneously with WGBH-FM the concert marks the seventh consecutive year WGBH-TV has brought these full-length concerts to music lovers of New England.

Direct from Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf will open his program with the popular Academic Festival Overture by Johannes Brahms, followed by the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovich. After intermission Mr. Leinsdorf will return to the podium for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Opus 68, the "Pastoral."

For those who want to make a special note on their calendar, here is the schedule of succeeding Boston Symphony broadcasts: Nov. 10, Dec. 15, Jan. 12, Mar. 16, April 13.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,983

OCT 8 1964

Symphony on Two

Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday, Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

OCT 10 1964

Season's First Live Telecast

Boston Symphony To Give Concert On TV Channel 2

Channel 2 presents the first live Boston Symphony Orchestra teelcast of the 1964-65 season Tuesday at 8:30 PM.

Broadcast simultaneously with WGBH-FM the concert marks the seventh consecutive year WGBH-TV has brought these full-length concerts to music lovers of New England.

Direct from Symphony Hall Erich Leinsdorf will open his program with the popular Academic Festival Overture by Johannes Brahms, followed by the Symphony No. 1, Op. 10 by Shostakovich. After intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf will return to the podium for a performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, the "Pastoral."

Enthusiasm for these full-length live Boston symphony concerts grows with each passing year. Principle themes are brought out musically by the orchestra and visually by the television camera. Carefully integrated closeups of the orchestra and conductor make these telecasts an exciting musical experience, while WGBH-FM provides perfection in audio engineering.

For those who want to make a special note on their calendar here is the schedule of succeeding Boston Symphony broadcasts: Nov. 10, Dec. 15, Jan. 12, March 16, and April 13.

BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE
D. 14,300

OCT 17 1964

KBRG to Offer Symphony

One of the most popular radio series concert music is now heard weekly exclusively on KBRG (FM) in San Francisco. The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts start tonight in "live" delayed stereocasts and will be heard for two hours every Wednesday evening from 7 to 9 at 105.3 on the FM dial.

Under their new conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony has experienced a re-birth that in the opinion of many critics brings it to first place among U.S. orchestras.

This concert series on KBRG is the only symphony broadcast in FM stereo in Northern California.

The stereocasts are presently originating at the 1964 Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass. The new season from Boston's Symphony Hall begins Nov. 25. An impressive roster of guest soloists join Erich Leinsdorf, including Jorge Bolet, Van Cliburn and Isaac Stern. Program details will be published in the FM highlights sections.

Tonight's program includes:

Hindemith, Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Carl Maria von Weber; Schumann, Symphony No. 4 in D Minor Op. 120; R. Strauss, Parergon to the Sinfonia Domestica for Piano and Orchestra; Liszt, Fantasia on Themes from Beethoven's "The Ruins of Athens" for Piano and Orchestra—soloist, Jorge Bolet.

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 53,190

OCT 5 1964

General Tel to Back Philadelphia, Boston Orchestras on WQXR

NEW YORK, Sept. 29—General Telephone & Electronics Corp. has expanded its heavy sponsorship of symphonic music on WQXR, New York, to include weekly taped concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Boston concerts will be aired each Saturday, 8:07-10 p.m. (EDT), starting Oct. 3. The following day, General Telephone will begin sponsoring a pre-season festival of pops concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra from 1:07-3 p.m. (EDT). In the same time period, beginning Oct. 25, General Telephone will present the Philadelphia's regular 1964-'65 season.

The new contract is in addition to General Telephone's sponsorship of WQXR's "Symphony Hall," Monday-through-Friday, 8:07-9 p.m. (EDT). The company began sponsoring three weekly programs of "Symphony Hall" last January and expanded its schedule to the full week in April, when its Sylvania subsidiary picked up the two remaining shows.

■ Since General Telephone began its campaign on WQXR, it has been issuing "Program for Good Music," a monthly guide listing the works to be played on each "Symphony Hall" program. The guide, which goes to General Telephone employes and WQXR listeners, henceforth will include the Boston and Philadelphia concerts.

Kudner Agency placed the General Telephone schedule. #

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 53,190

OCT 5 1964

• North American Philips Co., New York, will be half-sponsor of the weekly two-hour taped broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on WCRB, Boston; WFMT (fm), Chicago; KFAC, Los Angeles; and a San Francisco station, yet to be selected. The 26-week series will be aired in nighttime, starting about Oct. 10. Sam Groden Inc. is the agency for Norelco tape recorders, which will be promoted on the show.

ARCADE, N. Y.
HOLLAND REVIEW
W. 1,500

OCT 29 1964

KANE, PA.
REPUBLICAN
D. 3,100

OCT 31 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

HOLLAND REVIEW

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SARDINIA CENSOR
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BLISS NEWS
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ARCADE HERALD
Thursday, October 29, 1964

047

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

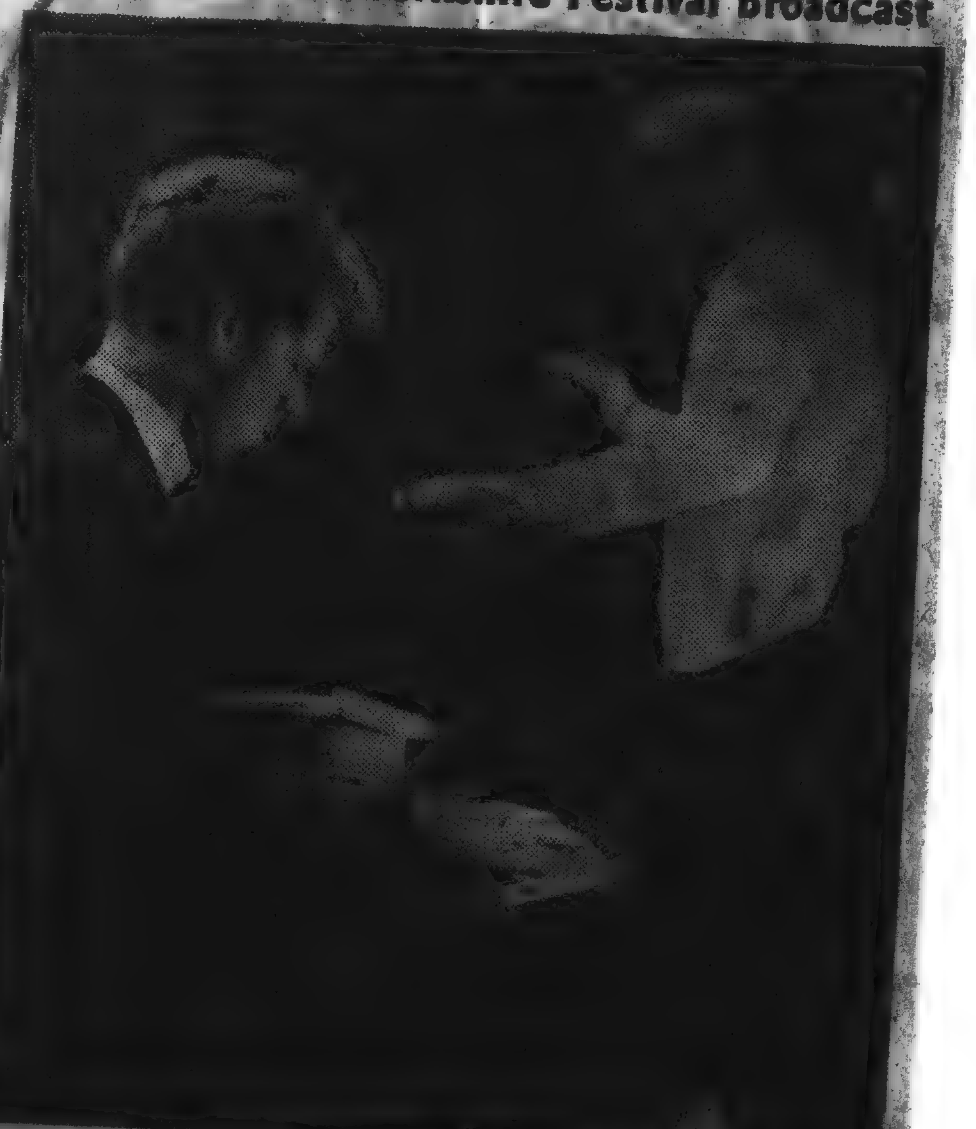
DELEVAN PRESS
Thursday, October 29, 1964

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BELMONT DISPATCH
Thursday, October 29, 1964

047

Van Cliburn on Berkshire Festival Broadcast

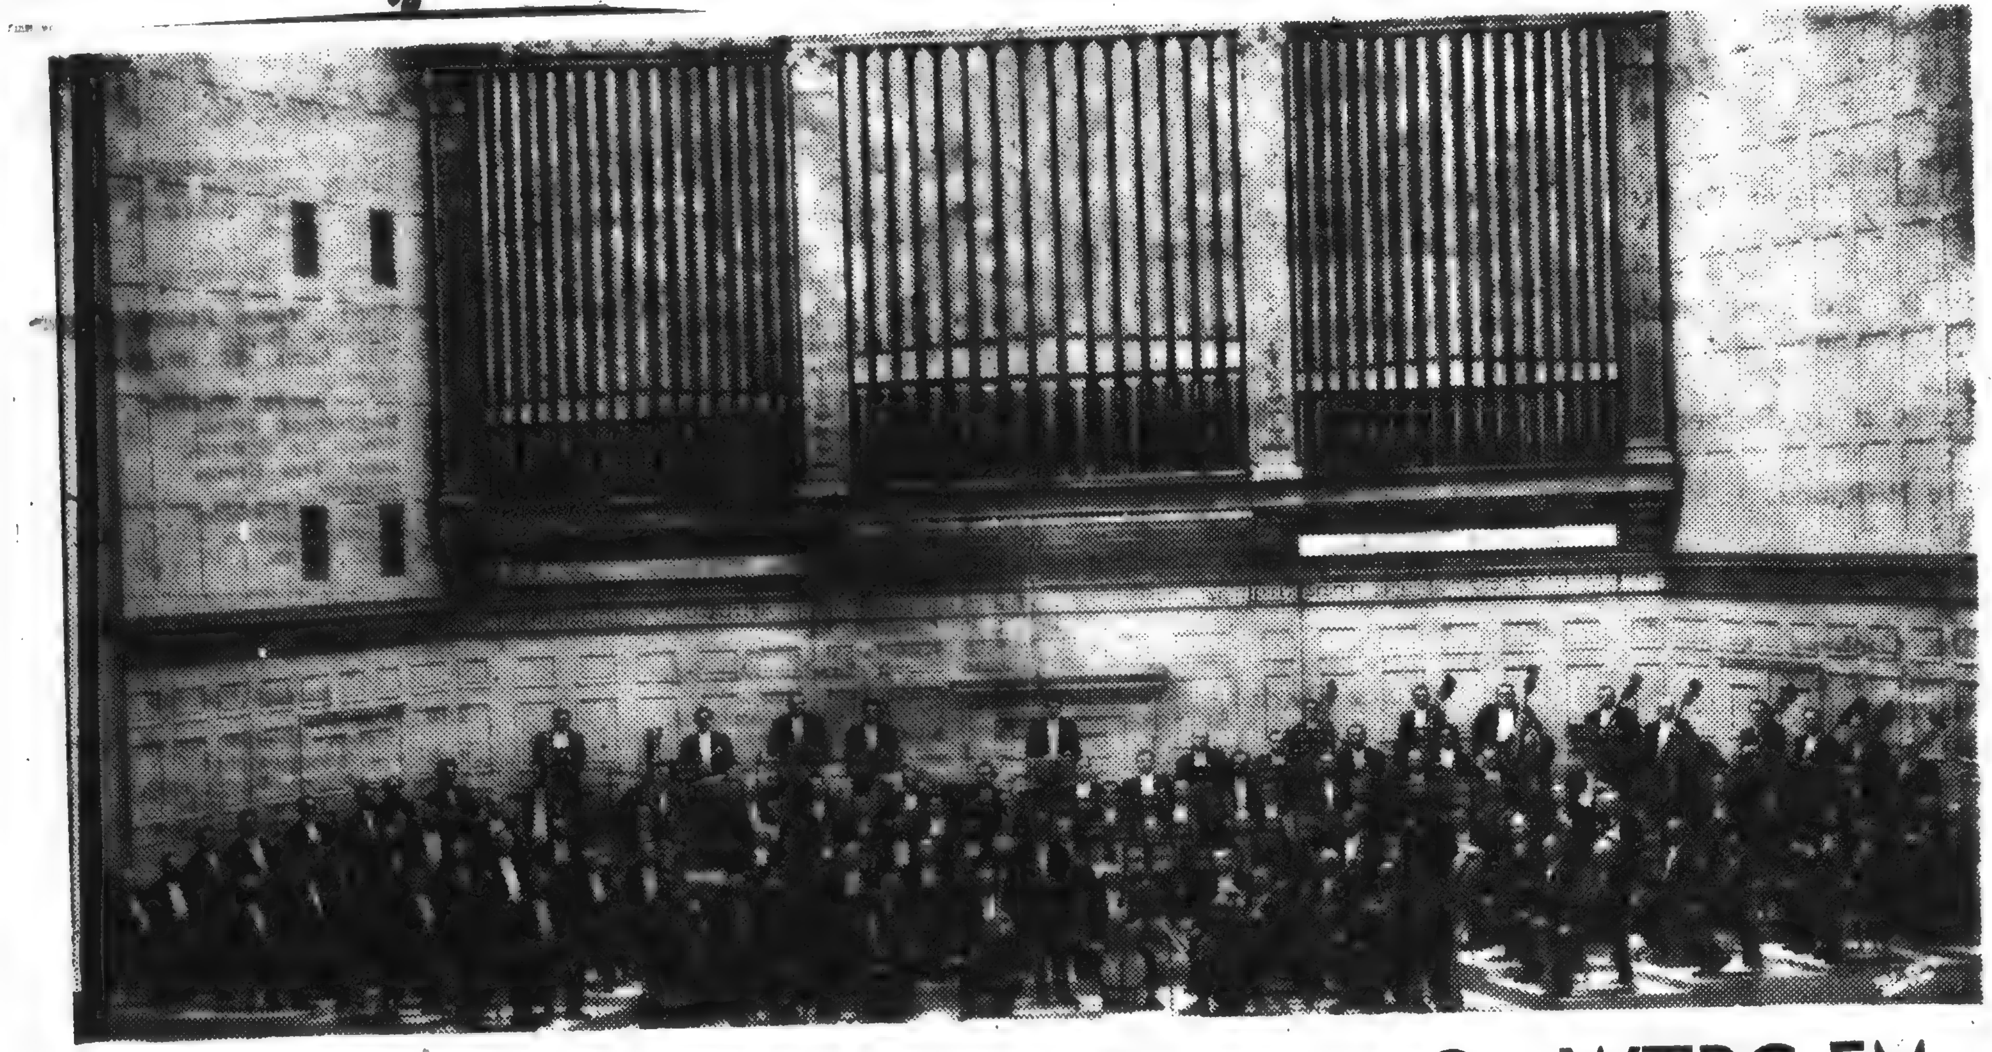


Noted pianist Van Cliburn appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, in a performance of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1. The Berkshire Festival program, which also includes works by Strauss and Mozart, will be broadcast over WBEN-FM Wednesday night, Nov. 4, at 8 o'clock, and in WBEN Radio Saturday night, Nov. 7, at 8:30

148

ELKHART, IND.
TRUTH
D. 23,500

OCT 3 1964



Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts On WTRC-FM

Weekly, full-length concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be offered by The Truth radio station WTRC-FM (100.7 mg. on FM dial), beginning at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 6. The concerts are recorded during actual performances before a live audience. While these concerts have regularly been heard in such major cities as New York and Chicago, this marks the first time they have been available in the Michiana area.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

NOV 1 0 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 52,021

NOV 1 0 1964

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 15,968

NOV 9 196

Concert Tonight On Channel 11

Channel 11 will broadcast a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight at 8:30 p.m. The concert will be broadcast live from Symphony Hall in Boston.

Under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra performs the Symphony No. 21 by Haydyn; Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee by Gunther Schulier; Symphony No. 3, opus 10 by Dvorak; and Wagner's Prelude to Die Meistersinger.

This is the second program of the 1964-65 season of concerts which is broadcast monthly by Channel 11.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

MAR 1 3 1965

Grant Johannesen is pianist with the Boston Symphony, WQXR, 8:07 P.M.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

NOV 5 1964

BSO on TV

Something special has been added to the Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

On Tuesday, Nov. 10 at 8 p.m., conductor Erich Leinsdorf appears in person for a half hour talk about the music to be preformed. With Symphony producer Jordan Mr. Whitelaw he speaks of the great and near great of the musical world, giving little-known facts about the men who are his personal friends and the program he is soon to conduct.

Then at 8:30 sharp Leinsdorf ascends the podium in Symphony Hall, to lead the Boston Symphony in Mozart's Symphony No. 38 in D, the "Prague", Polyphony by Berger and the Symphony No. 3 of Mendelssohn.

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 1 0 1964

LATE COMPOSER Irving Fine's Toccata Concertante which received its world premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949, will be performed in the orchestra's next Tuesday evening, Dec. 15, concert, which will be televised on Channel 2, WGBH-TV at 8:30 p.m. Mr. Fine had many associations with the orchestra as performer and as teacher at the Berkshire Music Center. He was head of the School of Fine and Applied Arts at Brandeis University at the time of his death two years ago. He had previously taught at Harvard.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
Circ. 15,968

JAN 7 1965

Boston Symphony On Channel 11

DURHAM—The actual paintings which inspired Gunter Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" will be shown as the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays this work on Channel 11 next Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

Broadcast live from Symphony Hall in Boston, the program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, also includes Schumann's Symphony No. 3 and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin as soloists.

This is one of the the full-length Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which are broadcast once a month by Channel 11, the only educational station to carry these concerts outside the Boston area.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 417,195

JAN 3 1965

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature Haydn's "Four Seasons" on its two-hour FM Stereo concert broadcast at 8:07 Saturday night on Station WQXR.

Joining the orchestra will be Helen Boatwright, soprano; Charles Bressler, tenor; Thomas Paul, baritone, and the Handel and Haydn Society Chorus.

* * *

The Greensboro Record
GREENSBORO, N. C.
D. 33,152

JAN 8 1965

WFMY Plans Boston Symphony Series

A new series of one-hour television concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will premiere Sunday, 1:30 p.m., on WFMY-TV.

Soloists appearing with the orchestra in the series will include cellist Samuel Mayes, violist Joseph de Pasquale, pianist Theodore Lettvin and violinist Joseph Silverstein.

Some of the major works to be programmed will be Strauss' "Don Quixote," Schumann's "Piano Concerto," Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 10," Dvorak's "Symphony No. 7," Bartok's "Violin Concerto No. 2," Mahler's "Symphony No. 1" and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7."

Since its founding in 1881, the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra has established an international reputation second to none. The Orchestra has the longest season of any orchestr in the world, playing 221 co certs in 50 weeks.

PETALUMA, CALIF.
ARGUS-COURIER
D. 5,371

FEB 2 0 1965

BOSTON SYMPHONY. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 4, and the Bartok Violin Concerto No. 2, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, tomorrow noon on Channel 7.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

JAN

BSO on TV

Channel 2 departs from tradition to show the actual paintings which inspired Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," one of the works to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday, Jan. 12 at 8:30 p.m.

Broadcast live from Symphony Hall on both Channel 2 and WGBH-FM, the program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, also includes Schumann's Symphony No. 3 and Brahms' Double Concerto for Violin and Cello with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin as soloists.

Before the concert, at 8 p.m., Schuller joins "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" to talk about the studies with the conductor and William Henry Camberlin, a Bostonian who rencently wrote Leinsdorf complaining that the Boston Symphony presents too many new compositions. An avowed classicist who admits he can't stand Schuller's music, Chamberlin is expected to ask the young composer some pointed questions.

NewEngland Newscli
Box 2078, Boston 6 • R

Free Pr
SOMERSWOR
Weekly C

JAN 7

Ch
Var

The act inspired
"Seven St
will be s
Symphony
this wor
Tuesday
p.m.

Broadc phony H program,
Leinsdor
Schumann
3 and Br certo fo with con
Silverste cellist J lists.

This length Bo chestra broadcas Channel
tional st concerts area.

NewEngland
Box 2078, Bos

E
BRIS
Weekly

JAN

Boston Sy
Ja

The actual spired Gunth Studies on T will be sho
Symphony O
work on Ch
January 12,

Broadcast
Hall in Bo conducted b also includes phony No. 3
Concerto fo with concert verstein a
Jules Eskin

This is o
Boston Sy concerts w once a mon only educat these conce
area.

Herald
D. 282,005 S

JAN 2 4

149

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press
SOMERSWORTH, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 2,856

Channel 11 Reachs Rich Variety Of Programs

The actual paintings which inspired Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies of Paul Klee" will be shown as the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays this work on Channel 11 Tuesday January 12 at 8:30 p.m.

Broadcast live from Symphony Hall in Boston, the program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, also includes Schumann's Symphony No. 3 and Brahm's Double Concerto for violin and cello with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin as soloists.

This is one of the full-length Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which are broadcast once a month by Channel 11, the only educational station to carry these concerts outside the Boston area.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise
BRISTOL, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 1,104

Boston Symphony Concert January 12

The actual paintings which inspired Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" will be shown as the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays this work on Channel 11 Tuesday, January 12, at 8:30 p. m.

Broadcast live from Symphony Hall in Boston, the program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, also includes Schumann's Symphony No. 3 and Brahm's Double Concerto for Violin and Cello with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin as soloists.

This is one of the full-length Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which are broadcast once a month by Chanel 11, the only educational station to carry these concerts outside the Boston area.

Herald New York Tribune
D. 282,005 SUN. 363,384

JAN 2 4 1965

Erich Leinsdorf conducts Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" on WTFM's Sunday night stereocast at 9:05.

Columbus Sunday Dispatch
COLUMBUS, OHIO
SUN. 293,416

FEB 2 8 1965

SUNDAY CONCERT STAR

Helen Vanni will be the featured soprano when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, performs the music to Igor Stravinsky's "Pulcinella" in a broadcast to be heard at 9 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 28, on WRFD-FM.

Chattanooga Daily Times
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. 52,684 SUN. 84,383

FEB 1 4 1965

American National to Air Boston Symphony on Radio

The American National Bank and Trust Co. will bring weekly concerts by The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, to Chattanooga music lovers starting Feb. 18. These weekly concerts will be broadcast each Thursday evening at 8 p.m. over WLOM-FM radio.

Time magazine has said that to be music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to occupy "the world's most prestigious musical throne," while Atlantic Monthly says that it is "the most celestial of all conductorial posts." obtainable in Europe for its conductors and personnel.

ERICH LEINSDORF

The orchestra, under such leaders as Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, and Karl Muck, became as illustrious as any in the world.

Leinsdorf, the Boston Symphony's eleventh conductor, went to the Boston podium with a brilliant record in opera and as guest conductor of the major orchestras of the world. Before coming to this country, the Vienna-trained Leinsdorf Regardlesss of labels, Erich Leinsdorf joined the galaxy of Koussevitzky, Munch, Muck and Monteux when he stepped to the Boston Symphony Hall podium on Sept. 17, 1962.

Last season The Boston Symphony Orchestra played more than 250 concerts before three quarters of a million people and traveled over 8,500 miles on tour, as far as San Diego and Seattle. Its performances were telecast in some 20 major American cities and broadcast on radio in some 60 cities.

The orchestra spent approximately $2,700,000 and earned about 90 per cent of that in ticket sales and record royalties. Since 1950 the Boston Symphony has made three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 and 1956—including the first concerts in Russia by a Western orchestra—and to the Far East in 1960.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came into existence through the endeavors of an enterprising Boston banker, Henry Lee Higginson, who had a deep love of music. In 1881 he founded the orchestra and developed it through the years, engaging the best musicians worked with two of the world's outstanding conductors, Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. In 1963 Mr. Leinsdorf received Musical America's award as Musician of the Year, based on a poll of the nation's critics and editors.

The "American National Bank and Trust Co. Symphony Hall," featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will offer works by such outstanding composers as Haydn, Dvorak, Shostakovitch, Mozart, Lewis, Brahms, Rossini, Stravinsky, Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Prokofiev, Beethoven, Bach, Berg, Kodaly, Berlioz, Debussy, Roussel and Ravel. Among some of the outstanding artists to appear will be Leonid Kogan, Isaac Stern, Joseph Silverstein, Alfred Krips and Phyllis Curtin.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,240

MAR 6 1965

Mt. Greylock TV Station Now Lists Concerts

WAMC-FM (90.3 mc.), the Mt. Greylock radio station of Albany Medical College, is presenting concerts from the 1964 Berkshire Music Center Festival of Contemporary Music each Monday at 8.30 p.m. 047 Held annually at Tanglewood, the Contemporary Festival is presented in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. Ten outstanding young American composers were each commissioned to write one work for the Festival, to be performed by the 13 instrumentalists who came to Tanglewood under fellowships from the Fromm Foundation.

The concerts were recorded last summer at the Theater-Concert Hall on the Tanglewood grounds at Lenox.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

MAR 1 1 1965

BSO on TV

The outstanding American pianist Grant Johannesen will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday, March 16 at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

Preceding the concert, at which Johannesen will play Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, the youthful artist joins "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" to talk about his career and the concerto he will perform. Also appearing with conductor Leinsdorf on this half hour Channel 2 program (8-8:30 p.m.) will be Boston Museum of Fine Arts Director Perry T. Rathbone.

Then at 8:30 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf steps on stage at Symphony Hall to conduct "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, Symphony No. 8 of Walter Piston and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2.

Chicago's AMERICAN
Always on Top of the News
D. 438,422 S. 540,180

MAR 1 1965

State Composers Get Airing in Concert Series

Premiere performances of works by three Illinois composers [Randolph Coleman of Evanston, John MacIvor Perkins of Chicago, and Robert Newell of Urbana] will be heard in a series of concerts from the Festival of Contemporary American Music at Tanglewood Friday evenings at 8 on Chicago's fine arts station, WFMT. The programs, recorded this summer, begin March 5 and will be heard thruout the month.

Sponsored by the Berkshire Music center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation, the festival is an ambitious and concentrated project to encourage young American composers. The 5-day festival offered composers, performers, and audience a sample of the directions in which contemporary American music is heading.

APITAL [illegible] BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BELMONT DISPATCH
Thursday, March 4, 1965

On Radio, FM Concert

ISAAC STERN will be soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D major on the Boston Symphony broadcast over WBEN-FM Wednesday evening, March 10, at 8 o'clock and repeated on WBEN-Radio Saturday night, March 13, at 8:30. Conductor Erich Leinsdorf also leads the Orchestra in works by Tchaikovsky and Prokofiev.

NE

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAR 2 5 1965

BSO live on FM

Friday

WGBH-FM will broadcast live the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Friday at 2 o'clock and Saturday at approximately 8:28.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a program which includes the Overture to Weber's "Oberon"; Schoenberg's Violin Concerto with Joseph Silverstein as soloist; Strauss's "Awakening Scene" from "The Egyptian Helen"; Dance of the Seven Veils, Interlude, and final scene from "Salome." Leontyne Price is soloist in the Strauss works.

WCRB-AM-FM will broadcast live and in stereo the Saturday evening concert.

150

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

MAR 13 1965

Noted Pianist Will Be Soloist

The outstanding American pianist Grant Johannesen will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday, at 8:30 PM on Channel 2.

A native of Salt Lake City who began studying piano at the age of five, Johannesen so impressed Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf when he appeared with the orchestra last Spring, that the conductor invited him to return for a second performance.

Preceding the concert, at which Johannesen will play Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, the youthful artist joins "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" to talk about his career and the concerto he will perform. Also appearing with conductor Leinsdorf on this half hour Channel 2 program (8-8:30 PM) will be Boston Museum of Fine Arts Director Perry T. Rathbone, who will compare the problems he has in persuading the public to accept contemporary art with the conductor's similar efforts to encourage interest in modern music.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 132,811

MAY 12 1965

Radio Highlights

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT: Erich Leinsdorf conducts Mozart's "Divertimento" in B flat, Brahms "Alto Bhapsody" and Prokofiev. 8:00 p.m. WONO FM.

AKRON, N. Y.
HERALD
W. 1,200

MAY 6 1965

ALDEN, N. Y.
ADVERTISER
W. 2,300

MAY 6 1965

Soloist With Symphony

SHIRLEY VARRETT will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and two choruses in the broadcast performance of Brahms' Rhapsody for Contralto, Male Chorus and Orchestra, plus Prokofiev's cantata "Alexander Nevsky," Saturday night, May 8, at 8:30 over WBEN-Radio. The same concert, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will be re-broadcast over WBEN-FM Wednesday night, May 12, at 8:15.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,045

APR 8 1965

Channel 2 Highlights

Watertown's ESI

An intuitive approach to science that appeals to the senses and sparks the imagination is demonstrated by "Experimenters in the Schoolroom," Thursday, Apr. 8 at 9:30 p.m. on Channel 2's "Science Reporter" (repeat Sunday, Apr. 11, 7 p.m.).

At Educational Services, Inc. of Watertown, M.I.T. Science Reporter John Fitch talks with Benjamin Nichols who heads E.S.I.'s elementary Science Study program. A professor of electrical engineering at Cornell University, Nichols tells how his program is encouraging youngsters to examine, investigate and manipulate things in the world around them.

The objective, Nichols explains, is to awaken curiosity and desire for understanding, irrespective of age, skill or background.

It all began back in the '50's, when university scholars and research scientists became alarmed at the lack of science preparation by entering college freshmen, Fitch is told. When it became obvious improvement was needed in elementary, as well as high school science teaching, the National Science Foundation offered to help support the Elementary Science Study at Educational Services, Inc.

Dollar Diplomacy

A 26-year old American is trying to infuse some economic life into prostrate Vietnam.

He is Larry Laverentz, and he works for the Agency for International Development (AID) in Phan Rang, just 200 miles from Saigon.

How he is helping the Vietnamese to help themselves is told in the second of Channel 2's "Dollar Diplomacy" series, Monday, Apr. 12 at 7:30 pm (repeat Sunday, Apr. 18, 5 pm).

Larry, who speaks Vietnamese fluently, tells how he persuaded the people to build community pig stys which cost a farmer only $60 and how inexpensive pumps and cement well rings provide much needed irrigation, not to mention sanitary drinking water. U. S. aid, he explains, supplies the materials, and the Vietnamese do the work.

As Laverentz sees it, "the most important part an American can play in South Vietnam is to stay in the background, giving full support at all times to the province chief." And he adds: "If we would have started 10 years ago, we would not have people on the fence today."

Symphony Program

Famed composers Aaron Copland and Walter Piston join "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" immediately preceding the final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season, Tuesday, Apr. 13 on Channel 2.

At 8 pm Copland and Piston—two of the most highly respected composers of our time—meet Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf to talk about the problems of getting modern music performed in today's concert halls.

Then, at 8:30 pm on both Channel 2 and WGBH-FM, Leinsdorf steps on stage at Symphony Hall to conduct a program of music by two other 20th century composers: Igor Stravinsky and Sergei Prokofiev.

The concert begins with Stravinsky's "Agon", followed by the same composer's Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony's concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

The program will conclude with a performance of Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

APR 8 1965

BSO on TV

Famed composers Aaron Copland and Walter Piston join "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" immediately preceding the final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season, Tuesday, April 13 on Channel 2.

The concert begins at 8:30 p.m. with Stravinsky's "Agon," followed by the same composer's Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony's concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

Program concludes with a performance of Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 132,811

APR 14 1965

On the BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERT at 8 p.m. over WONO-FM, Erich Leinsdorf will lead the choir and orchestra in the "Mass in E Flat" by Franz Schubert. Appearing as tenor soloist is Walter Garringer who has sung three times with the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra. Soprano soloist will be Saramae Endich, who also appeared with the Syracuse Symphony.

At 10 p.m., WONO-FM will present Rosenmuller's "In Te, Domine" sung by Helen Boatwright of Fayetteville.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

APR 10 1965

Symphony Show Cites Composers

Famed composers Aaron Copland and Walter Piston join "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" immediately preceding the final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season, Tuesday on Channel 2.

At 8 PM Copland and Piston, two of the most highly respected composers of our time, meet Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf to talk about the problems of getting modern music performed in today's concert halls.

Then, at 8:30 PM on both Channel 2 and WGBH-FM, Leinsdorf steps on stage at Symphony Hall to conduct a program of music by two other 20th century composers, Igor Stravinsky and Sergei Prokofiev.

The concert begins with Stravinsky's Agon, followed by the same composer's Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony's concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

The program will conclude with a performance of Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

This final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season on Channel 2 is produced by Symphony Producer Jordan Whitelaw and directed by William Cosel.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,240

APR 10 1965

Two Composers, Copland, Piston On Channel 2

Famed composers Aaron Copland and Walter Piston join "Erich Leinsdorf Backstage" immediately preceding the final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season, Tuesday on Channel 2.

At 8 p.m. Copland and Piston — two of the most highly respected composers of our time — meet Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf to talk about the problems of getting modern music performed in today's concert halls.

Then, at 8.30 p.m. on both Channel 2 and WGBH-FM, Leinsdorf steps on stage at Symphony Hall to conduct a program of music by two other 20th century composers: Igor Stravinsky and Sergei Prokofiev.

The concert begins with Stravinsky's "Agon," followed by the same composer's Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony's concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist.

The program will conclude with a performance of Symphony No. 6 by Prokofiev.

This final live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season on Channel 2 is produced by Symphony Producer Jordan Whitelaw and directed by William Cosel.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

OCT 18 1964

BOSTON'S FAMED SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, shown above at the start of a concert, participated [illegible] ing broadcast pointed to the brilliant future since realized by frequency modulation.

YOUTH CONCERTS.

151

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 465,653

SEP 13 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

Concerts For Youth Begin Oct. 31

The Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, will be launched on their sixth season by conductor and founder Harry Ellis Dickson on Saturday morning, Oct. 31 at 11 a.m.

Following the example of concerts for adults, seats are reserved, and on a subscription basis—$4 for three concerts. Three programs are played to form a First Series, and each is repeated the following Saturday to form a Second Series. Subscribers represent groups from Grade 5 through junior high and high school, as well as family groups,

With the reopening of schools, subscription renewals are being received, addressed to: Ticket Committee Chairman, Mrs. Manuel Kurland, Youth Concerts, of Symphony Hall, Inc., 251 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass., 02115. The First Series is near to being fully subscribed. The concert dates follow.

First Series: Oct. 31, Dec. 12, March 6.

Second Series: Nov. 7, Dec. 19, March 13.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

[illegible] 1964

Youth concerts begin Oct. 31

The sixth season of Youth Concerts, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, will open at Symphony Hall Saturday morning, Oct. 31, at 11 a.m. There will be two series as in past years, the second being a repetition of the first. They will take place: First series; Oct. 31, Dec. 12, March 6. Second series; Nov. 7, Dec. 19, March 13. Instrumentalists for the concerts will be members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the programs will include remarks on the music, illustrated by themes by individual performers. Children in grades five through junior and senior high school attend the series.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,791

SEP 24 1964

Hub Symphony Concert Dates Are Announced

A limited number of tickets remains for the 1964-65 series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston, it was announced this week by Mrs. Walter Bain of 48 Highland terrace, Dedham.

The concerts are by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will be held Saturday mornings, Oct. 31, Dec. 12 and March 6 from 11 to 12.

These concerts have gained in popularity each year and present an opportunity for young people to become acquainted with the Boston Symphony at an early age. Bus transportation will be provided for Dedham young people.

For further information please contact Mrs. Bain at 326-3753.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Advocate
SHARON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,800

SEP 24 1964

Last Call Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall 1964 - 1965 Season

There are several seats available with our Sharon group for the series of three youth concerts with 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The dates are Saturday, Oct. 31, Dec. 12 and March 6th.

Transportation will be available - leaving Sharon at 9:30 and returning approximately at 1:00.

Only students now in the fifth grade through high school are eligible to attend. This is another P.T.A. sponsored project.

Mrs. Irving Getz will make reservations for you. Hurry so you won't be left out.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,469

SEP 24 1964

Concerts For Youth To Begin 6th Year

The popular Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, will soon be launched on their sixth season. Wellesley youngsters who have subscribed to the 1964-1965 season will soon receive their tickets in the mail, and will attend the concerts at Symphony Hall on three Saturday mornings at 11, November 7, December 19 and March 13.

Newcomers to the area will be happy to learn that there is a limited number of series tickets still available. Information or application blanks may be found at the Wellesley schools or by calling Mrs. Arthur Haussermann, 22 Allen Rd.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun. Circ. 488,105

SEP 27 1964

Old and New in Programs For Youth Concert Series

The program plots for the sixth season of his Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall have now been worked out by conductor Harry Ellis Dickson.

Altogether he has made selections, new to the series, from composers of other times and of today. His plots for the new season's programs, each performed twice, are as follow: Music of Past and Present, Homage to Igor Stravinsky and A Festival Program, with high school singers and instrumentalists joining with the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Incidentally," Dickson comments, "it is my experience that most young people, in contrast with many adults, don't depend for their enjoyment on music they've heard before."

As with the regular symphony concerts, tickets are on a subscription basis for a first series of three concerts held on Saturdays from 11 a.m. to noon, and a second series, in which each of the first programs is repeated a week later. The dates are: Oct. 31 and Nov. 7, Dec. 12 and 19, Mar. 6 and 13. Orders should be addressed to: Ticket Committee Chairman Mrs. Manuel P. Kurland, Youth Concerts, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

The following works will be heard.

Oct. 31, Nov. 7—Rossini: Overture to "Signor Bruschino," Britten Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra; Gunther Schuller: Four Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Beethoven: Minuet and Finale from Symphony No. 1; Rimsky-Korsakov: Wedding March from "Coq d'Or."

Dec. 12, 19 — Homage to Stravinsky: Pulcinella Suite; Two Movements from the Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist; Suite from "Firebird"; Circus Polka.

Mar. 6, 13—Walton: "Johannesburg Festival Overture; Handel: Three movements from "Water Music" Suite; Strauss: "By the Beautiful Blue Danube" (The original version, for male voices. The singers will be members of Catholic Memorial High School Glee Club, trained by Berj Zamkochian); Tchaikovsky: Overture, "1812" (with members of Massachusetts All-State Orchestra joining musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WAYLAND, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,400

OCT 8 1964

Some tickets are still available for the first series of Youth Concerts which will be held at Symphony Hall, on Saturday mornings, Oct. 31, December 12, and Mar. 6. Students participating in this series will go in to Boston by bus from Weston. Tickets are also available for the second series, Saturday mornings on Nov. 7, Dec. 19, and Mar. 13. Students in this series must provide their own transportation. All concerts begin at 11 a.m. and last approximately one hour. Tickets for either of the three series are four dollars and no single tickets are available. Contact Mrs. Abbott Rand, 899-1449 for further information. The concerts feature the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

* * *

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
ox 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle Sun
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,238

[illegible] 1964

Youth Concerts At Boston's Symphony Hall

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, two series of three concerts for young people, featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, will open the 1964-65 season on Saturday, October 31, at 11 a.m. This concert will be repeated on Saturday, November 7, at the same time.

Mr. Dickson has chosen as the theme for this first concert, "Music of the Past and Present," and will present the Overture to "Signor Bruschino," by Rossini, Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," commentary by Robert Sherman, narrated by Janet Bookspan; Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major, by Beethoven; "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," by Schuller; and the Wedding March from "LeCoq d'Or," by Rimski-Korsakov.

In Cambridge young people who wish to subscribe may call the local chairman, Mrs. Edward A. Counihan III 26 Elmwood ave., Cambridge 38—KI-7-4028.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel
FRANKLIN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,370

OCT 15 1964

Youth Concert Season Slated

MEDFIELD — Mrs. Leon H. Ballou of Winter street announces the 1964-65 Youth Concert Season for young people in Medfield. Under the direction of the well known conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson, Medfield has always responded well to the three concerts, featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians as well as many outside local attractions. The season will open this year with the first concert on October 31 at 11 a.m. at Symphony Hall. All persons who wish to subscribe to attend these concerts may contact Mrs. Ballou.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966

OCT 6 1964

Concerts For Youth

LOWELL Mrs. Germain J. Bouchard of 150 Holyrood road, phone 5-5115, is Greater-Lowell chairman for Young Concerts at Symphony hall, Boston. There will be two series of three concerts for young people featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry E. Dickson during the 1964-65 season. One will take place Saturday, Oct. 31 at 11 o'clock, and repeated Saturday, Nov. 7 at the same time.

Mr. Dickinson has chosen as the theme for this first concert, "Music of the Past and Present," and will present the overture to "Signor Bruschino," by Rossini, Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," commentary by Robert Sherman, narrated by Janet Bookspan; menuetto and finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major, by Beethoven; "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," by Schuller and the Wedding March from "LeCog d'Or," by Riski-Korsakov.

The second concert, to take place on Saturday, Dec. 12, and Saturday, Dec. 19, will be "An Homage to Igor Stravinsky," — while the third and final concert, scheduled for Saturday, March 6, and Saturday, March 13, will be a festival program featuring a young soloist chosen by competition, and the Glee club of the Catholic Memorial high school.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle (e)
NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 3,953

OCT 29 1964

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 27,550

OCT 30 1964

Chronicle-Citizen
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,280

OCT 29 1964

Symphony Hall Youth Concerts Open Nov. 7

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, a series of three concerts for young people, featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, will open the 1964-65 season on Saturday, Nov. 7, at 11 a.m.

Mr. Dickson has chosen as the theme for this first concert, "Music of the Past and Present," and will present the Overture to "Signor Bruschino," by Rossini, Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," commentary by Robert Sherman, narrated by Janet Bookspan; Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major, by Beethoven; "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," by Schuller; and the Wedding March from "LeCoq d'Or," by Rimski-Korsakov.

Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline, ticket chairman, has announced that there is a good selection of seats for these series. Tickets are sold for the series only, at $4 for three concerts.

In Brookline young people who wish to subscribe may call the local chairman, Mrs. David M. Davis, HO 9-9185.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

LOWELL, MASS.
Sun
Eve. Circ. 44,966

OCT 8 1964

Concert fans among the young will be happy to hear they've an excuse to get into Boston this season . . . Two series of three concerts for young people, featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, will open the 1964-65 season at Symphony hall on Saturday morning, Oct. 31, at 11 o'clock, this particular concert to be repeated on Saturday, Nov. 7, at the same time. In the Greater-Lowell area, information on tickets may be obtained from Mrs. Germain J. Bouchard, local chairman, at 5-5115.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
WALPOLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,280

OCT 8 1964

YOUTH CONCERTS AT SYMPHONY HALL OPEN SEASON OCTOBER 31

Youth concerts at Symphony Hall, two series of three concerts for young people, featuring 60 Boston Symphony musicians under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, will open the 1964-65 season on Saturday, Oct. 31, at 11 a.m. This concert will be repeated on Saturday, Nov. 7, at he same time. Walpole students will attend the second series, Nov. 7, Dec. 19, March 13.

Mr. Dickson has chosen as the theme for this first concert, "Music of the Past and Present," and will present the Overture to "Signor Bruschino," by Rossini, Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's guide to the Orchestra," commentary by Robert Sherman, narrated by Janet Bookspan; Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major, by Beethoven; "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," by Schuller; and the Wedding March from "LeCoq d'Or," by Rimsky-Korsakov.

The second concert, to take place on Saturday, Dec. 12, and Saturday, Dec. 19, will be "An Homage to Igor Stravinsky,"—while the third and final concert, scheduled for Saturday, March 6, and Saturday, March 13, will be a Festival Program featuring a young soloist chosen by competition, and the Glee Club of the Catholic Memorial High School.

Young people from all over the State have enthusiastically supported these concerts since their inception six years ago. Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline, ticket chairman, has announced that there are a few seats remaining for Series 1 and a good selection of seats for Series Two. Tickets are sold for the series only.

In Walpole, young people who wish to subscribe may call the local chairman, Mrs. Harry Brenner, 762-5774.

---

wEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,729

OCT 29 1964

Music Vein May Change In Marlboro

MARLBORO — The first in a series of youth concerts will be presented for city students Saturday at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Harry Ellis Dickson, Assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, will conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program entitled "Music of the Past and Present."

Among the selections to be presented are the overture to, "Signor Bruschino" by Rossini; "Mennuetto and Finale from Symphony Number 1 in C Major" by Beethoven, and four, "Studies on Themes of Thomas Klee" by Schuller.

The Marlboro students, enrolled in Grades 6 through 12, will leave for Boston by chartered bus at 9:30 a.m. from behind City Hall, and return to Marlboro about 1:30 p.m.

Marlboro's participation in the Youth Concert Series is sponsored by the recreation and School Departments, and the Fine Arts Group.

Mrs. Albert F. Blackman and Mrs. Robert E. Collier will chaperone the group.

Two more concerts are planned for Dec. 12 and March 6, 1965. Information about tickets may be obtained by calling Mrs. James A. Peltekis, Marlboro chairman at 485-2137.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

OCT 28 1964

Local Students Will Attend Youth Concerts

MARLBORO — Students from many Massachusetts communities, including Marlboro, grades six through twelve, will be attending the first of a series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, on Saturday, October 31st.

Sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, Assistant Conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra using as a theme for this initial concert of the season, "Music of the Past and Present", will present the Overture to "Signor Bruschino" by Rossini, Benjamin Britten's "Guide to the Orchestra" commented by Robert Sherman, narrated by Janet Bookspan, Menuetto and Finale from Symphony No. 1 in C Major by Beethoven, four Studies on Themes of "Paul Klee" by Schuller, and the Wedding March from "Le Coq J'Or" by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Marlboro subscribers will depart from the parking area at the rear of City Hall via chartered bus at 9:30 a.m. They will be due back in Marlboro at about 1:30 p.m. A light lunch may be brought to be consumed on the bus. Attire in keeping with the occasion should be worn.

Any subscriber who finds himself unable to attend the concert is requested first, to notify his teacher who may then offer the individual ticket for resale within the class. If the ticket is not disposed of in this manner, it is recommended that Marlboro Chairman, Mrs. James A. Peltekis at 485-2137, be contacted for possible resale.

Marlboro's participation in the Youth Concert Series is made possible through the combined efforts of the Recreation Department, School Department, Fine Arts Group and Mrs. Peltekis, City Chairman. Chaperones for the concerts are drawn from members of the Fine Arts Group who represent the local schools in the distribution of applications and tickets. Mrs. Robert E. Collier and Mrs. Albert F. Blackman will chaperone the first concert.

Dates of the second and third concerts of the series are Dec. 12 and March 6, 1965.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun. Circ. 482,105

NOV 22 1964

School Musicians to Audition

School musicians are invited by Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, to try out for selection as soloist with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the festival program he will conduct in the Spring.

High school or junior high students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Ellis Dickson at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms are to be received not later than Saturday, Dec. 19.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 22 1964

YOUTH CONCERT SOLO AUDITIONS ANNOUNCED

School musicians are invited by Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program he will conduct in the spring.

High school or junior high students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditoned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment. Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Ellis Dickson at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, Dec. 19.

MEANWHILE, in Brookline, music students under 19 years of age residing in Brookline are invited to audition for the annual Harry Dubbs Memorial Award, set up by the Brookline Youth Concerts Committee in 1954 to honor their founder.

The winner will be soloist at Dickson's Youth Concert on Jan. 30, at Brookline High School.

A preliminary audition will take place on Tuesday, Dec. 1 at 2:30 in room 338 of the Brookline High School. The final audition will take place on Tuesday, Dec. 8 at 3:30, at the main branch of the Brookline Public Library on Washington street.

Instrumentalists will be limited to one movement of a concerto, singers to music arranged for orchestral accompaniment. For further information write to Brookline Youth Concerts Committee, c/o Mrs. Mark Cahn, music chairman, 73 Winthrop Rd., Brookline 46, Mass.; or call BE 2-9399.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
Standard-Times
Eve. Circ. 66,819

NOV 6 1964

Dartmouth Pupils To Hear Concerts

More than 80 Dartmouth pupils from Grades 5 through 8 will attend the first of a series of three concerts tomorrow at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Buses will leave from Elmer Poole School at 9:30 a. m., it has been announced by Mrs. Alvin H. Schwartz, president of the Dartmouth P-TA Council, which is sponsoring the youth concerts for the sixth season.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pop" Orchestra, will conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony in two of the concerts.

Mrs. Edward U. Howard and Mrs. Ralph Schmarsow are town chairmen for the series.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

The loud clapping and cries of welcome that the Boston Symphony's "music man," violinist Harry Dickson, received when he came on stage Saturday to conduct the first of this season's Youth Concerts must have warmed his heart. But the eager young faces, and the audience's quiet attentiveness throughout the hour-long program, really pleased him.

Congratulated by Sir John Barbirolli, the distinguished visiting conductor of the Boston Symphony this week after the excellent morning concert, founder-conductor Dickson said simply: "It's one of the most rewarding hours I know."

This is the sixth season of these unique concerts, which many parents enjoy with their children. The Neil Benedicts, for example, came down from Boxford with their daughter Vicky and their two sons, Scott and John.

There were children and parents who came all the way from Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, not to mention two score of laden buses representing 72 New England towns and cities.

NewEnglandNewscl
Box 2078, Boston 6 •

Jewish Adv
BOSTON,
Weekly Cir

NOV. 5

Janet Boo Appearing BSO Yout

Janet Sobel Bo
the narrator of ten's "The Yo

JANET BO

Guide to the Orc
Saturday mornin cert in the Bos
Orchestra Yo
Series. Conducto
Ellis Dickson. premiered a new famous Britten
by Robert Sherm concert last Satu
A native of W
Bookspan has pe theater, on radio in the New Eng has toured exten
New York Op singing leading roles.
In Boston she
the Harvard U
ter Group and th dren's Theater peared in sum musical comed opera. She narr premiere of a Mozart canta
Worcester seve
In addition
Symphony na
she will appe
Jenkins and Symphony on D
Siegfried Landa
for Westcheste
Feb. 14 narra
"The Man wh
Music".
Mrs. Bookspa
Martin Bookspa
Boston, well-kn tic and commen station of The N director of WC
The Bookspans home in New three children

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

Janet Bookspan Appearing with BSO Youth Series

Janet Sobel Bookspan will be the narrator of Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" on the Saturday morning, Nov. 7, concert in the Boston Symphony Orchestra Young People's Series. Conductor will be Harry Ellis Dickson. Mrs. Bookspan premiered a new text for the famous Britten work written by Robert Sherman at the first concert last Saturday morning.

JANET BOOKSPAN

A native of Worcester, Mrs. Bookspan has performed in the theater, on radio and television in the New England area. She has toured extensively with the New York Opera Company singing leading mezzo-soprano roles.

In Boston she was active with the Harvard University Theater Group and the Boston Children's Theater. She has appeared in summer stock and musical comedy, as well as in opera. She narrated the world premiere of a re-discovered Mozart cantata "Judith" in Worcester several years ago.

In addition to her Boston Symphony narrating chores, she will appear with Newell Jenkins and the Westchester Symphony on Dec. 12 and with Siegfried Landau and the Music for Westchester Orchestra on Feb. 14 narrating Don Gillis' "The Man who Invented Music".

Mrs. Bookspan is the wife of Martin Bookspan, formerly of Boston, well-known music critic and commentator and music station of The New York Times, director of WQXR, the radio. The Bookspans make their home in New York with their three children, Rashel, David and Deborah.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
READING, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,965

NOV 5 1964

To Take Children to Boston Symphony

On Saturday morning, Nov. 7, 54 Reading School children will go by bus from the Community Center to Boston Symphony Hall for the first of three youth concerts.

They will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Harry Ellis Dixon perform the following program:

Overture to "Signor Bruschino" (Rossini)

The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra (Britten)—Narrated by Janet Bookspan

Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major (Beethoven).

Studies on Themes of Paul Klee: a. Abstract Trio b. An Eerie Moment. c. The Twittering Machine d. Little Blue Devil (Schuller)

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" (Rimsky-Korsakov)

The bus will leave the Community Center at ten; however, the children should arrive at 9:45 so that they can be checked by the chaperones. Mrs. Stephen Dodd, Jr., Mrs. Francis J. Smith, and Mrs. George J. Murdock will be the chaperones for the first concert. The bus will return to the Community Center at 12:45.

Any parent whose child will be unable to attend may call Mrs. William Diamond, 944-2166, if she would like to sell the child's ticket. Mrs. Diamond is chairman, and Mrs. Richard Jones, treasurer, of the Reading arrangements. Unfortunately there is no more room on the bus, but there are still tickets available at Symphony Hall for the people who will provide their own transportation.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 1 1964

Symphonies Open Britten's 'Guide' Featured As Youth

By ELINOR HUGHES

Outside Symphony Hall the buses lined up to discharge their eager cargoes and patient adults did their best to restrain their frisky charges from climbing up on the subway entrances or just dashing out in the street in sheer outbursts of exhuberance.

It was a fine brisk morning, of course, but the reason for the excitement was the opening of the sixth season of Youth Concerts under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

Buzzing Grows

Inside the hall the buzzing grew in volume until promptly at 11 o'clock the lights went down and Mr. Dickson stepped up on the conductor's stand to welcome the audience and be welcomed himself. A show of hands indicated that about two-thirds of the auditors were repeaters, the others being newcomers.

The program led off with a jolly Rossini work, overture to "Il Signor Bruschino," which has a small musical joke, namely the violinists rap their bows on their music stands in reply to the conductor rapping his baton for attention.

The audience enjoyed this, but gave its most absorbed attention to Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra." Mr. Dickson gave a few footnotes on Mr. Britten and then asked the audience to welcome Sir John Barbirolli—the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony this week and next—before introducing Janet Bookspan who would read the new narration written by Robert Sherman of WXHR in New York.

For Adults, Too

The Britten work is interesting and helpful not only for children but also for adults who can do with a brush up of their understanding of the orchestra. Starting with the Purcell theme by full orchestra, Britten then breaks it down for the four main groups of instruments and eventually for solo instruments, returning at the close to the Purcell work. The narration is mildly humorous, but, which is more important, clear and concise.

A genuine novelty, prompted by the response last year to a composition by Webern, was Gunther Schuller's "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which the children enjoyed, but which caused some parents to shake their heads. "We must keep open minds," said Mr. Dickson, and then asked the young auditors to write him their opinions.

The four short pieces were lively and amusing, especially "The Twittering Machine" and "Little Blue Devil."

The program came to an end with a spirited performance of the Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," received with great enthusiasm.

There will be a second performance of this concert on Saturday morning, Nov. 7.

C.S.M
11/2/64

Arts—Entertainment

'Beautiful noise' wins youngsters

By Roland Nadeau

"Gee, Daddy, that man has an awful big head for no hair. Who is he, anyway?"

"Son, that's a bust of a great composer from Finland, Jan Sibelius. Seven big symphonies came out of that shiny head. Let's go see the instruments."

We sit. We are in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall. In a little while we will hear the first Youth Concert of the season directed by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Laning Humphrey proceeds to give us a capsule lecture on the variously pierced and strung shapes in the cabinets. He fondly pulls out a large, sinister looking instrument which he says is called a serpent. The reason it is all curved up is that the players could not reach the single holes if the tube were stretched out straight: their arms would not be long enough.

"Daddy, are we going to hear it sound?" Mr. Humphrey answers that one by saying that we will see all kinds of curled up instruments at the concert; the tuba will be the one that sounds closest to the voice of the serpent.

♪ ♪ ♪

It is almost time for the concert to begin. We find our places in the hall. Daddy picks up one very small paper airplane from his seat and then looks at today's program: "Music of the Past and Present."

Conductor-narrator Harry Ellis Dickson enters and asks us to listen and watch for the violinist's bows as they tap the beats on their music stands during the first selection, Rossini's Overture to "Il Signor Bruschino."

The music begins.

Eight thousand twiggling limbs suddenly are calm while hitched up ears, eyes, and minds take over. We wonder if Mr. Dickson wishes that his spring "Pops" audiences in the same hall were as quiet and attentive. The Rossini ends in a great swirl of sound and four thousand hands go into action to the obbligato of not a few appreciative whistles.

♪ ♪ ♪

Music of the present is next, Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," with a new explanatory text by Robert Sherman. Janet Bookspan is to tell us what to listen for. And what fun this one is!

When the violins sing their beautiful notes the whole section stands. The others do the same in their turn. Everyone sees as well as hears what is going on in the music.

Miss Bookspan tells us that the cello is about as tall as a 10-year-old boy, but that it speaks with a much lower voice. The first cellist stands his instrument beside her, and we see just how tall it really is.

As she speaks about the flute, she blows a musical bubble from a tonic bottle to give us an idea how the flute produces tones. The last variation ends with a great blustering crescendo.

"Gee, Daddy, what a beautiful noise!"

We next learn how to listen for an A-B-A form in Beethoven and then move on to some truly modern, experimental music — Gunther Schuller's "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Strange, though, Mr. Dickson does not fuss about the fact that the music is unfamiliar to the ears. He does not even tell us that we have to make a special effort to enjoy it. Apparently he feels that unprejudiced minds and ears make no distinction between new or old music, only between good and bad music. He does tell us, though, that the second study, "An Eerie Moment," is an ideal piece for this Hallowe'en day.

♪ ♪ ♪

The music happens. Still there is no noise from the audience except for a few giggles when the third study, "The Twittering Machine," tweets, gurgles, and pops throughout the orchestra. Every young body seems to love the music. Perhaps parents do also.

"Daddy, is it time for lunch now?"

"After we listen to a wonderful march, Johnny."

The orchestra romps through Rimsky-Korsakov's Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or."

"Daddy, what a big, beautiful noise that piece is!"

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 14,497

DEC 14 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

DEC [illegible] 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Circ. 26,711

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,259

DEC 17 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,550

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,950

DEC 8 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Westwood Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000

DEC 10 1964

Youth Concert Director Seeks Local Soloist

Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, has announced that school musicians are invited to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the spring.

High school or junior high school students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Ellis Dickson, at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, December 19.

153

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

[illegible] 5 1964

Janet Bookspan Appearing with BSO Youth Series

Janet Sobel Bookspan will be the narrator of Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" on the Saturday morning, Nov. 7, concert in the Boston Symphony Orchestra Young People's Series. Conductor will be Harry Ellis Dickson. Mrs. Bookspan premiered a new text for the famous Britten work written by Robert Sherman at the first concert last Saturday morning.

JANET BOOKSPAN

A native of Worcester, Mrs. Bookspan has performed in the theater, on radio and television in the New England area. She has toured extensively with the New York Opera Company singing leading mezzo-soprano roles.

In Boston she was active with the Harvard University Theater Group and the Boston Children's Theater. She has appeared in summer stock and musical comedy, as well as in opera. She narrated the world premiere of a re-discovered Mozart cantata "Judith" in Worcester several years ago.

In addition to her Boston Symphony narrating chores, she will appear with Newell Jenkins and the Westchester Symphony on Dec. 12 and with Siegfried Landau and the Music for Westchester Orchestra on Feb. 14 narrating Don Gillis' "The Man who Invented Music".

Mrs. Bookspan is the wife of Martin Bookspan, formerly of Boston, well-known music critic and commentator and music director of WQXR, the radio station of The New York Times. The Bookspans make their home in New York with their three children, Rashel, David and Deborah.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
READING, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,965

NOV 5 1964

To Take Children to Boston Symphony

On Saturday morning, Nov. 7, 54 Reading School children will go by bus from the Community Center to Boston Symphony Hall for the first of three youth concerts.

They will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Harry Ellis Dixon perform the following program:

Overture to "Signor Bruschino" (Rossini)

The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra (Britten)—Narrated by Janet Bookspan

Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1 in C major (Beethoven).

Studies on Themes of Paul Klee: a. Abstract Trio b. An Eerie Moment. c. The Twittering Machine d. Little Blue Devil (Schuller)

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" (Rimsky-Korsakov)

The bus will leave the Community Center at ten; however, the children should arrive at 9:45 so that they can be checked by the chaperones. Mrs. Stephen Dodd, Jr., Mrs. Francis J. Smith, and Mrs. George J. Murdock will be the chaperons for the first concert. The bus will return to the Community Center at 12:45.

Any parent whose child will be unable to attend may call Mrs. William Diamond, 944-2166, if she would like to sell the child's ticket. Mrs. Diamond is chairman, and Mrs. Richard Jones, treasurer, of the Reading arrangements. Unfortunately there is no more room on the bus, but there are still tickets available at Symphony Hall for the people who will provide their own transportation.

C.S.M
11/2/64

Arts—Entertainment

'Beautiful noise' wins youngsters

By Roland Nadeau

"Gee, Daddy, that man has an awful big head for no hair. Who is he, anyway?"

"Son, that's a bust of a great composer from Finland, Jan Sibelius. Seven big symphonies came out of that shiny head. Let's go see the instruments."

We sit. We are in the Ancient Instrument Room at Symphony Hall. In a little while we will hear the first Youth Concert of the season directed by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Laning Humphrey proceeds to give us a capsule lecture on the variously pierced and strung shapes in the cabinets. He fondly pulls out a large, sinister looking instrument which he says is called a serpent. The reason it is all curved up is that the players could not reach the single holes if the tube were stretched out straight: their arms would not be long enough.

"Daddy, are we going to hear it sound?" Mr. Humphrey answers that one by saying that we will see all kinds of curled up instruments at the concert; the tuba will be the one that sounds closest to the voice of the serpent.

* * *

It is almost time for the concert to begin. We find our places in the hall. Daddy picks up one very small paper airplane from his seat and then looks at today's program: "Music of the Past and Present."

Conductor-narrator Harry Ellis Dickson enters and asks us to listen and watch for the violinist's bows as they tap the beats on their music stands during the first selection, Rossini's Overture to "Il Signor Bruschino."

The music begins.

Eight thousand twiggling limbs suddenly are calm while hitched up ears, eyes, and minds take over. We wonder if Mr. Dickson wishes that his spring "Pops" audiences in the same hall were as quiet and attentive. The Rossini ends in a great swirl of sound and four thousand hands go into action to the obbligato of not a few appreciative whistles.

* * *

Music of the present is next, Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," with a new explanatory text by Robert Sherman. Janet Bookspan is to tell us what to listen for. And what fun this one is!

When the violins sing their beautiful notes the whole section stands. The others do the same in their turn. Everyone sees as well as hears what is going on in the music.

Miss Bookspan tells us that the cello is about as tall as a 10-year-old boy, but that it speaks with a much lower voice. The first cellist stands his instrument beside her, and we see just how tall it really is.

As she speaks about the flute, she blows a musical bubble from a tonic bottle to give us an idea how the flute produces tones. The last variation ends with a great blustering crescendo.

"Gee, Daddy, what a beautiful noise!"

We next learn how to listen for an A-B-A form in Beethoven and then move on to some truly modern, experimental music — Gunther Schuller's "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Strange, though, Mr. Dickson does not fuss about the fact that the music is unfamiliar to the ears. He does not even tell us that we have to make a special effort to enjoy it. Apparently he feels that unprejudiced minds and ears make no distinction between new or old music, only between good and bad music. He does tell us, though, that the second study, "An Eerie Moment," is an ideal piece for this Hallowe'en day.

* * *

The music happens. Still there is no noise from the audience except for a few giggles when the third study, "The Twittering Machine," tweets, gurgles, and pops throughout the orchestra. Every young body seems to love the music. Perhaps parents do also.

"Daddy, is it time for lunch now?"

"After we listen to a wonderful march, Johnny."

The orchestra romps through Rimsky-Korsakov's Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or."

"Daddy, what a big, beautiful noise that piece is!"

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

NOV 1 1964

Symphonies Open
Britten's 'Guide' Featured As Youth

By ELINOR HUGHES

Outside Symphony Hall the buses lined up to discharge their eager cargoes and patient adults did their best to restrain their frisky charges from climbing up on the subway entrances or just dashing out in the street in sheer outbursts of exuberance.

It was a fine brisk morning, of course, but the reason for the excitement was the opening of the sixth season of Youth Concerts under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

Buzzing Grows

Inside the hall the buzzing grew in volume until promptly at 11 o'clock the lights went down and Mr. Dickson stepped up on the conductor's stand to welcome the audience and be welcomed himself. A show of hands indicated that about two-thirds of the auditors were repeaters, the others being newcomers.

The program led off with a jolly Rossini work, overture to "Il Signor Bruschino," which has a small musical joke, namely the violinists rap their bows on their music stands in reply to the conductor rapping his baton for attention.

The audience enjoyed this, but gave its most absorbed attention to Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra." Mr. Dickson gave a few footnotes on Mr. Britten and then asked the audience to welcome Sir John Barbirolli—the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony this week and next—before introducing Janet Bookspan who would read the new narration written by Robert Sherman of WXHR in New York.

For Adults, Too

The Britten work is interesting and helpful not only for children but also for adults who can do with a brush up of their understanding of the orchestra. Starting with the Purcell theme by full orchestra, Britten then breaks it down for the four main groups of instruments and eventually for solo instruments, returning at the close to the Purcell work. The narration is mildly humorous, but, which is more important, clear and concise.

A genuine novelty, prompted by the response last year to a composition by Webern, was Gunther Schuller's "Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which the children enjoyed, but which caused some parents to shake their heads. "We must keep open minds," said Mr. Dickson, and then asked the young auditors to write him their opinions.

The four short pieces were lively and amusing, especially "The Twittering Machine" and "Little Blue Devil."

The program came to an end with a spirited performance of the Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," received with great enthusiasm.

There will be a second performance of this concert on Saturday morning, Nov. 7.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 14,497

DEC 14 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

DEC 9 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SALEM, Mass.
Circ. 26,711

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,259

DEC 17 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,550

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,950

DEC 8 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Westwood Tribune
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,000

DEC 10 1964

Youth Concert Director Seeks Local Soloist

Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, has announced that school musicians are invited to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the spring.

High school or junior high school students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Ellis Dickson, at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, December 19.

14
17

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 21 1964

A REAL THRILL—Boston Symphony violinist Alfred Krips greets Leslie McCarthy of Medford at the Youth Concert. (Photo by Frank Hill)

It's a pity that renowned composer Igor Stravinsky, in Boston briefly a fortnight ago, could not have combined his rare visit here with the Saturday Youth Concert of his works.

Harry Ellis Dickson, founder-conductor of these excellent concerts, called his program "Homage to Igor Stravinsky," but the real tribute to the composer came from the audience. Small restless feet were stilled; bobbing heads turned to the stage, and little eyes sparkled at the unusual sounds and rhythms from brass and percussion sections of the orchestra.

Cheers as well as applause—and many a wave of the hand in real greeting—went to Harry Dickson, and, as usual during the entire concert, first and second balcony rails were lined with elbows and chins and contemplative faces.

There were almost as many fathers as mothers buttoning small fry into coats after sharing with them the 65 minutes of "The Firebird," "Concerto in D for Violin," for which Joseph Silverstein was soloist, "Circus Polka" and "Pulcinella."

As usual the big pumpkin-color buses from many parts of the state lined up like so many magic coaches to transport youngsters from more than 70 towns and cities. Up from Duxbury with Mrs. Freeman Boynton and Roger Jarvis, town chairman, down from Lowell with Mrs. Germain Bouchard, from Manchester with Foster Ball and Wrentham with Mrs. Burton Deitch, from Gloucester with Eleanore Moore and Concord with Mrs. Joseph Master; Beverly's John Finnegan and Brockton's Edmund Myers. On and on they came.

Early arrivals, like the Brookline concert group, were able to learn the secrets of the Ancient Instruments Room with its "curator," Laning Humphrey, while the benign portraits of Symphony's great men smiled down from the walls. And in the halls, to enjoy the success they all contribute so much to, directors and committee like conductor Leinsdorf, Symphony Pres. Henry Cabot, able, friendly Mrs. Anthony Kutten and the genius of all those tickets, Mrs. Manuel Kurland, and so many other familiar Symphony faces — Jacksons, Paines, Hunnewells, Fessendens, Titcombs and Russells.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

DEC 12 196

LEAVING FOR SYMPHONY HALL, Boston, to attend a youth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra today are (from left) Neal Kaplan, Bruce Smith, Rebecca Fernandes, Mrs. John Cox Jr., Mrs. Ruth Leeming and Miss Gerry O'Sullivan. The Junior League of Fall River Inc. sponsored the trip. Herald News Photo

---

ewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,469

DEC 10 1964

High School Music Students Invited

Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, invites Wellesley school musicians to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the Spring. High School or Junior High Schol students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment. Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, December 19.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
WALPOLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,280

DEC 17 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY TRYOUTS FOR HS SOLOISTS

Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of youth concerts at Symphony Hall, has announced that school musicians are invited to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the Spring.

High school or Junior High school students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Ellis Dickson, at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, Dec. 19.

On Saturday morning, Dec. 19, Walpole students will attend the second Youth Concert at Symphony Hall. Chaperoned buses will leave from the High School at 9:30 a.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,681

DEC 9 1964

Bus Service Saturday For Youth Concert

The second Youth Concert at Symphony Hall will be held Saturday morning, December 12, at 11:00 a.m.

For those needing transportation, there will be a bus leaving from the Thurston Jr. High School at 9:45 a.m.

Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, has announced that school musicians are invited to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the Spring.

High School or Junior High School students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Harry Dickson, at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, December 19.

If there are any questions regarding Dec. 12 concert, contact Mrs. Harrison Siegle, DA 6-3305.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald
BELMONT, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,910

DEC 17 1964

SCHOOL MUSICIANS INVITED TO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA TRY-OUTS

Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, has announced that school musicians are invited to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra members on the Festival Program which he will conduct in the Spring.

High School or Junior High School students playing any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from Mr. Howard Nettleton, Director of Music, Belmont High School, or from Harry Ellis Dickson at Symphony Hall, Boston. Filled-in forms must be received not later than Saturday, December 19.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WAYLAND, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,400

DEC 10 1964

School Musicians Boston Symphony

School musicians have been invited by Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, to try out for selection as soloists with his Boston Symphony Orchestra for the festival program which he will conduct in the Spring.

High School and Junior High School students who play any orchestral solo instrument are eligible, provided that they are ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestra accompaniment.

Application forms with further details may be obtained from any school music supervisor, or from Mr. Dickson at Symphony Hall. Filled-in forms must be received no later than Saturday, Dec. 19.

Believing that "young listeners don't scare as easily as adults," Mr. Dickson will conduct an all-Stravinsky program for his Youth Concerts on Dec. 12 and 19 at Symphony Hall; both Saturday concerts will begin at 11 a.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

DEC 7 1964

Students May Audition For Youth Concerts

Student musicians who are ready to audition as soloists in connection with the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall may obtain application blanks from any school music supervisor in Greater Lynn or from Harry Ellis Dickson at Symphony Hall, Boston. Deadline for returning filled-in applications is Saturday, Dec. 19.

Any junior high or high school student who play any orchestra solo instrument may apply provided he or she is ready to be auditioned in a composition with orchestral accompaniment.

The soloists selected following auditions will perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Dickson at the Spring Festival Programs Saturday, March 6 and March 13.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2 4200

Chronicle
IPSWICH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,273

DEC

Want To Toot For Boston Symphony

High school or junior high school students who play an orchestral solo instrument are eligible to try out for selection as soloists with the Boston Symphony Youth Orchestra.

Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of the youth concerts in Boston has announced.

Application form must be submitted to Dickson at his Symphony Hall office by December 19.

Mrs. Charles Woolley, North Main street, is local town chairman for tickets and reservations for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. She hopes young Ipswich musicians will be interested in auditioning for a seat with the youth orchestra next spring. Close to 75 youngsters attend the regular concert series with their parents, said Mrs. Woolley

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

NOV 8 1964

'Pony Tail Philharmonic'

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Six times a year, Symphony's sedate black seats are bright with small coats and sweaters. Her long marble halls are scuffed with innumerable little feet and her statued and sacrosanct rafters shrill with eager voices.

Outside, the big hall is ringed with pumpkin-colored buses and more often than not, mounted police, who help with careful strong hands to carry in cheerful, young wheelchair arrivals.

Presiding over the happy children as they stream in, 2600 strong, members of the Youth Concerts Committee smile, hand out programs, count noses, find lost hats, gloves, or friends, and congratulate each other on another season well started.

The doors are closed, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Harry Dickson walks out to the conductor's platform, and the applause is pandemonium.

But the real tribute is yet to come.

The music begins, and like a magic magnet, draws eyes and faces to the big stage where the shining violins and bright brasses reflect the bright lights above.

Distinguished visitors—Harvard's president or visiting Symphony conductor Sir John Barbirolli — slip quietly into back seats to enjoy both the concert and the intent young faces.

And the music-minded committee members, who helped Harry Dickson found and maintain these wonderful mornings in Symphony Hall, they sit down too.

Symphony's Erich Leinsdorf and Henry Cabot, Dean John Burchard and James Thorndike, Mr. and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Mrs. Harry Dickson, John Burk and Benjamin Lacy, Mrs. Manuel Kurland and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, Mrs. William Morton, Laning Humphrey, Mrs. Albert Titcomb, Hart Fessenden, Mrs. James Hauck, Mrs. Edward Counihan 3d, Mrs. Julian Sobin, Stephen Paine, Mrs. James Russell, Irving Rabb, Comstock Clayton and Dr. Robert Choate, Howard Abell, Charles Yeremian, and so many, many more.

Sherman—See Page B-10

Photos by Frank H. Hill

Symphony scenes. Far left, the Boxford family of Mr. and Mrs. Neil Benedict arrive at season's first Youth Concert. Children are Scott, John, Vicky. Center photo, Sir John Barbirolli, guest conductor of this week's Boston Symphony, and Lady Barbirolli, came to hear Harry Ellis Dickson's performance. Above, concert patron Stephen McLelland of Boston and Dublin, N.H., congratulates Mr. Dickson on the opening of his sixth season of Youth Concerts.

156

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Norfolk County
Free Press
NORWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,810

MAY 6 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,884

MAY 6 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Messenger
NORWOOD, Mass.
Semi-Wkly. Circ. 6,778

MAY 6 1964

Plans Now Underway For Symphony Youth Concerts

Norwood students will once again have the opportunity to attend Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall for the 1964-65 season. This sell-out attraction for young people from all over the State since their beginning in 1959, will return again next Fall for the sixth season, it was announced recently by Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Executive Director.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops," will again conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two series of three programs. Series Number One will be presented Saturday, October 31; Saturday, December 12; and Saturday, March 6. All concerts will be held in Symphony Hall at 11:00 a. m., and will last approximately one hour.

Tickets for these concerts are sold for the series only, at $4.00 for three concerts. Children from Grade Five through Senior High School are eligible.

Notices have been distributed in all public schools and at St. Catherine's. It is urged that subscription blanks and checks be returned to the respective schools as soon as possible, as early reservations afford a better selection of seats.

For further information phone Norwood Chairman, Mrs. Max Hershman, 762-0990. Make checks payable to the Norwood Parent's Music Association.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,791

MAY 14 1964

Applications For Youth Fall Concerts Now

Mrs. Walter Bain, local chairman for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, announces that applications for the concerts will be distributed at the local schools next week, and returns should be made to teachers by May 20 for those students who desire tickets.

Tickets and bus schedules will be distributed in the fall. For further information contact Mrs. Bain at DA 6-3753.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops," will again conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two series of three programs. Series Number One to be presented Saturday, October 31—Saturday, December 12, and Saturday, March 6. The Second Series will take place on Saturday, November 7, Saturday. December 19, and Saturday, March 13. All concerts will be held in Symphony Hall at 11 a.m., and will last approximately one hour.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,683

MAY 28 1964

Youth Concert Series Announced For Fall

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, a sell-out attraction for young people from all over the state since their beginning in 1959, will return again next fall for the sixth season.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops," will again conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of concerts designed to stimulate young people's interest in good music by presenting both classical and contemporary compositions.

Young music lovers and Wellesley subscribers who have enjoyed these concerts in the past will be happy to learn that applications for the new season will be made available through the Wellesley Public Schools during the first week of June. The dates for the 1964-65 Series will be: Saturday, November 7; Saturday, December 19; Saturday, March. 13. Each concert will begin at 11:00 a.m. and last approximately one hour. Wellesley ticket chairman is Mrs. Arhur Haussermann, 22 Allen rd., Wellesley Hills.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

MAY 5 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
IPSWICH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,011

MAY 14 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 6 - 742-4200

MARLBORO, MASS.
Enterprise
Eve. Circ. 5,720

MAY 5 1964

Make Plans To Attend Youth Concert

MARLBORO—Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, a sell-out attraction for young people from all over the Commonwealth of Masschusetts since their inception in 1959, will be made available to the school children of Marlboro for the third season through the united efforts of the Recreation and School Departments as well as members of the Fine Arts Group, it was announced by Town Chairman, Mrs. James A. Peltekis.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orcestra and Assistant Conductor of the Boston "Pops", will again conduct sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the series of three programs to be announced later and presented on the Saturdays of October 31 and December 12, 1964 and March 6, 1965. All concerts will be held at Symphony Hall at 11:00 a.m. and will last approximately one hour.

Free transportation with buses departing from the parking area at the rear of City Hall at 9:30, as well as chaperones will be provided. Students entering sixth grade in the fall, through high Applications for tickets will be school, are eligible to attend. distributed through the schools within the next few days and are sold for the series only.

Fine Arts Group members representing the respective schools in the hadling of ticket applications and other details are:

Mrs. Albert F. Blackman, Marlboro High School; Mrs. Frank J. Curran, Junior High School; Mrs. Donald MacKenzie, Hosmer Street School; Mrs. Carlton C. Laviolette, Hildreth School; Mrs. James H. White Jr., Bigelow School; Mrs. Herbert W. Tuttle, Mitchell School; Mrs. John M. Shea, Immaculate Conception School; Mrs. Robert E. Collier, Saint Mary's School; Mrs. Michael A. DeSimone, Saint Anne's Academy.

Deadline for returning applications and cash to teachers has been set for Friday, May 22, 1964. No application will be accepted after that date. For further information call Mrs. Peltekis at 485-2137 or the Recreation Department at 485-7200.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Wayland Enterprise
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,890

MAY 28 1964

CONCERT DEADLINE

Miss Maria LaFontana, Town Chairman for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, announced today that Subscriptions for the 1964-65 Series of Concerts must be returned by June 5.

The Youth Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out each season since their inception in 1959. Three concerts are presented at Symphony Hall, with this year's concerts scheduled as follows: Saturday, November 7, December 9, and March 13.

The programs are planned to stimulate young people's interest in good music by presenting both classical and contemporary compositions played by the finest musicians.

Tickets may be obtained by contacting Miss Maria LaFontana at the Coolidge Junior High School, or Mrs. Bruce Buckingham, Chairman of the Natick Music Association.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
HUDSON, Mass.
Circ. 2,550

MAY 20 1964

Youth Concert Ticket Returns Must Be Made

Marlborough Chairman for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston, Mrs. James Peltekis, wishes to remind eligible students who are planning to subscribe to the 1964-1965 series of concerts that their ticket applications with money, must be returned to their respective teachers not later than Friday, May 22.

The Youth Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out each season since their inception in 1959. The series of three concerts scheduled for the Saturdays of October 31, December 12 and March 6 will be presented at Symphony Hall.

The programs are planned to stimulate young people's interest in good music by presenting both classical and contemporary compositions played by the finest musicians in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall.

But transportation provided by the Recreation Department. For further information call Mrs. Peltekis at 485-2137.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 283,819

MAR 29

Youth Concert

On Saturday, April 11, starting at 11 a.m., there will be a special Youth Concert at Symphony Hall conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson with his Boston Symphony musicians for special young people.

It will be given under the sponsorship of the Filene Foundation to bring the enjoyment of symphonic music to boys and girls unable to attend Mr. Dickson's regular series.

Five school musicians will be soloists on the program, and the concert will consist of the following works:

Mozart—Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro"

Mozart—First Movement from the Concerto for Clarinet and Orchestra
Soloist: John Romanovich III

Hanson—Serenade for Flute, Harp and Strings — Soloists: Paul Brittan, Flute; Ellen Rubin, Harp

Wagner—To the Evening Star from "Tannhauser"
Soloist: John D. Kelly

Mozart—Concerto No. 1 in D major for French Horn and Orchestra
Soloist: Robert Markow

Mendelssohn—Excerpts from the Incidental music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" — Narrator: Patricia Peardon and The Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School Girls' Chorus, Robert Wentworth, conductor and Anna Marie Ceressa and Ellen Cooke as first and second soprano soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,884

JUN 10 1964

—o—

YOUTH CONCERT: In keeping with the policy of offering Canton students the finest educational opportunities within the local area, arrangements are being made for a series of field concert trips. Notices have been sent home concerning the series of three youth concerts conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concerts are especially prepared for a youth audience and have been successfully presented to enthusiastic capacity audiences from Greater Boston for the past 5 years. Concerts take place on Saturdays at 11 a.m. in Symphony Hall, Boston. Dates for the three concerts in the series selected for Canton students are October 31, December 12 and March 6. So as to secure a good block of seats for the students, tickets must be ordered and payed for by June 16 as these concerts are usually sell outs by the end of June. Therefore the parents are urged to complete the forms brought home by the students and returned to the teacher in charge at the respective school on or before Friday, June 12. Bus transportation will be supplied if a sufficient number of students are interested in attending. Buses will leave promptly at 10 a.m. and will return at 1 p.m. Parents will serve as chaperons on the buses and at the concerts. Parents may attend these concerts at the same price as the students and should indicate their desire to attend by signing their name beside that of the student on the form supplied.

157

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,884

JUN 10 19

Reserve Now For Symphony Hall Youth Concerts

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, a sell-out attraction for young people from all over the State since their beginnings in 1959, will return next Fall for the sixth season. Mrs. Harrison B. Siegle of 1023 High street, is local chairman for arranging Westwood students' attendance at these concerts and announces the following dates for the series available to Westwood young people.

Series No. 1 is the series, and the concert dates are Saturday, Oct. 31; Saturday, Dec. 12; and Saturday, March 6. Harry Ellis Dickson, popular member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston Pops will again conduct the 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in these special Youth Concerts. For further details and information on prices and bus service, interested persons are requested to call Mrs. Siegle at DA 6-3305.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,681

This year's concert schedule of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra will include a March 21 performance in Symphony Hall with Dr. Howard Hanson as guest conductor, Dr. Artin Arslanian, associate professor of music at Boston University announced this week.

The 120-member Youth Symphony, made up of 13-to-18-year-old players from some 60 Boston area schools, is conducted by Dr. Arslanian and sponsored jointly by the schools' music directors, the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, and a community-wide board of directors. Norwood has a teenager in the senior orchestra, violist Linda Wheat, a 12th grader at Norwood Senior High School. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wheat of 47 Orleans road, Norwood.

During this eighth performing season, the G.B.Y.S.O. will be heard weekly, from December through June, on WXHR (96.9 FM) and WTAO (740 AM) at 2 p.m. on Sundays in half-hour broadcasts.

The G.B.Y.S.O. schedule includes concerts in Winchester, Brookline, Portland, Me.; Plymouth and Boston. The youngsters will also participate in Youth Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Harry Ellis Dickson on March 6 and 13, when half of the Boston Symphony men yield their chairs to the youngsters.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Circ. 5,720

JAN 6 1965

Two Area Youths In Symphony

Two youths from the area are members of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestras. In the "senior" orchestra is: John Wall, Cello, a 12th grader at Shrewsbury High School, son of Mr. and Mrs. Belton Wall, 18 School Street, Shrewsbury. In the "junior" orchestra is: Glen Hodge, French Horn, an 11th grader at Algonquin Regional High School, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harlow Hodge, 23 Whitney Street, Northboro.

Tickets to the March 21st Symphony Hall Concert are available from the Ticket Chairman, Mrs. Oscar Heimlich, 796 Massachusetts Avenue, Lexington, Mass. Telephone VO 2-3638.

The 120-member Youth Symphony, made up of 13-to-18 years-old players from some 60 Boston area schools, is conducted by Dr. Artin Arslanian and sponsored jointly by the schools' music directors, the University's School of Fine and Applied Arts, and a community-wide board of directors. Under the same sponsorship, the Greater Boston Junion Youth Symphony is made up of some 100 players aged 11 to 16.

During this eighth performing season, the G. B. Y. S. O. will be heard weekly, from December through June, on WXHR (96.9 FM) and WTAO (740 AM) at 2 p. m. on Sundays in half-hour broadcasts hosted by John Thornton and sponsored by the Boston Gas Company.

The G. B. Y. S. O. schedule includes a January 31 concert in Winchester, Mass.; February 14 in Brookline, Mass.; March 21 in Symphony Hall; March 28 in Portland, Maine; April 4 in Plymouth, Mass.; May 2 in Jordan Hall, Boston; and May 23 in the Concert Hall of Boston University. The youngsters will also participate in Youth Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Harry Ellis Dickson on March 6 and 13, when half of the Boston Symphony men yield their chairs to the youngsters.

The Junior Youth Symphony, conducted by Douglas Jackson of the Boston University music faculty, begins its second season on February 7 with a parents' concert at Boston University Concert Hall. It will give concerts in Lowell on February 13 and in Norwood on February 18, and will share the Symphony Hall program March 21 with the senior orchestra.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

APR 4 1965

Special Children's Concert

Special children will attend Concert Saturday morning from 11 to noon. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct members of the Boston Symphony.

This concert is sponsored by the Lincoln and Theresa Filene Foundation. For the last five seasons, the concerts have been presented as a memorial to the late Mrs. Filene, in keeping with her life-long activity in bringing fine music into the lives of less privileged people.

The program will open with a Suite from Handel's "Water Music." Excerpts from two concertos will follow.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WESTWOOD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,681

MAR 3 1965

Final Youth Concert Takes Place March 6

On Saturday, March 6, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, will present the third and last of the 1964-1965 Youth Concert Series at Symphony Hall, Boston.

The program for this concert will include the Johannesburg Festival Overture by Walton, Suite from "The Water Music", Handel's beloved favorite, Hale's Capriccio and Capon's Huapangos, both orchestrated and composed by students of the Theory Class at Newton High School; Strauss' ever popular "Blue Danube" waltz, and the dramatic 1812 Overture by Tchailkovsky.

A male chorus of members of the Catholic Memorial High School Glee Club will take the vocal parts in the Strauss Waltz and the 1812 Overture. Further, members of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra will play jointly with the Boston Symphony members in the exciting finale to what promises to be a magnificent program of special interest to many.

A bus will leave the Edmund W. Thurston Jr. High at 9:45 a.m. on Saturday for Westwood students wishing transportation. Anyone wishing further information should call Mrs. Harrison Siegle at 326-3305.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 11 1965

2000 Youngsters Enjoy Concert By Symphony

Two thousand youngsters were an appreciative invitation audience at yesterday's Youth Concert at Symphony Hall where Harry Ellis Dickson conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Buses brought the boys and girls from the Perkins School for the Blind, the Massachusetts Hospital School, the School for Crippled Children, orphanages and settlement houses.

The concert was sponsored by the Filene Foundation in memory of Mrs. Lincoln Filene's lifelong activity in bringing musical enjoyment to underprivileged young people.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 14,497

MAR 13 1965

Final Youth Concert of Boston Symphony Season

The final youth concert, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the ~~1964-65~~ season was performed today. Under the skillful baton of Harry Ellis Dickson, the following program was presented:

Johannesburg Festival overture by Walton, Suite from "The Water Music" by Handel. (The soloist for this work will be the winner of the recent school competition), Capriccio by Jeffrey Hale, Huapangos by Ross Capon (the students who composed and orchestrated these works are members of the Theory Classes at Newton High School, directed by Henry Lasker), Waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube" by Strauss (the vocal parts in this and the next composition will be taken by the Catholic Memorial High School Gleen Club — Berj Zamkochian, director,) Overture, 1812 by Tchaikovsky (this overture will be played jointly by the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra, Artin Arslanian, Director).

The representation at these concerts by the Framingham students has been heralded by the Symphony Hall Youth Concert Committee for not only the number of students attending (151) but in view of the decorum on the part of these young people at the concerts. In a bulletin issued to the other 79 Greater Boston communities represented at these concerts, Framingham was cited as an example of how effective results can be obtained through school cooperation, parental cultural interests, student awareness and conduct and by proper supervision by the adults who accompany the students.

Co-chairmen, Mrs. Frederick White and Mrs. Ernest E. Jardine are grateful to Albert G. Reilly, superintendent of schools and Joseph P. Murray, director of music, as well as to the chaperones for this season: Miss Marjory Prescott, Mrs. Gertrude Lawrence and the Mesdames Ralph Cavalieri, William Gay, Alexander Levin, Stephen Patruno and Quentin Sewell.

Students Commended

The parents of the following students are also to be commended for their cooperation in this endeavor: Judy Puliafico, Nancy Wilcox, Gail M. Crosby, Dianne Reed, Karen Beth Blatt, Mark Greenberg, Susan Patricia Eddy, George Motycka, David L. Zuckerman, Eileen Geoghegan, Joan Geoghegan, Sheila O'Rourke, Mary T. O'Rourke, Robert A. Peloquin, Debra Cransberg, Caren Friedberg, Sandra A. Gay, Mark Powers, Eric Pell, Nancy Miller, JoAnne Miller, Ronda Gerstein, Norma Ambutter, Catherine Rogers, Jeffrey Robertson, David Henderson, Patrice Kaslosky, Will Sherman, Donald Kenney, Hope Davis, Maurice Costin, Michael Costin, Sharlene Williams, Jeneth Antonucci, Billie Goldstein, Carol E. Burke, Claudia N. Crane, Lauren M. Kingsley, Eric Laskowitz, Ann Berssenbrugge, Edward Ryan, John Bootz, Richard Gilberg, Donald B. Gilbert, David Michelson, Betsy Lee Rosenwald, Judith Quint.

Deborah Pell, Richard Saunders, Steven D. Feinstein, Michael Tarlow, James P. Patruno, Ronnie Schneider, June Weisgerber, Elliott Baldwin, Rosemary Powers, Eugene Lukianov, Paul V. Ferrazzi, Paul Rosenbloom, Anne Cheney, Anne Robertson, Kenneth Koolkin, Betsy McLaughlin, George Stonecliffe, Donna M. Patterson, Sheldon Bishov, Harold Schloss, William E. Jaynes, Susan Goldstein, Gregory White, Reva Sue Levin, Debra J. Kondell, Victoria Kondell, Christine Ann Bernhard, M. Scott Brown, Penolope W. Stohn, Lisa Gerstein, Deborah Pullin, Richard H. Morrissey, John R. Horan, Fred P. Horan, Jane Frommer, Ellen Robertson, Barbara Worembrand, Linda Gray, Jancy Jane Heath, Jeri Grant Hodson, Leslie E. Holland, Bruce William Lyon, Ellen Bloom, Christopher Simmons.

Hillary Simmons, Jeffrey E. Jardine, Julia Bounton, Deborah Ann Chunko, Paul N. Chunko, Sara Gardner, Deborah Sheetz, Deborah Crossley, Gail Napolitano, Laura J. Tamagna, Lena McLaughlin, Susan Cavalieri, Ellen Berger, Linda Muto, Christopher Morrill, Kathy Flink, Lauri Mindick, Marci Mindick, Pamela Joan Rose, Linda Susan Rose, Ellen Joe Rose, Christina Bruen, Andrea Pierce, Carl B. Strekkle, Rebecca Bolton, Judy Bishov, Marya Louise Piasecki, Cynthia Northup, Christine Northup, Diane Rae Bellora, Susan Hatch, Terri Binder and Robert P. Perella.

Buses left the parking lot in the rear of the Lincoln Junior High School at 9:30 a.m. this morning.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times
WALPOLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,280

MAR 4 1965

FINAL YOUTH CONCERT AT SYMPHONY HALL

The final concerts in the series of youth concerts at Symphony Hall will take place on Saturday morning, March 13, at 11 o'clock.

This concert is of particular interest because members of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra will join the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the performance of the 1812 Overture by Tchaikowsky. Also, two compositions written by high school students will be performed.

Walpole students will travel to the concert on supervised buses which will leave the high school at 9:30.

For information about the concert, contact Mrs. Harry Brenner at 762-5774.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Suburban Free Press
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,039

MAY 20 1965

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

Applications for next year's series of concerts are being distributed to Dover students of grades 5 through 8. This series on Saturday mornings is directed by Harry Ellis Dickson of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and 60 members of the Symphony. Music selected to appeal to young people is featured at these concerts, to acquaint them with the great classical works as well as those of contemporary composers and to give them the benefit of hearing these works performed in Symphony Hall.

Tickets for the series of three concerts are $5. Hopefully enough students will take advantage of this opportunity to warrant a bus. The cost of the bus would be about $3 or less for the series, depending on the number attending. For further information call town chairman Mrs. John Gormley at 785-0214.

TIGHT BINDING

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

FEB 25 1965

Concerts Strike Fancy Of the Young

Harry Ellis Dickson at Work

Harry Ellis Dickson tells how he established one of the most successful series of concerts for young people in the United States. Played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the programs are sold out well in advance.

By Roland Nadeau

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON IS A VIOlinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This would be a full-time job for most violinists, but not for Mr. Dickson.

He is also the associate conductor of the Boston Pops. But this keeps him busy only during the Pops season.

He then became the regular speaker at the Pre-Symphony Luncheons, Boston's leading social event for music lovers. Yet he still had time on his hands.

So a few seasons ago Mr. Dickson established the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. They soon became a sold-out series. Now his time is happily filled.

When we recently had luncheon together, I asked him a few questions.

Q. Do you choose a special kind of music for children?

Dickson: Not exactly. One thing I am careful not to do is to play down to our young audiences. Of course they like "Tubby the Tuba," but they also like good music of all kinds. And they want the truth.

'Trying to Be Tactful'

Q. What do you mean when you say they want the truth?

[illegible] I was trying to be tactful when referring to the final moments of Till's musical life. After all, there were some very small people out there. I carefully told them that when Till is finally caught, he is escorted up those fatal last steps and then . . . just disappears!

After the concert I was waylaid in the [illegible] rumpled little boy, holding [illegible] complained, "Till didn't just disappear. He was hanged!"

Q. Do they have any special likes or dislikes?

Dickson: That's a funny thing. Unlike many adults, children accept or reject music on its own merits. It may be 20th-century music heavily peppered with dissonance. Or merely a harmless minuet by Mozart. If it pleases them, they accept it. You see, they haven't been told yet that contemporary music is supposed to be difficult. They listen without prejudice.

Q. Then you program contemporary music at your youth concerts?

Dickson: Yes, quite a lot. But some of my associates were frankly skeptical when I did an "Hommage to Igor Stravinsky" program last December. We opened with the "Pulcinella" Suite and then did two movements from the Violin Concerto. This isn't kindergarten music, you know.

'They Should Be Ready'

Q. And how did they take it?

Dickson: I suppose there was a bit more wiggling than usual at first. But then we played the "Firebird" Suite and closed with the "Circus" Polka. They loved it when I told them how the Ringling Bros elephants refused to dance smoothly to the music. I said that maybe elephants don't like modern music.

[illegible] graduate from our concerts to become regular subscribers to the Boston Symphony series, they should be ready for any fare that comes along — conventional or avant-garde.

Q. How do you hold their interest? Doesn't their attention wander?

Dickson: Well, I keep the concerts short. They never last longer than one [illegible] tions or individual movements from longer works. A psychologist friend of mine once gave me an effective rule of thumb about attention spans for children. The child's age, he said, is equal to the number of minutes that effective attention can be sustained. This means that an eight-year-old will listen well for eight minutes without a break. So brevity, while working with children, is one of the secrets of success.

Q. But using short selections isn't the whole answer, is it?

Dickson: No, it's much more imortant to make the concert as visual as possible. Children need to see with their ears. So I try to give them as much to watch for as to listen to.

Q. For instance?

Dickson: Well, when we did Benjamin Britten's "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," we used a new text by Robert Sherman, and occasionally we added a visual touch. When our narrator Janet Bookspan explained how a flute works, the first cellist handed her an empty pop bottle. She blew a musical bubble from it by way of illustration. And when the brasses played as a choir, they stood up. Thus the smallest music lover could see the instruments as well as hear them.

'I Ask Them to Count'

Q. Do you ever ask them questions?

Dickson: Often. And I get them to do [illegible] take off her white gloves so she could count on her fingers. Afterward she said, "Nine times." She was right.

But mostly I try to play music that is easily visualized. I called one of our programs "The Many Faces of Music." For the Sad Face of Music we did a Tchaikovsky Andante. For the Happy Face of Music we chose the Scherzo from the Brahms Symphony No. 4.

[illegible] Boston Symphony men for Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture. They sit elbow to elbow with our players and love it. Can you imagine what a thrill it would be for a young high school outfielder to play a ball game side by side with Willy Mays?

A couple of seasons back we did the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in this same way, also employing two high [illegible] experience was decisive in their choice of music as a career.

I know that these Youth Concerts — as well as concerts for young people the world over — are building a solid core of music lovers for the future. And who knows? Perhaps we may even discover tomorrow's Stravinsky, Rubinstein, or Stern!

YOUTH CONCERTS
AT SYMPHONY HALL, INC.
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON
1964-65 SEA
TWO SERIES
3 CONCERTS IN E
SATURDAY MORN
FIRST SE
OCTOBER 31 DECE
SECON
NOVEMBER 7
A SERIES
4.
FOR INFORMATION CALL

All Photos by Norman Matheny, Staff Photographer

'Mustn't Miss the Overture!'

TIGHT BINDING

... play ... our ... Of course they like 'Tubby the Tuba,' but they also like good music of all kinds. And they want the truth.

'Trying to Be Tactful'

Q. What do you mean when you say they want the truth?

... referring to the final moments of Till's musical life. After all, there were some very small people out there. I carefully told them that when Till is finally caught, he is escorted up those fatal last steps and then ... just disappears!

After the concert I was waylaid in the corridor by a rumpled little boy, holding a crumpled program. "Mr. Dickson," he

Dickson: I suppose there was a bit more wiggling than usual at first. But then we played the "Firebird" Suite and closed with the "Circus" Polka. They loved it when I told them how the Ringling Bros elephants refused to dance smoothly to the music. I said that maybe ... didn't like modern music.

... graduate from our concerts to become regular subscribers to the Boston Symphony series, they should be ready for any fare that comes along — conventional or avant-garde.

Q. How do you hold their interest? Doesn't their attention wander?

Dickson: Well, I keep the concerts short. They never last longer than one hour. Then, too, I choose many short sec-

... bottle. She blew a musical bubble from it by way of illustration. And when the brasses played as a choir, they stood up. Thus the smallest music lover could see the instruments as well as hear them.

'I Ask Them to Count'

Q. Do you ever ask them questions?

Dickson: Often. And I get them to do ...

... take off her white gloves so she could count on her fingers. Afterward she said, "Nine times." She was right.

But mostly I try to play music that is easily visualized. I called one of our programs "The Many Faces of Music." For the Sad Face of Music we did a Tchaikovsky Andante. For the Happy Face of Music we chose the Scherzo from the Brahms Symphony No. 4.

Q. And you ask them to write you letters, too, don't you?

Dickson: Yes. In our first concert this season we programed selections from "Studies on Themes by Paul Klee" by Gunther Schuller, a most modern composer. I told them about the Klee paintings that the music describes. And I asked them to send me letters telling me if they liked or disliked the music. The letters flooded in. The verdict was generally favorable.

Some of these letters are reproduced on this page.

Q. Do you often use young people as soloists?

Dickson: Yes, but not to show them off as prodigies. I try all kinds of combinations. For our March concert I'll involve hordes of young players. First there will be a soloist chosen by competition. Then we'll play two new compositions for orchestra—"Capriccio" and "Huapangos." These have been written and orchestrated by Henry Lasker's pupils at the Newton High School.

'This Experience Was Decisive'

Next we'll play a Strauss waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," as it was originally composed for male chorus. The Catholic Memorial High School Glee Club will join us in this one, singing in German.

Young players from the Greater Boston Youth Symphony will sit in with our Boston Symphony men for Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture. They sit elbow to elbow with our players and love it. 'Can you imagine what a thrill it would be for a young high school outfielder to play a ball game side by side with Willy Mays?

A couple of seasons back we did the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in this same way, also employing two high school orchestras. ... young instrumentalists told me that this single experience was decisive in their choice of music as a career.

I know that these Youth Concerts — as well as concerts for young people the world over — are building a solid core of music lovers for the future. And who knows? Perhaps we may even discover tomorrow's Stravinsky, Rubinstein, or Stern!

All Photos by Norman Matheny, Staff Photographer

'Mustn't Miss the Overture!'

'The Letters Flooded In'

Dear Mr. Dickson:

I like the piece by Gunther Schuller very much because it reminds me of Milhaud. My favorite part is 'The Twittering Machine.' I can almost see all the mechanical birds. It really sounds like a machine, especially where it runs down.

There's just one thing wrong. It gets boring after awhile.

Stephen Kamin

Dear Mr. Dickson:

I am 10 years old. I have been going to the Youth Concerts for three years. I have enjoyed all of them very much.

I also went to the concert on Oct. 31, 1964. I especially liked the part entitled 'Studies on Themes of Paul Klee' by Gunther Schuller. I think that it was very nice of you to put in 'light' music once in awhile.

Paul S. Neustadt

Dear Mr. Dickson:

You asked about the music by Schuller. 'Abstract Trio,' 'An Eerie Moment,' and 'The Twittering Machine' I felt were really not music at all. 'The Little Blue Devil' I liked very much.

Sometime I think it would be nice if you had some of Mozart's horn concertos.

Benjy L. Niles

Laning Humphrey Displays Serpent in Ancient Instruments Room

Erich Leinsdorf (Center), Conductor of the Boston Symphony, an Interested Observer

Appreciative Listeners Seek Encore

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 42,165

MAY 25 1965

Concert Series

READING — Applications for the 1965-66 series of young people concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now being distributed through local public and parochial schools.

The series consists of three morning concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston. Children are bused from the Community Center, accompanied by adult chaperones. Programs are planned for youngsters and each selection is explained before it is played. Subscriptions will be collected in the schools Friday, May 28. Parents are asked to rerun applications promptly as the number who can attend is limited by the bus capacity.

Last year 55 local children attended the series. Further information may be obtained from Mrs. William H. Diamond or Mrs. Richard Jones.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Cricket
MANCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,442

MAY 21 1965

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, a sell-out attraction for young people from all over the State since their beginning in 1959, will return again next Fall for the seventh season, it was announced today by Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Executive Director.

Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops" will again conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two ~~series of three~~ programs.

Series Number One will be presented Saturday, November 6, Saturday, January 15, and Saturday, March 26. Series Number Two will take place Saturday, November 13, Saturday, January 22, and Saturday, April 2. All concerts are held in Symphony Hall at 11:00 a.m., and last approximately one hour.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,710

MAY 13 1965

Youth Concerts Scheduled Again

THRILLED TO BE AT SYMPHONY HALL for a recent youth concert are Paula Shea, Sara Dale and Mary Beth O'Hara.

CHILDREN FROM SCITUATE watch with great interest as musicians assemble for a performance of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall.

STANDING WITH HARRY ELLIS DICKAON, conductor of the Boston Symphony members playing for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall are James Blanchard, Philip Lussier, Donald Mauch and Jon Palmer.

JAN KOBIALKA, cello soloist from Danvers High School is asked how often he practices by Norman Croan, John Hansman and Alan Donkin Jr. from Scituate following his performance at the Youth Concert at Symphony Hall.

Children of Scituate will again, for the fifth year, have an opportunity to attend Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston next season. This year, the Scituate Junior High School PTA, in line with its policy to provide cultural opportunities for children wherever possible, will sponsor the series to be given on November 13, 1965, January 22 and April 2, 1966. Tickets are sold for series of three concerts only.

Subscriptions are now being accepted and must be entered in May to insure good seating. Ticket applications have been distributed through the Scituate schools to all children who will be in next year's fifth through eighth grades. Students attending private schools may secure applications by calling Mrs. Alan Donkin at her home, 18 Curtis St.

The programs are planned to stimulate young people's interest in good music by presenting both classical and contemporary compositions played by the finest musicians in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall. In addition, the Ancient Instruments Room, with its priceless collection of rare and unusual instruments, is open to the young concertgoers, with Laning Humphrey, of the Symphony staff, giving informal talks on the history of the instruments, and demonstrating their use.

Sixty seven Scituate boys and girls attended this season's concerts and enthusiastically enjoyed the programs presented by Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and associate conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and 60 Boston Symphony musicians. At each concert, Mr. Dickson discussed the composers of the scores, gave some information about the compositions and spoke of the instruments and their purposes.

The programs just completed included Music of the Past and Present, and Homage to Igor Stravinsky, concluding with a Festival Program featuring two young soloists, winners in state-wide auditions conducted by Mr. Dickson, a group of young musicians from the Greater Boston Youth Symphony, sitting in with the regular Symphony men, and the Glee Club from Catholic Memorial High School, Berj Zamkochian, Director.

Co-chairmen of the Youth Concert series for the Scituate Junior High School PTA are Mrs. Alan N. Donkin and Mrs. Karl R. Burton. Working with them on this community service is Miss Gertrude Reynolds of the Scituate School Music Department.

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

1964-1965

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31 and NOVEMBER 7, 1964

"Music of the Past and Present"

Overture to "Il Signor Bruschino" . . . . Rossini

The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra . . . . Britten
(With new text by Robert Sherman)
Narrator: JANET BOOKSPAN

Menuetto and Finale, Symphony No. 1, in C major . . . . Beethoven

Studies on Themes of Paul Klee . . . . Schuller
- a. Abstract Trio
- b. An Eerie Moment
- c. The Twittering Machine
- d. Little Blue Devil

Wedding March from "Le Coq d' Or" . . . . Rimsky-Korsakoff

ROBERT SHERMAN is on the staff of WQXR, the New York Times Radio Station.

JANET BOOKSPAN is a graduate of Emerson College in Boston, has toured the United States as a mezzo soprano with the Matinee Opera Company, and acted as Narrator in musical works such as this one.

Second Program

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, and DECEMBER 19

"Homage to Igor Stravinsky"

Suite from "Pulcinella" (after J. B. Pergolesi)
- a. Sinfonia
- b. Tarantella
- c. Toccata
- d. Gavotta
- e. Vivo
- f. Minuetto-Finale

Concerto in D for Violin
- a. Toccata
- b. Capriccio

Soloist, Joseph Silverstein

Suite from "The Firebird"
- a. Introduction and Dance of the Firebird
- b. Round of the Princesses
- c. Infernal Dance
- d. Berceuse
- e. Finale

Circus Polka

YOUTH CONCERTS at Symphony Hall

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Founder-Conductor

Festival Program (Revised)

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, and MARCH 13, 1965

Suite from "The Water Music" . . . . Handel
Allegro — Air — Allegro Deciso

Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1 in G Minor . . . Mendelssohn
Finale: Presto
Soloist, DEBORAH MORIARTY (Moody Junior High School, Lowell)

Elegy, for Cello and Orchestra . . . . Fauré
Soloist, JAN KOBIALKA (Danvers High School)

Capriccio . . . . Jeffrey Hale

Huapangos . . . . Ross Capon

The students who composed and orchestrated these works are members of the Theory Classes at Newton High School, directed by Henry Lasker. (James H. Remley, Music Supervisor).

The Huapango is a popular Mexican dance in which the beats of 2/4, 3/4 and 6/8 time are used in quick succession.

Waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube" . . . . Strauss
(As originally composed, with male chorus)

The vocal parts in this and the next composition will be taken by the Catholic Memorial High School Glee Club — Berj Zamkochian, Director.

Overture, 1812 (With added male chorus) . . . . . Tchaikovsky

This overture played jointly by the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra, Artin Arslanian, Director.
In cooperation with the Massachusetts Music Educators' Association, Donald Gillespie, President

The Solos

PIANO CONCERTO, No. 1 . . . . Mendelssohn (1809-1847)

The composer himself was the soloist to play this concerto, in 1831, in Munich. He had dedicated it to a charming young pianist of that city, Delphine Schauroth. Mendelssohn marked the Finale to be played "as fast as possible." In his performance he created great excitement by the speed with which he carried out this injunction.

ELEGY, FOR CELLO AND ORCHESTRA . . . . . Fauré (1845-1924)

This is one of the finest works of Gabriel Fauré, important French composer, noted for his individuality. He also was important as a teacher. His pupils included Enesco and Ravel.

167

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

APR 4 1965

Youth Symphony Orchestra players take over first chair positions from regular members of Boston Symphony professionals at Youth Concert. Concertmaster Alfred Krips ([illegible] of Director Dickson) has relinquished his chair to Priscilla H[illegible]

Youth Takes Over Symphony Hall

By [illegible]

THE PERFOR[illegible] Symphony Hall [illegible] thoroughly professional, and looked incredibly young, seated next to their grown-up fellow musicians from the regular Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The occasion was the once-a-year opportunity for the Greater Boston Y[illegible] phony Orchestra, made up of teen[illegible] perform alongside veteran players dur[illegible] annual youth concerts. First-chair [illegible] each segment of the orchestra slide over, and surrender their positions to talented youngsters, some young enough to be [illegible] children.

Alfred Krips, concertmaster [illegible] Youth Concerts and in his mid-[illegible] ed his post over to Priscilla [illegible] Weymouth and literally played [illegible] fiddle to her through the perfor[illegible] Tchaikovsky's "Overture, 1812."

The youngsters behaved in a thor[illegible] professional style. Showing up at the [illegible] door of Symphony Hall at 8 a.m., they went through a rigorous last-minute rehearsal under Harry Ellis Dickson, founder and con-[illegible] du[illegible] Youth Concerts. He dealt with th[illegible] businesslike fashion, occasionally [illegible] the stand to stop their playing [illegible] back through a passage with [illegible] not entirely satisfied.

[illegible] broke from rehearsal a half [illegible] concert was to begin at 11 [illegible] Saturday morning, he looked [illegible] solemn faces and said:

[illegible] so scared. Aren't you going to have fun? [illegible] know the piece, and I think we symphony players do, too (bringing forth laughter from the intense group). We all

Continued on page 22

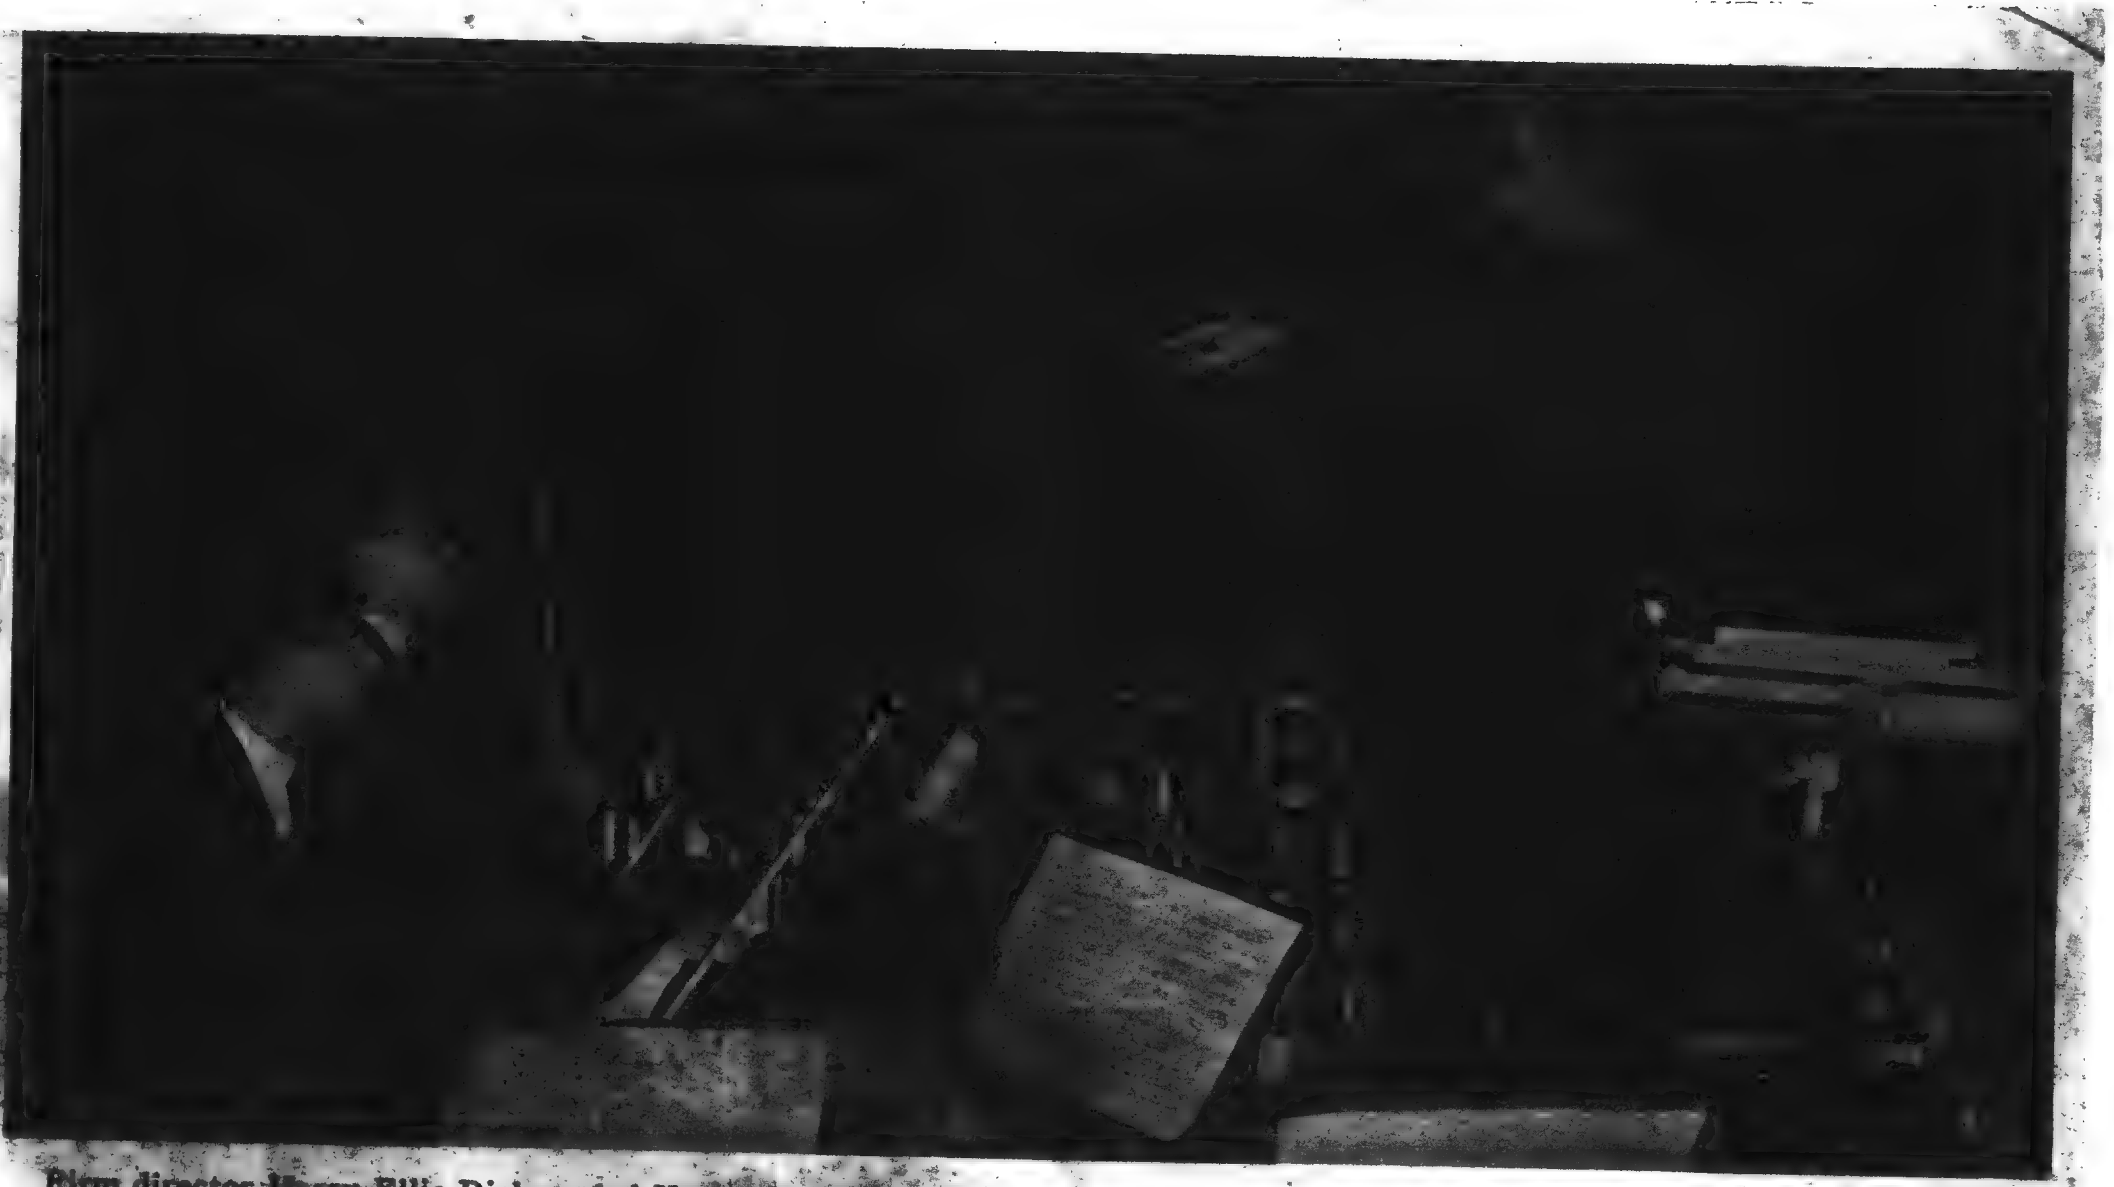
Violist Suzanne Smith, 16, of Wellesley High watches Alfred Krips. She started with orchestra at 12.

Youthful oboist Jack Leventhal (left), 17, of Boston Latin checks technique with teacher John Holmes.

Practicing cello, Stephen Gates, 17, of Needham High was more concerned about afternoon lesson than concert.

163

Petite 14-year-old Deborah Moriarty of Lowell earned honor of being piano soloist with symphony.



Firm director Harry Ellis Dickson led Youth Orchestra through a business-like final rehearsal, but then helped them relax with final pep talk.

After she played a piano solo, the symphony conductor kissed the 14-year-old girl's hand know what we are going to do. Now, don't get into mischief between now and the concert."

Continued from page 20

With that, Dickson dismissed them, and they wandered off stage into the tuning room where the professional BSO members were arriving. Some straggled off for a break and whiff of fresh air, but many stayed behind to buttonhole their opposite musical numbers, or just watch quietly as orchestra members tuned their instruments and scanned their music.

The Youth Symphony Orchestra, under Director Artin Arslanian, was originally formed from state-wide competition, but in the last two years has limited its members to gifted young musicians from the Greater Boston area in the interest of continuity. For admission to the orchestra, they must pass rigorous auditions and rehearse together regularly. They are considered professional enough that they will shortly be performing a full-fledged concert on their own at Symphony Hall.

The Youth Concert at which they played was the third of this year's series, the sixth season that concerts for young children have been given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The 2,631-seat hall was sold out for the series at $4 for three concerts. As many as 15 buses from all over Massachusetts and from New Hampshire and Rhode Island arrive for the concerts, as well as mothers shepherding music-minded children. Adults are not debarred, but they must have a child with them.

(All photos by Leo J. Muise of Photography, Incorporated)

Attentive audience was made up almost entirely of young children brought to the concert by the busload from all over the state. The few adults present were either chaperones or mothers. Adults must be accompanied by a child to be admitted to concert,

COMPOSER IN RESIDENCE

ROCHESTER REVIEW
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
5 TI. A YR. 26,000

DEC 1964 Buffeller

■ 1950

JOHN HUGGLER has been selected as the first composer-in-residence associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under a Rockefeller Foundation-sponsored program.

VANCE S. JENNINGS, assistant professor at Wichita State University, has been elected president of the National Association of College Wind and Percussion Instructors.

GEORGE HAMBRECHT, '51GE, has been named associate in applied music at Our Lady of Cincinnati College.

THE SACRAMENTO BEE
SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
D. 166,689 S. 185,185

OCT 1 4 1964 Buffeller

Composer Grant

The Rockefeller Foundation has made a grant to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a pilot program of composer in residence for the 1964-65 season. John Huggler, a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University, has been named to the post.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

SEP 1964 Buffeller

Awards & Competitions

MISS DARYL GOLDBERG, MISS JANICE M. TRITSCHLER and MISS ANNALEE LETCHINGER were the winners of three company scholarships to the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., offered by the KAY MUSICAL INSTRUMENT COMPANY. . . . RICHARD FITZ's Chamber Sonata was the $200 prize-winning composition at the Cleveland Institute of Music-Rogers Drum Company PERCUSSION ENSEMBLE COMPOSITION CONTEST. . . . THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony throughout its 1964-1965 season. Erich Leinsdorf has chosen JOHN HUGGLER, currently Graduate Assistant at Cornell University's Music Department, as the recipient. . . . RYAND H. EDWARDS was judged top national winner in the annual radio auditions finals sponsored by the ACADEMY OF VOCAL ARTS of Philadelphia. . .

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,605

JUN 2 8 1964

Incidentally, the Boston Symphony has just received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for the setting up of a pilot program in which the orchestra will have a composer-in-residence during the 1964-65 series. John Auggler, a graduate assistant in the music department at Cornell, has been chosen to fill the assignment, the first of its kind. The 35 year-old composer has to his credit several orchestral works and a considerable amount of chamber music.

Leinsdorf had this to say of the new plan: "The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers, who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras. The composer would have the opportunity during his year's residence to ask that specific ideas of his be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test.

CAPIT[illegible] NEWS BUREAU
[illegible]ANY, N.Y.
[illegible]SPAPER
[illegible]PPINGS

TACOMA NEWS TRIBUNE
TACOMA, WASH.
D. 87,869 SUN. 92,726

JUL 1 2 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

JUN 2

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 47,164

JUN 2 5 1964

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JUN 2 5 1964

BSO Names John Huggler Composer-in-Residence

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation enabling a composer to be in residence with the orchestra throughout its 1964-65 season. Under this pilot project of the foundation's Cultural Development program, John Huggler has been selected as the orchestra's Composer-in-Residence.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director, has said: "The basic philosophy behind the idea . . . is the same as that which brought painters to Paris.

"The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras.

The composer would have the opportunity during his year's resdence to ask that specific ideas be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test.

"Mr. Huggler has impressed me as a composer and person most appropriate to be the right individual, who is willing and able to meet the challenge, for a year as Composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We shall endeavor in the coming year to make this pioneer venture a notable achievement in the development of the contemporary musical scene."

John Huggler has just completed a year as Graduate Assistant in the Music Department at Cornell University. He is a native of Rochester, N.Y., and received a bachelor of music degree from the Eastman School of Music. He has studied musicology with Warren Fox and Otto Gombosi, and composition with Dante Fiorello.

He was a clarinetist in the Oklahoma City Symphony, and was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome, 1962-63. He has composed orchestral and chamber music. Huggler is 35 years old, father of two children.

Reached by telephone at his home in Ithaca, N.Y., Huggler said Leinsdorf had become acquainted with his music when it was sent him by the composer's then publisher, Leeds.

Concerning his grant, Huggler said:

"For a composer of music for orchestra, there is no substitute for live sound. This means an ingestion of the Boston Symphony sound for life, and you can't go wrong there."

Huggler, who will move to Boston at the end of the Summer, expects to return to Cornell after the completion of his year with the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

25 1964

BSO Gets Grant For Composer In Residence

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residenee with the orchestra throughout its 1964-65 season.

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf announced he had selected John Huggler for the grant. Mr. Huggler is a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University. For four years he performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony, and he was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome during 1962-63.

The grant was made to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire BSO will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Mr. Leinsdorf said the residency will operate under the same basic philosophy that brought painters to Paris.

"The composer-in-residence," said Mr. Leinsdorf, "would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible in any other way. From an intimate acquaintanceship will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestral sonority, which, in the past, have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestra."

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 132,711 SUN. 196,874

JUN 2 8 1964

Huggler To Work With Symphony

John Huggler, Rochester native and Eastman School graduate, has been selected as the first recipient of a novel Rockefeller Foundation grant of $13,000 as composer in residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the 1964-65 season.

Huggler, 35, is a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University. He was a Guggenheim fellow in Rome in 1962-63, and has composed works for orchestra and chamber groups. His mother, widow of Edwin Huggler, lives at 139 Gillette St

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966

JUN 2 7 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,248

JUL 3 1964

HENRY B. CABOT, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra has announced that the Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony throughout its 1964-65 season. The grant was made under the Foundation's cultural development program, to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire Boston Symphony orchestra will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, made known at the time of Mr. Cabot's announcement that he has selected John Huggler as the Orchestra's composer-in-residence under the Rockefeller grant. Dr. Leinsdorf in making his selection known further stated that "the basic philosophy behind the idea of having a composer-residence with an orchestra for a twelve-month period is the same as that which brought painters to Paris."

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 14,600

JUN 2 4 1

Bosto
Invite To C

By JANE M
John Huggler, a dent at Cornell, a viewer for The It will be compose with the Boston S chestra for one ye
September.
He is the first yo in the country to the program, init
Rockefeller Founda
The invitation
by Erich Leinsdor tra's music dire made possible by a to the orchestra b
tion.
Huggler said to no strings attache vitation. He said h
terested in attendin
"sitting in the mid chestra," working dorf and "pumping sight for informati
He has compos over a period of 12
one-fourth for orch
rest chamber musi
His own music as "chromatic, usi pects of serialism and personally," no
the 20th Century.
Schonberg were ences, he said.
Huggler, who is in Rochester, wa from the Eastman S sic, and has studied ologists Warren C
Gombosi and with ello. He was clarine
Oklahoma City Sy
four years. In 1962-
Guggenheim fellow
He came to Cor an assistantship in open. He has been
Prof. William Au course in music ap
His future plans teaching. Some kin ing mix well with he finds, especially ing of music apprec composition "throu agement." But try balize some musica block the flow of h position, he said.
Huggler said he turn to Ithaca. He many places, but
"small town atmos
the scenery, whic
"about as Western can get."
While at Boston, wife, Mardean, and and Tamara, 13, h out of the city—per ord. This year they at 317 Dryden Rd
camping this week
State Park.

COMPOSER IN RESIDENCE

ROCHESTER REVIEW
ROCHESTER, N.Y.
5 TI. A YR. 26,000

DEC 1964

■ 1950

JOHN HUGGLER has been selected as the first composer-in-residence associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under a Rockefeller Foundation-sponsored program.

VANCE S. JENNINGS, assistant professor at Wichita State University, has been elected president of the National Association of College Wind and Percussion Instructors.

GEORGE HAMBRECHT, '51GE, has been named associate in applied music at Our Lady of Cincinnati College.

THE SACRAMENTO BEE
SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
D. 166,689 S. 185,185

OCT 14 1964

Composer Grant

The Rockefeller Foundation has made a grant to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a pilot program of composer in residence for the 1964-65 season. John Huggler, a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University, has been named to the post.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

SEP 1964

Awards & Competitions

MISS DARYL GOLDBERG, MISS JANICE M. TRITSCHLER and MISS ANNALEE LETCHINGER were the winners of three company scholarships to the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., offered by the KAY MUSICAL INSTRUMENT COMPANY. . . . RICHARD FITZ's Chamber Sonata was the $200 prize-winning composition at the Cleveland Institute of Music-Rogers Drum Company PERCUSSION ENSEMBLE COMPOSITION CONTEST. . . . THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony throughout its 1964-1965 season. Erich Leinsdorf has chosen JOHN HUGGLER, currently Graduate Assistant at Cornell University's Music Department, as the recipient. . . . RYAND H. EDWARDS was judged top national winner in the annual radio auditions finals sponsored by the ACADEMY OF VOCAL ARTS of Philadelphia. . . .

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,605
JUN 28 1964

Incidentally, the Boston Symphony has just received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for the setting up of a pilot program in which the orchestra will have a composer-in-residence during the 1964-65 series. John Auggler, a graduate assistant in the music department at Cornell, has been chosen to fill the assignment, the first of its kind. The 35 year-old composer has to his credit several orchestral works and a considerable amount of chamber music.

Leinsdorf had this to say of the new plan: "The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers, who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras. The composer would have the opportunity during his year's residence to ask that specific ideas of his be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, June 28, 1964

TACOMA NEWS TRIBUNE
TACOMA, WASH.
D. 87,869 SUN. 82,726

JUL 12 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855
JUN 25 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 47,164
JUN 25 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711
JUN 25 1964

BSO Names John Huggler Composer-in-Residence

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation enabling a composer to be in residence with the orchestra throughout its 1964-65 season. Under this pilot project of the foundation's Cultural Development program, John Huggler has been selected as the orchestra's Composer-in-Residence.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director, has said: "The basic philosophy behind the idea . . . is the same as that which brought painters to Paris.

"The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras.

The composer would have the opportunity during his year's resdence to ask that specific ideas be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test.

"Mr. Huggler has impressed me as a composer and person most appropriate to be the right individual, who is willing and able to meet the challenge, for a year as Composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We shall endeavor in the coming year to make this pioneer venture a notable achievement in the development of the contemporary musical scene."

John Huggler has just completed a year as Graduate Assistant in the Music Department at Cornell University. He is a native of Rochester, N.Y., and received a bachelor of music degree from the Eastman School of Music. He has studied musicology with Warren Fox and Otto Gombosi, and composition with Dante Fiorello.

He was a clarinetist in the Oklahoma City Symphony, and was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome, 1962-63. He has composed orchestral and chamber music. Huggler is 35 years old, father of two children.

Reached by telephone at his home in Ithaca, N.Y., Huggler said Leinsdorf had become acquainted with his music when it was sent him by the composer's then publisher, Leeds.

Concerning his grant, Huggler said:

"For a composer of music for orchestra, there is no substitute for live sound. This means an ingestion of the Boston Symphony sound for life, and you can't go wrong there."

Huggler, who will move to Boston at the end of the Summer, expects to return to Cornell after the completion of his year with the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304
JUN 25 1964

BSO Gets Grant For Composer In Residence

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the orchestra throughout its 1964-65 season.

Music Director Erich Leinsdorf announced he had selected John Huggler for the grant. Mr. Huggler is a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University. For four years he performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony, and he was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome during 1962-63.

The grant was made to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire BSO will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Mr. Leinsdorf said the residency will operate under the same basic philosophy that brought painters to Paris.

"The composer-in-residence," said Mr. Leinsdorf, "would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible in any other way. From an intimate acquaintanceship will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestral sonority, which, in the past, have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestra."

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 132,711 SUN. 196,874

JUN 28 1964

Huggler To Work With Symphony

John Huggler, Rochester native and Eastman School graduate, has been selected as the first recipient of a novel Rockefeller Foundation grant of $13,000 as composer in residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the 1964-65 season.

Huggler, 35, is a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University. He was a Guggenheim fellow in Rome in 1962-63, and has composed works for orchestra and chamber groups. His mother, widow of Edwin Huggler, lives at 139 Gillette St.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966
JUN 27 1964

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 6,248
JUL 3 1964

HENRY B. CABOT, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra has announced that the Orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony throughout its 1964-65 season. The grant was made under the Foundation's cultural development program, to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire Boston Symphony orchestra will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, made known at the time of Mr. Cabot's announcement that he has selected John Huggler as the Orchestra's composer-in-residence under the Rockefeller grant. Dr. Leinsdorf in making his selection known further stated that "the basic philosophy behind the idea of having a composer-residence with an orchestra for a twelve-month period is the same as that which brought painters to Paris."

165

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 14,600

JUN 2 4 1964

Boston Symphony Invites Huggler To Composer Post

By JANE MARCHAM

John Huggler, a graduate student at Cornell and music reviewer for The Ithaca Journal, will be composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for one year starting in September.

He is the first young composer in the country to be chosen for the program, initiated by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The invitation was extended by Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director. It was made possible by a $13,000 grant to the orchestra by the foundation.

Huggler said today there are no strings attached to the invitation. He said he is most interested in attending rehearsals, "sitting in the middle of the orchestra," working with Leinsdorf and "pumping everyone in sight for information."

He has composed 62 works over a period of 12 years, about one-fourth for orchestra and the rest chamber music.

His own music he described as "chromatic, using some aspects of serialism, but freely and personally, not strange to the 20th Century. Bartok and Schonberg were early influences, he said.

Huggler, who is 35, was born in Rochester, was graduated from the Eastman School of Music, and has studied with musicologists Warren Cox and Otto Gombosi and with Dante Fiorello. He was clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony for four years. In 1962-63 he was a Guggenheim fellow in Rome.

He came to Cornell because an assistantship in music was open. He has been assistant to Prof. William Austin for a course in music appreciation.

His future plans now lie in teaching. Some kinds of teaching mix well with composing, he finds, especially the teaching of music appreciation and of composition "through encouragement." But trying to verbalize some musical ideas can block the flow of his own composition, he said.

Huggler said he hopes to return to Ithaca. He has lived in many places, but he likes the "small town atmosphere" and the scenery, which he calls "about as Western as the East can get."

While at Boston, he and his wife, Mardean, and David, 11, and Tamara, 13, hope to live out of the city—perhaps at Concord. This year they have lived at 317 Dryden Rd. They are camping this week at Enfield State Park.

—Ithaca Journal Photo
JOHN HUGGLER

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,691

JUN 2 5 1964

Huggler Named BSO Composer In Residence

LENOX — Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony throughout its 1964-65 season.

"Unique Opportunity"

The grant was made under the foundation's cultural development program, to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will have an opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known at the time of Cabot's announcement that he has selected John Huggler as the orchestra's composer-in-residence under the Rockefeller grant. "The basic philosophy behind the idea of having a composer-in-residence with an orchestra for a 12-month period is the same as that which brought painters to Paris," Leinsdorf said.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 603,574
JUN 24 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY HOST TO COMPOSER

Grant Will Permit Scholar to Observe for a Year

By RICHARD F. SHEPARD

An experimental program to let younger composers learn firsthand the workings of a big symphony orchestra has been initiated by the Rockefeller Foundation.

Under its cultural development program, the foundation has made a $13,000 grant to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to keep a composer in residence for one year starting in September.

John Huggler, a 35-year old composer who is now a graduate assistant in Cornell University's music department, has been chosen as the first to observe at close quarters the mechanics of getting orchestral music from the score to the audience.

If the pilot project is successful, it could be expanded to provide grants for similar programs with other orchestras.

Joint Opportunity Hailed

Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, hailed the grant as an opportunity both for the composer and for the orchestra, which will have a chance to become familiar with the composer's thinking.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, said that he had nurtured the idea of a composer in residence over since he had been appointed to his post three years ago.

"If this works out, it ought to be done by 20 orchestras each year," he said. "The cost, by foundation standards, is very small. What worries us is the alienation of the public from the composer, of the composer from the orchestra.

"There is an isolation between composers and orchestras. Many composers are not familiar with the complexities of the orchestra. I don't want a composer to change his intentions, but I would like to see him build a bridge between his intentions and what will come out.

Conservatism Denied

"Composers get together and say that the public, the orchestras, the musicians are so conservative," Mr. Leinsdorf went on. "This is not so. Let the composer communicate, and he'll find that nobody is conservative. If he lives with a performing organization, he can gain the feeling that audiences are wide awake and willing to gain from new experiences."

Mr. Huggler, married and the father of two children, will be completely free to arrange his year with the orchestra as he wishes, Mr. Leinsdorf emphasized.

"He will have access to rehearsals, the musicians, our library, the management and me," said the director. "He is under no obligations. We'd hope, of course, that if he wrote something, we'd get first crack at it. But there are no strings attached."

Mr. Leinsdorf said he had specified that the program be started with a composer who showed gret potential.

Rapid Advance Possible

"Someone who is talented," he explained, "has a personality that's aware of the implications of what he's doing and yet is not too well-known a quantity, since that would make the experiment invalid. Mr. Huggler is interested in new musical ideas. In one year with us, I think he can jump 5, 8, even 10 years in development."

Mr. Huggler was born in Rochester, N.Y., was graduated from the Eastman School of Music, studied with Otto Gombosi and Dante Fiorello, served four years as clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony and was a Guggenheim fellow in Rome in 1962-63. He has written several works for orchestra as well as chamber music.

"I think that the grants should not be for more than one year in any case," concluded Mr. Leinsdorf. "We want to avoid the person who lives solely on grants, the foundation-poacher. You can't water a garden of creativity in that way."

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 603,438 SUN. 983,643

JUL 2 6 1964

Grant to launch Composers' program

The Rockefeller Foundation has given the Boston Symphony Orchestra a grant to set up a pilot composer-in-residence program.

Erich Leinsdorf named John Huggler as the first recipient. Huggler, a native of Rochester, N. Y., studied at Eastman School, played clarinet with the Oklahoma City Symphony and studied abroad under a Guggenheim award. He is now a graduate assistant at Cornell University.

The composer will spend a year with the orchestra and will be able to test his ideas with the group.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

23 1964

John Huggler To Be Composer With Symphony

John Huggler, a graduate assistant in the Music Department of Cornell, will move to Boston early in-residence with the Boston Sym in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the 1964 1965 season.

It was made possible by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation's Cultural Development program according to an announcement by Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Huggler received a Bachelor of Music degree from the Eastman School of Music. He also studied with Otto Gombosi and Dante Fiorello and performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850
JUL 15 1964

Symphony trustees name Huggler to new post

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the orchestra has received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the symphony throughout its 1964-65 season.

The grant, made under the foundation's cultural development program, will allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire orchestra will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf has made known that he has selected John Huggler as the orchestra's composer-in-residence.

Mr. Huggler is presently a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University. He is a native of Rochester, New York, and has received a Bachelor of Music degree from the Eastman School of Music. For four years he performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony and was a Guggenheim fellow in Rome during 1962-63. He has composed several works for orchestra in addition to a considerable amount of chamber music.

OKLAHOMA PRESS
CLIPPING BUREAU
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA

NE

Advertiser
Okla. City, Okla.

DATE: 7-16-64

PHONE CE 2-3133

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

City Clarinetist First Composer in Residence

John Huggler, 35, a member of the Oklahoma City Symphony clarinet section for four years, has been chosen the Boston Symphony's first composer in residence.

A Rockefeller Foundation grant of $13,000 has been made to the Boston Symphony for this purpose. It is the initiation of a program by which other notable young composers may have an opportunity to spend a year in symphonic composition under the favorable conditions rendered by a composership in residence.

"If this work out" said conductor Erich Leinsdorf, of the Boston Symphony, "it should mean 20 composers in residence with 20 orchestras." He added, "The cost, by foundation standards, is small."

Huggler was born in Rochester, N.Y.; was graduated from Eastman School of Music; held a Guggenheim fellowship for a year in Rome in 1962-63; and has been most recently a graduate assistant in Cornell University's music department. Since leaving Oklahoma City, he has married and fathered two children.

Some of his music has been performed by the Oklahoma City Symphony under Conductor Guy Fraser Harrison.

"In one year with us," said conductor Leinsdorf, I think he can jump five, eight or 10 years in development. He will have access to our rehearsals, to our musicians, our library, the management, and me.

"And he is under no obligations. We'd hope, of course, that if he wrote something, we'd get first crack at it. But there are no strings attached."

Huggler was composing regularly while living in Oklahoma City, and once said here that the only principle of composition he followed was that of "infinite variation."

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.
SENTINEL
D. 17,300 S. 17,300

JUL 4 1964

The husband of a former Grand Junction resident has been appointed composer - in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He is John Huggler, who married the former Mardean Butler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. Dean Butler of 1115 Chipeta Ave.

Huggler is the first composer to receive the $13,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. He will spend a year with the symphony.

Before receiving the appointment, he was a graduate assistant in Cornell University's music department.

Huggler and his wife have visited Grand Junction several times.

In 1962-63, he was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome. He has also composed 62 works in 12 years.

THE NATIONAL OBSERVER
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W. 205,878

MAR 15 1965

Boston's Composer-in-Residence

How One Symphony Orchestra Seeks to Stimulate New Music

Continued From Page One

Stokowski, who resurrected Ives' Fourth a year ago after it had lain dormant since it was composed in 1915-16, argued persuasively that the work is "one of the most important compositions in the history of music." The musicians, charmed by Mr. Stokowski's humor and wisdom, grunted approval as the eminent octogenarian finished the spontaneous "lesson." Mr. Huggler looked at the floor and uttered a muffled "bravo, bravo."

Still at the podium, Mr. Stokowski spoke of Boston and its musical climate. "This city," he said, a crescent of long, white hair flopping over his right ear, "has the most sensitive evaluation of cultural things of any city in the United States." Other cities in America, he said, have developed advanced stages of culture. "But the inner life—the whole life—that's Boston."

Boston, where a fiddle player arrives at rehearsal carrying a paperback copy of Shakespeare's Richard III. Boston, where the symphony somewhat self-consciously labels itself "The Aristocrat of Orchestras" on its records just at the time some critics are saying it's beginning to slip. Boston, where "stage-door Ludwigs" last Thursday night could chat at leisure with two of America's most respected composers, Aaron Copland and Walter Piston.

The Boston Symphony has long been a leader in promoting new music and encouraging young artists. A week ago it performed the world premier of Piston's Eighth Symphony, commissioned by the Boston Symphony and completed in late January. In recent years it has commissioned works by such well-known composers as Leonard Bernstein and William Schuman and such lesser-known men as Robert Moevs, and it has performed world premiers of countless other works by contemporary composers. Its summer music program at Tanglewood, in western Massachusetts, attracts hundreds of gifted young musicians every year; this summer, for the first time, it will award $500 fellowships to as many as 100 instrumentalists, singers, conductors, and composers of promise.

And so it is not out of character for the Boston Symphony to experiment with a composer-in-residence project. The idea was Mr. Leinsdorf's, the result of an educational TV program about young composers four years ago on which Mr. Leinsdorf was a panel member.

An Idea Catches On

"Quite by chance, at lunch with the humanities people of the Rockefeller Foundation one day in October or November of 1963, I mentioned that I was gradually developing some thoughts about getting composers back to symphony orchestras," says Mr. Leinsdorf, rested and tanned from a recent Florida vacation. "The idea caught their fancy."

Mr. Leinsdorf likens the program to basic research in science. "Mr. Huggler has no duties, no distractions," he says. "How he times himself, that is his business." The composer is under no obligation to produce any compositions. Similarly, the orchestra is under no obligation to perform any compositions he does produce, although it's understood it has the right of first refusal.

Mr. Huggler will remain with the symphony through August. For the 12-month period, he will receive $3,000 in travel expenses and a salary of $10,000—roughly equal to the average salary of the musicians in the Boston Symphony.

Until recently, Mr. Huggler attended almost every rehearsal. Now he confines his contact with the symphony largely to Tuesday morning rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts, spending the largest portion of his time composing in his Lexington home.

Thus far his production pace has been slower than usual, a fact Mr. Leinsdorf fully expected. "The idea is to store up impressions of the orchestra and knowledge about music," says Mr. Leinsdorf, "so in the early months he devoted most of his time to this." Now that Mr. Huggler knows the orchestra well, he is concentrating on the labor of composition itself. He expects to complete his current work, a two-movement piece as yet untitled, in a month or two. He will discuss it at length with Mr. Leinsdorf then.

Mr. Leinsdorf sees enormous potential in resident-composer programs. "If 10 orchestras sponsor one resident composer a year, in 10 years you'll have 100 composers well acquainted with orchestras. If from these composers you get 10 usable orchestral compositions, you'll be more than amply rewarded for the effort. We have not had that kind of harvest—that kind of yield—in the past 10 years."

To ensure an effective experiment, the composer has to be chosen with special care. "I remember Mr. Branch Rickey, when he broke the color barrier in baseball," recalls the engaging Mr. Leinsdorf in his Austrian accent. "He had to select his man carefully. We had to, too. Our 'Jackie Robinson' had to be not only gifted, but unknown. There was no point in choosing a man who was set in his style."

A Bit of Contempt

Mr. Leinsdorf's "Jackie Robinson" also had to have displayed some interest in writing for a full orchestra, or at the very minimum to possess no hostility to the idea. This requirement in itself eliminated a good number. "'Professor' Leinsdorf and the other self-appointed guardians of truth and virtue in music view their orchestras as the center of musical life," one of the most talented of the young composers contemptuously remarked in private last summer at Tanglewood. Defiantly, he added: "But if we don't write for the orchestra, there won't be any orchestra."

Mr. Huggler has written for the orchestra, and with considerable acclaim within the musical profession. Gino Cioffi, first clarinetist in the Boston Symphony, calls Mr. Huggler's Sculptures, composed from 1960 to 1964 and performed by the Boston Symphony last November, "beautiful, charming—with true, A-1 musical feeling." Mr. Leinsdorf, who pored over hundreds of scores of many composers before recommending Mr. Huggler, says the young composer possesses "genuine talent, a genuine streak of originality."

Mr. Huggler confe[illegible] composing against the tide in his preference for the mass effect. He insists, however, that "there's a place for the broad brush in music, just as there is in art."

He disparages the "musical politics of the moment" among most young composers, the "jockeying for position in the small musical public." Far more than in earlier centuries, composers today tend to write for their peers instead of the public; in Mr. Leinsdorf's words, they "try to distinguish between the small band of cognoscenti and a supposed large public of know-nothings."

In other ways, too, Mr. Huggler is unconventional as contemporary composers go. He purposely avoids "running with the pack," insisting: "It's important to me that I feel my own way along." And unlike most musicians, he hopes the teaching position he inevitably must land in order to support his composing will permit him to work not with advanced students, but with students with little knowledge of music. "We spend a lot of time developing musicians in this country," he says. "I don't think we spend enough time developing the audience" through music-appreciation courses.

Nevertheless Mr. Huggler is not reluctant to experiment. Sculptures requires a larger brass section than usual and calls for no oboes or bassoons. His unfinished work employs what he calls a "dyadic" (two-part) form; the first movement predominates, and the second movement serves as an epilog.

A Handshake—of Sorts

Mr. Huggler has received almost no formal training in composition. He attended Eastman School of Music in his native Rochester, N.Y., but studied the clarinet and musicology (music history) and not composition. He never met Howard Hanson, a prominent American composer on the faculty at Eastman, while he was an undergraduate. "I've shaken his hand once," he says. "It was when he refused me admittance as a graduate student."

Mr. Huggler first became interested in composing while he was studying musicology as a graduate student at the University of Chicago in 1951. Shortly afterward he took his only formal training in composition, five or six lessons from Dante Fiorillo in New York.

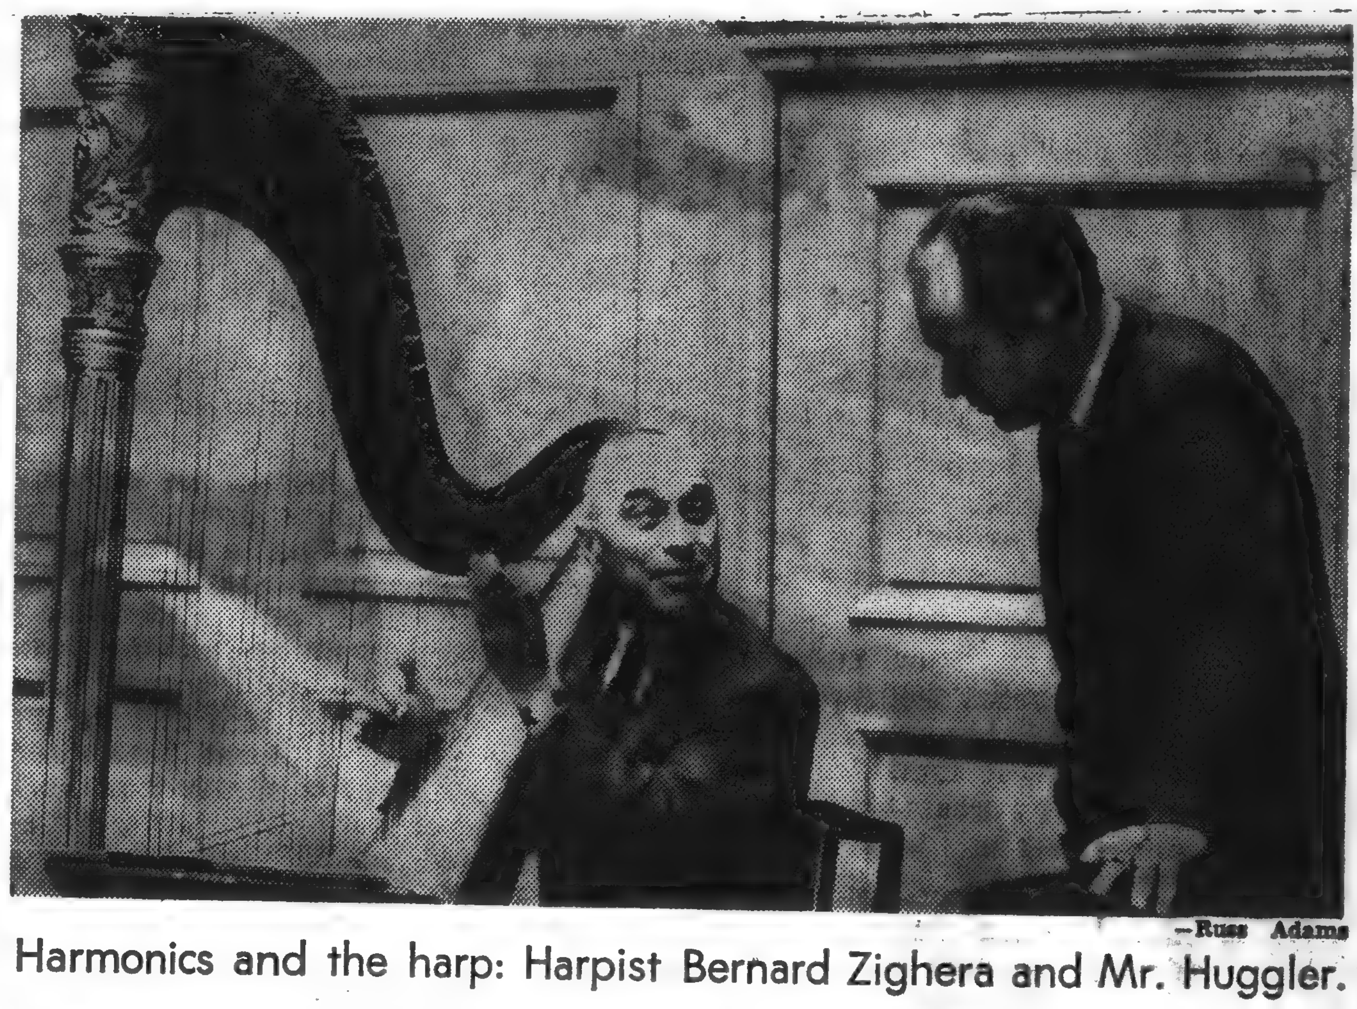
He played second clarinet for the Oklahoma City Symphony from 1952 to 1956—an experience that acquainted him with what the various instruments can and cannot do. Just as important, the experience also acquainted him with what musicians want and don't want to do. "Some of the avant-garde composers will ask a flutist to make a sound like a foghorn," says silver-haired James Pappoutsakis, a veteran flutist with the Boston Symphony. "You can't help resenting it. You've been practicing 30 years to make your tone beautiful, and they ask you to make it ugly."

Working as a Museum Guard

The public first heard Mr. Huggler's work in 1952, when the Oklahoma City Symphony performed the six-minute Elegy to Federico Garcia-Lorca, a Spanish poet executed by Franco in the Spanish civil war. In 1956 Mr. Huggler returned to the East, earning his living by playing odd musical jobs, doing free-lance music copying, and working as a guard at the Museum of Modern Art in New York and at the Phillips Collection in Washington, D. C. Finally, in 1962, a Guggenheim Fellowship freed him temporarily to compose full-time in Rome for a year.

The fact that he happened to be a teaching fellow in Cornell's music department when he was tapped by Mr. Leinsdorf still causes him embarrassment. "After all those years of slugging it out, I had to get this when I was what the press calls a 'Cornell University graduate student at the age of 35,'" he complains. "From the brief stories last fall it seemed as if possibly—only possibly—my first piece of work might come out of this year."

Mr. Huggler has written some 60 works so far, including five symphonies that lie unpublished in a bureau drawer. Mr. Leinsdorf's initial inclination last fall had been to perform a 1958 work of Mr. Huggler's, Ecce Homo, instead of Sculptures — evidence, contends Mr. Huggler, that "even to him, I had been writing music of some worth for a long time."



—Russ Adams

Harmonics and the harp: Harpist Bernard Zighera and Mr. Huggler.

The composer-in-residence program could have caused Mr. Huggler anguished moments far more acute than these. Before he arrived last September, a few frosty musicians in the orchestra agreed to freeze out the intruder if he invaded their domain. Fortunately, thanks to his awareness of the unwritten codes among instrumentalists, he has established excellent rapport with the musicians. "John got the orchestra on his side," says Dr. Norman Lloyd, head of the arts division of the Rockefeller Foundation. "The antagonism that sometimes arises between composers and musicians never developed."

Instead, says Mr. Leinsdorf, the experiment has proved of value to the orchestra members as well as to Mr. Huggler: "It cuts both ways. The musicians are more sympathetic to the composer's problems, and the composer is more aware of the musicians' problems."

Mr. Leinsdorf contends that the composer today in many ways is in a more favored position than the composer of the Eighteenth Century. The days of the individual patron are gone, but gone too are the summary dismissals of composers by angered or displeased princes and dukes. In a way, the foundations have replaced the patrons of old, and usually the artist has complete freedom under the foundation form of patronage.

Mr. Leinsdorf warns that foundations—or Government, if it enters the field—must constantly be on guard against the temptation to act as "cultural commissars." But the artist has a responsibility too, he insists. Too many of the "new breed," he says, have become "foundation squatters," content to live for years off one foundation grant after another in return for skimpy production. And too many abuse the responsibility they have to their art: "When I read, as I read in the paper this morning, of a piece performed in New York yesterday under Mr. Lukas Foss in which nine 'performers' wound up 100 metronomes and then marched off the stage, I begin to wonder."

Whether the composer-in-residence program is the best possible answer, Mr. Leinsdorf cannot yet say.

"You can't judge a program like this after only six months," he said last week, tugging on his white gloves in the back seat of his green Delta 88 limousine. "Maybe in 16 years, we'll know whether we have a Jackie Robinson or not."

—Lee E. Dirks

167

Boston's Composer-in-Residence

How An Orchestra Stimulates New Music

BOSTON.

Erich Leinsdorf, the brilliant conductor of the Boston Symphony, stated the danger succinctly last week. "There is a grim future for the symphony orchestra," he said in his Brookline home, "if the young composers [illegible] to turn away from the full orches[illegible] at the same time the orchestra is grow[illegible] more and more popular with the public."

Most young composers today—the Schullers, the Sydemans, the Sollbergers—are doing little to expand the repertoire of symphonic masterworks compiled over the past three centuries. Instead, they are experimenting with new combinations of instruments, almost invariably small in number and bizarre in sound.

To help preserve the full symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf this season inaugurated the first composer-in-residence program ever associated with a major symphony orchestra. Composers for years have received grants to write in solitude in Rome, or to experiment with new symphonic sounds with college orchestras. But this year John Huggler, a 36-year-old composer of exceptional promise, is working intimately with the Boston Symphony under a $13,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

The White House Interest

The Rockefeller Foundation's enthusiasm for the project is evidence of the current explosion of emphasis on the creative artist in affluent America, an explosion that last week received White House endorsement. President Johnson on Wednesday asked Congress to forswear its traditional opposition to Federal patronage of the arts by establishing a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

The President's proposal, which has strong support in both the Senate and the House, would authorize $10,000,000 in grants and loans to individuals and groups in the first year. "No government can call artistic excellence into existence," Mr. Johnson declared, but the government can "seek to create conditions" under which the artist can flourish.

The artist—in this case, the composer—unquestionably flourishes under the Boston Symphony's experimental composer-in-residence program. Consider the value of just three experiences Mr. Huggler (whose name rhymes with "bugler") enjoyed last week.

One day, at noon, he sat on a piano bench in Mr. Leinsdorf's study and discussed Robert Schumann's overture to Byron's Manfred with Mr. Leinsdorf, who has achieved special eminence as a conductor of German opera. "This," said Mr. Leinsdorf, "is one of those strange and rare pieces which is completely Romantic, yet completely Classical."

Two hours earlier, just before a rehearsal in Symphony Hall, he had asked a technical question of Bernard Zighera, the Boston Symphony's first harpist and pianist. Mr. Zighera had gracefully plucked several strings on the harp, then several more, to show Mr. Huggler some tricks about harmonics on the instrument.

Finally, one afternoon after a rehearsal, Mr. Huggler sat in the viola section on the stage and, with perhaps 30 musicians in the symphony, listened raptly to guest conductor Leopold Stokowski read an article he had written recently about Charles Ives' Fourth Symphony. Mr.

Please Turn to Page 16, Column 1

Composer John Huggler (second from right) and two members of the Boston Symphony listen to guest conductor Leopold Stokowski.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

Leinsdorf Enthusiastic

Symphony to Pilot Composer Project

By McLAREN HARRIS

For a year beginning this fall the Boston Symphony Orchestra will find itself in a unique and pioneer position with relation to contemporary music, being able to claim the first composer-in-residence ever retained by a symphony orchestra.

One of the originators of the idea and probably its most enthusiastic supporter is Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf and the tiring trials of a three-hour open rehearsal at Tanglewood last Saturday could not dim his gleam of anticipation.

SPONSOR INTEREST

"Mr. Leinsdorf, how did the Rockefeller Foundation come to sponsor this project?"

"The Foundation, of course receives a great many requests for aid for all sorts of things and from all kinds. In our case no plea or request was ever filed. Recently I was asked to assist in a study of the Foundation's music program, and during that period the idea arose in casual conversation over lunch.

"In discussing some problems of modern music I pointed out that the association between most contemporary composers and symphony orchestras has been allowed to diminish, and since the public's greatest connection with music is through orchestras, composers no longer really know their audience. Instead we get works for curious combinations like 14 violins and two sopranos, which have rare chances for performance."

COMPOSER-PUBLIC RELATION

"One of the objectives of our program," continued Mr. Leinsdorf, "is to re-establish a speaking acquaintance between composer and public by seeking a return to the orchestra as a natural medium of composition.

.."The composer will be able to hear a lot in peace, to experiment, to assess each instrument's capabilities and to understand the orchestra as a collective mechanism. It will be very much like basic research."

"What about the criteria for selection of your first man?"

"We wanted to be as sure as possible of an original talent, not a mirror for someone else's ideas," he said. "Also, it had to be a composer not well known, for the object is to stimulate growth and not just reaffirm existing practice.

'MUST BE YOUNG'

"And the composer must be young in order for his progress to be followed for as many years as possible. I believe John Huggler, who is now in the graduate program at Cornell, represents an excellent prospect; he has written many works, several for orchestra, and has original and promising concepts."

"Ours is the pilot project, what airplane manufacturers call the prototype," concluded Mr. Liensdorf, "and in a situation such as this the first man must be a success. I hope that the press will follow Mr. Huggler in the years after his residence here and report the results to the public.

"I would hope as well that this program will gradually become practice with many orchestras — say 10; it would mean that 10 composers in a year would have this experience, and a hundred in ten years. The effects on contemporary music could be very significant indeed."

APITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, June 27, 1964

New Break for Composers

Leinsdorf, Ex-City Musician Join in Orchestra Project

Two ex-Rochesterians are involved in a Rockefeller Foundation project to help young composers become better acquainted with the workings of a big symphony orchestra.

They are Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony, and John S. Huggler, who will be composer-in-residence with the orchestra for a year under a $13,000 grant from the foundation.

Huggler, son of Mrs. Edwin J. Huggler, 139 Gillette St., and the late Mr. Huggler, is a Rochester native, graduate of Eastman School of Music and presently a graduate assistant in the Cornell University music department.

Leinsdorf is a former conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic (1947-56).

• • •

IN 1962 HUGGLER was named winner of a $5,000 Guggenheim Award.

Leinsdorf

Huggler

Following his graduation from Eastman in 1950 he was a clarinetist in the Oklahoma City Symphony conducted by former Rochester Civic Orchestra director Guy Fraser Harrison.

Huggler, 35, is married and the father of two children. His year with the Boston Symphony begins in September.

• • •

THIS IS THE PILOT phase of the Rockefeller Foundation project, according to Leinsdorf, who was quoted as saying that "if this works out, it ought to be done by 20 orchestras each year."

He added that the object of the program is to correct a lack of understanding between composers, the orchestras and musicians and the public for which they play.

"If he (the composer) lives with a performing organization," said Leinsdorf, "he can gain the feeling that audiences are wide awake and willing to gain from new experiences."

---

rch in science. "Mr. Huggler has no duties, no distractions," he says. "How he times himself, that is his business." The composer is under no obligation to produce any compositions. Similarly, the orchestra is under no obligation to perform any compositions he does pro-true, A-1 musical feeling." Mr. Leinsdorf, who pored over hundreds of scores of many composers before recommending Mr. Huggler, says the young composer possesses "genuine talent, a genuine streak of originality."

Mr. Huggler confesses that he is com-

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15.500

JUL 1 1 1964 Rockefeller

Rockefeller Grant to Boston Symphony To Provide for Composer-in-Residence

Mr. Henry B. Cabot, President of the Trustees of the Boston symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston symphony throughout its 1964-1965 season. The grant was made under the Foundation's Cultural Development program, to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

In acknowledging the Rockefeller grant, Mr. Cabot said, "The Rockefeller Foundation grant provdes the Boston Symphony Orhcestra and a young composer with a unique opportunity. This will be a great challenge for all of us concerned, and we are extremely grateful to the Foundation for selecting the Orchestra for this pilot program."

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known at the time of Mr. Cabot's announcement that he has selected John Huggler as the Orchestra's composer-in-residence under the Rockefeller grant. "The basic philosophy behind the idea of having a composer-in-residence with an orchestra for a twelve-month period is the same as that which brought painters to Paris," Mr. Leinsdorf said. "The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras. The composer would have the opportunity during his year's residence to ask that specific ideas of his be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test," Mr. Leinsdorf continued. "Mr. Huggler has impressed me as a composer and person most appropriate to be the right individual, who is willing and able to meet the challenge, for a year as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We shall endeavor in the coming year to make this pioneer venture a notable achievement in the deve opment of the contemporary musical scene."

John Huggler is presently a Graduate Assistant in the Music Department of Cornell University. Though no plans have been formulated for his composing a work during the next season, the Rockefeller grant will allow Mr. Huggler to gain a first-hand knowledge of an orchestra, an experience which may prove to be of greater value to music than would be the commissioning of a single composition. Mr. Huggler is a native of Rochester, New York, and received a Bachelor of Music from the Eastman School of Music. He has also studied with Otto Gombosi and Dante Fiorello. For four years he performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony and was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome during 1962-1963. He has composed several works for orchestra in addition to a considerable amount of chamber music. Mr. Huggler, who is 35, is the father of two children. He plans to move to Boston early in September for the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eighty-fourth season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 102,435

JUL 19 1964

Rockefeller Grants

The Rockefeller Foundation has devised a plan and made substantial financial appropriations to encourage the composition and performance of symphonic music in the United States.

Among the recipients are the symphony orchestras of Dallas, Utah (Salt Lake City), St. Louis, New Orleans and Buffalo. These orchestras, under their regular conductors, will move to nearby universities where they plan to present well-rehearsed first performances of symphonic works by American composers, and cooperate in workshops for outstanding music students.

Most of the grants range from $8,000 to $20,000.

BSO Included

Special curriculum of the Rockefeller Foundation is a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra throughout its 1964-1965 season.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has selected John Huggler as the orchestra's composer - in -residence. Huggler is presently a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University.

What looked like a press release from one of the more rampant jazz festivals actually came from the sedate sanctum of the Berkshire Music Festival, now in progress at Tanglewood.

In case you're concerned over your physical and material protection, be advised that Pinkerton's National Detective Agency is helping local and state police in assisting Tanglewood audiences and visitors this summer.

The Pinkerton force consists of four men under the direction of J.C. Bearden, supervisor of security, and under the supervision of James Kiley, supintendent of Tanglewood.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
ADVERTISER
W. 39.298

JUL 16 1964 Rockefeller

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

City Clarinetist First Composer in Residence

John Huggler, 35, a member of the Oklahoma City Symphony clarinet section for four years, has been chosen the Boston Symphony's first composer in residence.

A Rockefeller Foundation grant of $13,000 has been made to the Boston Symphony for this purpose. It is the initiation of a program by which other notable young composers may have an opportunity to spend a year in symphonic composition under the favorable conditions rendered by a composership in residence.

"If this work out" said conductor Erich Leinsdorf, of the Boston Symphony, "it should mean 20 composers in residence with 20 orchestras." He added, "The cost, by foundation standards, is small."

Huggler was born in Rochester, N.Y.; was graduated from Eastman School of Music; held a Guggenheim fellowship for a year in Rome in 1962-63; and has been most recently a graduate assistant in Cornell University's music department. Since leaving Oklahoma City, he has married and fathered two children.

Some of his music has been performed by the Oklahoma City Symphony under Conductor Guy Fraser Harrison.

"In one year with us," said conductor Leinsdorf, I think he can jump five, eight or 10 years in development. He will have access to our rehearsals, to our musicians, our library, the management, and me.

"And he is under no obligations. We'd hope, of course, that if he wrote something, we'd get first crack at it. But there are no strings attached."

Huggler was composing regularly while living in Oklahoma City, and once said here that the only principle of composition he followed was that of "infinite variation."

NewEnglandNe
Box 2078, Boston 6

Jewish BROOKL
Weekly

SEP 3

TO BE HON from the B
6:30 p.m.
will be hon
B. Cabot,
Goldstein w directed by of the mee event, to wh

NewEnglandNewsc
Box 2078, Boston 6 •

Evening
BOSTON,
Circ. 144

SEP 2

Temple O
Boston Sy
Leinsdorf
Symphony

ewEnglandNewsc
x 2078, Boston 6 •

Jewish T
BROOKLIN
Weekly C

OCT

HONORED was cited recognitio
Albert S.
Cabot, pr
Prager, n
Conserva

168

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,500

JUL 1 1 1964

Rockefeller Grant to Boston Symphony To Provide for Composer-in-Residence

Mr. Henry B. Cabot, President of the Trustees of the Boston symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation for a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston symphony throughout its 1964-1965 season. The grant was made under the Foundation's Cultural Development program, to allow a young composer to observe the many musical facets of a busy symphony orchestra. At the same time the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra will have the opportunity to become well acquainted with the musical thinking of the composer.

In acknowledging the Rockefeller grant, Mr. Cabot said, "The Rockefeller Foundation grant provdes the Boston Symphony Orhcestra and a young composer with a unique opportunity. This will be a great challenge for all of us concerned, and we are extremely grateful to the Foundation for selecting the Orchestra for this pilot program."

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known at the time of Mr. Cabot's announcement that he has selected John Huggler as the Orchestra's composer-in-residence under the Rockefeller grant. "The basic philosophy behind the idea of having a composer-in-residence with an orchestra for a twelve-month period is the same as that which brought painters to Paris," Mr. Leinsdorf said. "The composer-in-residence would first of all live with a symphony orchestra and get to know it more intimately than is possible any other way. From an intimate acquaintance will come, I am confident, novel concepts of orchestra sonority which in the past have always been created by those composers who were, as performers, intimately associated with orchestras. The composer would have the opportunity during his year's residence to ask that specific ideas of his be tried out for his benefit, either by individual members of the orchestra demonstrating specific instrumental effects, or even part of a rehearsal being given to a trial of something he may wish to test," Mr. Leinsdorf continued. "Mr. Huggler has impressed me as a composer and person most appropriate to be the right individual, who is willing and able to meet the challenge, for a year as composer-in-residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We shall endeavor in the coming year to make this pioneer venture a notable achievement in the development of the contemporary musical scene."

John Huggler is presently a Graduate Assistant in the Music Department of Cornell University. Though no plans have been formulated for his composing a work during the next season, the Rockefeller grant will allow Mr. Huggler to gain a first-hand knowledge of an orchestra, an experience which may prove to be of greater value to music than would be the commissioning of a single composition. Mr. Huggler is a native of Rochester, New York, and received a Bachelor of Music from the Eastman School of Music. He has also studied with Otto Gombosi and Dante Fiorello. For four years he performed as a clarinetist with the Oklahoma City Symphony and was a Guggenheim Fellow in Rome during 1962-1963. He has composed several works for orchestra in addition to a considerable amount of chamber music. Mr. Huggler, who is 35, is the father of two children. He plans to move to Boston early in September for the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eighty-fourth season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 102,435

JUL 1 9 1964

Rockefeller Grants

The Rockefeller Foundation has devised a plan and made substantial financial appropriations to encourage the composition and performance of symphonic music in the United States.

Among the recipients are the symphony orchestras of Dallas, Utah (Salt Lake City), St. Louis, New Orleans and Buffalo. These orchestras, under their regular conductors, will move to nearby universities where they plan to present well-rehearsed first performances of symphonic works by American composers, and cooperate in workshops for outstanding music students.

Most of the grants range from $8,000 to $20,000.

BSO Included

Special curriculum of the Rockefeller Foundation is a pilot program enabling a composer to be in residence with the Boston Symphony Orchestra throughout its 1964-1965 season.

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has selected John Huggler as the orchestra's composer - in -residence. Huggler is presently a graduate assistant in the music department of Cornell University.

What looked like a press release from one of the more rampant jazz festivals actually came from the sedate sanctum of the Berkshire Music Festival, now in progress at Tanglewood.

In case you're concerned over your physical and material protection, be advised that Pinkerton's National Detective Agency is helping local and state police in assisting Tanglewood audiences and visitors this summer.

The Pinkerton force consists of four men under the direction of J.C. Bearden, supervisor of security, and under the supervision of James Kiley, supintendent of Tanglewood.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
ADVERTISER
W. 39,298

JUL 16 1964

FOR BOSTON SYMPHONY

City Clarinetist First Composer in Residence

John Huggler, 35, a member of the Oklahoma City Symphony clarinet section for four years, has been chosen the Boston Symphony's first composer in residence.

A Rockefeller Foundation grant of $13,000 has been made to the Boston Symphony for this purpose. It is the initiation of a program by which other notable young composers may have an opportunity to spend a year in symphonic composition under the favorable conditions rendered by a composership in residence.

"If this work out" said conductor Erich Leinsdorf, of the Boston Symphony, "it should mean 20 composers in residence with 20 orchestras." He added, "The cost, by foundation standards, is small."

Huggler [illegible] in Rochester, N.Y.; was graduated from Eastman School of Music; held a Guggenheim fellowship for a year in Rome in 1962-63; and has been most recently a graduate assistant in Cornell University's music department. Since leaving Oklahoma City, he has married and fathered two children.

Some [illegible] his music has been [illegible] the Oklahoma City [illegible] Conductor Guy Fraser [illegible].

"In [illegible] year with us," said conductor Leinsdorf, I think he can jump five, eight or 10 years in development. He will have access to our rehearsals, to our musicians, our library, the management, and me.

"And he is under no obligations. We'd hope, of course, that if he wrote something, we'd get first crack at it. But there are no strings attached."

Huggler was composing regularly while living in Oklahoma City, and once said here that the only principle of composition he followed was that of "infinite variation."

MISCELLANEOUS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,000

TO BE HONORED--Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will receive a citation from the Brotherhood Temple Ohabei Shalom, Brookline, at a Dinner Meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 22 at 6:30 p.m. at the Temple Hall. According to Stanley Brown, president of Brotherhood, Mr. Leinsdorf will be honored for his outstanding contribution to the world of music. Principal speaker will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Rabbi Albert S. Goldstein will also speak. The program will include members of the New England Conservatory Chorus, directed by Lorna Cooke deVaron, conductor, with Alex Zimmer as soloist with the chorus. Chairman of the meeting is Brotherhood Past President, A. Fred Prager. Some 700 are expected to attend the event, to which wives are also invited.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

SEP 23 1964

Conductor Is Honored

Temple Ohabei Shalom honored Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf (second from right) and Symphony official Henry B. Cabot (second from left) Tuesday. Temple Pres. Stanley Brown (left) and Chairman A. Fred Prager (right), directed the ceremony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 10,450

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

OCT 1 1964

HONORED BY T.O.S. MEN--Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was cited at the recent Dinner Meeting of the Brotherhood of Temple Ohabei Shalom, Brookline, in recognition of his contributions to the musical world. Participating included (left to right): Rabbi Albert S. Goldstein, spiritual leader of the Temple; Stanley Brown, Brotherhood president; Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Mr. Leinsdorf; A. Fred Prager, meeting chairman; and Cantor Alex Zimmer, who performed as soloist with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

SEP 23 1964

Erich Leinsdorf Cited At Brotherwood Fete

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was honored last night by the 700 members of the Brotherhood of Temple Ohabei Shalom, Beacon street, Brookline, at their annual dinner.

Leinsdorf was presented a plaque inscribed, "for meritorious service in advancing the highest tradition of the performing arts."

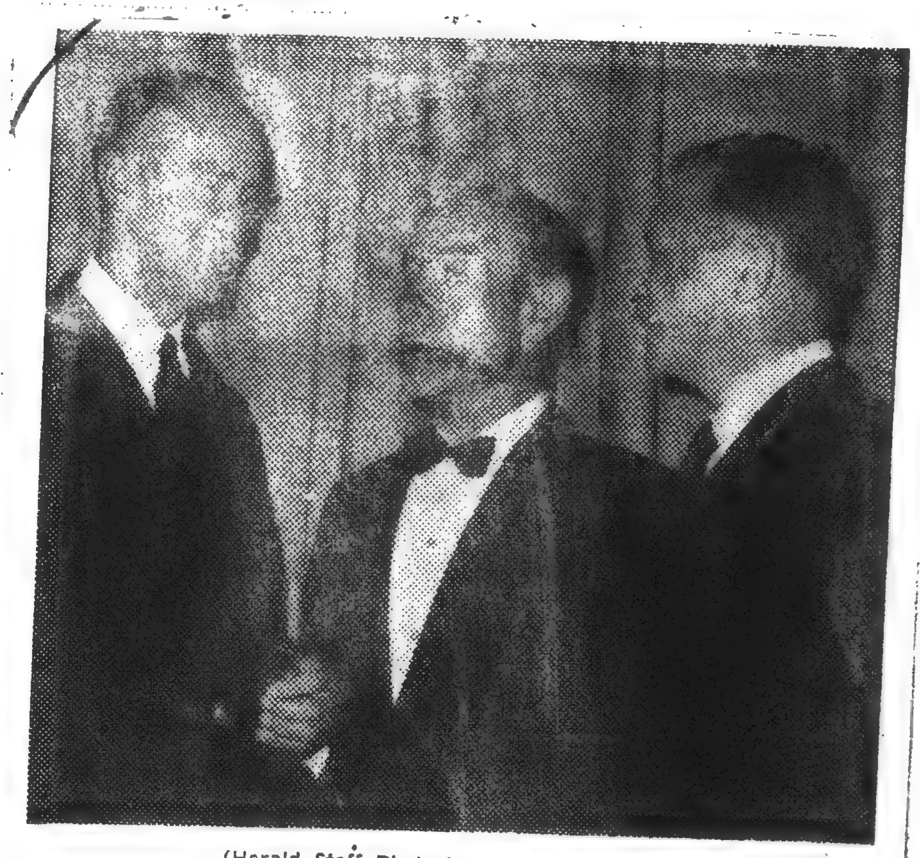
The program included a greeting by Governor Peabody and selections by the New England Conservatory Chorus, directed by Lorna Cooke deVaron. The principal speaker was Henry B. Cabot president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other head table guests were Chief Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Supreme Court, a trustee of the orchestra; Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops; Dr. Edward Gilday, conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society; A. Fred Prager, dinner chairman, and Stanley Brown, president of the brotherhood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,889

SEP 23 1964



(Herald Staff Photo by Ronald Donovan)

LEINSDORF HONORED—Erich Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony conductor, chats with guests and members of Brotherhood of Temple Ohabei Shalom after receiving annual award last night. From left Henry B. Cabot, Leinsdorf and A. Fred Prager.

Erich Leinsdorf Is Honored At Brotherhood Annual Fete

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was honored last night by the 700 members of the Brotherhood of Temple Chabei Shalom, Beacon street, Brookline, at their annual dinner.

Leinsdorf was presented a plaque inscribed, "for meritorious service in advancing the highest tradition of the performing arts."

The program included a greeting by Governor Peabody and selections by the New England Conservatory Chorus, directed by Lorna Cooke deVaron. The principal speaker was Henry B. Cabot president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Other head table guests were Chief Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Supreme Court, a trustee of the orchestra; Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops; Dr. Edward Gilday, conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society; A. Fred Prager, dinner chairman, and Stanley Brown, president of the brotherhood.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

SEP 17 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,000

SEP 17 1964

TO HONOR CONDUCTOR -- Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, (seated), meets with Brotherhood Temple Ohabei Shalom officers to discuss details of the Brotherhood's Sept. 22 meeting at the Temple Hall, 1187 Beacon Street, Brookline, when a citation will be presented to Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Cabot will be principal speaker of the evening. Rabbi Albert S. Goldstein will also speak, and Cantor Alex Zimmer will be a soloist with the New England Conservatory Chorus, under the direction of Lorna Cooke deVaron. Shown with Mr. Cabot are, (from left): Stanley Brown, Brotherhood president and A. Fred Prager, meeting chairman.

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

SEP 8 1964

Ohabei Shalom Men to Honor BSO Conductor

Erich Leinsdorf, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will receive a citation from Brotherhood Temple Ohabei Shalom, Brookline, at a dinner meeting on Tuesday, Sept. 22 at 6:30 p.m. at the Temple Hall. Stanley Brown will preside.

ERICH LEINSDORF

Principal speaker will be Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Rabbi Albert S. Goldstein will also address the estimated 700 who will attend.

Participating in the program will be members of the famed New England Conservatory Chorus, performing under the direction of Lorna Cooke de-Varon, with Cantor Alex Zimmer as soloist. Chairman of the meeting is Brotherhood Past President A. Fred Prager. The Brotherhood has made provision for wives of members to also attend the dinner.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586

SEP 27 1964

Robert Taylor's Notes

Eighth Symphony By Walter Piston Due This Winter

By ROBERT TAYLOR

With the opening of the 84th season of The Boston Symphony Orchestra comes announcement that Walter Piston has been commissioned by the orchestra, that he has been working on a new symphony and that the Eighth will be played during the second half of the winter season.

The tidings are, naturally, bright, and indicative of the determination of Mr. Leinsdorf to make the BSO serve a creative function of the broadest potential scope. The text of the announcement adds:

"Mr. Piston revealed that in his discussions with Erich Leinsdorf he had proposed several possibilities concerning the form of the new piece. The composer suggested a symphony, various concerti, a Concerto Grosso, or symphonic variations.

"Mr. Piston indicated, however, that he had a strong desire to do a symphony because of his great pleasure in hearing the performance of his Symphony No. 7 by The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Mr. Leinsdorf's first concert as Music Director, on September 21, 1962. With agreement concluded, Mr. Piston began work on his Symphony No. 8 this past summer."

MR. LEINSDORF spoke of the new commission as an expression of esteem on the part of the orchestra and its director, honoring a distinguished American composer in his 70th year; and Walter Piston stated that, on his part, he had been won over by Mr. Leinsdorf's appeal 'to write us something to play.'

"I like to write music that people want to play," Mr. Piston continued, "and particularly for The Boston Symphony Orchestra with whom I grew up." The new symphony, he said, would be in three movements.

In the customary exchange of courtesies, we may note a few significant facts. First, Mr. Piston's commensensical attitude toward his selection; second, the long-term association of the orchestra and the creative artist, third, the fact that the composer is already at work and a specific time period has been defined.

WALTER PISTON

OF ALL OUR outstanding composers Piston seems to operate best within the terms imposed by commission. His Second (if we remember right) was commissioned by Columbia University; his Symphony No. 3 by the Koussevitzky Foundation; his Symphony No. 4 by the University of Minnesota, and No. 7 by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The point is small, but perhaps significant when we recall the array of commissions awarded in celebration of The Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary. Some were executed in the most perfunctory way; indeed, one prominent American composer simply revised an earlier piece. Which seemed to me dodging a responsibility, although the man may have been overburdened at the time.

Others came straggling onto the programs through the years. Just last February we heard Leonard Bernstein's "Kaddish," which was certainly a belated response. If these commissions were to celebrate an anniversary they failed their purpose.

THE PROBLEM of commissioned music is a delicate issue. Expecting every composer to confirm to limitations of time is not practical. You can't tell a creative talent to cut out a symphony of a concerto the way a teilor fashions a suit to a client.

Yet this is precisely what Mr. Piston does, and I would consider it, within the homely confines of the artisan's analogy, a thoroughly professional approach. He himself has declared the essential fact that he confronts:

"Each new work is for me the start of a new problem, a new adventure the outcome of which I am never able to predict. It is in a sense another study towards the perfect balance between expression and form."

The imponderable, the unpredictable element—I shall not attempt to speculate on Mr. Piston's secret. Yet we live in a world where the Esterhazys have been replaced by the institutional grant. Walter Piston has adapted to the new culture successfully without impairing his imaginative powers. Not all can do it, still it makes one wonder about our concepts of inspiration which linger from the romantics. At 70 Mr. Piston remains among our most inspired, and comissioned, art-

---

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 98,547

SEP 27 1964

Piston To Compose W[illegible] For Boston Symp[illegible]

BOSTON (UPI)— Maine [illegible] composer Walter Piston [illegible] write a symphony for the [illegible] ton Symphony Orchestra's [illegible] season, it was announce[illegible] day.

The three-part work [illegible] ton's eighth in the sy[illegible] form and will be [illegible] during the second half [illegible] orchestra's new season [illegible] opened Friday.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

SPT 6 1964

FROM SPACE PROPULSION TO FIRST VIOLIST IN BSO

By HOWARD KLEIN

HOW do you become principal violist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra? It's easy. Work as a research chemist for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Cleveland for eight years, get into the Boston orchestra as a last-desk second violinist, then, when the principal violist announces he is leaving Boston to join the Philadelphia Orchestra, audition for his job and get it.

This may not be the only route to follow, but it is the one 24-year-old Burton Fine chose, and it worked. He takes over as principal violist this fall when Joseph de Pasquale moves to Philadelphia. Mr. Fine's winning the post came as a surprise to everyone except himself, for he was confident of his chances.

This past year was not only his first with the Boston Symphony, it was his first as a professional musician. But his career in music was well founded. He studied violin with Ivan Galamian for five years in Philadelphia, four of them as a student at Curtis Institute of Music.

Because his parents were against a musical career, the 18-year-old Curtis graduate accepted a scholarship to the University of Pennsylvania where he majored in physical chemistry. At the age of 24 he had his Ph. D. from the Illinois Institute of Technology, and that same year—1955—he got a job with NASA in Cleveland.

Mr. Fine, a baby-faced man with greenish eyes, short, fine black hair and hesitating speech, disparaged his scientific work during a break in an orchestra rehearsal at Tanglewood recently.

A Job

"I worked on problems of aircraft and space propulsion," he said. "Just before I left NASA I was in flame sampling. But I'm not a research man, I'm not an original thinker in the field. I always knew my career would be in music. What I had was a job."

The violin had never been abandoned completely. While in Cleveland with NASA, Mr. Fine played in the string quartet that provides music for the Sunday services of the local Unitarian Church, which has Robert Shaw as its musical director. Besides forming the nucleus of instrumentalists for Byrd and Bach choral works, the group played movements of quartets by Beethoven, Haydn, Bartók and Piston.

An advertisement taken by the Boston Symphony in the International Musician attracted Mr. Fine's attention. A position in the second-violin section was open. He wrote to Rosario Mazzeo, the personnel manager, who sent a telegram back on a Monday saying the auditions were that Wednesday. (The ad Mr. Fine saw was two weeks old.)

He took Tuesday off and practiced, went to Boston on Wednesday and got the job. He was notified of this in February 1963 and reported to work the following September.

Then in December it was learned that Mr. de Pasquale was leaving. Auditions were set for January. Mr. Fine started practicing viola with gusto. In the month between announcement and audition he had accomplished what he set out to do—he won the audition.

Burton Fine

Got his job through an ad

Some string players feel playing violin and viola is incompatible because of the difference in left-hand finger-extension in the low positions. But Mr. Fine agrees with Oscar Shumsky, a violinist teaching at the Juilliard School of Music, who shows that both can be played by giving programs for solo violin and viola.

"In fact," Mr. Fine suggests, "digging in on the viola will help your violin tone if you have trouble getting into the string. It's true, you can become too used to playing one or the other, but a little practice loosens you up. It is less demanding to be a violist, also, because you don't need a Paganini technique."

Although he would not discuss exact figures, Mr. Fine stated that leaving NASA for the Boston orchestra had meant a slight reduction in income. But when he begins leading the viola section in September he'll be making a little more than previously.

Flutist Wife

"I didn't even tell June when I sent that first letter to the orchestra," he said. June is his wife, who is a flutist. They have two boys. "I told her about it when I got the telegram, though. She was pleased with the idea. Some Cleveland Orchestra men had told me to go ahead, and it was then or never. We both felt the same way about it. June said 'You have almost no chance of getting the job, so why not get it out of your system?'"

He did. NASA lost a research chemist and the Boston Symphony got a new first violist.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Boston 02105 - 742-4200

QUINCY, MASS.
Patriot-Ledger
Eve. Circ. 4 ,932

SEP 24 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Sunday Globe
Sun. Circ. 43 ,105

SEP 27 1964

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,093

New Piston commission

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that it has commissioned Walter Piston to compose a new work for orchestra, which will be performed in the second half of the winter season. Mr. Piston revealed that in his discussions with Erich Leinsdorf, music director, he had proposed several possibilities concerning the form of the new piece. Mr. Piston indicated, however, that he had a strong desire to do a symphony, and thus began work on his Symphony No. 8 this past summer.

Speaking of the new commission Mr. Leinsdorf said, "As an expression of our warm good wishes for Mr. Piston's 70th year, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has asked the composer for a new work on a commission basis."

"I like to write music," Mr. Piston explained, "that people want to play and particularly for the Boston Symphony Orchestra with whom I grew up." The composer also stated that the new Symphony No. 8 will be in three movements.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

SEP 25 1964

At Boston Symphony 50 & 25 Years Ago

The first pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony season 50 years ago, 1914-15, was conducted by Dr. Karl Muck. The program was Beethoven's "Eroica"; the Brahms Haydn Variations; Strauss' "Don Juan"; and Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture.

The first pair of Boston Symphony concerts 25 years ago, 1939-40, was conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The program was d'Indy's Symphonic Variations "Istar"; Debussy's "La Mer"; and Beethoven's "Eroica".

That year, Koussevitzky prefaced the regular season with two concerts "in honor of the American Composer." At the first of these he lead Arthur Foote's Suite in E for Strings; excerpts from Deems Taylor's Suite, "Through the Looking-Glass"; the "Angelus", from Henry Hadley's Third Symphony; "Skyscrapers", a ballet of American Life, by John Alden Carpenter, with Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin as soprano and tenor soloists; and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony.

The second of these special programs began with the premiere of the "American Festival Overture" by William Schuman, and continued with the Gershwin Piano Concerto played by Abram Chasins; the Symphony No. 3 by Roy Harris; and Randall Thompson's Symphony No. 2.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

SEP 24 1964

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Leinsdorf Cites Danger To Artist in Easy Life

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions)

On the platform as on the podium, Erich Leinsdorf is impressive. He speaks simply and comes to the point directly. At a dinner tendered in his honor by Temple Ohabei Shalom of Brookline, he made the point that he does not intend to be trapped on "the dinner circuit" and suggested that other artists had better stay away, too. He believes, he said, that America has "taken the cultural leadership away from Europe," that we have great potential, great raw material, great artists in the making here "not only in music, but in literature and in painting." But these are in danger from "middle class living" and if they hope to succeed as artists they had better guard against it.

"Middle class living" he described as easy living, the life of comfort and of adulation; of the dinner circuit.

Elliot Norton

Today, said Director Leinsdorf, artists have become fashionable. Never before has their been so much adulation for musicians. They are feted and awarded. Honors are bestowed on them. This, he admitted, is pleasant and heartening. But it isn't good for the serious artists, because it will keep him from his work.

In the time of his life, he said, he has seen a good many promising artists begin a career in a burst of creativity which ended when they succumbed to "middle class living."

Their successors, the young men who are ready and willing and able to make careers in the arts had better learn now that "a Spartan outlook is necessary" for the kind of success that endures.

TOTAL DEDICATION

His own kind of work, he said, involves a total dedication to music for "twenty-four hours of the day and fifty-two weeks of the year." Anything less would be too little Standing up in front of the orchestra, in the actual process of conducting, would seem to the layman to be the principal work of a music director. Mr. Leinsdorf pointed out that his duty and that of others in comparable positions is vast and endless, requiring total dedication.

"We have," he pointed out "three centuries of music to consider and to study." From that great body of work, the conductor must select the best and make a prodigious effort of a true interpretation. This is his real task.

The composer puts his heart and his art into a great work, a symphony perhaps. The conductor must examine it carefully, with sympathy and sensitivity and in the greatest detail in order to understand.

That the composer's intention is clearly stated in the procession of notes on the printed manuscript, he denied; it must be sought, determined by insight and by effort.

What he says makes sense, and it applies in the theater as well as in music. We lose playwrights to "middle class living" almost every season. Having struggled to popular success, they become occupied with enjoying the public and private life of a popular writer. When they get down to work again, they have little to say.

The good ones have followed "the Spartan way" of life. Eugene O'Neill did, and he is still our greatest playwright. Tennessee Williams allowed himself to become a lion at parties in New York after the success of "A Streetcar Named Desire," but recognized the truth after a few months and quietly left for a small town in Mexico, where he could get back to working hard every day, which he has done ever since.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 438,953

OCT 24 1965

Mrs. Leinsdorf Under Surgery

Mrs. Anne Leinsdorf, wife of Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, underwent major surgery at Beth Isarel Hospital Saturday.

Mrs. Leinsdorf is the former Anne Frohnknecht of New York City. The Leindorfs were married in 1939 and have five children.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,177

OCT 26 1965

Thorndike Named BSO Treasurer

BOSTON — John Thorndike has been named treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to succeed Richard C. Paine, who is retiring after a tenur of 20 years.

Mr. Thorndike is a native of Chestnut Hill and a graduate of Harvard College, where he is assistant to the treasurer.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 22 1964

Creative Criticism

To the Editor of The Herald:

Music critics could use an association of ideas to make clearer to the public the character of a new music composition.

For example the Eliot Carter boondoggle (presented by the BSO Oct. 10) could be described as "much ado about nothing."

The Berger creation (presented by the BSO Oct. 3) could aptly be called "a short circuit."

Many of last year's crop of new musical ragweeds could be termed "flat tires" while others could best be described as "big noises' and-or "blowhards."

I think that such an association of ideas would make clearer to the public the character of the music that the critics labor to describe.

EDWARD BERNARD
Dorchester

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

OCT 21 1964

★ ★ ★

BOSTONIANS ARE buying out Symphony tomorrow night for the London Symphony. Perhaps it's a sentimental tribute to the late beloved Pierre Monteux (BSO conductor 1919-24). All oldsters of spirit should remember his comment when at 86 he was given permanent appointment as conductor of the London Symphony.

"This contract is for 25 years," he said. "I insist on an option for a further 25 years."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

OCT 31 1964

Today in Soc

Follou Greet

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Even before they crossed Huntington av. to greet Sir John Barbirolli at Symphony Hall Friday, a great many of his erudite audience felt that they knew him well, thanks to the B.S.O.'s wise and witty Harry Ellis Dickson.

Speaking at Mrs. Anthony Kutten's symphony luncheon at the Midtown, violinist Dickson, who conducts this morning the opening concert of the youth series he founded, now in its sixth season, enthralled Boston symphony-goers with glimpses of rehearsals with Sir John, the orchestra breaking into applause after each practice. Sir John was a cellist at 11.

The luncheon was in honor of the music of Britain and special guests included Her Majesty's man in Boston, Consul General John N. O. Curle, who spoke with knowledgeable interest of music both here and in England before joining Mrs. Kutten and Mrs. Curle at the flag and flower-decked head table, where other guests included Dr. Edward Eames, president of the English-Speaking Union, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon and Mrs. George Bemis, who are among the few women in Boston to be awarded the Order of the British Empire. Diggory Venn, representing the Museum of Fine Arts, and Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Arker-Simmons.

A capsule history of the music of England from the 12th century to contemporary composers made absorbing listening and series subscribers to the luncheons shared their tables so that extra guests could be welcomed.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02105 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

OCT 2 1964

Today in Soci

Semina To Beg

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Seminars on Symphony, to be given under the able aegis of the New England Conservatory of Music, will begin Oct. 9. These symphony analyses will be made by conservatory staff members and will stress a major work to be performed that afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The series will be sponsored by the Friends of the Conservatory, who first joined forces in the early 1950's to raise funds for student scholarships, and now include more than 600 active volunteers.

172

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Sunday Journal
Sun. Circ. 194,795

OCT -4 1964

BOSTON SYMPHONY conductor Erich Leinsdorf relaxes at home with wife and daughters, Jennifer and Hester.

Even Leinsdorf Doesn't Like To Hear Youngsters Practice

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

FATHERS, TAKE HEART! You are not alone! Erich Leinsdorf can't stand the sound of his children's practicing, either. Amazing as this forthright admission may sound, is it not understandable, since his job requires him to hear composite sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's practicing? This is enough.

It all came about when I asked Mr. Leinsdorf what his children were doing in music. It was my privilege to have an interview at Symphony Hall with the renowned conductor this week, at the close of a morning rehearsal. The conversation flew fast and furiously around the subject of musical education in this country.

Make no mistake about it, Leinsdorf believes in the value of practicing and practicing hard. He thinks that the best teaching of music in the world is being done at the present time in this country, that there is no longer a pressing need to go to Europe to find it and that the greatest need of the colleges and conservatories here is better students. The finest teacher is of no use without a student eager to work.

To get back to the Leinsdorf children, Jennifer, the youngest, who is 12, plays viola "quite well," in her father's estimation. She and her sister Hester, 15, are students at Beaver Country Day School in Boston. The viola practicing can go on in the Leinsdorf home in Brookline, in a room far removed from any area where it might be overheard. There was genuine fatherly pride in the modest admission about Jenny.

Leinsdorf is sure that Leopold Mozart stood over Wolfgang and made him practice. Leinsdorf said, "It is very nice to be liberal but nobody wants to hear practicing. No parent wants to stand behind a child like a harridan and scold constantly. Practicing is an acquired taste. Nobody is born liking Martini's. This is also an acquired taste." He is sure that there is no substitute for the old-fashioned European mother who would sit with her knitting while the practicing was going on. She would say, "You don't get up. Sit down and get to work." And she would follow her own advice by turning again to her knitting. Mothers, you are elected!

Joshua Leinsdorf, now 18, is an undergraduate at Columbia and his musical activity is limited to "having subscriptions to musical events in New York." No mention of music in connection with Gregor, 20, who dropped out of college after two years but who is doing well in the business world, or with David, 22, who is now at Columbia, a graduate student of law.

The wholesome trend in the scientific universities toward an interest in the arts came in for short discussion. The excellence of the musical advantages of Massachusetts Institute of Technology were praised. The fine accomplishments in music at some of the Midwestern universities came in for appraisal—Indiana and Illinois. Southern California also was mentioned.

Leinsdorf is aware of the value of the general college requirements in the humanities. Yet he wants no sacrifice of professional training where talent has been demonstrated.

We talked about concert halls and their relative merit. Leinsdorf is sure that any hall which has perfect acoustical properties is no accident. His reasoning is based on the fact that such halls were frequently built in the 18th and 19th centuries and "too infrequently" in the 20th. It was recalled that Colonel Higginson, through whose efforts the Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded, commissioned a young Harvard professor of physics, to have charge of the problems pertaining to acoustics when Symphony Hall was built. Herein lies the secret, according to Leinsdorf. "Today there are too many experts consulted. Wood is no longer wood. It must be fireproofed. Chairs are cushioned with soft material which tends to produce stuffiness in an auditorium." He does not require his listeners to sit on a "bed of nails" but thinks that the closeness of the rows in Symphony Hall and the type of chair construction, even though it is not modern, are preferable to contemporary elegance.

The change of day for the Providence concerts is pleasing to Leinsdorf. He will conduct four of the five concerts of the series and will be on the podium on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 11, at 3:30, at Veterans Memorial Auditorium ready for the exact program which opened the Friday afternoon series in Boston 10 days ago.

We are to hear the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms, Symphony No. 1 by Shostakovitch and the Pastorale Symphony by Beethoven.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,729

SEP 9 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,553

SEP 8 196

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 48,932

SEP 5 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Record-American
M/E Circ. 441,310

SEP 9 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

SEP 8 1964

Boston Symphony Adds Wednesday Eve Concerts

The Boston Symphony will add a one-year three-concert series to its scheduled subscription concerts in Symphony Hall during the 1964-1965 season, the Orchestra's 84th year, according to Thomas D. Perry, manager. The new concerts will be given on Wednesday evenings in Symphony Hall, and be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

In announcing the Wednesday series Perry said:

"For the coming season the Orchestra has had many more ticket applications for the present six series of concerts in Symhony Hall than we could fill. We are now giving concert series on Fridays, Saturdays, Sundays, two series on Tuesdays, and Thursdays.

Naturally we are delighted at the interest in the orchestra. In order to accommodate these people and others in the Boston area who desire to hear the orchestra, we have added this new series of three Wednesday concerts. At present we are announcing the new series for this season only."

Speaking for the Boston Symphony's trustees, Henry B. Cabot, president, said:

"The Trustees are pleased that the services and dates were available, and we have decided to try the new series of concerts for one year. The decision to inaugurate the Wednesday concerts enables us to present the orchestra to a new audience of the growing musical public of Boston."

The Wednesday concerts will be given on Nov. 25, Jan. 27, and Apr. 14.

They will bring to a total of 79 the subscription concerts given by the orchestra in Boston during the 31-week season. Subscription for the three Wednesday concerts are now available at $13, $11, $9, [illegible] $4.50. Those interested in making applications for the concerts may write direct to the Subscription Office, Box [illegible], Symphony Hall, Boston 021[illegible]

The Boston Symphony's 84 season will begin with a concert conducted by Leinsdorf in Symhony Hall Friday afternoon, Sept. 25.

173

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
129,391

OCT 2 4 1964

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2070, Boston 02106 – 742-4200

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Republican
Sun. Circ. 114,397

NOV 8 1964

THE MUSIC BOX

Now Leinsdorf's Law

By Irving Kolodin

AS EVERYBODY knows, a profound statement on any subject is usually memorialized by being credited to the person who propounded it . . . as in the case of Gresham's Law on money, Mendl's Law of genetics, Parkinson's Law on employment, etc.

Now we have Leinsdorf's Law on acoustics, and it is irrefutable. After scouting the new interior of Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center in preparation for the season's first visits there of the Boston Symphony, of which he is music director, Erich Leinsdorf pronounced himself as pleased, then stated his Law: "It is easier to fix a bad hall than to build a good one."

What makes it a law is not merely in the fact that it is true: many true statements are of limited applicability. But Leinsdorf's statement has had so many demonstrations in the postwar era of construction that its applicability may be termed universal. And that is what makes it a law.

Before he is willing to accept it, however, the layman is apt to inquire: "All right. So it is easier to fix a bad hall than to build a good one. But why?" Leinsdorf, I am sure, could provide all the relevant reasons, but in the absence of immediate contact with him, I can venture a few on my own.

First and foremost is the fact the original acoustician is the one who makes the first guess. It is he who has to take the specifications of the sponsors — the number of seats required, the size of the plot available, the ideas of space and decor that are invariably attached to a sponsoring committee's vision of what it wants — and come up with a plan for which he has reasonable hopes of success. He can, and generally does, tell the sponsors what he knows won't work: the kinds of depths and heights that make for acoustical traps, induce deadness, echo and screeching kinds of distortion. But he is also required to make decisions as to what will work, and these, obviously, are fraught with danger — especially as it is now clear that the man who started a pilgrimage to concert halls all over the world because he read that he practiced "an inexact science", couldn't make an exact science of it himself.

However, once the hall is up and has been found in one way or another to be wanting, the situation is radically altered. The sponsor can no longer stand firm on his cherished ideas of decor and materials and even stage design, because the word has gotten around that the results are below par. It is now necessary for the patient to have an operation in order to live, and a specialist in such organic complaints is called in. He looks over the X-rays (graphs of sound response), puts a stethoscope (audiometer) to the patient, and decides where surgery is required. The interior loses the equivalent of an appendix, or perhaps a skin graft is required to amend a rough spot, or maybe a prosthetic device (a steel plate in the head, or a plastic bit in a knee joint) is prescribed. In any case, the family (sponsors) are so deeply concerned that the patient may expire that they will accept any alternative, no matter how drastic or costly. When the invalid is on his feet again — or at least able to function with the prescribed assistance — the excesses that caused the complaint in the first place are likely to be forgotten.

However, one thing that Leinsdorf's Law doesn't explain is this: "Why is it that an acoustician who can prescribe the cure for another's ailing building can't do as well with his own?" For the same reason, no doubt, that when doctors become ill, they go to another doctor and don't try to diagnose their own ailment.

Boston's Eric Leinsdorf

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUN. 339,703

OCT 1 1 1964

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

The Roles of Critic and Conductor Key to Controversy in Boston

By IRVING LOWENS
Star Music Critic

Last season, after Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra had performed some Wagnerian snippets in Symphony Hall, Michael Steinberg, music critic of the Boston Globe, stirred up a small storm by suggesting that the conductor was doing the composer a distinct disservice.

Without voices, Steinberg felt that an evocative dramatic selection from Die Walkuere was distorted into a "shapelessly repetitive gallop that finally just peters out at some arbitrary point."

This sort of performance made Wagner seem like merely a masterful orchestrator and not one of the world's great creative spirits.

"It's the worst kind of misrepresentation," said the critic.

The Conductor's Analysis

Some weeks later, Leinsdorf was offered the Globe's Sunday music page in order to state his side of the case. The result was a thought-provoking piece on the roles of critic, composer, and performer as the conductor saw them, and his remarks are worth paraphrasing.

Leinsdorf viewed the musical cosmos as divided into three parts (the creative, the critical, and the performing) each fulfilling a different function.

Representing the creative function was the composer, who was "not only entitled, but almost compelled to hold one-sided subjective views about every musical issue."

Representing the critical function was the music critic, who had to "hold his standards up to the community. These standards are absolutely his; and by the kind of standards he has, he will be a factor in the cultural life of his city."

Conflict Beneficial

And representing the performing function was the conductor, who was forced by necessity to "weigh critical standards against possibilities, conditions, desiderata, and, to put it in a nutshell, public demand."

That there should be conflict Leinsdorf saw as not only inevitable, but as beneficial: "Their viewpoints need not agree if we are to have stimulating progress, growth, and agreement."

As to the immediate subject of disagreement, the conductor conceded that to present excerpts from Wagner as he had done was something less than the perfect way to present the composer. But he insisted that it was impracticable for the BSO to engage singers for the parts, and that it was unfair to deprive Boston of the opportunity to hear any of the Ring because the cycle could not be given in its entirety.

Defends Critic

It is interesting to note that even while defending his own action in programming the excerpts, Leinsdorf was just as vehement in defending the standards and the viewpoint of his critic.

"At all times the critic must be left completely undisturbed in the pursuit of his high, uncompromising standards," he wrote. "In my view it is foolish of performer and composer to take issue with criticism they do not like. The performer and composer make public careers and most of them have done so for centuries out of their own volition. They are public figures for better and for worse, and no one can expect to find only approval.

"The function of the composer is to compose. The function of the performer is to perform. And the function of the critic is to criticize.

"When the performer begins to criticize the critic, and when the composer begins to tell the performer how to perform, except when explaining his intentions, the branches of music disturb each other and run interference, with results that are less than beneficial.

Topic For Convention

"A critic has the right to a specialized taste. A composer has the right to completely eccentric tastes. The performer does not — particularly not the conductor of a modern symphony orchestra. He cannot say, 'I won't do 19th-century music,' or 'I shall do only such and such music.' He is responsible to his public. When in pursuit of that function, he is criticized, he should take that criticism with the same kind of resistance which a good boxer shows to a well-aimed punch."

This is a novel view, and while I by no means agree with it in every particular, I do hope that when the music critics of the country meet this week in annual convention in Montreal, they will spend more time grappling with this kind of problem than they have in previous years.

---

ds certs
ustees, Henry B. it, said:
es are pleased
ices and dates
, and we have the new series of e year. The de-inaugurate the ncerts enables us orchestra to a of the growing of Boston."

esday concerts on Nov. 25, Jan.
14.

ring to a total of ription concerts orchestra in Bose 31-week season.
for the three oncerts are now 13, $11, $9, $6.50, interested in cations for these write directly to
on Office, Box W, all, Boston 02115.
Symphony's 84th
egin with a cond by Leinsdorf in ll Friday after-

174

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 25 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,177

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 14,021

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times-Argus (e)
BARRE, Vermont
Circ. 11,577

NOV 2 7 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,214

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 13,499

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 2 5 1964

Galbraith, Cardinal Leinsdorf on JFK Memorial Group

Richard Cardinal Cushing, former Ambassador J. Kenneth Galbraith and Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf were among 11 persons appointed by Governor Peabody yesterday to a special commission that will determine a suitable memorial to President John F. Kennedy.

The commission was established earlier this year by the Legislature.

Others nominated by Peabody are:

Thomas J. White of Newton; Earl J. Riley of Peabody; Mrs. Amy Bess Miller of Pittsfield; Norman Knight of Natick; Miss Helen M. Keyes of Hull; Edgar Douglas Kenna Jr. of Beverly Farms; Daniel E. Hogan Jr. of Andover, and Paul Buck of Cambridge.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Morning Globe
Morn. Circ. 202,711

NOV 25 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

NOV 2 3 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 26,427

NOV 2 3 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 63,635

NOV

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 44,966

NOV 2 3 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 41,344

NOV 2 3 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 2 6 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 2 4 1964

Leinsdorf on Board Of Kennedy Center

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be sworn in by President Johnson as a Trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in ceremonies at the White House on Wednesday, Dec. 2. The oath-taking ceremony will be a part of the activities culminating with the ground breaking for the new Center in Washington and the annual meeting of the Center's Board of Trustees.

Prior to being named a Trustee of the Kennedy Center, Mr. Leinsdorf had been appointed by President Kennedy as a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center, subsequently renamed in memory of the late President. Mr. Leinsdorf will be the only conductor and only active performer on the new Board of Trustees of the Kennedy Center.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in Washington on November 30 and December 1, the two days prior to the Kennedy Center events, for concerts at Constitution Hall.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,551

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,819

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,177

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 27,550

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,884

NOV 2 5 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 41,182

NOV 2 5 1964

Bay State To Get Official Song

BOSTON (AP) — A five-man commission has been named to recommend an official state song for Massachusetts.

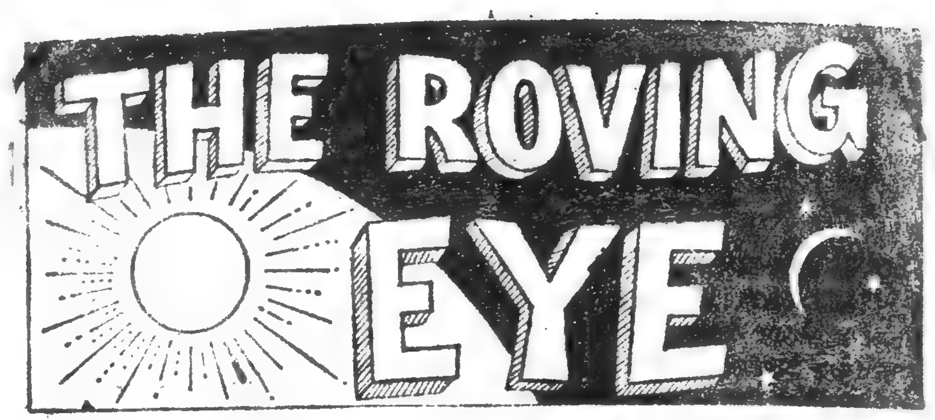
The commission, established by the state legislature, was named Tuesday by Gov. Endicott Peabody.

Members include Arthur Fiedler of Brookline, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf, of Brookline, Boston Symphony Orchestra music director.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Herald
Morn. Circ. 176,483

NOV 17 1964



New World Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE WOODWIND SECTION OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY OORCHESTRA

Gentlemen—and a filigreed curtsey in the direction of Doriot Anthony Dwyer—

Ever since we read that item in the Science section of last Sunday's Herald, we've been wondering. You know the one to which we refer, CLARINET OF GARDEN HOSE BLOWS JUST AS SWEET? Ever since that came out, we've been wondering how it will affect you, and indeed, if there's any truth in it.

Just in case you were practicing or performing last weekend when you might have been immersed in portents of things to come, let us refresh your memory. In the current "Journal of the Acoustical Society of America" a Dr. John Backus of the University of Southern California claims that the material of which a woodwind is made does not affect its tone.

★ ★ ★

AS PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS you are no doubt disposed to doubt Herr Backus' contention; metal clarinets are thought to have a dead, flat tone, and wooden flutes have lost their popularity, most now being manufactured of silver alloys, or pure silver, gold and platinum.

According to the professor, however, a length of plastic garden hose serves just as well. He constructed a clarinet from a quantity of this material. It is, of course, interesting to note in passing that hula hoops were once fashioned out of it; and that in time to come, one may join the Antique Instruments Collection at the Hall as a precursor of the modern woodwind.

In any case, Dr. Backus' experiments show that neither the elasticity of the material nor the sound made by its vibrations affect woodwind tone. He measured the strength of the sounds produced by the wall vibrations of instruments and found these much too small to contribute to the powerful sound of the air columns.

★ ★ ★

HE FURTHER EXPLORED the possible effect of the elasticity on tone by comparing the harmonics generated by brass and plastic tubes of approximately equal lengths and diameters. Although his equipment disclosed minute differences in the harmonics, his ear could detect none. The longer, plastic tubes gave higher harmonics and slightly smaller amplitudes than the long brass tubes, while the opposite was true for shorter tubes.

The sound made by the body vibrations was 40 decibels below that of the air column, an insignificant difference in terms of tone. Testing clarinets, flutes, oboes and bassoons, Dr. Backus measured vibration amplitudes and estimated the strength of the sound such vibrations would produce while the instruments played certain notes. He concluded that the vibration effect was too feeble to contribute to the sound of the instrument proper.

Well! You are probably asking yourself at this point the same question that occurred to us. How good is Dr. Backus' ear? Let us assume, however, that evidence is evidence. Obviously, since garden hose is a cheaper material than silver alloy, we are in for a revolution in instrument-making.

★ ★ ★

THE FIRST IMPACT will probably occur in the re-christening of your orchestral family. The wood will have to be linguistically cleared. Hose-winds strikes us as a clumsy compound, ungrateful to the ear, but a proper equivalent will undoubtedly be found. The garden flute and the garden oboe actually have a rather pleasant connotation; your playing will have more plasticity.

All is not lost. When you are not using your instruments to make music you can employ them, as suggested by Voltaire, to cultivate your garden. During certain scores, such as the Handel-Harty Water Music, the possiblities for implementing the composer's intentions are marvelous. Might a little faucet be rigged up near the conductor's stand so that Mr. Leinsdorf can observe a marking like "fontana giacosa" or "sprinkle con amore"? Dr. Backus has shown the way. Nevertheless, perhaps you're still speculating, as we are, about his ear.

The Sund
PHILADE
SUN.

NOV 2 2

Mrs. Ser

He
To

By NANCY
Of The Bu

THE GREAT
morials. Ofte bronze, marble few, like the Serge Kouss blessed enough vive them a pe
the devotion carry on his id

Olga Koussev of the Russia-who conducted Symphony Orc
years, is such a

Almost from
Dr. Koussevitz
1951, his widow rying out—away dium—the majo life: The encour port and recog temporary com

HER WORK through the Kou sic Foundation can Internationa
She is presiden through the yea
many miles in often to spend hours in a dar to hear a new sioned by the

She works fro
—a Manhattan
propriately loc
Lincoln Center
Hall, and "S
Koussevitzky es
Mass. This is wood, site of Music Center made famous by

Wherever she seems to follow petite Mme. who was in tow
the Philadelphia vision, America
Hebrew Univers

Her voice has phonic quality t
when she talk husband.

"It's his wat looking at the la
on her wrist,
wear it at conc good with it o

OLGA Kousse

The Sunday Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SUN. 702,577

NOV 2 2 1964

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky

Her Life Is Dedicated To Her Husband's Ideals

By NANCY BURDEN
Of The Bulletin Staff

THE GREAT have their memorials. Often they're in bronze, marble or stone. But few, like the late conductor Serge Koussevitzky, are blessed enough to have survive them a person who has the devotion and drive to carry on his ideals.

Olga Koussevitzky, widow of the Russia-born musician who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years, is such a person.

Almost from the instant of Dr. Koussevitzky's death in 1951, his widow set about carrying out—away from the podium—the major aims of his life: The encouragement, support and recognition of contemporary composers.

HER WORK has been through the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and the American International Music Fund. She is president of both and through the years has traveled many miles in their behalf—often to spend just a few hours in a darkened theater to hear a new work commissioned by the Foundation.

She works from two homes—a Manhattan apartment, appropriately located between Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall, and "Seranak" the Koussevitzky estate at Lenox, Mass. This is near Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center and Festival made famous by her husband.

Wherever she goes music seems to follow the pale-eyed, petite Mme. Koussevitzky, who was in town to address the Philadelphia Women's Division, American Friends of Hebrew University

Her voice has a soft, symphonic quality to it, especially when she talks of her late husband.

"It's his watch," she says, looking at the large gold piece on her wrist. "He used to wear it at concerts. I feel so good with it on, you know."

OLGA Koussevitzky's voice still has a strong accent, for like her celebrated husband, for whom she was secretary for 18 years, she was born in Russia. She is the niece of his first wife, Natalya, and married Koussevitzky five years after her aunt's death in 1942. At that time the famous conductor was 73 years old and she only 46. But she had known him practically all her life.

"I met Serge for the first time in Paris when I was five," she said.

A few years later the fragile-looking blonde girl was to hear the great conductor perform. It was in the summer of 1914 and Koussevitzky was appearing for the last time on his 2,300 mile boat tour on the Volga River. He had his own 85-piece orchestra and toured the river to bring fine music to those who otherwise might not have access to it.

So thrilled was the young Olga, who was living with her family on a nearby estate, that she and her friends went home immediately and "formed our own orchestra." She insisted on being the conductor, she said.

TO CONTINUE a man's work is to stir up the past and at the beginning it was acutely painful for Mme. Koussevitzky.

The first step was the most sorrowful, for it meant entering into the life at Tanglewood with all its overwhelming associations only a month after her husband's death.

Although she has no official connection with Tanglewood today, Mme. Koussevitzky continues to be a part of it—entertaining students at "Seranak," attending the concerts, and, in the last several years, being hostess at her home to visiting composers and their wives who come to lecture at the music center.

DURING the winter, Mme. Koussevitzky is active with the Koussevitzky Foundation, founded in 1942 by the conductor in memory of his first wife. Also, she is an adviser to the Serge Koussevitzky Foundation, which operates under the aegis of the Library of Congress on a $100,000 grant from the late conductor. The more than $4,000 annual yield is used to commission works of living composers.

Another project is the American International Music Fund, which she organized several years after her husband's death. Through the fund, leading orchestras perform and record new works by contemporary composers. The non-commercial tapes are then deposited in public libraries. The Philadelphia Public Library is one.

Just last year, Mme. Koussevitzky added to the fund the Koussevitzky International Recording Award of $1,000 which each year goes to a composer for a work commercially recorded during the preceding year.

In the world of music, Olga Koussevitzky has found plenty to do and sees more to come. For example, she has been named chairman of the 1965 Jean Sibelius Year in this country, marking the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Finnish composer.

Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky
. . . Music makes her world go 'round.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

NOV 1 4 1964

RCA's Jones Believes Image Goes a Long Way

NEW YORK—"John Gary is alive and bubbly—Al Hirt is warm and exuberant." That's the way Bob Jones, manager of art and production at RCA Victor, views two of the label's artists when preparing jacket covers for their new album releases.

"In today's record market," said Jones, "It's important to create an image for the disk performer and then sustain it." Jones also believes in the continuity of identity to establish the "picture" of the performer in the record-buying public's mind. "It's all done," Jones pointed out, "to get the LP in the retail store out of the browser box and into the hands of the buyer."

The "cult of personality" is taking over in the classical field as well. Many artists on Victor's Red Seal line are now asking that their pictures be used on the album jacket covers instead of art work so that their identity can be established more firmly.

As an example of how strong a hold on the consumer an identity image can be, Jones mentioned that for years all of the albums made by the Boston Symphony were packaged in the same way with five basic colors and the same basic stock. When Erich Leinsdorf took over the Boston Symphony early in 1963, however, it was necessary to create a new image and a new idea in packaging to establish Leinsdorf with the Boston and to separate him from the past Boston Symphony image. It was done through portraits of Leinsdorf on some albums, art work of Leinsdorf on others and photos of Leinsdorf on still others.

The packaging of album product is considered to be so important at Victor that Jones now reports directly to Harry Jenkins, vice-president in charge of marketing. Jones' department now handles in excess of 600 pieces a year.

Jones, who has been working with record companies since 1945, the last 12 of which have been with Victor, has formulated what he calls a "3-I" purpose to album art—to Interest, to Inform and to Influence

---

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 603,438 SUN. 983,643

NOV 2 9 1964

Koussevitsky baton Finds Phila. home

A piece of Koussevitsky memorabilia found its way home last week at the birthday reception for Philadelphia Orchestra conductor Eugene Ormandy.

At the reception, Max N. Carol, Philadelphia realtor, met an old friend, Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, widow of the former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The time seemed right to offer to give back a memento the conductor had given Carol at a reception in Tanglewood in 1948 — the baton Koussevitsky had used for his final concert.

Koussevitsky retired at the end of that summer, a season in which Carol's son, Norman, had been concertmaster of the student orchestra at Tanglewood.

"He gave me the baton he used to conduct his last concert with the Boston Symphony. Koussevitsky always used a little stub of a baton," Carol said.

"I've kept it all these years looking for a time to return it."

The founding of the Koussevitsky Library seemed the right reason and Mrs. Koussevitsky agreed when she and Carol met. He mailed the baton last week.

Carol has been a director of the Settlement Music School, the Philadelphia Little Symphony and is a judge in the annual Congress of Strings competition.

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 304,330 SUN. 365,701

NOV 2 0 1964

Memorial Service Rebroadcast

Richard Cardinal Cushing celebrating a Solemn Pontifical Mass of Requiem for the late President John F. Kennedy, in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will be presented in a memorial tribute by Channel 5, tomorrow at 9:30 p.m.

The service was originally telecast from Holy Cross Cathedral, Boston, Mass.

Mozart's "Requiem in D Minor, K. 626" will be performed by the orchestra and a 180-member chorus composed of 60 members each from the New England Conservatory Chorus, the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston.

Soloists are Sara Mae Endich, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Nicholas Di Virgilio, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone.

Present at the services were Mrs. John F. Kennedy, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, Edward Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Sargent Shriver, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Smith, and many federal and state officials and friends of the family. Robert Kennedy was in Japan at that time.

176

MUSIC EDUCATORS
JOURNAL
WASHINGTON, D. C.
6 Tl. a YR. 41,600

NOV 1964

Josef Orosz of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is shown demonstrating the Russian bassoon, also known as cavalry serpent.

Venetian church serpent, a bassoon from the Italian Renaissance.

A UNIQUE COLLECTION OF MUSIC INSTRUMENTS

The National Association of Music Merchants 1964 Music Show, which was held last summer at the Conrad Hilton Hotel in Chicago, Illinois, featured the Boston Symphony's rare collection of old music instruments from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries.

The collection of old instruments was once owned by Henri Casadesus, a French musician who was the uncle of pianist Robert Casadesus. In 1926, at the suggestion of conductor Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony obtained the collection which represents the finest in old world craftsmanship. A few of the outstanding instruments are shown on this page.

The Russian bassoon (top left) was used in cavalry bands of the eighteenth century. This particular instrument was made by an Italian living in France who wanted to simplify the construction of the traditional serpent. He borrowed the idea of the bassoon and made a long "wind tube" for bass notes by doubling it back on itself in two straight pieces, rather than putting serpentine curves in one long piece.

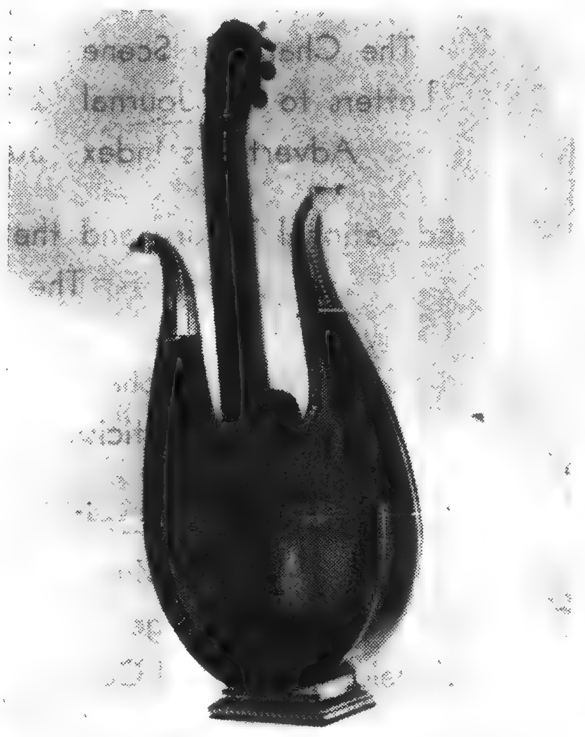
The pocket viol shown below was made in 1612 and belonged to Madame de Montpensier, cousin of King Louis XIV of France. A similar one was owned by Thomas Jefferson, who took it on long trips so that he could keep in practice while separated from his Cremona violin.

At lower left is a Chinese "moon" guitar once owned by Pierre Loti, French author of Madame Chrysanthemum.

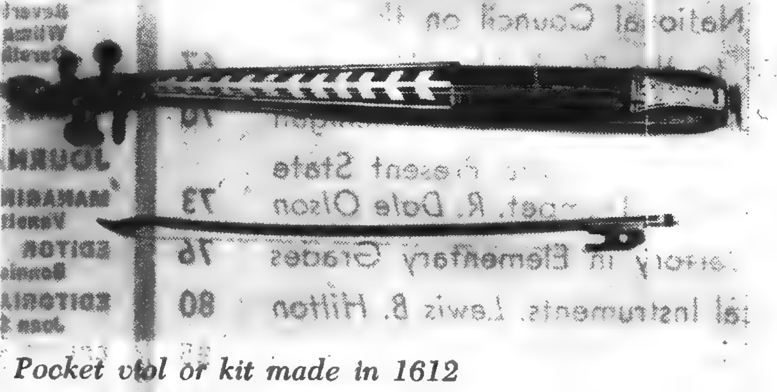
The Venetian church serpent (top right) is a bassoon bearing emblems from the Venetian Republic.

At middle right is a French lyre once owned by Madame de Maintenon, second wife of King Louis XIV of France.

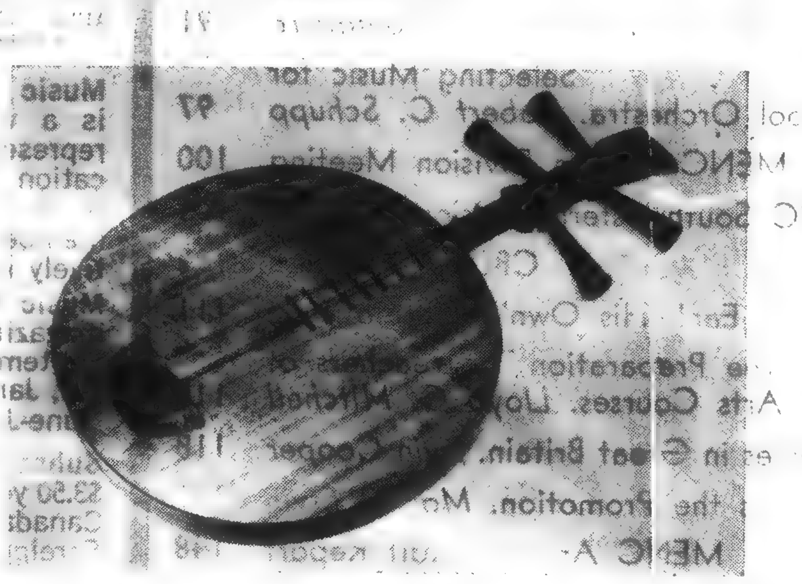
At bottom right are three unusual woodwind instruments. The combination flute and walking stick was given to Frederick the Great of Prussia by Voltaire. The transverse flute has a bell like a clarinet. The cromorne, or Krummhorn, as it is sometimes called, has a mouthpiece attached to the cylindrical "wind cap" enclosing two reeds. The cromorne player cannot touch the reeds with his lips.



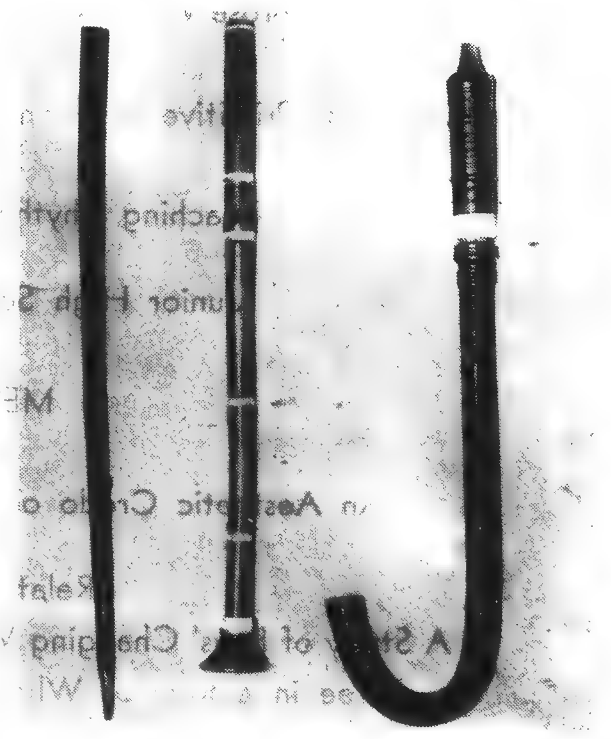
French lyre once owned by Madame de Maintenon, second wife of Louis XIV.



Pocket viol or kit made in 1612



Chinese "moon" guitar.



Above (L to R): a walking stick flute, transverse flute with bell, cromorne.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

NOV 23 1964

On Television

U. S. Love, Esteem For JFK Conveyed

By ARTHUR E. FETRIDGE

BEST FOR TONIGHT: Andy Williams. Ch. 4 at 9.

TELEVISION AND RADIO yesterday paid full tribute to John F. Kennedy who was shot down in his prime one year ago. Each and every program we managed to view conveyed the love and high esteem felt by the people for the late President.

FROM EARLY MORNING, when St. John's Seminary Choir presented a special program at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross which was followed by a low Mass, celebrated by Richard Cardinal Cushing in English, until late in the evening the airwaves resounded to the name of John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

TRIBUTE BY THE GREAT Boston Symphony orchestra with its performance of Mozart's "Requiem," ~~repeated on Channel~~ 5; world reaction to the assassination, what his death meant to the nation and the world and other commemorative programs bespoke the grief and reverence for him.

NO SINGLE PROGRAM should be singled out, for each did its part in remembering John Kennedy as a man, father and leader of his country. Both mediums are deserving of high praise for a job well done.

AN APPEAL TO CONGRESS to release a U.S. Information Agency-produced documentary on Mr. Kennedy has been made by John F. White, president of National Educational Television. There is a ban on the showing of U.S.I. films in this country. White offered to distribute the films to all educational stations.

APPARENTLY MARTIN AGRONSKY and NBC are still at odds over his salary. If they ever come to an agreement Martin will not return to the White House since NBC has assigned John Chancellor to that post on a permanent basis.

AFTER TWO TV PROGRAMS devoted to Winston Churchill are shown next Sunday on Channel 7 and Monday on Channel 4 many probably will be tempted to see "The Finest Hours" at the Exeter theater. They'll also be interested to know that Mercury has recorded on two LP's the soundtrack of the film, Sir Winston's memoirs of World War II.

"MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E.," seen on NBC network and Channel 4 Tuesdays at 8:30, which casts Robert Vaughn in a James Bond role, has been assured of continuing through the season. Its sponsors are so happy with its rating that they have renewed for the second 13 weeks.

ARTHUR GODFREY WILL TRY his hand at a situation comedy which David Susskind hopes to peddle to the ABC network. To be titled "Parker & Son" it will concern a man in his late fifties who is father to an eight year old boy and grandfather to one about the same age.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

NOV 17 1964

JFK Memorial Mass To Be On National TV

The commemorative Mass being offered Sunday by Cardinal Cushing for the late President John F. Kennedy will be televised nationally, it was announced today.

The Mass, on the first anniversary of the President's murder, will be televised from 10 to 11 a.m. from the Cathedral of the Holy Cross.

The program will be originated by Channel 7 in Boston. It will be shown locally on Channels 7 and 4, and nationally thrrough the National Broadcasting Co.

From 9:30 to 11:30 a.m., Channel 5 will show a video repeat of last January's Memorial Mass in honor of the late President, at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and four massed choirs performed Mozart's Requiem Mass in D Minor.

The Mass this Sunday will be a low Mass, and not a requiem Mass. It will be offered from a specially constructed altar in the sanctuary of the Cathedral.

The Cardinal will face the congregation and the TV audience and the Mass will be in English, anticipating by a week the new practice of all churches in the Boston archdiocese.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

```
BOSTON, MASS.
Traveler
Eve.  Circ. 161,453
```

NOV 18 1964

As the Traveler reported yesterday, NBC will pick up the Kennedy Memorial Mass from Ch. 7 and telecast it nationally, this Sunday, 10-11 a.m. from the Cathedral of the Holy Cross. It wlil be seen, also, on Ch. 4.

A half-hour musical special with St. John's Seminary Choir will precede it.

A repeat of last January's moving Memorial Mass in honor of the late President, at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~four mas~~sed choirs performed Mozart's Requiem Mass in D Minor, will be carried by Ch. 5, 9:30-11:30 a.m. this Sunday.

WILL HUTCHINS, the hero of the former ABC oater "Sugarfoot" will star in a new weekly series, but as a junior attorney

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

NOV 17 1964

A taped telecast of the impressive Jan. 19 memorial mass for President Kennedy, in which Cardinal Cushing was celebrant and the Bos~~ton Symphony~~ Orchestra performed Mozart's "Requiem," has been made available to TV stations around the world by the U. S. Information Agency. Through the co-operative efforts of the Boston Archdiocese, the Boston Symphony and NBC-TV, it will be shown in more than a score of foreign cities next Sunday, the first anniversary of the President's death. Channel 38 will be carrying it in Boston on Sunday at 7 p. m.

177

4—The Berkshire Eagle, Saturday, Nov. 21, 1964

As I Hear It

Concert Manners

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THE BEHAVIOR of Americans in places of public entertainment is pretty good in general and definitely so as compared with audiences in Europe. We listen with respect and patience to musicians and actors, we give orators our attention although once in a while we heckle politicians, but we rarely disturb or disrupt a performance on a stage or a platform.

Europeans, on occasion, are not so polite and tolerant. Music in this respect is especially vulnerable because the reaction to a performance is immediate and in the presence of the performer. If we are displeased with a book or a painting or a piece of sculpture, the author or the artist is usually not at hand nor within hearing so that we can direct an expression of our displeasure at him.

* * *

STUDENTS at Tanglewood have sometimes laughed aloud during and after performances of experimental music, music that was unconventional and far out. If the composer is present, he may be dismayed or discouraged and the performer, if it be not one and the same, downcast that he must suffer for the sins of another. The wounds, however, are nothing that a good bout with a bottle won't heal promptly.

A festival of contemporary music in Warsaw recently closed on a restrained, almost sedate, note, and the press reported that the public was regretful. Half the fun in other years had been to express outrage in some degree and to boo, hiss and walk out. History reports that Chopin was hissed in Vienna as was Stravinsky in Paris. Other musical giants in their time have had audience trouble.

IN EUROPE, whistling is as good as booing. At a recent Promenade concert in London a symphonic novelty was played and a substantial body of people gradually came to the conclusion that it was more than they cared to swallow. The exodus from the hall was silent and orderly, but it was too early in the evening to impute bus-catching or biological motives to the departing.

Fifty years ago a British critic, Ernest Newman, wrote that when some Schoenberg was played a third of the audience hissed, another third laughed and the remaining third seemed to be too puzzled either to laugh or hiss. There were riots in Schoenberg's home town, Vienna, and the police were called. Sometimes members of the orchestra descended to argue with the audience, and on one occasion the president of the society sponsoring the concert publicly boxed the ears of a man who had insulted him while he was making an announcement.

* * *

IN GERMANY, Hitlerite youth threw stink bombs during performances of the "Three Penny Opera." In Italy, a concert of futuristic music in 1914 stirred a battle between friends and foes in Milan, and 11 casualties had to be taken to the first aid station.

The most notorious scandal in musical history occurred at the premiere of Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring" in 1913 in Paris. Pierre Monteux, who was the conductor, once recalled that "the audience remained quiet for the first two minutes. Then came boos and catcalls. Neighbors began to hit each other on the head with fists, canes and whatever came to hand. Soon the anger was concentrated against the dancers, then the orchestra. Everything available was tossed in our direction but we continued to play on. The gendarmes arrived as we finished, but Stravinsky had disappeared through a backstage window to wander disconsolately along the streets of Paris."

* * *

THERE ARE Red Cross ladies in London's larger concert halls, ready to deal tactfully with coughing or fainting spells. It has been suggested that they prepare to bandage stretcher cases after brawls. Most composers prefer positive public reaction rather than indifference. At a concert in 1952 in Paris a female French critic made a roundhouse swing of her handbag at a certain American critic and missed him only by a diphthong.

There is one musical anecdote which has been worn out for ages yet it must be inserted here only because someone will try to beat me to the punch line, and it is to the effect of the sign erected in Symphony Hall in Boston: "Exit in case of Brahms."

* * *

THE CONCERT stage and theater are about the only places, except for sports, where reaction is immediate and direct. Aspirants who may be thin-skinned should be alerted if they are not already aware, as medical students must know they will be called at 2 a.m., that they may run into expressions of disapproval on the spot.

Sports crowds have no inhibitions and half their fun is the opportunity, under the shelter of masses, to urge the murder of the umpire without really holding lasting hostility against him. The same protection incites Aunt Hetty, normally as shy and diffident as a nightcrawler, suddenly to become hysterical at Tanglewood and to cry out at the top of her voice "Bravo."

NEW ENGLAND NEWSCLIP
Box 2078, Boston 02106 - 742-4200

BOSTON, MASS.
Evening Globe
Eve. Circ. 144,855

NOV 18 1964

JFK Memorials On Television Start Tonight

By PERCY SHAIN
Globe Television Critic

Television will begin honoring the memory of President Kennedy tonight with a CBS tribute, "The Burden and the Glory of John F. Kennedy," on Ch. 5 at 7:30.

A series of memorials will be climaxed by more than 13 hours of programming on Sunday, anniversary of the assassination.

On Friday and Saturday night only single programs are listed. Ch. 2 will show "An Essay on Death," filmed in Vermont, Friday night at 8:30, to be repeated Sunday at 8.

On Saturday Ch. 5 will present at 6:30 p.m. the filmed appreciation of Mr Kennedy's zest for life, "A Thousand Days," that most of the nation saw at the Democratic convention in August.

On Sunday the memorable Mozart Memorial Mass of last January by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be seen twice, at 9:30 a.m. on Ch. 5, at 7 p.m. on Ch. 38. Another musical tribute is listed for 9:30 a.m. on Ch. 7.

The Cardinal Cushing Memorial Mass will be telecast live from Sacred Heart Cathedral at 10 a.m. on Chs. 4, 7, and 38. At 11:30 a.m. another CBS tribute, "Four Dark Days," will be seen on Ch. 5.

At 12:30 p.m. Ch. 38 will show "President Kennedy's Trip to Ireland." At 1, Ch. 5 will air its own tribute, "John F. Kennedy: Man from Massachusetts." At 4 NBC's "Sunday," devoted entirely to the late President, will be telecast by Ch. 2.

Two major memorials will conflict at 6:30, NBC's "John F. Kennedy Remembered" on Ch. 4, ABC's "John F. Kennedy: His Two Worlds" on Ch. 7. Ed Sullivan will have a Kennedy feature on Ch. 5 at 8. Heywood Vincent will talk with Ted Sorensen about the President on "Impact" at 11.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 15 1964

Musical Tolerance

To the Editor—Wow! How The Globe's music critics lay it on these days!

First, Mr. Leinsdorf attempts to recreate authentic Haydn in Symphony Hall by conducting a small group from the harpsichord instead of 100-plus from the podium and promptly gets told by Mr. Steinberg that he ought to stick to conducting.

Then, Victor Manusevitch, who has labored valiantly with little support to keep the Cambridge Civic Symphony alive, intersperses Shakespeare with Prokofieff and is promptly blasted by Mr. Steinberg's assistant for showing poor taste.

Now Mr. Leinsdorf may not be the greatest combination conductor-harpsichordist going (although it is hard to think of a major conductor who is better at it), and Elizabethan poetry may not be entirely suitable to supplement 20th Century dissonance; although it is not illogical to assume that Prokofieff had Shakespeare in mind when he wrote the Romeo and Juliet ballet music.

Fortunately, however, there appear to be some simple folk around who enjoy a program which departs from the norm, even if not ideally realized. Would that the Globe critics were as tolerant.

ALAN L. LEFKOWITZ
Cambridge

BOSTON, MASS.
CITIZEN
W. 15,000 (N)

DEC 10 1964

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,045

DEC 10 1964

Joan Kennedy Joins Leinsdorf on TV

Mrs. Joan Kennedy goes "Backstage with Erich Leinsdorf" Tuesday, Dec. 15 at 8 p.m. on Channel 2.

The wife of Massachusetts Senator Edward M. Kennedy joins Mr. Leinsdorf to talk about the Kennedy Memorial Center for the Performing Arts as a prelude to the evening's full-length Boston Symphony Orchestra concert which immediately follows their conversation.

A special scale model of the Center is being flown to Boston for the program. Mrs. Kennedy will explain the design and purpose of this unique memorial to the late President; then she will discuss with Mr. Leinsdorf the work of Governor Peabody's Commission for the John F. Kennedy Memorial Observances. Erich Leinsdorf is both a Trustee of the Cultural Center in Washington and a member of the Governor's Commission.

Following their conversation, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra analyzes the music he will conduct, a concert to be broadcast live from Symphony Hall by both Channel 2 and WGBH-FM at 8:30 p.m. For his program Leinsdorf has chosen two works: The Manfred Overture by Robert Schumann and Mahler's Symphony No. 6.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

Musical Chairs

Orchestra's Picture Taken After Concert

By [illegible]RGO MILLER

The B[illegible]n Symphony had its pic[illegible] Saturday night. N[illegible] one said cheese but there [illegible] a good many raspberries [illegible]wn, bowed and beat as the [illegible]sicians entertained themsel[illegible] waiting for the camer[illegible] click.

[illegible] says a Symphony Hall [illegible] the photographer [illegible] to mount a scaf[illegible] the center of Sym[illegible] Nowadays, a firm [illegible]aphy, Inc., sets up [illegible] the first balco[illegible] the long eye

Gone, too, is the battery of flash bulbs. The orchestra simply turns on the super stage and balcony lights used for its television programs.

So that every player's head appears in the finished portrait, a spotter stands near the photographer and relays his instructions to the musicians. Once a clarinet was moved to the right, a pair of violins pushed back a bit, a cellist brought into the picture, the photographer was ready.

The orchestra struck two poses. In one, the musicians are in playing positions with conductor Erich Leinsdorf's back to the camera. The second portrait has everybody looking into the auditorium as though the music had just finished and the conductor were about to take his first bow.

If there was no music, there was an audience. As the crowd left Symphony Hall after the concert, ushers asked about 200 persons to remain to fill in the first five rows of seats.

R.C.A. Victor often uses the orchestra portraits on record jackets or in advertising for phonograph equipment.

Distance Prize

Composer Igor Stravinsky's concert last week drew a predominantly younger audience than usually turns out at the Boston University Celebrity Series. The prize for coming the greatest distance probably goes to the six or eight Middlebury College students who came down from Vermont.

Even Younger

Even younger listeners like Stravinsky. The middle pair of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall are devoted to four of his works. The program which Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct Saturday at 11 includes Suite from "Pulcinella," which Stravinsky led last week and which Erich Leinsdorf will do in the complete version with vocal soloists early next year.

Student Composers

As usual at the final pair of Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony will play new compositions by music theory students at Newton High School.

This year's composers from Henry Lasker's class are Jeffery Hale and Ross Capon. Hale has written a Capriccio. Capon's work is "Huapangos." Both students have done their own orchestrations.

The concerts, Mar. 6 and again Mar. 13 at 11 a.m., will as usual see principals of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra taking over the first desks from the Boston Symphony. This year's joint effort will be Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 50,455

DEC 13 1964

Conducting Orchestra No Easy Job

NEW YORK (UPI) — When Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony, slugs audiences with every last bray of Mahler's interminable 6th Symphony and William Steinberg, conducting the New York Philharmonic, does likewise with all the shrieks of Strauss' shrieking opera "Elektra," you can wonder if conductorial provocations aren't going too far.

This is appeal for audience revolt even though it is the very nature of music performers to provoke audiences, and their duty, too. How else are they going to get talked about? It is too easy for any conductor to lose individual identity and get lumped with all other conductors.

And how else could musical creation evolve and advance if musicians didn't perform works they know full well beforehand will make auditors squirm and mope?

On the other hand performers could in the name of decency leave the graveyards of aborted compositions undisturbed, and it is also possible for audiences to play turn - about with this provoking game, and provoke performers with cat-calls, hisses and even outright howls of anguish when their provocations get out of hand and start straining the human capacity for endurance.

Of the nine - and - a-fraction symphonies Gustav Mahler composed, the 6th is the least performed. The reasons are simple. It is a bore and it is long enough to take an entire evening (although Leinsdorf did percede his performance with a short modern work.)

There is no secret about there being a small minority of the music public which is emotionally attuned to Mahler. It sees to that, by eagerly defending their idol at the drop of a sneer. It could be conductors are aware of the arguments that break out between this minority and the majority whenever Mahler is played.

But it is doubtful that any member of the minority will defend the 6th, certainly not vigorously. It churns about everlastingly, employing a variety of orchestral effects that sporadically make ear drums writhe, without moving either to left or to right. It is the one Mahler symphony all Mahler detractors and even the lukewarm Mahler admirers can be unanimous about. The others are at least shorter and some indicate the composer was a genius of high order if a ragged one.

Leinsdorf got talked about among the local patrons of his orchestra, all right. He had his nerve! This talk goes and to that extent it is admiring. But no one has suggested that he raised any doubt of posterity having judged the 6th correctly.

"Elektra" is of the same order. Its composer was a high order genius who contributed masterpieces both to the opera house and the concert hall. But he also laid some eggs, and in the opera house "Elektra" is such an egg even though it is now and then revived on the theory that any opera by the composer of "Der Rosernkavlier" should be operatically viable.

All these efforts have failed, and so Steinberg attempted to make it live as concert music. He put a bunch of optera musicers, including such distinguished ones as Astrid Varnay, Regine Resnik and Phyllis Curtin in front of the New York Philharmonic and singers and players had at it through a [illegible] evening.

Surely he went too far provocatively, just as Leinsdorf did. There are any number of musical provocations with which to agitate hapless audiences that take no longer than a half hour or so. Look at that old showman - conductor, Leopold Stokowski, who has based his long career on audience-provoking but has always practiced moderation.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 20 1964

Busy Musical Assistant

Leinsdorf's Extra Pair Of Ears Has 24-Hour Day

By MARGO MILLER

Many symphony orchestra conductors in this country have a second pair of ears, in the person of a musical assistant.

The duties of a musical assistant vary from conductor to conductor, even day to day, depending on the activities of the orchestra.

In Boston, Erich Leinsdorf's musical asssitant is Andrew Raeburn. Raeburn, a tall, blond Englishman, says he puts in a 24-hour day but finds it difficult to define precisely his job.

Ever so careful of the egos in any musical organization, Raeburn is sound post, figuratively, in matters of opinion, literally, in matters of orchestral balance.

He helps with the spadework of programming, suggesting this Haydn symphony over that, auditioning young soloists.

Raeburn is the orchestra's liasion with the city's choruses, going to their rehearsals, passing along Leinsdorf's wishes to their conductor. He also works closely with R.C.A.-Victor's Artist and Repertory Department.

"I'm very much tied up, too, with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players," Raeburn continued. "I do the initial research in repertoire. I look into odd combinations of instruments and pass on suggestions."

The Chamber Players, formed this season from the orchestra's principals, has one of each instrument in it. This sends Raeburn on a merry chase through old and new music for trios, septets, nonets and the like to fill out programs.

Though American orchestras — what Raeburn calls "repertory orchestras" because they are under a permanent conductor, carry the same roster of musicians season to season, repeat programs and rehearse more often — are totally different from British orchestras, and though Raeburn had never worked for anything larger than the Philomusica, the chamber orchestra of Thurston Dart, much else in his career recommended him to Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

Before coming here in September, the 31-year-old Raeburn had been music director of Argo Records, the profitable "egghead" division of Decca London.

The parent organization let Argo follow up its own ideas. Raeburn's final project for Argo was a survey of English cathedral music.

Earlier releases were Britten's "Noyes Fludde" and his Cello Sonata written for and recorded by Mstislav Rostropovich. Argo also issued a good deal of contemporary English chamber music and a whole catalogue of spoken word recordings, including the Marlowe Society's Shakespeare series.

One half of the Argo executive staff, Raeburn did his own editing of tapes. He got the record jackets designed and the texts written.

Finding administrative details were taking him away from the musical end of Argo, he started to look around for another job just about the time the orchestra was looking for someone like Raeburn.

Raeburn's interest in English cathedral music goes back to his days at Cambridge University. His college was King's, where he was one of 14 men who, with 16 boys from the choir school, made up the King's Chapel Choir.

"I'm what's known as a 'public school (private school) baritone.' An upper class voice of not much quality but having a certain amount of sensitivity," Raeburn says.

At King's, Raeburn studied "in a kind of desultory way" English constitutional, economic and colonial history." He got a "respectable degree" in 1958. Appointed conductor of the Chambridge Granta Singers, a chorus of townspeople, he also founded the Cambridge Bach Singers, taking them on a highly successful tour of Germany.

The son of a Recorder (special judge), the London-born Raeburn began the violin when he was four years old and took up the piano at seven.

"I was brought up on the Glyndebourne recordings of Mozart operas. Bach's Unaccompanied Cello Sonatas, by Casals. The Bach B minor Mass was perpetually on the grammaphone."

The Raeburn children — four boys, three girls — were a kind of chamber orchestra, though Andrew has yet to find anything written for violin, cello, piano, flute and two clarinets.

"We were certainly the only family in Bookham," the village where the Raeburns lived during the war, "which sang Christmas carols in four parts."

Raeburn finds he misses the English cathedral school of singing with its great feeling for styles of music of various periods.

He was put off at first by the brilliant sound of American orchestras. "Especially the winds. There really is an American technique of wind playing," he went on.

"It's difficult to describe color. English players get a more veiled color, Americans, you might say, have a much more direct sound." The quality of American strings, Raeburn thinks, has no equal in Britain.

Another thing that pleases him is rehearsal time. "It's at least double in America. Three or four rehearsals here. In England, concerts are very much 'once-only.' In Boston, it's amazing to watch a piece of music grow through several performances."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle-Citizen
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,280

DEC 10 1964

BOSTON, MASS.
CITIZEN
W. 15,000 (N)

DEC 10 1964 Bufkeller

Leinsdorf To Serve On JFK Memorial Board

Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf is the only Brookline resident named to a special State Commission which will study an appropriate state memorial to the late President John F. Kennedy who was born in Brookline.

Other members of the Commission, named by Governor Endicott Peabody, are His Eminence Richard Cardinal Cushing, Paul Buck and J. Kenneth Galbraith of Cambridge, Daniel E. Hogan, Jr., of Andover, Edgar D. McKenna, Jr., of Beverly Farms, Helen M. Keyes of H[illegible] Knight of Natick, [illegible] Bess Miller of Pittsfield, J. Riley of Peabody and [illegible] as J. White of Newton. In addition to these citizens following legislators will s[illegible] Senators George V. Kenly, Jr., of Dorchester, S[illegible] James F. Burke of Bro[illegible] and Sen. Edmund St. J[illegible] Jr., of Adams and Reps. J. Navin of Marlborough, [illegible] Thompson of Ludlow, J. Darren of Milford, R. Quinn of Boston and Sydney Curtiss [illegible] Sheffield.

The Department of the Interior has designated the Kennedy birthplace at 83 Beals St. a national historic landmark and the town has erected a plaque inf ront of the house, but no further action has yet been taken by the town, state or federal governments about a permanent memorial in this area.

HIGH POINT, N. C.
ENTERPRISE
D. 20,000 S. 26,100

DEC [illegible] 1964 Bufkeller

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

DEC 12 1964 Bufkeller

LBJ NAMES E. LEINSDORF

NEW YORK—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was sworn in by President Johnson as a trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in ceremonies at the White House Dec. 2. Leinsdorf, who was appointed by President Kennedy as a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center, recently renamed in memory of the late President, was in Washington with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for concerts in Constitution Hall.

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 1 1964

Ground To Be Broken For Culture Center

By EDGAR J. DRISCOLL JR.

President Johnson will turn the first spade of earth at ground - breaking ceremonies Wednesday for the nation's first official home for culture, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

The $31 million center will be a living memorial to the President who did so much for the arts. It will be built on the bank of the Potomac in Washington, D.C.

Designed by Edward Durrell Stone, who got his early architectural training in Boston, the center will cover the equivalent of two city blocks on a 13-acre tract. It will house under one roof three large theaters for concerts, operas, ballets, plays and musicals. It is expected to be finished in 1967.

The President will give the principal address. It will be his first public appearance in Washington since his election Nov. 3.

Sen.-elect Robert F. Kennedy of New York will speak on behalf of the Kennedy family. His sisters, Mrs. Eunice Shriver and Mrs. Jean Smith, will be present, as will members of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, Diplomatic Corps and center trustees.

Scheduled to recite a number of the late President's favorite passages from Shakespeare is Sir John Gielgud, who will read also messages from artists who performed at the White House during the Kennedy administration.

Excerpts from Mr. Kennedy's own speeches will be read by Jason Robards Jr. The Navy Band and the choral group The Sea Chanters will provide the music, including the hymn played at the funeral last year, "Eternal Father, Strong to Save."

Fifteen trustees of the center, appointed in August by President Johnson, will be sworn in. They include Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., Richard Adler of Saddle River, N.J., Robert O. Anderson of Roswell, N.M., Mrs. George R. Brown of Houston, Abe Fortas of Washington, Leonard H. Goldenson of New York, Robert F. Kennedy, Sol M. Linowitz of Rochester, N.Y., Edwin Wendell Pauley of Los Angeles, Arthur Penn of New York, Richard Rodgers of New York, Mrs. Jean Kennedy Smith of New York, Edwin L. Weisl Sr. of New York, N.Y., and Robert W. Woodruff of Atlanta.

Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the board, will preside.

6—B

A Probl

Inau

In 18

STEINBERG

down only the in performance

"Top and botto not be taken too the early Sympho performed recentl
Leinsdorf and

78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 50,455

DEC 13 1964

Conducting Orchestra No Easy Job

NEW YORK (UPI) — When Erich Leinsdorf, conducting the Boston Symphony, slugs audiences with every last bray of Mahler's interminable 6th Symphony and William Steinberg, conducting the New York Philharmonic, does likewise with all the shrieks of Strauss' shrieking opera "Elektra," you can wonder if conductorial provocations aren't going too far.

This is appeal for audience revolt even though it is the very nature of music performers to provoke audiences, and their duty, too. How else are they going to get talked about? It is too easy for any conductor to lose individual identity and get lumped with all other conductors.

And how else could musical creation evolve and advance if musicians didn't perform works they know full well beforehand will make auditors squirm and mope?

On the other hand performers could in the name of decency leave the graveyards of aborted compositions undisturbed, and it is also possible for audiences to play turn - about with this provoking game, and provoke performers with cat-calls, hisses and even outright howls of anguish when their provocations get out of hand and start straining the human capacity for endurance.

Of the nine - and - a-fraction symphonies Gustav Mahler composed, the 6th is the least performed. The reasons are simple. It is a bore and it is long enough to take an entire evening (although Leinsdorf did percede his performance with a short modern work.)

There is no secret about there being a small minority of the music public which is emotionally attuned to Mahler. It sees to that, by eagerly defending their idol at the drop of a sneer. It could be conductors are aware of the arguments that break out between this minority and the majority whenever Mahler is played.

But it is doubtful that any member of the minority will defend the 6th, certainly not vigorously. It churns about everlastingly, employing a variety of orchestral effects that sporadically make ear drums writhe, without moving either to left or to right. It is the one Mahler symphony all Mahler detractors and even the lukewarm Mahler admirers can be unanimous about. The others are at least shorter and some indicate the composer was a genius of high order if a ragged one.

Leinsdorf got talked about among the local patrons of his orchestra, all right. He had his nerve! This talk goes and to that extent it is admiring. But no one has suggested that he raised any doubt of posterity having judged the 6th correctly.

"Elektra" is of the same order. Its composer was a high order genius who contributed masterpieces both to the opera house and the concert hall. But he also laid some eggs, and in the opera house "Elektra" is such an egg even though it is now and then revived on the theory that any opera by the composer of "Der Rosernkavalier" should be operatically viable.

All these efforts have failed, and so Steinberg attempted to make it live as concert music. He put a bunch of optera musicians, including such distinguished ones as Astrid Varnay, Regine Resnik and Phyllis Curtin in front of the New York Philharmonic and singers and players had at it through a

Surely he went too far provocatively, just as Leinsdorf did. There are any number of musical provocations with which to agitate hapless audiences that take no longer than a half hour or so. Look at that old showman - conductor, Leopold Stokowski, who has based his long career on audience provoking but has always practiced moderation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

DEC 20 1964

Busy Musical Assistant

Leinsdorf's Extra Pair Of Ears Has 24-Hour Day

By MARGO MILLER

Many symphony orchestra conductors in this country have a second pair of ears, in the person of a musical assistant.

The duties of a musical assistant vary from conductor to conductor, even day to day, depending on the activities of the orchestra.

In Boston, Erich Leinsdorf's musical asssitant is Andrew Raeburn. Raeburn, a tall, blond Englishman, says he puts in a 24-hour day but finds it difficult to define precisely his job.

Ever so careful of the egos in any musical organization, Raeburn is sound post, figuratively, in matters of opinion, literally, in matters of orchestral balance.

He helps with the spadework of programming, suggesting this Haydn symphony over that, auditioning young soloists.

Raeburn is the orchestra's liasion with the city's choruses, going to their rehearsals, passing along Leinsdorf's wishes to their conductor. He also works closely with R.C.A.-Victor's Artist and Repertory Department.

"I'm very much tied up, too, with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players," Raeburn continued. "I do the initial research in repertoire. I look into odd combinations of instruments and pass on suggestions."

The Chamber Players, formed this season from the orchestra's principals, has one of each instrument in it. This sends Raeburn on a merry chase through old and new music for trios, septets, nonets and the like to fill out programs.

Though American orchestras — what Raeburn calls "repertory orchestras" because they are under a permanent conductor, carry the same roster of musicians season to season, repeat programs and rehearse more often — are totally different from British orchestras, and though Raeburn had never worked for anything larger than the Philomusica, the chamber orchestra of Thurston Dart, much else in his career recommended him to Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

Before coming here in September, the 31-year-old Raeburn had been music director of Argo Records, the profitable "egghead" division of Decca London.

The parent organization let Argo follow up its own ideas. Raeburn's final project for Argo was a survey of English cathedral music.

Earlier releases were Britten's "Noyes Fludde" and his Cello Sonata written for and recorded by Mstislav Rostropovich. Argo also issued a good deal of contemporary English chamber music and a whole catalogue of spoken word recordings, including the Marlowe Society's Shakespeare series.

One half of the Argo executive staff, Raeburn did his own editing of tapes. He got the record jackets designed and the texts written.

Finding administrative details were taking him away from the musical end of Argo, he started to look around for another job just about the time the orchestra was looking for someone like Raeburn.

Raeburn's interest in English cathedral music goes back to his days at Cambridge University. His college was King's, where he was one of 14 men who, with 16 boys from the choir school, made up the King's Chapel Choir.

"I'm what's known as a public school (private school) baritone. An upper class voice of not much quality but having a certain amount of sensitivity," Raeburn says.

At King's, Raeburn studied "in a kind of desultory way" English constitutional, economic and colonial history." He got a "respectable degree" in 1958. Appointed conductor of the Chambridge Granta Singers, a chorus of townspeople, he also founded the Cambridge Bach Singers, taking them on a highly successful tour of Germany.

The son of a Recorder (special judge), the London-born Raeburn began the violin when he was four years old and took up the piano at seven.

"I was brought up on the Glyndebourne recordings of Mozart operas, Bach's Unaccompanied Cello Sonatas, by Casals. The Bach B minor Mass was perpetually on the grammaphone."

The Raeburn children — four boys, three girls — were a kind of chamber orchestra, though Andrew has yet to find anything written for violin, cello, piano, flute and two clarinets.

"We were certainly the only family in Bookham," the village where the Raeburns lived during the war, "which sang Christmas carols in four parts."

Raeburn finds he misses the English cathedral school of singing with its great feeling for styles of music of various periods.

He was put off at first by the brilliant sound of American orchestras. "Especially the winds. There really is an American technique of wind playing," he went on.

"It's difficult to describe color. English players get a more veiled color, Americans, you might say, have a much more direct sound." The quality of American strings, Raeburn thinks, has no equal in Britain.

Another thing that pleases him is rehearsal time. "It's at least double in America. Three or four rehearsals here. In England, concerts are very much 'once-only.' In Boston, it's amazing to watch a piece of music grow through several performances."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle-Citizen
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,280

DEC 10 1964

BOSTON, MASS.
CITIZEN
W. 15,000 (N)

DEC 10 1964

Leinsdorf To Serve On JFK Memorial Board

Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf is the only Brookline resident named to a special State Commission which will study an appropriate state memorial to the late President John F. Kennedy who was born in Brookline.

Other members of the Commission, named by Governor Endicott Peabody, are His Eminence Richard Cardinal Cushing, Paul Buck and J. Kenneth Galbraith of Cambridge, Daniel E. Hogan, Jr., of Andover, Edgar D. McKenna, Jr., of Beverly Farms, Helen M. Keyes of Hull, Norman Knight of Natick, Mrs. Amy Bess Miller of Pittsfield, Earl J. Riley of Peabody and Thomas J. White of Newton. In addition to these citizens, the following legislators will serve Senators George V. Kenneally, Jr., of Dorchester, Senator James F. Burke of Brockton and Sen. Edmund St. John, Jr., of Adams and Reps. John Navin of Marlborough, John Thompson of Ludlow, J. Davoren of Milford, R. Quinn of Boston and Sydney Curtiss of Shefield.

The Department of the Interior has designated the Kennedy birthplace at 83 Beals St. a national historic landmark and the town has erected a plaque inf ront of the house, but no further action has yet been taken by the town, state or federal governments about a permanent memorial in this area.

HIGH POINT, N. C.
ENTERPRISE
D. 20,000 S. 26,100

DEC 20 1964

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

DEC 12 1964

LBJ NAMES E. LEINSDORF

NEW YORK—Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was sworn in by President Johnson as a trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in ceremonies at the White House Dec. 2. Leinsdorf, who was appointed by President Kennedy as a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center, recently renamed in memory of the late President, was in Washington with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for concerts in Constitution Hall.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
78, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

DEC 1 1964

Ground To Be Broken For Culture Center

By EDGAR J. DRISCOLL JR.

President Johnson will turn the first spade of earth at ground - breaking ceremonies Wednesday for the nation's first official home for culture, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

The $31 million center will be a living memorial to the President who did so much for the arts. It will be built on the bank of the Potomac in Washington, D.C.

Designed by Edward Durrell Stone, who got his early architectural training in Boston, the center will cover the equivalent of two city blocks on a 13-acre tract. It will house under one roof three large theaters for concerts, operas, ballets, plays and musicals. It is expected to be finished in 1967.

The President will give the principal address. It will be his first public appearance in Washington since his election Nov. 3.

Sen.-elect Robert F. Kennedy of New York will speak on behalf of the Kennedy family. His sisters, Mrs. Eunice Shriver and Mrs. Jean Smith, will be present, as will members of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, Diplomatic Corps and center trustees.

Scheduled to recite a number of the late President's favorite passages from Shakespeare is Sir John Gielgud, who will read also messages from artists who performed at the White House during the Kennedy administration.

Excerpts from Mr. Kennedy's own speeches will be read by Jason Robards Jr. The Navy Band and the choral group The Sea Chanters will provide the music, including the hymn played at the funeral last year, "Eternal Father, Strong to Save."

Fifteen trustees of the center, appointed in August by President Johnson, will be sworn in. They include Erich Leinsdorf, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., Richard Adler of Saddle River, N.J., Robert O. Anderson of Roswell, N.M., Mrs. George R. Brown of Houston, Abe Fortas of Washington, Leonard H. Goldenson of New York, Robert F. Kennedy, Sol M. Linowitz of Rochester, N.Y., Edwin Wendell Pauley of Los Angeles, Arthur Penn of New York, Richard Rodgers of New York, Mrs. Jean Kennedy Smith of New York, Edwin L. Weisl Sr. of New York, N.Y., and Robert W. Woodruff of Atlanta.

Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the board, will preside.

A Problem

Inaudible Harpsichords In 18th Century Music

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

STEINBERG

The problem of when and how to use a harpsichord in the orchestral or ensemble music of the 17th and 18th centuries is so complex that to write so brief a column about it seems an impertinence.

Nonetheless, I intend to run the risk for the sake of attempting to clarify at least some basic points.

In the period, roughly, from 1600 to 1770, composers did not write out everything they intended to be played and heard.

Most ornaments, for example, were not notated, but they were expected, and without them the music is incomplete.

Then—and this is the present issue—composers often wrote down only the top and bottom of the music, expecting the middle to be filled out in performance on some instrument or instruments capable of playing chords.

"Top and bottom" should not be taken too literaly. In the early Symphony No. 21, performed recently by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony, Haydn writes out some of the middle as well, but less of it than he would have wished to hear. The improvised, or at least not fully notated, supplementing of the music is necessary here.

The choice of instruments can be complicated also, but the following is a rough and certainly usable guide: Organ in church music, harpischord in chamber music and most orchestral pieces, and in the theater harpischord also, but probably things like lute and harp as well.

Skeletons and Chasms

So far it sounds easy, but it is not. For instance, a harpsichord is not ideally heard in a room the size of Symphony Hall, and even when the conductor reduces the size of the orchestra to 18th century proportions, the instruments themselves are louder and more brilliant than their earlier counterparts.

Beecham used to deal with the problem by orchestrating what would normally be played at the keyboard.

He once said he disliked the harpsichord because he did not wish, while conducting Handel, to be put in mind of skeletons on a tin roof.

Koussevitsky used to leave it out altogether, leaving grim chasms that can be heard in his recordings of the Brandenburg Concertos.

Nowadays word has gotten around pretty well that the keyboard instrument is desirable, and one is not surprised to see it on stage when a Handel Concerto or an early Haydn Symphony is on the program.

But one harpsichordist I know likes to tell the story of how he played the St. Matthew Passion under a famous conductor who afterwards said to him, "It was marvellous. The balance was just right. I couldn't hear the harpsichord at all." And another player tells about the same conductor that balance was at last achieved to his satisfaction at the point when, in response to repeated requests for less harpsichord, the harpsichordist had taken off all stops so that he was playing on a silent keyboard.

The harpsichord has a function, and that function is an auditory one. Harmony and texture need filling out. The harpsichord or whatever, is there to do that. Nothing else matters.

Secondary Function

Before there were baton conductors, the sound of the harpsichord would also have served as a means to help keep the ensemble together.

Listeners today can still benefit fro mthe rhythmic life lent by a well-played figured bass and so can players, but the players, who are used to taking their time from a conductor's hand motions no longer depend on the harpsichord as metronome.

When Leinsdorf the other day led Haydn's Symphony No. 21 from the harpsichord he was presumably trying to achieve historical authenticity.

Leinsdorf was doing what Haydn himself did. So at least it seemed, and that was what he intended to have the audience believe.

Hayden's orchestras at Eisenstadt, London, and elsewhere, were accustomed to being led from the harpsichord and Haydn was accustomed to leading thus.

The Boston Symphony is not and Leinsdorf is not. It is also relevant that an 18th century concertmaster would have assumed more leadership responsibility than is expected of his modern counterpart.

Can It Be Done?

If Leinsdorf intended to show that a Haydn Symphony was effectively led by using the 18th century mechanics of conducting, he succeeded mainly in demonstrating the opposite.

He achieved a precise performance, but he did it by abdicating his self-imposed position as keyboard continuo player.

Leisdorf felt—and rightly—that the harpsichord was needed; he also felt—and I know not whether rightly or no—that the Boston Symphony could not be trusted to get through the piece without the help of his modern arm-waving technique.

The mere sight of Leinsdorf as he did half of each of two jobs was enough to expose the hollowness of his pretension. But my proper concern is the ear, not the eye.

In that realm I would point out that the sporadic harpsichord playing left gaps where chords were wanted. What was worse, it produced an effect of textural discontinuity, which, in a piece otherwise so uniform in its textures, was inappropriate, jarring, and unmusical.

There is nothing wrong in conducting Haydn from the keyboard if it is effectively done. When it is badly done, the gullible and the ignorant may be impressed with what they take to be a display both of scholarship and of virtuosity.

In fact, Mr. Leinsdorf's little show turned out to be as relevant—and musically damaging—as doing the performance in knee-breeches and wigs of 1763. The point is worth making, because it is not a unique experience to be offered the gesture without the substance.

1791

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 24 1965

Scissors and Paste

Scissors and Paste Are Bad Composers

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Some weeks ago, Erich Leinsdorf conducted Dvorak's Symphony in E flat, No. 3. I hadn't heard it before, but I had read it and I had noted that the finale seemed long and a bit scatterbrained, though no more so than many other movements by Dvorak. Leinsdorf evidently thought so, too; anyway, I was not surprised to be told there would be some cuts.

In reviewing the concert I wrote that the finale would, after all, have been quite agreeable to hear uncut, and that I regretted especially the absence of a certain E major episode in the middle of the movement. This produced a letter from a woman who was cross because I questioned Leinsdorf's decision to make cuts. She wrote: "If the E major episode referred to were of any importance Mr. Leinsdorf would not have left it out." How important, I wondered, did poor Dvorak think it was?

The effect, that is the possible benefit or damage, of cutting varies according to the size of what is omitted, but even more according to the shape of what is left. The recent Boston Opera Group production of Mozart's "Abduction" left out two arias, Blonde's first one, and the one with which Belmonte begins Act III.

I thought the omissions a pity. Blonde was left standed somehow because this way she was around a long time before she had a chance to establish her character vocally, and that is, after all, how operatic characters have to do it. While Belmonte's aria is not one of the stronger numbers in the score, there was a loss in the destruction of a certain formal symmetry with Act I, in which action is also preceded by an aria for Belmonte, and in the elimination of the stylistic formality that frames action within pure music. In extenuation one can point out that these omissions left behind no bleeding gashes.

Mutations

The cuts that Leinsdorf made in his recent performance of Haydn's "Seasons" did not exactly create the effect of "bleeding chunks" either—Tovey's term for the customary Wagner concert excerpts—but they did suggest hideously stunted growth. From the Storm chorus near the end of "Summer," Leinsdorf eliminated about one-third (something like 60 measures), giving us, among other things, the absurdity of a Storm with most of the storm left out. I would estimate the time saved to be a minute and a half.

The great final Trio with Double Chorus was treated worse than that. Its music at first is in a rather broken style: there is a bass solo, than a bass-tenor duet, then the solo trio has a dialogue in short phrases with alternate halves of the chorus. During all this the C major tonality is colored and darkened by foreign notes, many borrowed from C minor. At last (measure 60, "Ein ew'ger Fruehling herrect"), after a majestic upbeat, the music broadens out into a firm, clear C major, and more spacious in its motion than anything so far.

This also turns out to be preparatory, and it leads into a choral fugue (same tempo, but with more quick notes predominating). This fugue mirrors the comparative harmonic complexity of the beginning of this movement. Haydn now reaches a climax of great intensity: musical events succeed one another rapidly, the fugue's polyphony gives way to chordal writing again, and at last the tension of all this is released in another great arrival on C major (measures 116-8, "Dann singen wir"). Again in the most spacious manner, and with the harmonic magnificence of the turn toward F major, the music moves with concision to its conclusion in about a dozen measures.

Leinsdorf's way of saving two minutes was to skip from the first C major outburst directly to the second. Thus, he left out nearly half the piece. In omitting the fugue, he not only threw out what is in itself beautiful and effective music, but also eliminated a necessary and marvelous contrast in texture and pace. And when the climax of measure 118 arrived where measure 61 should have been, it arrived, so to speak, unearned.

In place — in the place Haydn assigned it, that is—that climax is as moving as anything I know in music. In the place assigned it by Erich Leinsdorf, who with all respect is not so good a composer as Haydn, the effect was scrappy. It was disconcerting, even ugly, to have a movement come to an end so brusquely after all the preparations for something obviously much broader.

Gore

This is the effect also of Leinsdorf's orchestral essays on the Wagner music dramas. In his recent performance of a "Goetterdaemmerung" potpourri, preparations and preliminaries seemed to lead always to further preparations and preliminaries. The interlude before Act 1, scene 3, is wonderful music, but it needs the intently listening Bruennhilde and the arrival of Waltraute to complete its meaning. The kind of continuity that led Leinsdorf instead to the Act II Prelude, which in turn needs the sinister Alberich-Hagen scene to complete its meaning, is the arbitrary patchwork of a cheap pun.

Worse at least because more insidious is the cutting in the first act interlude of a single measure containing only a soft timpani roll, a similar measure a moment later, and two such measures a little farther on. True, there was nothing of thematic content. The lay listener could be excused for thinking of such a measure as one in which nothing is going on; not, I think, the Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There is beautiful music in the rhythm of those measures, that is, in the breathing spaces those measures provide between the expressive phrases of the violins and woodwinds. Is Leinsdorf to such a degree insensitive to pace, continuity, the need of music to breathe? Does he think those measures a mistake of Wagner's?—and in this context I am reminded of his arbitary omission of a measure's silence in the Haydn Symphony No. 96 a couple of years ago. And I cannot believe he was just concerned with shortening the concert by 20 seconds!

Would the public really not have sat through the extra 20 minutes of an honest performance of Haydn's "Seasons"? There are people in the Symphony audience wose inner clocks propel them from the hall at a given hour, no matter what. If the program had said that the concert would last until 4:45 Friday, 11:15 Saturday, would there have been mass outrage?

The Handel and Haydn Society commands a public that sits attentively through "Messiah" for much longer than that. Must the Boston Symphony assume less love for music and less Sitzfleisch from its patrons?

180

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 281,586
DEC 27 1964

(Herald Staff Photos by Laban Whittaker)

TRAINED ON EMPTY SEATS, one of four cameras used by Ch. 2 to telecast the Boston Symphony's concerts is focused during rehearsal.

A Symphony Rehearsal Without an Orchestra

That's How the Ch. 2 Concert Telecasts Begin

By IRENE SAINT

The stage set was stark and strange. The simple elegance of Symphony Hall was harshly lit, with the chairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's players in place, but unoccupied. White placards with instrument names substituted for the musicians. A young man in shirt sleeves wandered about the empty stage with a walkie-talkie and a light meter, painstakingly recording and reporting the intensity of light on each vacant chair.

In the first tier of the balcony, a handful of people huddled around a man with a slightly graying crew cut, black-rimmed glasses, bent intently over a music score. Each was following a complicated mimeographed cue sheet.

The incongruous performance was an orchestra-less rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a live telecast of a concert over Boston's educational station, Channel 2.

USING FOUR CAMERAS, the director and producer of the program make visual music. By meticulously planned camera work, they make sure that the TV audience's attention is always riveted on that portion of the orchestra bearing the main musical brunt of the moment.

"We try to bring out the inner voices of the instrument," says director David Davis, station manager of Channel 2. "We avoid the bouncing ball technique that was popular in the old silent movie days, and in so doing sometimes find ourselves shooting counter melody. The result is that we believe TV audiences listen twice as hard as symphony-goers because they are watching the music makers as well as listening."

Both he and the producer, Jordan Whitelaw, radio-television producer for the Boston Symphony, bring impressive musical credentials to their efforts. Davis was a music major at Northwestern University, and took his master's degree in music at the University of Pennsylvania. "I was a trumpet player and a frustrated conductor," he says.

Whitelaw, whose voice was his instrument, was a member of the first illustrious class of the Berkshire School of Music at Tanglewood in 1940 where conductor Leonard Bernstein and composer Lukas Foss were among his classmates. History was his major at Harvard, but he continued singing under Serge Koussevitzky at every opportunity.

THE SUCCESS OF THEIR imaginative camera work is attested to by top musicians. Bernstein, who has done more than any other musician to coax the average listener to appreciate the nuances of classical music, once phoned WGBH from a vacation spot on Martha's Vineyard to ask about a symphony telecast. When told that the two men had never rehearsed the program with the orchestra, he said, "I am amazed. I am amazed."

Walter Piston watched a videotape of a Boston Symphony Orchestra performance of his music "and we were trembling," recalls Davis. At the end, Piston was silent. Finally he said, slowly, "That is the most thrilling experience I have ever had. Thank you."

The mechanics of telecasting a concert are intricate and time-consuming. First Whitelaw, who attends all BSO rehearsals, takes the next score to be telecast home with him. He works over it movement by movement, indicating shots he would like. He figures that the amount of time devoted to a single program is the equivalent of its length (roughly two hours) times six.

Next he and Davis have a three-hour session together, playing recordings of the music. "Then I take the score home, playing the music an average of four times, and planning every single move of every camera. I do this for fun," says Davis, the busy assistant general manager of WGBH.

ON BROADCAST DAY, technicians start setting up in Symphony Hall about 12:30 in the afternoon. The orchestra chairs are arranged as musical director Erich Leinsdorf dictates, and the two TV men work around that setup. While the lighting director, Kenneth Anderson, works on stage with his light meter, giving instructions to his assistant focusing the lights up above, Davis takes the other technicians carefully through a complicated cue sheet.

Broken down camera by camera, the instructions are numbered and read, for instance, "4C," or "camera four on the conductor," or "SS, ZB for C," (Continued

BASSOON II
ENGLISH HORN

CHECKING LIGHT METER, lighting director Kenneth Anderson reports results over walkie-talkie.

OBSCURED

181

Leinsdorf Interview Ad Lib

(Continued from Page Five)

meaning "same shot, zoom back for conductor."

For the last telecast, the orchestra played two pieces, a relatively simple Robert Schumann's "Overture to Byron's Manfred" and one of the most complicated and longest symphonies in the orchestra's repertoire, Gustav Mahler's "Symphony No. 6." For the symphony alone, the cue sheet ran 13 pages.

"The Mahler was the most difficult kind of music to work with," said Whitelaw. "The music has no long lines to stay with; it is made up of very brief phrases, which means that the cameras had to jump around a lot. In the Schumann, the reverse was true. So little happened that we had to be inventive. We had to dream up visual angles that were nice to look at and musically proper."

"Something of a challenge to reduce to a 12-inch box," added Davis in a quiet understatement.

AFTER THE PAPER skull session, Davis and Whitelaw went to a bus parked by the stage door which is crammed with equipment, and the technicians took up their positions within the hall. Davis seated himself before five screens, four showing the angles of each of the four cameras. One is in the first tier of the balcony at the conductor's left, number two in the projection booth, high in the rear of the hall; number three on the conductor's right in the balcony, screened, as is camera one from the audience by curtains; and number four positioned in a hole in the organ behind the orchestra, aimed square at the conductor on the podium. The fifth screen on the bus is the picture on the air.

None of the cameramen has any special musical background, but, as Whitelaw says, "They are interested and smart." And they have been working together as a team for some time, Davis and Whitelaw since 1958. All together 22 men and women are involved in the broadcast, the largest number of any Channel 2 show.

On one side of Davis in the bus was a Harvard graduate student, a music major who kept his eyes riveted on the score. To Davis' right was a "switcher" who put the appropriate camera on the key screen. Behind him the assistant director called out the upcoming camera cue. Over her head the taped music whirred.

Davis, in communication with the crews inside, went through the camera cues calmly, efficiently, in a monotone reminiscent of a rocket countdown. At one point he caught himself swinging his pencil to the music, and sheepishly said, "Aaron Copland called this conductor's music." Whitelaw is more frenetic, dashing between the bus and the concert stage to test shots or surreptitiously inch a chair forward to improve a camera angle.

FROM 3:30 TO 6:30 the crew ran through the full orchestra program, then listened to Davis and Whitelaw cut and refine the camera shots, broke for an hour for dinner, then back to set up for the night's live concert, prepared to shoot until 10:30. All together, nearly 10 hours of full crew time went into the two hour telecast, plus the long homework hours that Whitelaw and Davis had already put in.

The prime reason for the empty-hall rehearsal is the extraordinarily heavy schedule of the Boston Symphony which allows no special rehearsal time for TV.

Another factor is finances, for Channel 2, a non-profit outfit financed by contributions, counts its pennies.

The Cambridge Series, six winter concerts of the full Boston Symphony, were chosen for the last seven years for the live telecasts, partly because Sanders Theatre at Harvard where the concerts were originally played, was equipped for telecasting, whereas then Symphony Hall was not. The concerts were switched to a fully equipped Symphony Hall two seasons ago. Another reason is that six concerts, rather than the season's full 24, seem like a more digestible TV fare.

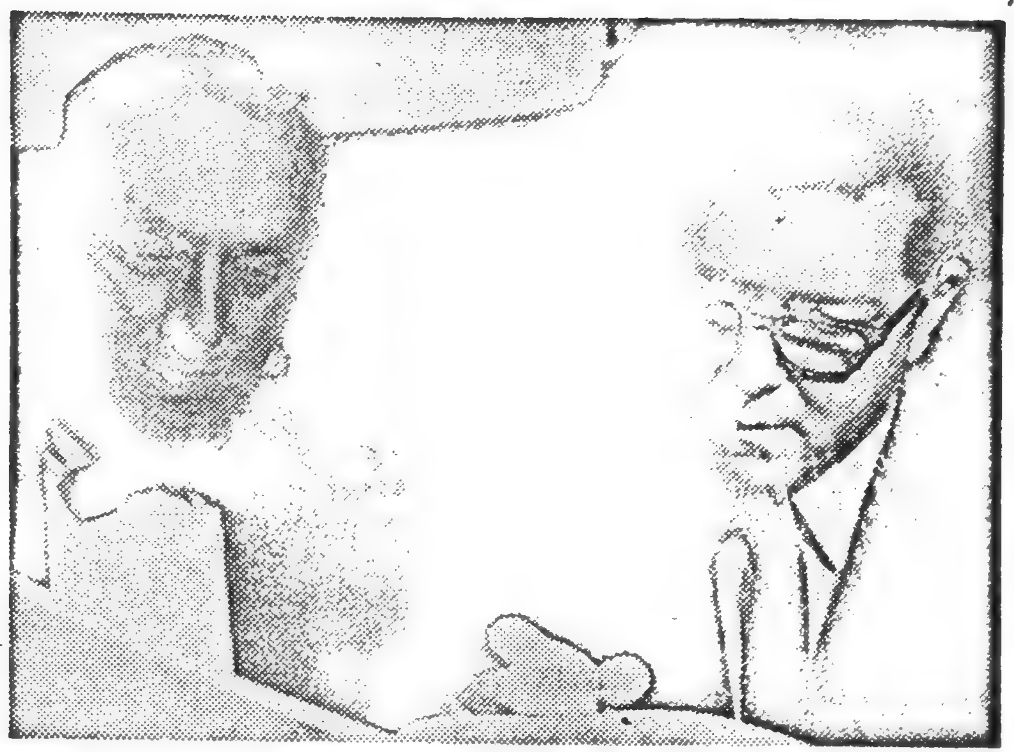
Another innovation is that this year for the first time on a regular basis, the orchestra's musical director, Erich Leinsdorf, has been seen on a half-hour, pre-concert interview. Taped at Channel 2's studio, the interview, riddled with Leinsdorf's gentle, jabbing wit, purports to reproduce what happens in the Green Room, the conductor's backstage lair at Symphony Hall.

AS IN THE LAST TELECAST December 16, the guests might range from concert master Joseph Silverstein, who discussed his role in the orchestra, showed off his prized, antique violins, and recounted his exploits as cook, to Joan Kennedy, Senator Edward Kennedy's wife, with whom Leinsdorf discussed the Kennedy Cultural Center in Washington.

When asked by Joan about his elegant brocade smoking jacket, Leinsdorf confided that it was made by "a typical English tailor, from Hungary." And when she questioned him about women conductors, he ducked the inquiry, saying, "That is what is known in sports as a curve," and dismissed the prospect saying, "Women don't look well in a full-dress suit." Although taped, the Leinsdorf interviews are ad-libbed and unrehearsed.

During this season the next symphony telecasts are scheduled for January 12, March 16 and April 13.

If this popular and successful program among music lovers has a secret it is in Davis' words that "it tries to teach musical form with a camera." In that it is eminently successful.



(Herald Photo by Laban Whittaker)

DURING REHEARSAL producer Jordan Whitelaw (left) and director David Davis check music score.

'Discovery' Visits Birthplace Of Beatle Music Craze

"Discovery '64" travels to Liverpool and The Cavern, the dingy, smoke-filled cellar which spawned the musical sound and fury of the Beatles, this Sunday, Dec. 27 at 10 a.m. on Channel 7.

At The Cavern — source of the now famed Mersey sound and Mersey beat — and amid the din of wild, screaming groups like The Clayton Squares, Hoboes, and Spider Men, host Frank Buxton will talk to many of the beatle-headed youngsters who come nightly to hear "The Swinging Sounds of Liverpool."

To help explain this strange phenomenon, "Discovery" will be aided by The Foremosts, a group which started in Liverpool and has since become a smash singing act in England. The Foremosts will examine the reasons for the Beatle craze and why one out of every fifteen Liverpool youngsters belongs to a musical group.

In addition, ABC cameras will provide audiences with sweeping views of Liverpool, once just a grey, industrial city but now the entertainment capital of the younger generation.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 2 9 1965

Today in Society

Top Music Societies To Honor Leinsdorf

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Some of Boston's laeding music institutions will meet next Thursday to honor one of music's leading figures—Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Only conductor and active performer to be named a trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing arts, Mr. Leinsdorf is also a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center. He has Twice been chosen Musician of the Year by a poll of music critics.

At the luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn next Thursday, those sharing the head table with Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf will include pres. Chester Williams of the New England Conservatory of Music, Alfred Nash Patterson of the Chorus Pro Musica, Prof. Klaus Liepmann, Director of Music at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Mrs. H. W. Hogarth Swann, president of the South End Music Centre, Harry Ellis Dickson of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Nicholas Van Slyk, Dr. George Gayer, Dr. William Vogler, Miss Ethel Damon Clark, Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Spencer Dormitzer, Benjamin Lacy, Mrs. Albert Hunt and William Stevens.

Among well-known patrons of music invited to represent the South End Music Center, one of America's oldest and best known settlement music schools, are Mrs. John Coolidge, Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth, Mrs. John Boit, Mrs. Henry Hosmer, Mrs. James Townsend, Mrs. Ronald Ferry, Miss Dorothy Hildreth, Mrs. Charles Gushee, Mrs. Herbert Harris, Mrs. Edward Bernays, and the Centre Director, Kalman Novak, who is also conductor of the Boston Civic Symphony.

Friends of the Center, which has more than 500 pupils of every race, creed and color, are invited tonight to 7 Lowell st., Cambridge, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bernays, to hear Mozart, Ives and Beethoven played by Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo, pianist; Judith Olson, clarinetist; Dorothy Alpert, violinist and Victor Alpert, viola player.

SYMPHONEY-GOERS today will meet at the Midtown to honor new Swiss Consul in Boston, Dr. Freddy Homburger. The music of his country will be the subject discussed by Boston Symphony Orchestra member Harry Ellis Dickson. A musician and painter, as well as scientist and physician, Dr. Homburger has just helped to establish, in his first months here, the first Boston Branch of American Society for Friendship with Switzerland. At the head table with the Homburgers will be Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Weld, Mr. and Mrs. John Mungar, Mr. and Mrs. George Seybolt, Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Col J. Perry Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Greenough, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lanz and Dr. and Mrs. Hugues Ryser.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 1 1 1965

Dr. Schweitzer's Daughter to Speak

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY has become the center of all kinds of social affairs. There was a time when Friday afternoons were reserved for Symphony-goers, but now there are luncheons beforehand, too.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, Friday, will have as guest of honor, Mme. Rhena Eckert-Schweitzer, only daughter of Dr. Albert Schweitzer.

Dr. Schweitzer will celebrate his 90th birthday, Thursday, at his hospital in Lambarene, Africa, but tribute will be paid to him all over world.

Friday's luncheon guests will hear Harry Ellis Dickson present a profile on Dr. Schweitzer, who is not only a great humanitarian, but also a brilliant musician.

Friends of Albert Schweitzer are invited to join in this birthday celebration and to meet Dr. Schweitzer's daughter. Sitting with her at the head table will be Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. Julian W. Rogers, Dr. Aniya Chakravarty, Dr. Homer Jack and Mrs. Serge Kouusevitzky.

Also, Mrs. Paul Bernat, Miss Mildred Bixby, the Rev. Edwin Prince Booth, Mrs. A.W. Contratto, Mrs. James S. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Vogt, the Rev. Rhys Williams and the Rev. and Mrs. George Marshall.

OBSCURED

Leinsdorf Interview Ad Lib

(Continued from Page Five)

meaning "same shot, zoom back for conductor."

For the last telecast, the orchestra played two pieces, a relatively simple Robert Schumann's "Overture to Byron's Manfred" and one of the most complicated and longest symphonies in the orchestra's repertoire, Gustav Mahler's "Symphony No. 6." For the symphony alone, the cue sheet ran 13 pages.

"The Mahler was the most difficult kind of music to work with," said Whitelaw. "The music has no long lines to stay with; it is made up of very brief phrases, which means that the cameras had to jump around a lot. In the Schumann, the reverse was true. So little happened that we had to be inventive. We had to dream up visual angles that were nice to look at and musically proper."

"Something of a challenge to reduce to a 12-inch box," added Davis in a quiet understatement.

AFTER THE PAPER skull session, Davis and Whitelaw went to a bus parked by the stage door which is crammed with equipment, and the technicians took up their positions within the hall. Davis seated himself before five screens, four showing the angles of each of the four cameras. One is in the first tier of the balcony at the conductor's left, number two in the projection booth, high in the rear of the hall; number three on the conductor's right in the balcony, screened, as is camera one from the audience by curtains; and number four positioned in a hole in the organ behind the orchestra, aimed square at the conductor on the podium. The fifth screen on the bus is the picture on the air.

None of the cameramen has any special musical background, but, as Whitelaw says, "They are interested and smart." And they have been working together as a team for some time, Davis and Whitelaw since 1956. All together 22 men and women are involved in the broadcast, the largest number of any Channel 2 show.

On one side of Davis in the bus was a Harvard graduate student, a music major who kept his eyes riveted on the score. To Davis' right was a "switcher" who put the appropriate camera on the key screen. Behind him the assistant director called out the upcoming camera cue. Over her head the taped music whirred.

Davis, in communication with the crews inside, went through the camera cues calmly, efficiently, in a monotone reminiscent of a rocket countdown. At one point he caught himself swinging his pencil to the music, and sheepishly said, "Aaron Copland called this conductor's music." Whitelaw is more frenetic, dashing between the bus and the concert stage to test shots or surreptitiously inch a chair forward to improve a camera angle.

FROM 3:30 TO 6:30 the crew ran through the full orchestra program, then listened to Davis and Whitelaw cut and refine the camera shots, broke for an hour for dinner, then back to set up for the night's live concert, prepared to shoot until 10:30. All together, nearly 10 hours of full crew time went into the two hour telecast, plus the long homework hours that Whitelaw and Davis had already put in.

The prime reason for the empty-hall rehearsal is the extraordinarily heavy schedule of the Boston Symphony which allows no special rehearsal time for TV. Another factor is finances, for Channel 2, a non-profit outfit financed by contributions, counts its pennies.

The Cambridge Series, six winter concerts of the full Boston Symphony, were chosen for the last seven years for the live telecasts, partly because Sanders Theatre at Harvard where the concerts were originally played, was equipped for telecasting, whereas then Symphony Hall was not. The concerts were switched to a fully equipped Symphony Hall two seasons ago. Another reason is that six concerts, rather than the season's full 24, seem like a more digestible TV fare.

Another innovation is that this year for the first time on a regular basis, the orchestra's musical director, Erich Leinsdorf, has been seen on a half-hour, pre-concert interview. Taped at Channel 2's studio, the interview, riddled with Leinsdorf's gentle, jabbing wit, purports to reproduce what happens in the Green Room, the conductor's backstage lair at Symphony Hall.

AS IN THE LAST TELECAST December 16, the guests might range from concert master Joseph Silverstein, who discussed his role in the orchestra, showed off his prized, antique violins, and recounted his exploits as cook, to Joan Kennedy, Senator Edward Kennedy's wife, with whom Leinsdorf discussed the Kennedy Cultural Center in Washington.

When asked by Joan about his elegant brocade smoking jacket, Leinsdorf confided that it was made by "a typical English tailor, from Hungary." And when she questioned him about women conductors, he ducked the inquiry, saying, "That is what is known in sports as a curve," and dismissed the prospect saying, "Women don't look well in a full-dress suit." Although taped, the Leinsdorf interviews are ad-libbed and unrehearsed.

During this season the next symphony telecasts are scheduled for January 12, March 16 and April 18.

If this popular and successful program among music lovers has a secret it is in Davis' words that "It tries to teach musical form with a camera." In that it is eminently successful.

(Herald Photo by Laban Whittaker)

DURING REHEARSAL producer Jordan Whitelaw (left) and director David Davis check music score.

'Discovery' Visits Birthplace Of Beatle Music Craze

"Discovery '64" travels to Liverpool and The Cavern, the dingy, smoke-filled cellar which spawned the musical sound and fury of the Beatles, this Sunday, Dec. 27 at 10 a.m. on Channel 7.

At The Cavern — source of the now famed Mersey sound and Mersey beat — and amid the din of wild, screaming groups like The Clayton Squares, Hoboes, and Spider Men, host Frank Buxton will talk to many of the beatle-headed youngsters who come nightly to hear "The Swinging Sounds of Liverpool."

To help explain this strange phenomenon, "Discovery" will be aided by The Foremosts, a group which started in Liverpool and has since become a smash singing act in England. The Foremosts will examine the reasons for the Beatle craze and why one out of every fifteen Liverpool youngsters belongs to a musical group.

In addition, ABC cameras will provide audiences with sweeping views of Liverpool, once just a grey, industrial city but now the entertainment capital of the younger generation.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 29 1965

Today in Society

Top Music Societies To Honor Leinsdorf

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Some of Boston's laeding music institutions will meet next Thursday to honor one of music's leading figures—Boston Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf.

Only conductor and active performer to be named a trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing arts, Mr. Leinsdorf is also a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center. He has Twice been chosen Musician of the Year by a poll of music critics.

At the luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn next Thursday, those sharing the head table with Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf will include pres. Chester Williams of the New England Conservatory of Music, Alfred Nash Patterson of the Chorus Pro Musica, Prof. Klaus Liepmann, Director of Music at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Mrs. H. W. Hogarth Swann, president of the South End Music Centre, Harry Ellis Dickson of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Nicholas Van Slyk, Dr. George Gayer, Dr. William Vogler, Miss Ethel Damon Clark, Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Spencer Dormitzer, Benjamin Lacy, Mrs. Albert Hunt and William Stevens.

Among well-known patrons of music invited to represent the South End Music Center, one of America's oldest and best known settlement music schools, are Mrs. John Coolidge, Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth, Mrs. John Boit, Mrs. Henry Hosmer, Mrs. James Townsend, Mrs. Ronald Ferry, Miss Dorothy Hildreth, Mrs. Charles Gushee, Mrs. Herbert Harris, Mrs. Edward Bernays, and the Centre Director, Kalman Novak, who is also conductor of the Boston Civic Symphony.

Friends of the Center, which has more than 500 pupils of every race, creed and color, are invited tonight to 7 Lowell st., Cambridge, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bernays, to hear Mozart, Ives and Beethoven played by Mrs. Rosario Mazzeo, pianist; Judith Olson, clarinetist; Dorothy Alpert, violinist and Victor Alpert, viola player.

SYMPHONEY-GOERS today will meet at the Midtown to honor new Swiss Consul in Boston, Dr. Freddy Homburger. The music of his country will be the subject discussed by Boston Symphony Orchestra member Harry Ellis Dickson. A musician and painter, as well as scientist and physician, Dr. Homburger has just helped to establish, in his first months here, the first Boston Branch of American Society for Friendship with Switzerland. At the head table with the Homburgers will be Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Weld, Mr. and Mrs. John Mungar, Mr. and Mrs. George Seybolt, Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Col J. Perry Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Greenough, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lanz and Dr. and Mrs. Hugues Ryser.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 11 1965

Dr. Schweitzer's Daughter to Speak

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY has become the center of all kinds of social affairs. There was a time when Friday afternoons were reserved for Symphony-goers, but now there are luncheons beforehand, too.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, Friday, will have as guest of honor, Mme. Rhena Eckert-Schweitzer, only daughter of Dr. Albert Schweitzer.

Dr. Schweitzer will celebrate his 90th birthday, Thursday, at his hospital in Lambarene, Africa, but tribute will be paid to him all over world.

Friday's luncheon guests will hear Harry Ellis Dickson present a profile on Dr. Schweitzer, who is not only a great humanitarian, but also a brilliant musician.

Friends of Albert Schweitzer are invited to join in this birthday celebration and to meet Dr. Schweitzer's daughter. Sitting with her at the head table will be Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. Julian W. Rogers, Dr. Aniya Chakravarty, Dr. Homer Jack and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky.

Also, Mrs. Paul Bernat, Miss Mildred Bixby, the Rev. Edwin Prince Booth, Mrs. A.W. Contratto, Mrs. James S. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Vogt, the Rev. [illegible] Williams and the Rev. and Mrs. George Marshall.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

DEC 1964

LEINSDORF

ERICH LEINSDORF and an American citi[illegible] leaped into prominence whe[illegible] he became assistant t[illegible] Toscanini at the Salz[illegible] sequently active in Italy [illegible] gium, he was engaged in [illegible] sistant conductor of the Metro[illegible] and, at the death of Bodanzi[illegible] successor there. Positions as [illegible] the Cleveland Orchestra and the [illegible] Philharmonic followed. However [illegible] up to the present time reached [illegible] with his appointment as conductor [illegible] Boston Symphony following the [illegible] of Charles Munch and the music [illegible] watches with great interest as he [illegible] as an instrument of his own expression.

musical notation is relative

By Erich Leinsdorf. One basic problem few performers realize is that composers indicate not only what the performer should do, but they use their symbols often to counteract existing abuses. Every composer, even the romantics who allegedly wrote regardless of existing conditions, never composed without an ear to that specific sound which they knew. They always worked either for an ideal, or they aimed to counteract existing imperfections, abuses, and other insufficiencies which pained them. When I hear (alas, so often) somebody stating with great rectitude that he never changes an iota in the printed score, I know by that one statement that I am listening to a person ignorant of the relativity in music notation.☐ Musicologists are making a life study of the conditions during specific periods in which they specialize, and it can only benefit performers to consider these findings as an essential part of their own preparation. Thus I hope that the old cliché of the ivory-tower bookworm who has no contact with live music may be once and for all shattered—to be replaced by your receptivity of what the musicologists have to offer.☐ We need a generation of musicians whose total knowledge and total awareness is greater than heretofore. The problems to be mastered are more than those faced by the generation of our fathers. Simple proficiency could give, in the past, a pleasant life and satisfactory earnings to an instrumentalist. But that belongs, you may say unfortunately, to another era.

When an instrumentalist joins a symphony orchestra he will be faced with over one hundred (and in the busier orchestras with well over two hundred), different works in a single season. Only a brilliant sight-reader who can absorb music quickly is able to stand up under the impact of having to digest that much new material.

All performers, be they instrumentalists or singers, string players or woodwind players, chamber music players or orchestra members, or soloists should know a large repertoire. The idea of repertoire can best be understood when considering the theatre. The commercial Broadway theatre does type-casting. This is inevitable when one production is arranged by a company, a special corporation created for that very purpose. You scout for a hunchback to play a hunchback, an Oriental to play an Oriental, etc. You cast by finding a definite type. Repertoire is the opposite.

In music we must have repertoire, and this imposes upon the performing musician the same kind of mastery of different styles which a great actor commands. With increasing audiences, with longer and larger seasons, with more subscription programs, the need for a broader repertoire is growing constantly. Some very fine soloists are missing opportunities because of the limited range of their repertoire.

Studying a composer in depth is of great importance for your understanding. You may wonder how a clarinetist could benefit from knowing the poetry which Brahms chose for his songs, or how a singer might benefit from being acquainted with Brahms' chamber music. Your authority, your mastery of the expressive content and of the deeper meaning of any music can only manifest itself if you have a total knowledge of a composer's output and a complete understanding of the atmosphere in which he existed and from which he took his inspiration.

In this context let me advise you, if I may, to study works that are new to you by reading scores rather than by listening to records. It is much better to err on your own responsibility than to be correct while imitating someone else. I cannot begin to describe to you how dangerous it is to study from records and to form your opinions through another interpreter. No matter how great a model you choose, no matter how fine an artist you imitate, it can't work, because your own personality and that of your model may be totally different: and if you, with one temperament, one set of reflexes, and one kind of emotional make-up attempt to pattern yourself to perform by imitating somebody else whose personality, temperament, and emotional constitution may be totally different from yours, it will always remain an unconvincing, second-hand transcription of another man's genuine approach to a work. It is preferable to make up your own mind. Of course, your own mind must be made up on the basis of your own authority—and that authority you acquire by deepening your understanding through a profound knowledge of music and of the cultural climate in which the music has been born.

WHITESTONE PHOTO

The author in session at Tanglewood.

I [illegible] opportunity to talk to parents of young musicians. I am asked for advice and try to point out the importance of some of these things which I am discussing here with you. I try to communicate to these parents that equipment alone is not enough. It is too common to be prized very highly. To fulfill the emotional needs of people is our goal, and that requires of all musical performers depth and breadth in addition to facility, ability, and technical competence in general.

With all the attention paid to the creative efforts of the last twenty-five years, it is a curious symptom, of a yet undiagnosed cause, that composers are turning rapidly away from the traditional performance media. More people listen to concerts and to recordings, more people watch opera and musical performance on television than ever before; yet they get to know little contemporary music. The charge that performers do not champion contemporary music is as superficial as any slogan. Professional performers know that they can subject their public to a certain amount of experimentation and beyond this they must perform works which are meaningful not only to themselves and the composers, but to the public as well.

It is very difficult for one who stands in the middle of musical life to properly assess such a phenomenon as that of the War Requiem of Benjamin Britten, which, although it presents great difficulties for performing organizations, will have been played seventy-five times, in different countries, for different audiences, before the second anniversary of its premiere. In addition, it has sold, according to a London newspaper statement, one-quarter of a million records. Many composers and critics maintain that this is not a typical case, and for all I know, they may be right. Yet it does prove one thing—that a work by a contemporary composer, albeit not in the latest style, has reached a degree of popular success uncommon for scores of recent vintage. It does prove that the public is not prejudiced against names of composers per se.

What is a composer and what does the world expect of him? What is a creative artist? His work—at its best—mirrors the world of his day, and outlives him and his era.

We play Beethoven today and not Cherubini, though he was a successful contemporary. What mysterious reasons account for Beethoven's universality in music which communicates nearly one hundred and forty years after his death just as meaningfully to audiences and musicians as when the composer lived, while Cherubini possesses the appeal of historic curiosity only?

Consider this year, 1964: a century after the death of Meyerbeer, and after the birth of Richard Strauss. The first is probably totally unknown to most of you, for he is no longer performed. Occasional attempts at revival by enthusiastic groups in recent years have failed—and probably for good reasons. It is difficult to give an adequate description of Meyerbeer's raging success with the public in his lifetime. He sat on a throne comparable to that of the great nineteenth-century composers.

Strauss, one hundred years after his birth, is a problem. I believe that a good part of his life work is of truly genius caliber, yet he lived and composed much longer than the period which he represented. What we of posterity say about these men has nothing to do with their avowed objectives.

When composers today are faced with public non-acceptance, we hear references to later generations who will understand, thus implying that the contemporaries do not understand. This may, once in a blue century, be the case. But as a rule, to be applied generally, the argument will not hold water. Composers always work for their contemporaries, and worrying about immortality is rare. This immortality is the great mystery which contemporaries never quite catch. They recognize the great ones; but often they also consider the fashionable as great.

(Continued on page 66)

Musical Notation is Relative

(Continued from page 28)

The philosophical problem of the creative artist is how to find the proper way of expressing himself without indulging in ways unintelligible to contemporary ears; or, on the other extreme, how not to be a slave to instantaneous acceptance to a point where he may land unwittingly as a commercial artist. Yet, if the talent of a man should be in the line of commercial artistry, he is again wrong, toward himself and toward the world, by trying to be something else. There are types whose creative impulse dries up if they do not receive instantaneous approval of the masses; and there are others who think they are not creative if they receive any kind of immediate acceptance. To find himself and yet not alienate listeners from his music is a great achievement for any composer.

A disturbing element (for some decades) has been the separation of creative and performing musicians. It is today almost axiomatic that one cannot do both supremely well. One is a master in either one or the other field. Yet, it seems to me that it would be most desirable for all composers to do some performing, and all performers to do some composing. For the composer to perform would be a most needed guide to a very profound understanding of the performer's needs. I find that many composers pack their works with complexities and difficulties which do not seem entirely justified by the end results. On the other hand, I would very much wish for all performers to compose, not necessarily for publication or for performance, but for a keener appreciation of the labor which creativity represents, and for greater indulgence on the performer's part with the problems of the creative artist.

Composers and performers have in the modern world another common problem: that there are very few amateur musicians left. Whoever studies music today does it for the purpose of becoming a professional. This leaves the listeners without active leadership. The concert halls and opera houses in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries were filled with groups of people who made music, as music lovers do for their own pleasure at home, and who constituted the finest, most critical, and also most appreciative public.

We need high standards of appreciation. It is not enough that our professional critics should have high standards. We need critical ability in our public. The ultimate aim is to bring the public of this country to a keener awareness of quality—because only through public pressure will our entire musical establishment improve.

Music is as dry and high, as gay and sad, as naive and sentimental, as shallow and profound, as the human world itself.☐

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

DEC 1964

7

ERICH LEINSDORF, [illegible] and an American citizen since 1942, leaped into prominence when, at the age of 22, he became assistant to Bruno Walter and Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival. Subsequently active in Italy, France and Belgium, he was engaged in 1938 as an assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera and, at the death of Bodanzky, became his successor there. Positions as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic followed. However, his career up to the present time reached its zenith with his appointment as conductor of the Boston Symphony following the resignation of Charles Munch and the music world watches with great interest as he molds it as an instrument of his own expression.

---

musical notation is relative

By Erich Leinsdorf. One basic problem few performers realize is that composers indicate not only what the performer should do, but they use their symbols often to counteract existing abuses. Every composer, even the romantics who allegedly wrote regardless of existing conditions, never composed without an ear to that specific sound which they knew. They always worked either for an ideal, or they aimed to counteract existing imperfections, abuses, and other insufficiencies which pained them. When I hear (alas, so often) somebody stating with great rectitude that he never changes an iota in the printed score, I know by that one statement that I am listening to a person ignorant of the relativity in music notation.☐ Musicologists are making a life study of the conditions during specific periods in which they specialize, and it can only benefit performers to consider these findings as an essential part of their own preparation. Thus I hope that the old cliché of the ivory-tower bookworm who has no contact with live music may be once and for all shattered—to be replaced by your receptivity of what the musicologists have to offer.☐ We need a generation of musicians whose total knowledge and total awareness is greater than heretofore. The problems to be mastered are more than those faced by the generation of our fathers. Simple proficiency could give, in the past, a pleasant life and satisfactory earnings to an instrumentalist. But that belongs, you may say unfortunately, to another era.

When an instrumentalist joins a symphony orchestra he will be faced with over one hundred (and in the busier orchestras with well over two hundred), different works in a single season. Only a brilliant sight-reader who can absorb music quickly is able to stand up under the impact of having to digest that much new material.

All performers, be they instrumentalists or singers, string players or woodwind players, chamber music players or orchestra members, or soloists should know a large repertoire. The idea of repertoire can best be understood when considering the theatre. The commercial Broadway theatre does type-casting. This is inevitable when one production is arranged by a company, a special corporation created for that very purpose. You scout for a hunchback to play a hunchback, an Oriental to play an Oriental, etc. You cast by finding a definite type. Repertoire is the opposite.

In music we must have repertoire, and this imposes upon the performing musician the same kind of mastery of different styles which a great actor commands. With increasing audiences, with longer and larger seasons, with more subscription programs, the need for a broader repertoire is growing constantly. Some very fine soloists are missing opportunities because of the limited range of their repertoire.

Studying a composer in depth is of great importance for your understanding. You may wonder how a clarinetist could benefit from knowing the poetry which Brahms chose for his songs, or how a singer might benefit from being acquainted with Brahms' chamber music. Your authority, your mastery of the expressive content and of the deeper meaning of any music can only manifest itself if you have a total knowledge of a composer's output and a complete understanding of the atmosphere in which he existed and from which he took his inspiration.

In this context let me advise you, if I may, to study works that are new to you by reading scores rather than by listening to records. It is much better to err on your own responsibility than to be correct while imitating someone else. I cannot begin to describe to you how dangerous it is to study from records and to form your opinions through another interpreter. No matter how great a model you choose, no matter how fine an artist you imitate, it can't work, because your own personality and that of your model may be totally different; and if you, with one temperament, one set of reflexes, and one kind of emotional make-up attempt to pattern yourself to perform by imitating somebody else whose personality, temperament, and emotional constitution may be totally different from yours, it will always remain an unconvincing, second-hand transcription of another man's genuine approach to a work. It is preferable to make up your own mind. Of course, your own mind must be made up on the basis of your own authority—and that authority you acquire by deepening your understanding through a profound knowledge of music and of the cultural climate in which the music has been born.

WHITESTONE PHOTO

The author in session at Tanglewood.

I often have the opportunity to talk to parents of young musicians. I am asked for advice, and I try to point out the importance of some of these things which I am discussing here with you. I try to communicate to these parents that equipment alone is not enough. It is too common to be prized very highly. To fulfill the emotional needs of people is our goal, and that requires of all musical performers depth and breadth in addition to facility, ability, and technical competence in general.

With all the attention paid to the creative efforts of the last twenty-five years, it is a curious symptom, of a yet undiagnosed cause, that composers are turning rapidly away from the traditional performance media. More people listen to concerts and to recordings, more people watch opera and musical performance on television than ever before; yet they get to know little contemporary music. The charge that performers do not champion contemporary music is as superficial as any slogan. Professional performers know that they can subject their public to a certain amount of experimentation and beyond this they must perform works which are meaningful not only to themselves and the composers, but to the public as well.

It is very difficult for one who stands in the middle of musical life to properly assess such a phenomenon as that of the War Requiem of Benjamin Britten, which, although it presents great difficulties for performing organizations, will have been played seventy-five times, in different countries, for different audiences, before the second anniversary of its premiere. In addition, it has sold, according to a London newspaper statement, one-quarter of a million records. Many composers and critics maintain that this is not a typical case, and for all I know, they may be right. Yet it does prove one thing—that a work by a contemporary composer, albeit not in the latest style, has reached a degree of popular success uncommon for scores of recent vintage. It does prove that the public is not prejudiced against names of composers per se.

What is a composer and what does the world expect of him? What is a creative artist? His work—at its best—mirrors the world of his day, and outlives him and his era.

We play Beethoven today and not Cherubini, though he was a successful contemporary. What mysterious reasons account for Beethoven's universality in music which communicates nearly one hundred and forty years after his death just as meaningfully to audiences and musicians as when the composer lived, while Cherubini possesses the appeal of historic curiosity only?

Consider this year, 1964: a century after the death of Meyerbeer, and after the birth of Richard Strauss. The first is probably totally unknown to most of you, for he is no longer performed. Occasional attempts at revival by enthusiastic groups in recent years have failed—and probably for good reasons. It is difficult to give an adequate description of Meyerbeer's raging success with the public in his lifetime. He sat on a throne comparable to that of the great nineteenth-century composers.

Strauss, one hundred years after his birth, is a problem. I believe that a good part of his life work is of truly genius caliber, yet he lived and composed much longer than the period which he represented. What we of posterity say about these men has nothing to do with their avowed objectives.

When composers today are faced with public non-acceptance, we hear references to later generations who will understand, thus implying that the contemporaries do not understand. This may, once in a blue century, be the case. But as a rule, to be applied generally, the argument will not hold water. Composers always work for their contemporaries, and worrying about immortality is rare. This immortality is the great mystery which contemporaries never quite catch. They recognize the great ones, but often they also consider the fashionable as great.

(Continued on page 66)

Musical Notation is Relative
(Continued from page 28)

The philosophical problem of the creative artist is how to find the proper way of expressing himself without indulging in ways unintelligible to contemporary ears; or, on the other extreme, how not to be a slave to instantaneous acceptance to a point where he may land unwittingly as a commercial artist. Yet, if the talent of a man should be in the line of commercial artistry, he is again wrong, toward himself and toward the world, by trying to be something else. There are types whose creative impulse dries up if they do not receive instantaneous approval of the masses; and there are others who think they are not creative if they receive any kind of immediate acceptance. To find himself and yet not alienate listeners from his music is a great achievement for any composer.

A disturbing element (for some decades) has been the separation of creative and performing musicians. It is today almost axiomatic that one cannot do both supremely well. One is a master in either one or the other field. Yet, it seems to me that it would be most desirable for all composers to do some performing, and all performers to do some composing. For the composer to perform would be a most needed guide to a very profound understanding of the performer's needs. I find that many composers pack their works with complexities and difficulties which do not seem entirely justified by the end results. On the other hand, I would very much wish for all performers to compose, not necessarily for publication or for performance, but for a keener appreciation of the labor which creativity represents, and for greater indulgence on the performer's part with the problems of the creative artist.

Composers and performers have in the modern world another common problem: that there are very few amateur musicians left. Whoever studies music today does it for the purpose of becoming a professional. This leaves the listeners without active leadership. The concert halls and opera houses in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries were filled with groups of people who [illegible] music, as music lovers [illegible] their own pleasure at home, and who constituted the finest, most critical, and also most appreciative public.

We need high standards of appreciation. It is not enough that our professional critics should have high standards. We need critical ability in our public. The ultimate aim is to bring the public of this country to a keener awareness of quality — because only through public pressure will our entire musical establishment [illegible]

Music is as dry and [illegible] and sad, as naive and [illegible] as shallow and profound as the human world itself.

183

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
C PPINGS
CO[illegible] E NEW YORK
6 [illegible] ERVICE

[illegible] NING NEWS
[illegible] y 4, 1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 83,193

1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

1965

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 29 1965

SMART SET

By ROSE WALSH

Erich Leinsdorf Honored

Well-deserved honors follow the brilliant music director and conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra Erich Leinsdorf, who has twice been named "Musician of the Year" in polls taken by music critics in "Musical America," and by "Music Business Magazine." In December when the latter magazine elected him to "Musician of the Year," it stated, "The business of being a musician is not unlike other professions. It is the product of the artist's day-to-day conscientious attention to his craft; of promises fulfilled and faiths upheld. Leinsdorf is such a musician."

Now comes the latest, a luncheon in salute of the musical genius which is being given, Thursday, Feb. 4, by representatives of various music institutions at Midtown Motor Inn. This will be the first time in Boston musical life that the leader of one of the greatest orchestras in the world will be feted by leaders and members of musical organizations.

The 11th maestro to lead Boston Symphony Orchestra is a member of the advisory committee on National Cultural Center and a trustee of John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. In that capacity he is the only conductor and the only active performer to serve on the new board.

Thursday's luncheon will give an opportunity to invited guests to meet Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf informally. At the head table they will be joined by officers of participating organizations: Mrs. William B. Stevens, Benjamin H. Lacy, Mrs. Albert B. Hunt, Chester W. Williams, Miss Ethel Damon Clark, Mrs. William H. Vogler, Mrs. Otto Combosi, Harry Ellis Dickson, Mrs. Hogarth H. W. Swann, Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Alfred Nash Patterson, Dr. George E. Geyer, Prof. Klaus Liepmann, Spencer Dormitzer, Mrs. Norman Sherman and Nicholas Van Slyck.

Only 12 Copies Printed

Leinsdorf's Story ... For His Children

By HERBERT KENNY

Boston Symphony conductor Erich ~~Leinsdorf~~ published an autobiography last week and gave all the copies away—to his children.

The slender, 56-page volume, which must rate among the most limited of limited editions, is titled " AChristmas Present for our Children," and unless your name is Leinsdorf, you'll probably never see the book.

The B.S.O. maestro had sound reason for writing the book, which sketches his early life.

"Children don't really know their parents," he says. "They come to maturity after we have achieved whatever we have achieved. They know very little about our past. They don't know how we have arrived or by what paths we got there."

Leinsdorf decided to bridge this parent-child gap and confided in a New York publisher friend who said he would print the book.

The conductor dictated his story into a recorder, had it transcribed by a secretary and then edited it. The total edition printed numbered an even dozen.

On Christmas morning he presented copies to his four children at his Brookline home, Gregor, 20, Joshua, 18, Deborah Hester, 15 and Jenny, 12. Two more copies were mailed to oldest son, David, 22, and daughter-in-law, Margaret, in New York city.

The children were ecstatic over the special gift.

As far as Leinsdorf is concerned the volume is a private and personal document and will probably never be distributed publicly.

But he has a bit of advice. "Too many children don't know their parents very well," he says. "More parents should follow this idea."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 29 1965

Leinsdorf To Be Feted At Luncheon

A luncheon in honor of Erich Leinsdorf, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be given by representatives of various music institutions, Thursday, Feb. 4, at the Midtown Motor Inn. Among those at the head table with Mr. Leinsdorf will be Mrs. H. W. Hogarth Swann, president of the South End Music Centre.

Her guests will sit at the South End Music Centre table and will include board members Mrs. Edward Bernays, Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth and Mrs. Henry Hosmer, and corporation members, Mrs. John Coolidge, Mrs. John Boit, Mrs. Herbert Harris, Mrs. Charles Gushee, Mrs. Ronald Ferry, Miss Dorothy Hildreth and Mrs. James Townsend. Also present in honor of Mr. Leinsdorf will be the Centre's director, Kalman Novak, conductor of the Boston Civic symphony.

This evening, members of the board and corporation of the Music Centre, one of the nation's oldest settlement music schools, will join members of the school's faculty at a concert for which Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bernays will open their Lowell street home in Cambridge.

The program will include Mozart, Ives and Beethoven, and soloists will be pianist Katie Clare Mazzeo, whose husband is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, clarinetist Judith Olsen, violinist Dorothy Alpert, and viola player Victor Alpert.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

JAN 29 1965

A FESTIVE LUNCHEON SALUTE to Erich Leinsdorf, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be given by representatives of various music institutions next Thursday, at the Midtown Motor Inn.

This will be the first time in Boston that the leader of one of the greatest orchestras in the world will be so honored.

Mr. Leinsdorf, the 11th maestro to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has twice been selected musician of the year in polls taken by national music critics.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

JAN 25 1965

Action Soon On State Song

DEAR READERS:

So much interest has been expressed relative to the search for a new state song, I pass along the following from Frank Sweeney of the State Legislative Research Bureau:

"Lanning Humphrey, representative of the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops, has been named by the orchestras as liaison man in connection with the proposed state song.

"He estimates the first meeting of the State Song Commission will be held between Jan. 27 and Feb. 20."

184

HOTEL-MOTEL
MANAGEMENT REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y
MONTHLY '2,541

JAN 1965 Burrelle's

7-8

Pre-Symphony Luncheon Series
In Honor of
The Contemporary Music Society
Institute of Contemporary Art

MRS. ENDICOTT PEABODY, Governor's wife, speaks to over 200 women at one pre-symphony luncheon.

Boston's Midtown Motor Inn in tune with Symphony Hall

Shortly after it opened in 1961, the Midtown Motor Inn presented its calling card to Boston society: a 24-week Pre-Symphony Luncheon series, offered to the city's social set before the Boston Symphony Orchestra's traditional Friday afternoon concerts.

That tie-in with its across-the-street neighbor accomplished several things for the 161-unit motel:

- It now possesses an image far different from any other motor hotel in the city.
- The operation is an integral part of Boston's loyal cultural community.
- It gets gallons of free newspaper space, and compliments from such luminaries as Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops: ("I think these luncheons are a very fine adjunct to our concerts . . .")
- It's beginning to attract more new business from customers who first became acquainted with the motel through the luncheons.

The symphony-luncheon tie-in was the brainchild of manager Rawson Cowen, Jr., and Bertram Druker, president of the Midtown Motor Inn Corp.

Musical Deal

The cultural package deal they presented to Boston Symphony officials consisted of a luncheon, an educational/entertainment feature (talk by a music critic or musician,), and free parking throughout the concert for luncheon patrons.

The gourmet luncheon is not a money maker. The Midtown pays its food concessioner, Schrafft's, $1.87 per serving. Tickets sell for $3.75, or a series of eight for $28. But the speaker's fee, diningroom decorations, etc., make the profit negligible.

But manager Cowen noted: "we knew we couldn't make a great deal of money directly from the luncheons; we always viewed them more as a promotional device whose benefits were long-range."

There is not much doubt that business gains at the Midtown are directly related to the Friday luncheons. The Museum of Fine Arts, and the Boston Opera Group have given them specific function business; debutante parties have increased about 50% in the last year, according to Cowen.

Other indirect business includes evening dinner guests who attend the Saturday and occasional Wednesday evening concerts. All this has helped boost food service revenue by $50,000 in the past year.

In tradition-rich Boston, the popularity of an endeavor is invariably accorded one gesture: an almost eccentric adherence to continuity. And judging from this criteria, the luncheons' success seems secured: this year, they are even scheduled on Fridays when the orchestra is out of town! ■ ■

LUNCHEON GUEST buys ticket at special desk.

SIGN announces program. SYMPHONY HALL is stone's throw away-at left.

The Cleveland Press
D. 340,828

JAN 18 1965

DAILY VARIETY
HOLLYWOOD, L.A.,CAL.
D. 9 239

JAN 15 1965 Burrelle's

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUN. 339,766

JAN 1 1965 Burrelle's

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

JAN 14 1965 Burrelle's

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

JAN 20 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

JAN 18 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

JAN 16 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

JAN 19 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 20 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 17 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

JAN 18 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 16 1965

EnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,441

Arts Leaders Invited to Inauguration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifty prominent representatives of American arts and letters will be guests of President Johnson at the Jan. 20 inauguration ceremony.

Johnson thus will continue a practice initiated at the 1961 inaugural by John F. Kennedy.

Invitations have been sent to:

Dancers Alvin Ailey, Martha Graham, Marie Tall Chief and Edward Villella; playwrights Edward Albee and Jean Kerr; composers Samuel Barber and Gian - Carlo Menotti, choreographers George Balanchine, Agnes DeMille and Jerome Robbins; actresses Anne Bancroft and Diana Sands:

Authors S. Saul Bellow, Brendan Gill, Shirley Ann Grau, John Hersey, Paul Horgan, Harper Lee, Edwin O'Connor, William Styron, John Updike, Robert Penn Warren, and Bernard Malamud; conductors Leonard Bernstein, Erich Leinsdorf, Lorin Maazel, Artur Rubenstein, and Thomas Schippers.

Historians Bruce Caton and Allan Nevins, Educator Paul Fruend, artists Edward Hopper, Peter Hurd, Jasper Johnson, John Mitchell, Mark Rohko and Mark Tobey; poets Robert Lowell, Archibald MacLeish, Marianne Moore, W. D. Snodgrass and Richard Wilbur; sculptor George Segal; designer Oliver Smith; architects Edward Durrell Stone, John Carle Warnecke, and Menoru Yamasaki, and singers William Warfield and Anna Moffo.

Roger Stevens, Johnson's special assistant on the arts, will be host to the group, which will attend inaugural events through the week.

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

JAN 3

On Criticism

An Open Letter in Reply To Henry B. Cabot

Mr. Henry B. Cabot, President
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.
Symphony Hall
Boston, Massachusetts

Dear Mr. Cabot:

Your letter to the Editor, published in The Globe of 26 Dec., calls for reply.

You say that "nobody in the field of musical criticism has a right to assume that he alone knows what is right and what is wrong." I object to your implication that I have assumed that about myself. In both reviews you mention, that of the recent "Messiah" and the one of Leinsdorf's performance of the Beethoven Sixth, I explained my reservations in terms of what I read Handel's and Beethoven's intentions to be. While I attempted thus to justify my opinion, I neither stated nor implied that no other view was possible.

You say "Steinberg seems to assume that what he likes is good and what he doesn't like is awful." When I give a detailed opinion on a performance as I did with the recent "Messiaih," what I say is based on my knowledge both of the music and of whatever seems to me relevant about the music also. It is a considered statement on the music, even as a performance is, the one being articulated in words, the other in musical sounds. I found the "Messiah" performance and the one of the Beethoven Sixth unsatisfactory for reasons stated, and because they were unsatisfactory I did not like them, not the other way around. Let me then reverse your statement: when something seems good to me, I like it; when something seems bad, I do not like it.

You write about the possible "damage Steinberg can do to the musical situation here in Boston." You and I share deep concern for the musical welfare of the city that has been your home for such a long time and mine for only 11 months.

Last September, we both attended a dinner given for Erich Leinsdorf at Temple Ohabei Shalom in Brookline. You made a speech in which you said something to the effect that since you did not wish to brag by claiming that the Boston Symphony was the best orchestra in the country, you would limit yourself to [illegible] that there was none [illegible]

Now any musician would like to live in a city that has the best orchestra in the country, and I am no exception. But I do not believe we can have the best orchestra in the country simply by saying that we do. In fact, such complacency, such an unexamined taking-for-granted of superiority, is a sure way to let standards slip.

There was a time, under Koussevitzky, when Boston orchestral playing represented, along with that in Philadelphia and New York, the best in America. That is no longer so. Leaving questions of musical interpretation aside altogether and staying strictly with matters of orchestral virtuosity, flexibility, precision, intonation, and tone, I would say that the orchestras in Chicago, Cleveland, and Philadelphia, fairly consistently play better than the Boston Symphony. I very much want Boston to regain the place it once held, but it is not likely to if no one points out that sometimes is wrong and if the only public statements are those which assume that our orchestra is the best around.

You say that my comments on the conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society "will discourage the whole organization." It is the responsibility of the Board of Government of that Society to engage a conductor who will not merely enable his singers to enjoy themselves and get them to sing well, which Dr. Gilday does, but who also can competently perform "Messiah." The Society must take the consequences of being found out in musical practices of the sort that are documented in my "Messiah" review and in my Sunday article of 20 Dec. My job is to be on Handel's side.

You accuse me of carping, that is, of criticizing unreasonably. Is it unreasonable criticism to point out defects which I can identify and describe? Does it not occur to you that if I point out bad performances and complain about them, it may be that I do so, not out of a perverse desire to damage the musical life of the city where I have chosen to live, but because the performances actually are bad?

You rise to the defense of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is an understandable action on the part of its president. You rise to the defense of the Handel and Haydn Society, which, since it is this month giving concerts with the Boston Symphony, is understandable also. Last Spring, in a letter to me as well as in a conversation at your office, you objected to what I had written about Charles Munch. Your concern was that such criticism might deprive the Boston Symphony of his services as guest conductor. My concern was that his appearance had been the occasion for misrepresenting the music of Berlioz and others. That appeared to be of little consequence to you, just as now the misrepresentation of Handel is of less consequence to you than my alleged discouraging of the Handel and Haydn Society.

Understandably it is your position to defend the Establishment, which includes defending performers for whose eminence and influence you are, in part, responsible. Naturally you deplore critical activity that is not directly helpful to you in this. But it is not my job to engage in public relations work on behalf of the Boston Symphony or any other organization. I cannot afford a parochial point of view.

It is my belief that the Boston Globe has engaged me to use whatever resources I have in taste and education to comment on the musical situation in Boston, without fear, without prejudice, from the broadest point of view, and with the highest ideals in mind.

Yours faithfully,

Michael Steinberg
Music Critic

Reading and Learning

To the Editor—For the first time in about 20 years, Boston has a fine music critic.

Mr. Cabot must know that there is now a large, musically literate public in Boston who are delighted with Michael Steinberg's brilliant and erudite criticism.

If Mr. Cabot wishes a symphony of the highest quality in programming and performance, certainly he should more than welcome a gifted critic who can keep them on their toes. I refer him to the adverse criticism of the Boston Symphony on its last trip to San Francisco.

I am very grateful for the opportunity to read and learn from Mr. Steinberg.

SALLY SALTER
Swampscott

---

wEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
x 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105
JAN 10 1965

Image . . . Not Musical Knowledge

To the Editor—I agree with Michael Steinberg and support his viewpoint in his "Open Letter" to Henry Cabot which appeared in the Jan. 3 Globe.

The Boston Symphony and other Boston musical organizations have now been critically scrutinized for the first time in years and Mr. Cabot resents it.

As a symphony patron of many years, I welcome a fresh breeze which can clear the fog of conjecture and supposition.

Suprisingly, no one has confronted Mr. Steinberg with opposing criticism BASED ON MUSICAL KNOWLEDGE. All criticism of him has been concerned with the "public image" of those organizations and persons concerned, regardless of their actual musical proficiency.

Mr. Steinberg's artistic integrity (in music criticism) and his musical knowledge is beyond question, so the powers that be attack the man.

Next to Benjamin Boretz of New York, Mr. Steinberg is probably the best critic in these parts (certainly in New England). I hope he will be allowed to keep up his good work.

ALFRED FUCHS
Boston

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105
JAN 10 1965

The SHOULD and WAS of a Concert

To the Editor — Michael Steinberg's defense of critics in the Sunday Globe (Jan. 3) was one of the best of the genre that I have read.

It is unfortunate that in his letter Mr. Henry Cabot appears as a "B.S.O. Booster" in the worst Chamber of Commerce tradition; unfortunate because that obviously isn't his intention, and because such intimations of complacency from one so highly stationed will surely cause some loss of critical perspective among more impressionable B.S.O. subscribers.

As for Mr. Leinsdorf, he is too experienced and capable a musician to become upset at intelligent criticism. In fact, I am sure he would be thoroughly appalled by some of the undiscriminating, vapid, and wrong-headed praise of him on the floor of Symphony Hall after a concert.

The reason I, and many others I know, read and admire Mr. Steinberg's columns is his avoidance of criticism-by-adjective. He tells us how he thinks a piece of music SHOULD be performed, then how it WAS performed.

In the art of rhetoric this is called Stating Your Premises, which is something too few critics are willing and able to do.

Mr. Cabot and I might argue for hours about whether or not Leinsdorf did a good Mahler Sixth, but the argument would be to no avail if we were arguing from different premises—in this case different interpretations of the symphony.

If the critic is careful to state his premises, those criticized should not be hurt. In the recent case of Messiah, for instance, Steinberg misinterprets either Mr. Handel or Mr Gilday; but he does tell us how he sees Handel, not just what he thinks of Gilday.

And anyway one can always say, "Steinberg, I don't like yer premises," and turn away from the column.

CLARK JOHNSEN
Cambridge

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

JAN 11 1965

Pleasant Changes At Symphony Hall

To the Editor—I want to publicly express my thanks to the management of the Boston Symphony with regard to their new policy on rush seats.

My wife and I were in town over New Year's, and we decided to take in the symphony. Having attended regularly during my student days, I explained the mechanics of getting a rush seat—standing in line for several hours, running up the stairs, rushing to the cafeteria, etc.

What a pleasant surprise was in store for us!

We could now purchase our tickets, take a walk, enjoy a leisurely conversation with an old acquaintance, and so forth.

We could walk up the stairs in dignity, without feeling guilty about getting to our seats before some elderly person who waited in line longer than we, and besides we now had our own seat numbers.

Much credit should also be given to Miss Seiniger of Dorchester who brought the complaints of long suffering "regulars" to the attention of the management. Not only was purchasing a rush seat a pleasure now, but the musical experience which followed was a more richly rewarding one.

Now if we only could find a new line of work for Mr. Steinberg—but that's another story.

DR. MORTON GOLD
Assistant Professor of Music, Nasson College

Springvale, Me.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

World-Telegram & Sun (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 373,849

FEB 3 1965

No Tribute

To the Editor—How sadly the Boston Symphony Orchestra missed out at the concert last Friday in not paying tribute to the great man, Sir Winston Churchill.

When President Kennedy died, the London Orchestra, then in Calfornia, changed its whole program in respect to our President.

When "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" was played at St. Paul's the day of Churchill's funeral, I couldn't but think of the beautiful courtesy they were showing us.

This opportunity will not come again.

HELEN G. BRIGHAM
Chestnut Hill

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

FEB 16 1965

Not Forgotten At Symphony

To the Editor of The Herald:

In answer to Helen Brigham's letter "Lost Opportunity," I wish to point out that three Boston Symphony programs were dedicated to Sir Winston Churchill during the weekend (I specifically called Symphony Hall to find out for my own information, although I vaguely remember hearing it on the radio or television).

LOUISA D. COGSWELL
Cambridge

18

WINCHESTER, VA.
STAR
D. 17,000

JAN 2 9 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420

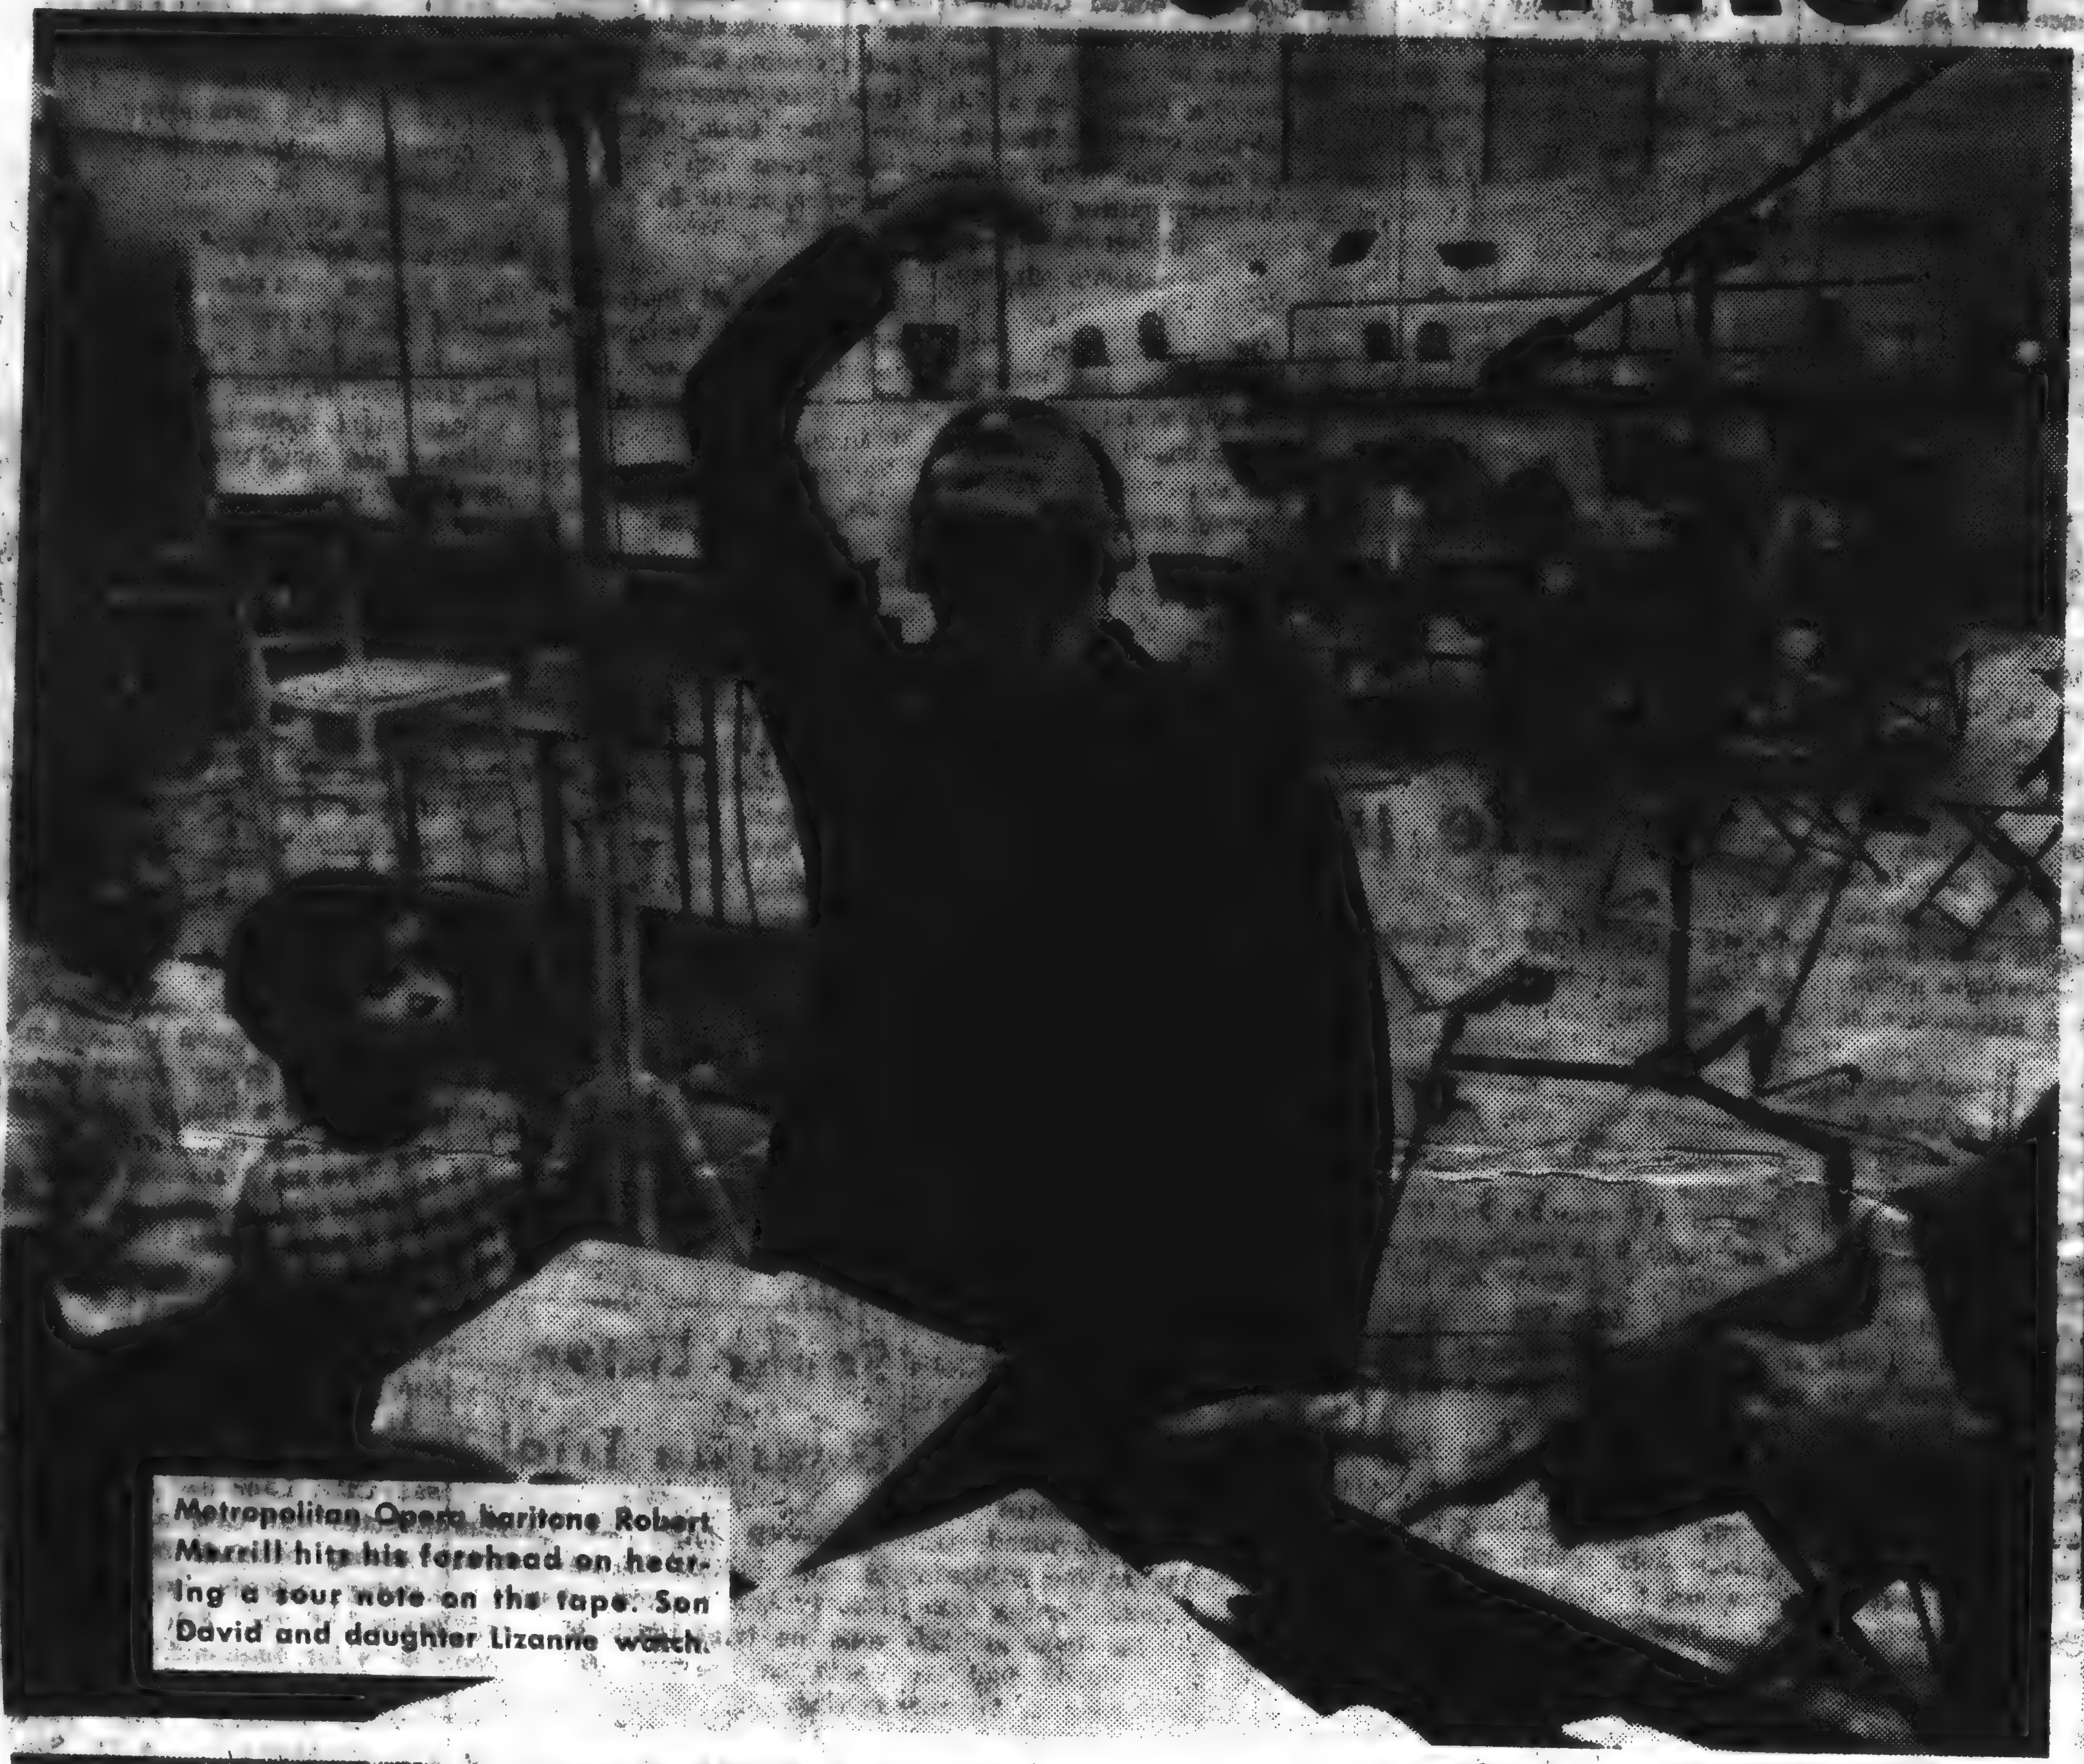
Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,611

FEB 2 4 1965

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 348,146 SUN. 410,656

JAN 2 2 1965

MOMENT OF TRUTH



Metropolitan Opera baritone Robert Merrill hits his forehead on hearing a sour note on the tape. Son David and daughter Lizanne watch.

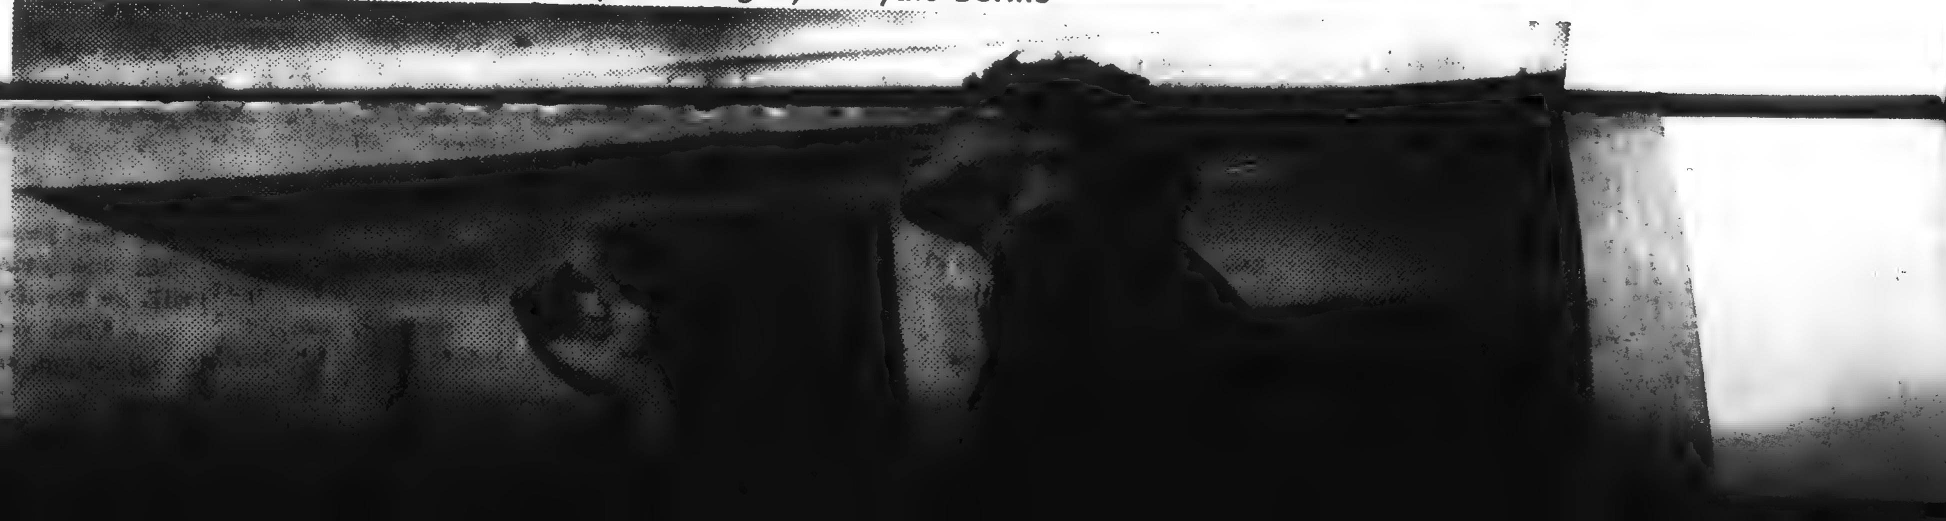
Popular song stylist Eydie Gorme

"O wad some Pow'r the giftie gie us to see oursels as ithers see us!"—ROBERT BURNS

The wandering minstrel of poet Robert Burns' day didn't have to concern himself with stereo, high fidelity or record sales, else the Scottish bard might well have written of "hearing ourselves as others hear us."

"The playback of a new recording is a merciless mirror to the recording artist. He himself must pass judgment on that reflection by either approving what he hears or doing another take in an attempt to improve the performance."

To the intensely self-critical, playback can be a



The wandering minstrel of poet Robert Burns' day didn't have to concern himself with stereo, high fidelity or record sales, else the Scottish bard might well

The playback of a new recording is a merciless mirror to the recording artist. He himself must pass judgment on that reflection by either approving what he hears or doing another take in an attempt to improve the performance.

To the intensely self-critical, playback can be a severe shock. To others, the playback is a balm for the vanity or, happily, a source of pleasure and well-earned satisfaction at achieving his best and making it permanent.

The photographs on this page have recorded the emotional intensity of that moment of truth at RCA Victor and Columbia Record studios when the artist listens to his performance on the original tapes played back before they are pressed into permanent records.

Popular song stylist Eydie Gorme

Singer Perry Como

Pianist Van Cliburn

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Towel-draped Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra

This Week's PICTURE SHOW—AP Newsfeatures

18

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

FEB 4 1965

Honored Today

ERICH LEINSDORF, music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was honored today by music institutions and groups at a luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 448,810

FEB 7 1965

society

Happy Birthday, Erich

By ROSE WALSH

WHEN CONFRONTED with nearly 200 important representatives of Boston's various music institutions singing "Happy Birthday, dear Erich" at a luncheon last Thursday at the Midtown Motor Inn, the distinguished, personable music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra picked up popular comedian Jack Benny's birthday line, and admitted to being 39. Alfred Nash Patterson, head of Chorus pro Musica, led the musical guests, who had come to honor Mr. Leinsdorf, in the birthday song while the attractive dining room hostess carried in a tall cake lighted with sparklers.

ROSE WALSH

News of the birthday had only reached the ears of Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten and Harry Ellis Dickson (first violinist) who had arranged the "Salute to Erich Leinsdorf," because of his many recent honors—chosen twice as "Musician of the Year" and a member of the Advisory Committee on the National Cultural Center and a trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts—a few days previous. It was kept a secret until the luncheon was well underway, but the unrehearsed songsters were in top voice.

In his brief after-luncheon talk Mr. Leinsdorf, who leaves Sunday for a vacation at Palm Beach, talked of new developments this summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for advanced study in music. He discussed the many changes in the world of music—"provincial standards are dying very fast . . . music teaching is becoming more difficult"—and announced that now there will be two major divisions at Tanglewood, a Performing Department and Tanglewood Institute. The latter will provide a larger enrollment.

Seated at the impressive head table with Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf were Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Dean Edwin Stein, Joel Spiegelman, Mrs. William Stevens, Mrs. James Perkins (chairman of the Council of Friends Boston Symphony Orchestra); Mrs. Albert Hunt, Spencer Dormitzer, Thomas Perry.

Other notables in Boston's musical world taking part in the "Salute" included Mrs. Brooks Potter (changing her usual February ski vacation for a trip to Venezuela); Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. Lauriston Ward, Louis Spier (retired B.S.O. oboeist); John Calkins, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon.

Mrs. Alfred Nash Patterson who met her husband when both were studying voice; Mrs. Roger Cutler, Miss Mabel Daniels and Mrs. Minuetta Kessler who has revived the tradition, "Concerts in the Home" and will provide talented young artists to play at private luncheons, dinners or special festivities.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

FEB 2 1965

Church, Hospital Named in Will of Dorothy Lewis

The First Congregational Church, Fairview Hospital, the Visiting Nurse Association, and the American Red Cross chapter, all in Great Barrington; the Matilda Ziegler Magazine for the Blind in Monsey, N.Y.; and the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will divide an estimated $40,000 under the will of Dorothy Lewis of Great Barrington.

The estimate is based on an inventory of Miss Lewis' estate which has been entered in Probate Court.

The estate is appraised at $412,325 in personal property and $12,500 in real estate. The bulk of the estate is in the form of corporate securities of which the largest blocks are 107,94 shares of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. of New York, valued at $197,634, and 700 shares of Texaco, Inc., valued at $57,421.

Miss Lewis, who was blind left one-tenth of the residuary estate to the church, hospita and other organizations and the remaining nine-tenths to several nieces and nephews, all living out of state.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 441,810

FEB 5 1965

Gala Birthday For Leinsdorf

A press luncheon turned into a 53rd birthday party for Erich Leinsdorf at the Midtown Motor Inn yesterday. The Boston Symphony's music director was saluted by two-dozen participating musical organizations with somewhat off-key singing of "Happy Birthday" in four-part disharmony.

Expanded plans for next summer's Berkshire Music Center were announced. Along with the customary festival concerts of orchestral and chamber music, there will be separate divisions of the center's teaching facilities.

A hundred instrumentalists, singers and composers are to be admitted to the new performance department, offering advanced instruction and experience. Fellowship stipends will enable young musicians to participate.

The Tanglewood Institute will offer musical laymen, teachers and other musicians performances and specialized seminars.

Dr. Leinsdorf explained this division as "necessitated by the unprecedented expansion of music as a 'spectator sport' and by the rapid increase of popular interest in composition and performance."

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Allston-Brighton
Citizen Item
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,867

FEB 11 1965

Theme of Pre-Symphony Luncheon is 'Gallic'

"Gallic" is the theme of the Pre-Symphony Luncheon on Friday, Feb. 10, at the Midtown Motor Inn, as a gesture of welcome to Charles Munch, eminent French Conductor and former Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Munch returns to Boston this week to conduct an entire program of music by French composers.

At the luncheon, Harry Ellis Dickson will talk on "Music of France" and its influence on music of the world, a topic especially popular to Boston with everything French.

Bouquets of red, white and blue spring flowers will decorate the tables. The French menu will please any gourgourmet.

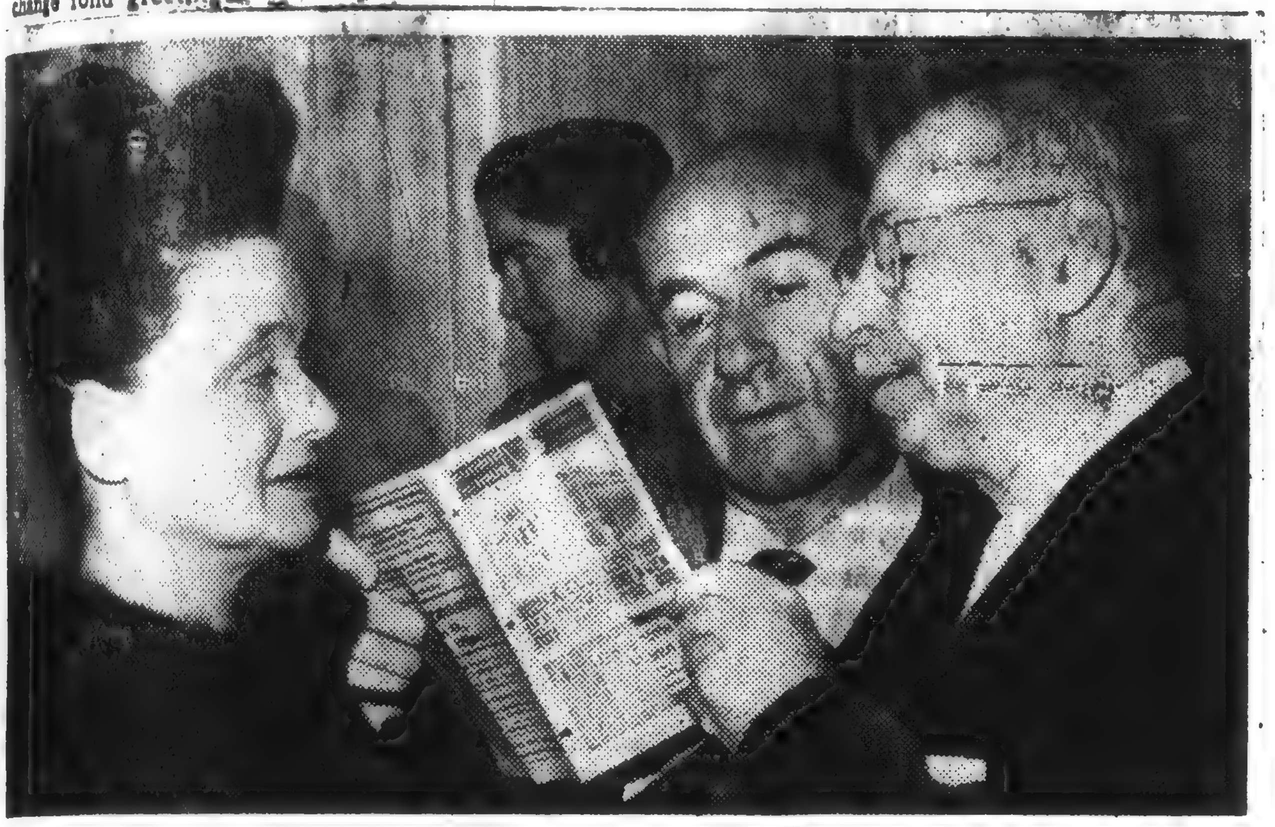
The guest of honor is M. Jean Savelli, [illegible] General of France. Invited to join him and Mme. Savelli at the Head Table are: M. and Mme. Jean-Francois Berry, Dr. and audiences, who are so familiar Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham, Madame Georges Fourel, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Miss Winifred H. Johnstone, Mrs. Stanley W. Smith, Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mr. Orson Adams, Judge and Mrs. John V. Spaulding, Mr. and Mrs. Russell S. Codman, Jr.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 488,105

1965

At right, honor guest Erich Leinsdorf (center) and Mrs. Leinsdorf share memory of wartime Victory Concerts with Solomon Braslovsky, musicologist who conducted those concerts. Below, two good friends of music in Boston—Mrs. Anthony Kutten of Brookline and Mrs. Endicott Peabody of Cambridge—exchange fond greetings.



Leinsdorf's Plan

By Marjorie W. Sherman

Few of those who had the privilege of lunching with Erich Leinsdorf this week and listening to his new plans for Tanglewood and his simple valid concern with young people and music, will soon forget this gifted man's lucid translation of the world of music as it exists today.

Father of five, and a grandfather at 53—the Symphony luncheon happened to be on his birthday—the Boston Symphony conductor brings more than an academic interest to the career-breaking choices that face the 20-year-old father who must decide between a bread and butter job in the orchestra pit of a Summer theater, or the eight weeks at Tanglewood to which his talent entitles him and from which he will be able to cross that vital bridge to his professional career.

And there were many in Mr. Leinsdorf's eminent audience who could well recall that inspired Tanglewood opening of 25 years ago, the unearthly beauty of the music sounding through the soughing of great trees against the pale evening sky, the faces of the world's musicologists turned to the lighted stage so far away yet within a whisper's reach of the hundreds who sat on the green lawns outside a quarter of a mile away, thanks in great part to the inventive genius of the late Richard Fay of Boston whose sound baffle solved the shed's major auditory crisis.

Now a symbol of all that is most stimulating and creative in music today—to the young composer and musician, and to unprecedented audiences that come by thousands from nearly every corner of the earth—the great Berkshire Center will add a new dimension, beginning with the 1965 Summer season—a fellowship for every member of the performance department. As his impressed audience rose, applauding, Mr. Leinsdorf said in conclusion:

"I hope with sufficient equipment of heart and mind, to contribute something very useful and important to music in the 60's and 70's of this century."

Most of the more than a score of organizations who met to honor him at this Symphony luncheon at the Midtown, were, and will be, represented at Tanglewood by their distinguished individual members.

Alfred Nash Patterson, whose Chorus Pro Musica contributed so much to the illustrious Kennedy Memorial Service at Holy Cross Cathedral, was among the head table guests, as was M.I.T.'s Klaus Liepmann, Harvard's Nino Pirrota, Pres. Chester Williams of the New England Conservatory of Music; Dean Edwin Stein of Boston University, Joel Spiegelman of Brandeis, the Longy School's Nicholas Van Slyck, Spencer Dormitzer for the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra; Kalman Novak, conductor of the Boston Civic Symphony and director of the South End Music Center, the nation's oldest settlement music school; founder-director Harry Ellis Dickson of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, and a dedicated host of others.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 13,230

FEB 8 1965

"THE WAY I HEARD IT"

by John Gruber

I suppose everybody is familiar with Handel's "Messiah." One can scarcely escape it, and it probably is the most commonly presented large musical work ever written. You wouldn't think that a work that has been around since 1742 could be the source of a raging musical controversy, but it was up in Boston, and the tumult hasn't died down yet.

Michael Steinberg, critic for the Boston Globe, touched things off with his review of the Handel and Haydn Society's presentation of the oratorio in December. This was in conjunction with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since Mr. Steinberg has been saying some unkind things about the BSO as well, a great deal of umbrage was taken.

Mr. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., and Mr. George E. Geyer, president of the Handel and Haydn Society, both wrote lengthy letters of complaint, and both got lengthy replies from Mr. Steinberg and there were so many more letters from lesser luminaries that The Globe had to assemble them and print them in a special section, due notice having been given that they would treat them that way.

You wouldn't think that the Home of the Bean could get so aroused over anything, much less over a musical composition nearly two and a quarter centuries old. Of course, the annual presentation by the Handel and Haydn Society has become an institution in the past 150 years or so, and I suspect it was the attack on the institution that disturbed the serenity of the community.

Further, Mr. Steinberg is a newcomer to Boston, having been there less than a year, and Boston has a tendency to look askance at anyone or anything as new within its purlieus. He had his supporters in the controversy, make no mistake, and I have been quite amused over this tempest in a teapot. This has been a different kind of event from the Boston Tea Party; it has overtones of the tea party in Alice in Wonderland.

Specifically, Mr. Steinberg complained volubly that Handel's work was presented in Mozart's revision rather than in the original version. He also complained about the size of the forces involved and about the capabilities of Edward Gilday who trained the Handel and Haydn Chorus. I didn't hear the presentation so I'm in no position to take sides, but we can examine the question of the version used.

Personally, I see little cause for complaint in using the Mozart version. Mozart was a much better orchestrator than Handel and just because Lukas Foss has decried this revision is no reason to condemn it out of hand. I wouldn't want to hear it all the time, but it does provide a relief from the version published by Schirmer "revised according to Handel's original score" by Max Spicker, which is the version most commonly encountered in this country, I believe.

Handel himself wrote no less than four versions of the work so the only one with true claims to being "original" is the "Dublin" version, but if he saw cause for revision in later years, what is wrong with somebody of Mozart's stature revising it as well if there is no attempt to palm it off as the genuine article?

But Mr. Steinberg saw fit to quote Tovey's complaint: "Mozart was sometimes distressingly out of touch with his subject" and to complain that "Isaiah sings in the accents of Osmin" (the harem overseer in Seraglio) and "the land of the shadow of death is turned into the courtyard of Donna Anna's palace."

This is probably trenchant criticism, but Boston didn't take kindly to it. Moreover, Mr. Steinberg has irked the equanimity of the Back Bay dowagers in the past by rather consistently maintaining that the Cleveland Orchestra regularly plays better that the Boston, and that the Philadelphia is likewise superior to the group to be found on the shores of Massachusetts Bay.

As a matter of fact, the Cleveland is quite capable of edging the Boston out, but it must be remembered that Szell has been their conductor for years while Eric Leinsdorf is comparitively new to Boston. Mr. Leinsdorf has done wonders in perking up the orchestra. Mr. Steinberg should have heard it under Munch and he would then have been on much firmer ground with his complaints.

Even musically sophisticated Bostonians apparently didn't realize how far the orchestra slipped under Mr. Munch. They went, week after week, and the slide was so gradual as to be almost indistinguishable in that period of time. It was very noticeable here, where we encounter the orchestra only once or twice a year.

It was likewise noticeable elsewhere, except in Boston, and the distinguished Boston Symphony Orchestra got irreverently dubbed with the cognomen of "Munch's Bunch" among musicians outside of the Bay State. Boston seems never to have heard of this. I'm all for Mr. Leinsdorf at present, however, even though he is not perfect by any means.

Mr. Leinsdorf spent long years in the field of ballet, and long years in the field of opera. His experience in the symphonic field was much shorter and it is not his strongest point as yet. Moreover, his career was badly interrupted by service in the Army during World War II, something neither Szell nor Ormandy can claim. (Leinsdorf scarcely got naturalized when he was drafted.) So give him time. Technically the orchestra is almost back to Koussevitsky standards and it's ahead of the Koussevitsky standards of 1926-27 which is the comparable period in that regime. Don't forget, old Kuss-Kuss held the podium for 20 years.

Szell is in almost the same position in Cleveland, while Ormandy has been in Philadelphia for 30 years. These lengthy tenures make a difference. So perhaps we should do a little waiting ourselves.

Nevertheless when Mr. Cabot writes about the "Possible damage Steinberg can do to the musical situation in Boston," Mr. Steinberg is quite correct in maintaining that bad musical performances are much more damaging than anything he can say. He is also correct in saying "It is not my job to engage in public relations work on behalf of the Boston Symphony or any other organization."

190

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

FEB 5 1965

Today in Society

Leinsdorf Announces Fellowships On His Birthday

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Rarely have so many of Boston's music-minded been gathered in so small a space for so enjoyable and erudite an occasion. The eminent guests at the Midtown luncheon Thursday not only were the first to hear Erich Leinsdorf's new and valiant plans to make fellowships available to all young and talented performers at Tanglewood this Summer, but probably comprised the only audience of its size to sing "Happy Birthday" to the distinguished conductor.

They were led in the impromptu by the Chorus Pro Musica's Alfred Nash Patterson when Mrs. Anthony Kutten announced midway through the Viennese menu that it happened to be the world-famed conductor's 53d birthday.

His birthday cake was a Croquembouche, that delectable pyramid of caramel-glazed cream puffs.

His audience, a singularly impressive one, represented more than a score of musical organizations.

Sitting with the Leinsdorfs at the head table were Prof. Nino Pirrota of Harvard's Music dept.; Prof. Klaus Liepmann, head of music at M.I.T.; Pres. Chester Williams of the New England Conservatory of Music; Dean Edwin Stein of the Boston University Music Dept.; Mrs. James Perkins, only woman trustee of the B.S.O. and member of the Council of Friends of the Orchestra.

Also Mrs. Hogarth Swann, president of the South End Music Center; Kalman Novak, conductor Boston Civic Symphony; Nicholas Van Slyck of the Longy School of Music; Dr. George Geyer of the Handel and Haydn Society; Mrs. Albert Hunt, Country Evening Concert Series of Weston, Benjamin Lacy, Young Audiences; Mrs. William Stevens, Brookline Library Music Assn.; Mrs. Gordon Thayer, president of the Boston Community Music Center.

Also Spencer Dormitzer, Greater Boston Youth Symphony; Harry Ellis Dickson, BSO member, and founder-conductor of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall; Joel Spiegelman, Brandeis University Music Dept.; Mrs. William Vogler, Wellesley Symphony Orchestra; Robert Lacey, Massachusetts Dept. of Education; Herbert Fromm, New England Jewish Music Forum, and Thom-Perry, manager, Boston Symphony, and many others.

★

Each of the groups had their own table of guests in the intent audience that couldn't have been more enthusiastic about Mr. Leinsdorf's plans for Tangelwood, or more conscious of the remarkable seminar on contemporary world problems in music that he gave a short hour Thursday.

He declared that "there is not enough time to teach and not enough time to learn. He reported on the explosion of more students than ever before in a world where Amsterdam Symphony in the Netherlands can be heard in all its excellence in Amsterdam, N.Y., offering a challenge to local standards.

"New doors must be opened," Mr. Leinsdorf told his audience, "so that maximum help can be given at a great music center like Tanglewood to the talented young people who need this bridge to profesionalism, and cannot afford to give up a mediocre Summer job."

★

He also gave his smiling listeners wry examples of the reception of new and excellent composers, but hailed criticism "because controversy can mean awareness, and everyone today must know as much as possible about the state of music everywhere."

A few of the many who shared this memorable occasion: Mrs. Endicott Peabody and Mrs. David Gates among Cambridge neighbors at the Boston Community Music Center table; Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth, Mrs. John Mrs. Charles Gushee, and many more at the South End Music Center table; Sherwin Badger and Mrs. Ross McFarland among the listeners at the Conservatory table; composer John Bavicchi; musicologist and conductor Solomon Braslovsky, who will be remembered for the wartime Victory concerts at the Museum of Fine Arts, John Calkins, Mrs. Brooks Potter, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf (right), honored with a Symphony luncheon Thursday at the Midtown, discusses Tanglewood's new plans with Boston Civic Symphony Conductor Kalman Novak.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

APR 15 1965

Records Going Abroad

Eric Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, autographs recording of Beethoven's Emperor Concerto for Vice Pres. Prescott C. Crafts Jr., First National Bank of Boston. Crafts will present them to bankers and businessmen during forthcoming trip to Orient where, by custom, businessmen exchange gifts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,150

APR 1 1965

Chorus Pro Musica Seeks Male Singers

Chorus Pro Musica, Bostons outstanding chorus, is collaborating with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a project of major musical importance. It will perform this summer at Tanglewood the magnificent, uncut version of Wagner's Lohengrin and record it for RCA Victor the week following the performance. This will be the first time that Lohengrin

---

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 22 1965

NEW MUSIC DIRECTOR—Iva Dee Hiatt, Smith College choral music professor, has been named music director of the Cambridge Society for Early Music. With her is Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, of Boston Symphony Orchestra. Society will present concerts in November at Sanders Theater, Cambridge.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

APR 21 1965

BSO Manager's House Broken Into Twice

WEST STOCKBRIDGE — State police at the Lee barracks reported today they are investigating two breaks into the home of Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, Thomas D. Perry Jr., on Lenox Road here.

According to police, Mr. Perry reported the first break on Saturday when it was discovered a window had been smashed to gain entry. Yesterday, Tanglewood Supt. James F. Kiley reported to police the home had been broken into again, sometime since Saturday.

The list of items missing had not yet been completed.

Trooper Constance L. Lenti Jr. is investigating the break reported Saturday and Trooper David W. Moran, the break reported yesterday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 155,000

MSGR. EDWARD G. RAY, pastor of Sacred Church, Roslindale, has elected to the Board of tees of the Boston Orchestra, Henry B. president, announced. A of Boston and a gradu Holy Cross College, Msgr ray was ordained in R 1930. Before his appointm the Roslindale parish, he as assistant chancellor Archdiocese of Bosto rector of St. John's Msgr. Murray is also of the Boston Public and a director of th Affairs Council.

191

PROSPECT HEIGHTS, ILL.
HERALD
W. 1,000

FEB 1 Buffkeller

Cummins Comments

Rx for Faint Praise

By BOB CUMMINS
Staff Writer

Audiences are part of musical lore. Musical historians enjoy reminding us of big mistakes audiences have made.

CUMMINS

We are told how an audience in Naples hissed and hooted and threw tomatoes during the premiere of an opera which later became one of the most successful in the repertory. The harsh verdicts of contemporary critics at the first performance of a Beethoven symphony are worth a few smiles.

We are reminded how a Parisian audience came close to rioting in displeasure at the first performance of a renowned ballet score.

WE WHO ARE devoted to FM radio get a picture of the temperament of audiences today through re-broadcasts of the concerts of famous American orchestras, as well as the programs of musical festivals of Europe.

Today's audiences seem woefully incapable of expressing displeasure in violent and messy ways, such as by throwing tomatoes at the performers or by ripping up the seats in the auditorium.

At a concert of contemporary music of the experimental genre, played about a year ago by the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein, an attempt was made to revive the art of the catcall. I immediately realized the attempt was a failure. The catcalls sounded inhibited. They were not raucous as a catcall must be. The element of torment was lacking. Of course, such low grade catcalls did not deter Mr. Bernstein and the orchestra one whit.

IN THE CONCERT hall, as elsewhere, the severest criticism is apt to be faint praise.

Only a few weeks ago the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf played two major compositions by contemporary composers. The first was, I think, by Walter Piston and conductor and orchestra seemed to be in magnificent form. As the final movement neared its end, I said to myself, "This audience is going to go wild!"

They didn't at all. After the final note there was silence as if everyone was surprised it was over. Then there was a smattering of applause that had the unmistakable tone of politeness about which damns the conductor and the players more than no applause at all.

WHEN THE SAME thing happened to an equally fine performance of another work, Conductor Leinsdorf rebuked the audience by having the musicians rise. Or maybe he would have had them stand anyway. It made no difference; Bostonians just weren't in the mood for music that night.

Perhaps it is a mistake to program a complete concert in advance. Perhaps the second half should be left "open."

An overture and a major work could be programmed before the intermission to feel out the audience. If the audience shows it wants music, the orchestra can continue with a concerto or symphony after the intermission.

IF THE AUDIENCE behaves as that Boston audience did, something else can be offered.

Jugglers or a troupe of trick bicycle riders might perform.

Perhaps Killer Kowalski and Bobo Brazil could be called upon to go three fast falls.

Maybe an old Gene Autry movie could be shown.

This would make it tough on some of the music critics, but certain audiences might love it.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

A[illegible] 1965

Easter Theme For Luncheon

Easter Music—Inside the BSO will be the theme of Harry Ellis Dickson's talk at the last Pre-Symphony Luncheon of the season, Friday, at the Midtown Motor Inn. Since the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is scheduled for 3:30, the luncheon will begin at 1:15.

Colorful, traditional Easter dishes from various countries will be featured at the luncheon, and fragrant spring flowers will decorate the tables. Free parking is offered to those attending the church services before the luncheon from 11 o'clock on.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 15 1965

Boston Symphony Names Trustees

The ARTS

Robert Gardiner, a Boston banker, and Rt. Rev. Edward G. Murray have been elected to the Boston Symphony board of trustees, it has been announced by Henry B. Cabot, the orchestra's president.

Msgr. Murray, a native of Boston and a graduate of Holy Cross College, was ordained in Rome in 1930 and has served as professor and rector of St. John's Seminary, Boston. For a period of five years he was vice-chancellor of the archdiocese of Boston. Currently Msgr. Murray is pastor of Sacred Heart Church, Roslindale. He has received honorary degrees from Holy Cross and Suffolk University, is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor awarded by France, and is a Cavalieral Meriot della Repubblica (Italy). In Boston he is also a trustee of the Boston Public Library and a director of the World Affairs Council.

Gardiner, president of the Fiduciary Trust Co., Boston, received bachelor of Arts and Law degrees from Harvard University and served in the Navy during World War II. He joined the Fiduciary Trust in 1946 and has been president since 1957. Gardiner is president of the United Community Services of Metropolitan Boston and also serves as a trustee of Groton School, Colby College, and Radcliffe College. He is a director and member of the executive committee of Action for Boston Community Development, Inc., a director of Incorporated [illegible] corporated Income Fund, and trustee George Putnam Fund of Boston and Putnam Growth Fund. Gardiner is a resident of Milton.

The two new trustees will assume positions on the Symphony board this month.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 161,453

APR 23 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 23 1965

CONCERT OF 1965 HOLLAND FESTIVAL DR. LEINSDORF TO CONDUCT OPENING

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has accepted an invitation to conduct the Concertgebouw Orchastra in Amsterdam at the opening concert of the 1965 Holland Festival. The concert on June 17 will be his first guest engagement since he became the BSO's music director in 1962.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 33,843

MAR 4 1965

NAHANT

PTA Holds Panel Talks

A program entitled "Exploring the World of Creativity" was presented last night by the PTA at the Johnson School.

Pres. Joseph Barisano introduced the panel composed of Edward J. W. Cooper, noted British born artist; Mrs. John C. Kennedy, an associate director at the New England Conservatory of Music; Phyllis Brooks, former film star, and wife of Cong. Torbert H. Macdonald of Malden, spoke on drama; and Polly Bradley, an author of numerous articles.

On a lighter vein, Charlotte Holicker, a comedy writer, who writes for Phyllis Diller and Phil Foster, ran through a comedy routine which she had written for Miss Diller.

Laning Humphrey, associate director of press relations for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Boston Pops, talked on "The World of Music."

A question period followed.

Three of the candidates for School Committee, Miss Margaret Snell, Mrs. Charles Pizon and Robert McIlveen gave a brief resume of their qualifications.

New York Post
D. 317,237 SUN. 250,207

MAR 26 1965 Buffkeller
The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 283,075 SUN. 339,766

MAR 26 1965 Buffkeller

Two Kennedys Named to Aid Committee

Mrs. John F. Kennedy, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been elected to the executive committee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the Center's board of trustees also announced that approximately $1,000,000 needs to be raised from private sources by June 30 in order to qualify for the matching federal appropriation of $15,500,000.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

MAR 27 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,717

MAR 27 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

MAR [illegible] 1965

BERGEN RECORD
HACKENSACK, N. J.

MAR

STAR LEDGER
NEWARK, N.J.

APR

DAILY VARIETY
HOLLYWOOD, L.A.,CAL.
D. 9 239

MAR 26 1965
Buffalo Evening News
D. 278,313 SUN. 291,625

APR 9 1965
FILM DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 6,323

---

29 1965
THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

APR 2 1965

Kennedy Center

Mrs. John F. Kennedy, Senator Robert F. Kennedy and Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been elected to the executive committee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the center's board of trustees, said that he was delighted to have Mrs. Kennedy, Senator Kennedy and Mr. Leinsdorf on the executive committee and that they could make significant contributions to the center's development.

Senator Kennedy, the former Attorney General of the United States, was born in Boston Mass., and now makes his home in Glen Cove, N.Y. He is a graduate of Harvard University and of the Virginia Law School.

Born In Vienna

A native of Austria, Mr. Leinsdorf was born in Vienna and now resides in Brookline, Mass. Mr. Leinsdorf came to the United States in 1937 and became a citizen in 1942.

He was assistant conductor of the Salzburg Festival from 1934-1937 and music director of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Rochester, N.Y., from 1947-1956. He directed the New York City Center Opera in 1956 and the Metropolitan Opera from 1957-1961.

The center still needs to raise approximately $1,000,000 by June 30, 1965, from private sources in order to qualify for the matching Federal appropriation of $15,500,000.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 20 1965

TV Tastes Sampled at Ch. 5 Hearing

By JOHN C. THOMAS
Globe Reporter

WASHINGTON — The elevision tastes of Greater Boston community leaders were screened Friday at a Federal Communications Commission hearing on four applications to operate Channel 5.

Attorneys spent most of the day attempting to discredit a Charles River TV exhibit on 19-page questionnaires filled out by 144 prominent Greater Boston citizens.

On the stand for the third day was Theodore Jones, president and director, who has testified that the questionnaires helped formulate Charles River's policy and its application to Channel 5.

The names of those interviewed read like a "who's who in Boston."

There are university presidents, lawyers, business executives, doctors, journalists and politicians who recorded their television habits and opinions.

Attending the morning session Friday was George E. Akerson, president and publisher of the Herald-Traveler Corp. and president of its wholly owned subsidiary, WHDH Inc., an applicant. He testified earlier this month.

Jones said the exhibit contained "subjective summaries," but Boston Broadcasters Atty. Benito Gaguine described it as a "selective process of culling certain interviews which counsel for Charles River thought would be nice and helpful in presenting his application to the FCC."

Gaguine said it was "misleading," while WHDH Atty. William Dempsey claimed it had been "edited to represent Jones' view of the interviewee's opinions."

Examiner Herbert Shafman declined to strike out the exhibit but promised to consider all testimony concerning it.

Jones testified that a WCRB partner, Stephen Paine, declined to enter the Charles River Civic TV venture because he was "a classmate of Bob Choate and he did not want to be involved in any application against his good friend."

The late Mr. Choate was president and publisher of the Herald-Traveler Corp., and president of WHDH Inc.

Gaguine read questionnaire comments into the record:

Dr. Walter G. Muelder, associate dean at Boston University's Theological School, had said: "I have no TV in my home—children finishing high school—A students—no TV a help."

John C. Wroe, clerk of Waltham District Court, thought women's programs were "adequate."

Dr. Charles Edward Sterns, Tufts University Dean, described his program case by saying he "preferred trash for the same reason I read comics and mysteries."

Thomas B. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, said he watched television about "one hour a week. Being in the entertainment field I use my leisure time for other things."

Dr. Nathan Pusey, Harvard University president, said: "We don't own a television—wish we did at election times—I watch television in motel rooms when traveling—sometimes on summer vacation."

The hearing resumes Tuesday.

President Taft vetoed a bill to mandate literacy tests for immigrants Feb. 14, 1913.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 344,575 SUN. 569,578

MAR 7 1965

Philharmonic Hall Still Dull

Repairs Have Not Bettered New York Auditorium

By DONAL J. HENAHAN

No, New York's Philharmonic Hall has not been repaired, despite nearly three years of acoustical patching and rebuilding.

What was described after Lincoln Center's opening night in September 1962 as "a $15,000,000 lemon" has been sweetened up somewhat in sound since then, but it remains a depressingly unsatisfactory concert hall, no matter what you may have read or heard.

The changes so far have not succeeded in ameliorating significantly the dead, distant and lifeless sound that an orchestra produces in the hall, as we learned by hearing Josef Krips and the New York Philharmonic trying to make music there.

In order to go back to Philharmonic Hall with a good concert hall's sounds fresh in the ear, we spent the previous evening at Carnegie Hall with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. Why the Lincoln Center headquarters has not yet sent an agent down to 57th street to dynamite the older auditorium is a mystery; it stands there as a constant reproach to Philharmonic Hall's acoustical witch doctors.

Boston's orchestra, of course, is a greater one by far these days than the Philharmonic, but neither its discipline nor its virtuosity could account for the difference in pleasure afforded by those two concerts.

IN BOTH HALLS the orchestral sound is more distant than a Chicago Symphony listener likes at first, for in Chicago's Orchestra Hall the sound is there before you and around you, with an immediacy that its bright acoustics do provide, no matter what the hall's other faults. But at Carnegie, distance lends a certain enchantment, too, and the music's richness and cohesiveness make listening a joy.

Philharmonic Hall, today just as in 1962, continues to hold all the music onstage, and one still has the impression that an invisible wall blocks the orchestra from the audience. Some of the higher, strident tones have been blunted, which provides a better balance than in the past, but seemingly with a consequent drop in volume level.

Visually, the changes in Philharmonic Hall have been all to the good. The ugly distracting blue and gold screens at the rear of the stage are gone, replaced by handsome teak paneling in a tambour style, which sets off the orchestra beautifully.

Overhead, Philharmonic Hall's infamous acoustical "clouds" continue to float, though flat panels now fill in spaces between most of them.

The listener, straining to hear bass notes and other detail, cannot help wondering why the whole misbegotton cloud structure has not been yanked out and a genuine, sound-reflective ceiling substituted. A German acoustician whom Lincoln Center retained last year to suggest repairs recommended doing just that, but either because of excessive cost or misplaced pride in the hall's original decor, the clouds remain.

KRIPS COMPOUNDED the hall's inadequacies by conducting Mahler's lovely Fourth Symphony at tiresomely dawdling tempos and with indulgent mannerisms that turned the work's naivete into cloying sweetness. Pierette Alarie could scarcely be heard at times in the solo soprano part. When Rudolf Firkusny played Martinu's Third Piano Concerto, the piano sounded oddly dull and muddy. Somehow the acousticians have arranged things so that neither a solid bass nor a brilliant top is produced.

Over at Carnegie, Leinsdorf was enjoying himself as much as his listeners. Although the Bach Double Violin Concerto, reduced to baroque proportions and accompanied at the harpsichord by the conductor, was dwarfed by the auditorium, the evening contained some powerful Beethoven, Berg and Wagner to compensate.

At the first great chord of the Beethoven "Leonore" Overture No. 2, one could feel the sound in his toes, for the carpetcovered wooden floor of the old hall transmits aural vibrations in a way that concrete-based halls can never hope to do.

Leinsdorf, conducting with a freedom and an expressiveness that one had never before heard from him, capped a grand concert with Brahms's Second Symphony, so glowingly done that perfect strangers were challenging one another at the end to remember when they had heard a better Brahms.

AND YET, glamour and publicity more than hold their own against such competition in New York. The Philharmonic's concerts, even with Leonard Bernstein gone for the season on leave, are steady sellouts, regardless of conductor, soloist or repertory.

No one seems to worry that all the best concerts are being played by visiting orchestras. In that sense, Philharmonic Hall has already done more for Boston, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Chicago than for the city that begat it.

Copyright, 1965, The Chicago Daily News

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 174,850

MAY 3 1965

Off to Amsterdam

Erich Leinsdorf has been invited to conduct the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam for the opening of the 1965 Holland Festival on June 17. The music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be making his first guest appearance since he took on his present position in 1962. Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen a work by Guillaume Landre, Netherlands composer, to open the concert. It will also include music by Beethoven and Bartók, with Vladimir Ashkenazy appearing as piano soloist.

193

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

1965

What the Boston Symphony Means to Some

Notes From Back of Envelope

BY VICTOR O. JONES

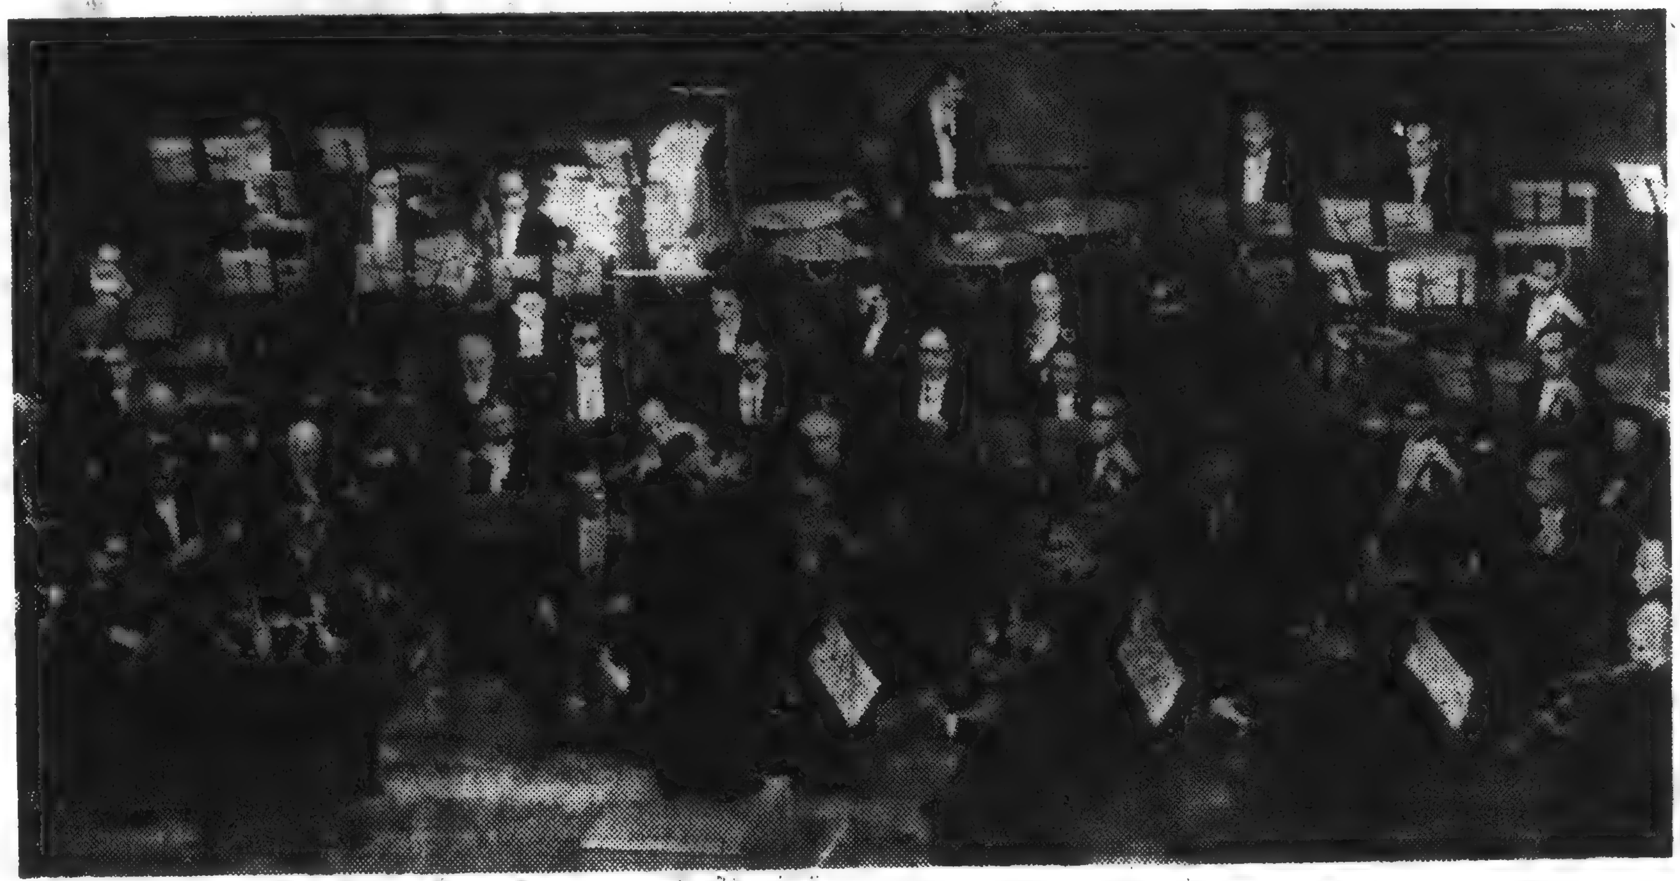
The season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is drawing to a close, and it may well be that the considerations that follow should be put over until next year. Too, what with the troubles in Selma and in Viet Nam, there may be more important things to discuss.

Anything more important than the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday matinees? Well, maybe, though in certain local circles this thought would quickly perish. And not just among the ladies who already own their hats, and the others who, instead of subscribing to Friday afternoon Symphony tickets, INHERIT them. After all, I know a highly successful more or less self-made man (and doesn't that expression date me?) who once told me that he would gladly swap all his wealth and all his honors if he could be named a trustee of the Massachusetts General Hospital or the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in that order.

Comparisons, of course, are odious, but that's the order in which he rated these two particular trusteeships. Perhaps he put the medical ahead of the musical because of his advancing age, but being named second in such an evaluation indicates that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is something about which most of us feel strongly.

★

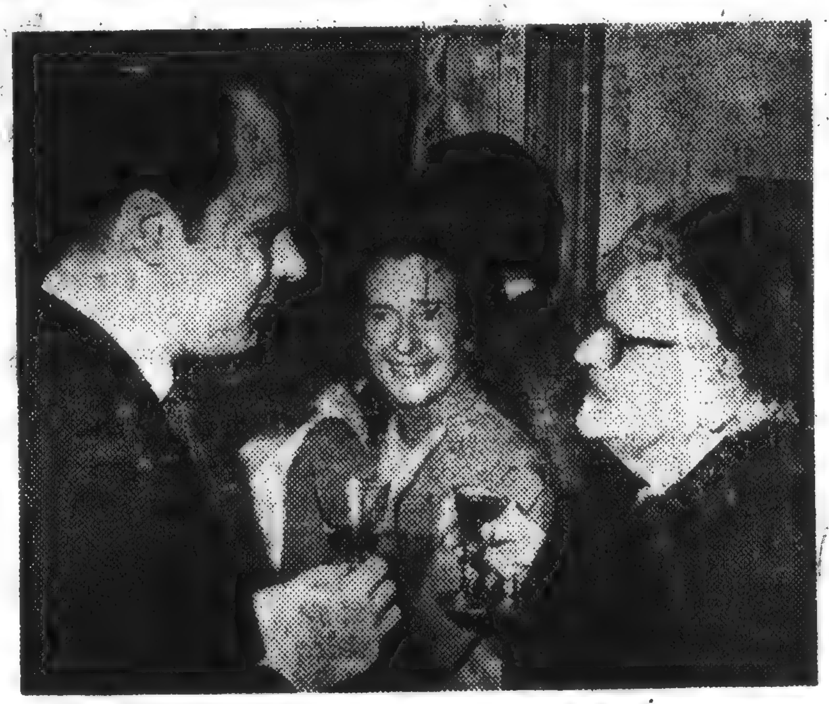
Myself, I don't feel quite that strongly about it. I'm the kind of symphony listener who likes to watch the percussion portion of the orchestra, and I tend to relax and take a snooze if I notice that only the kettle drum maestro is standing erect and ready in the back row. When four or five other characters stand up back there, even though only briefly, and get ready to bang and crash away, I perk up.



WHEN THAT MAN STANDS UP IN THE BACK ROW, SOME LISTENERS WAKE UP

But I'm enough of a traditionalist to have taken a position on commercial establishments which seek to ride the coat-tails of the Boston Symphony. You'll recall that I took a dim view of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel mixing Friday Symphony concerts with fashion shows, and in general tended to favor the more cultural luncheons put on at the Midtown Motor Inn. I'll confess that I avoided both the Ritz and the Midtown for my pre-Symphony luncheons.

At the Ritz, since the death of Ed Wyner, I would have been subjected to the latest fashions. At the Midtown, I would have had the benefits of highly informative lectures from really musical people.



PROF. STEINBERG ANSWERS A QUESTION

But at the Midtown, built on land still owned by the Christian Science Church, there was, I had been told, no way of getting a drink. That's what used to drive me to Steve ("Crusher") Casey's saloon a block down Massachusetts av.

★

But a couple of weeks ago, while keeping up to date on the Mike Steinberg civil war, I noticed the photograph which accompanies this essay. That's Dr. Steinberg on the left and that looks like either a martini or manhattan he's holding. I'd guess it was sherry that the lady on the right is nursing. The picture was taken at the Midtown on the occasion of Prof. Steinberg's pre-Symphony lecture there. Could it be that I had been mistaken all these years and that a drink was available at the Midtown? It was worth looking into, and so one recent Friday I abandoned Crusher Casey's in favor of the Midtown.

To those music-lovers who have faced this same agonizing decision about where to have a pre-Symphony luncheon, I can report that the Midtown is indeed a tenant of the Christian Science Church, that the Church indeed does stick to its principles and will not allow liquor to be publicly served at the motor inn. If Steinberg and his lady companion are indeed drinking anything alcoholic, it's being done in a privately chartered room, where ordinary Symphony-goers would not be invited.

In short, though the Christian Science Monitor may have shifted from an eight-column format to a five-column format, the ban on booze is still in effect—alcoholic booze at least, because the Midtown does openly serve such drugs as tea and coffee.

And the Midtown seems to be doing O.K. without boasting a bar of any kind, just as the old Copley Square Hotel used to do before Prohibition.

★

It's too late in the Symphony season this year for this information to be of any great immediate value. Perhaps pre-Symphony luncheons are not important in any case, certainly not as important as the fierce debate as to whether Prof. Steinberg is a Good Guy or a Bad Guy. I've always had a hunch, anyway, that most Friday afternoon Symphony-goers eat at home.

After all, ladies who already HAVE their hats, very likely also HAVE their food . . . ordered from, and delivered by S. S. Pierce, the grocer.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

MAY 4 1965

Leinsdorf To Conduct In Holland

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has accepted an invitation to conduct the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam at the opening concert of the 1965 Holland Festival. The concert on June 17 will be his first guest engagement since he became music director of the Boston Symphony in 1962.

Permutazioni Sinfoniche, a work by the 20th-century Dutch composer, Guillaume Landre, has been chosen by Mr. Leinsdorf to begin his only guest engagement this season. Vladimir Ashkenazy will appear as soloist in a performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3, and the concert will conclude with Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, which was the first release made by RCA Victor (LM-2643) with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Mr. Leinsdorf.

On April 20 Mr. Leinsdorf completed his third winter season as the Orchestra's music director. Following the June 17 concert at the Holland Festival, and a second concert on June 18, he will return to the United States to prepare for the July 2 opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eight-week Berkshire Festival.

19

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAR 6 1965

Today in Society

Globe Critic Steinberg Charms BSO Lunchers

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Our man in the Music Critic's Seat, Michael Steinberg, about whom there has been a great deal of interest and comment since his arrival here from New York and Europe last year, faced — and thoroughly charmed—one of the most conservative and music conscious audiences in Boston when he spoke yesterday at the Symphony luncheon at the Midtown.

Several even took off their jingling charm bracelets (one of the urgent messages handed on to Mr. Steinberg by the Boston Symphony Orchestra members) and ladies wont to remind those not born in Boston that Friday Afternoon, Symphony, and Sacrosanct are one and the same, came, and stayed, and applauded.

There were Cabot and Higginson cousins, and more than one '05 and '07 subscriber to Symphony who were "listening to Symphony concerts before you were born, young man," as well as a good many of Mr. Steinberg's own generation—even a fellow-Princetonian — and B.S.O. members at yesterday's reception before the luncheon. Luncheon host was the chorus Pro Musica's able Alfred Nash Patterson, and violinist Robert Brink, Yale and B.U.'s Robert Cunningham, Fr. Edward Hennessy of St. Gabriel's, Youth Concert founder and B.S.O. member Harry Ellis Dickson; Boston's nicest music and arts patron, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, and others of the Pro Musica shared the head table with the Pattersons and Mr. Steinberg.

Nodding delighted agreement with Mr. Steinberg's opening statement that in music "an enlightened public is as important as it is in politics," were his Symphony Hall seatmates Mrs. Chauncey Gray and Mrs. John Cross of Cambridge, who often share his score or his remarkable knowledge about both composition and composer.

The statement that a critic is "as committed a servant to the piece of music being played as its composer or performer" brought Mr. Dickson's nod, though he was the first to ask Mr. Steinberg if he felt that an important artist or composition could be "permanently destroyed" by adverse criticism.

The answer was no: Mr. Steinberg feels that critics are "not for posterity"—except for men like composer Berlioz and playwright Bernard Shaw, and that one of the critic's major jobs is to "create a lively climate for the art of his time." His audience shared with delight some of his Shaw quotes during the Shavian era as a London music critic of the 1890's —"I can excuse bigamy, but coarse or vulgar phrasing of a decent piece of music—never!" And there was a lively three-corner go-around between Mr. Steinberg, Mr. Dickson and Mr. Patterson over critics as "policemen of the arts — and sheep make poor policemen" vs. is the tiger then a better policeman? Mr. S.—yes. Applause from the audience. And more applause for his statement that "knowledge and explanation are the object of the critic in his summary judgment conditioned by the time and space at his disposal, and not a personal rendering of "what I went through."

Asked how he could judge a new work without having seen the score, the speaker answered that he felt it was the critic's job to secure a copy of the score, and asked if there was a "sameness" to music heard many times, that answer was "you can listen to Brahms a hundred times and on the 101st learn new delight."

Mr. Steinberg studied in England and is a graduate and former faculty member of Princeton. He studied in Rome as a Fulbright Fellow, and is currently teacher of music at Brandeis and a director of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Staying on for happy handshakes and music talk until everyone had to get across Huntington av. and into the Hall in one hurried friendly rush—Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. John Burk, Mrs. Stedman Buttrick, Dr. and Mrs. Francis Hall; the decorative wife of the new German Consul General in Boston, Mrs. Edgar von Schmidt-Pauli, Mrs. Carl Koch, Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. John Sargent, Theresa Putnam of the Young Audience board, Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky, Mrs. Howard Davis, Mrs. John Root, Mrs. Ben Ames Williams, Mrs. Stephen Ames, Mrs. J. Clark Boas, and scores more.

HELEN ALMY of Cambridge tells Globe critic Michael Steinberg at Friday's Symphony luncheon, at which Steinberg was guest speaker, "I've beer a Symphony subscriber since 1905." (Paul Connell Photos)

GESTURE FOR EMPHASIS—Globe music critic Michael Steinberg (left) is engaged in animated discussion by Harry Ellis Dickson, luncheon host and Symphony member.

---

ewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
ɔx 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

APR 17 1965

Today in Society

News, Good Time for All At Symphony Luncheon

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Those who weren't at Friday's Symphony luncheon at the Midtown before the 84th season's closing concert missed a lot of news and a most delightful time.

B.S.O.'s magnetic Harry Dickson, who would have made an excellent international news columnist if music hadn't claimed him first, knew just what each of the retiring Symphony members (six are leaving this year) is planning to do, from teaching to European concerts. He also told his absorbed listeners who the new players are, including the second woman to join the orchestra, and where each comes from.

He also asked Arthur Fiedler, who'll be beginning his own 36th season conducting Pops Apr. 27, what is new for Pops' light music fans this coming season. Applause followed Fiedler's promise of music from "Mary Poppins," "Fiddler on the Roof" and "maybe a Beatle or two." He got an ovation as he joined the roster of head table Symphony guests gathered around the able, decorative chairman, Mrs. Anthony Kutten. Lovely dark-haired Johanna Fiedler was with her father, as well as Symphony's Thomas Perry and his attractive wife and beautiful Mrs. Michael Dukakis and Rep. Dukakis and Symphony's eminent Rosario Mazzeo.

NewEngland New
Box 2078, Boston 6

Enterprise &
BROCKTO
Circ. 4

APR 12

Colle
Retir

PLYMOUTH.
spinster school
Brockton has le nearly $900,000,
in specific chari and dividing the the estate betwe
Symphony Orches
College.
Probate Court show that Miss solds of Brockton 1964, leaving a of $896,701 and re
$1,600.
Miss Reynolds,
91 Highland St.,
the daughter of nolds, a shoe m
Smith College taught school in Plymouth before Her specific headed by $25,000 ton Hospital. She to the city of Broc lish a scholarship her father and le Porter Congregati memory of her mother, Ida.
Paul Revere Lo of which Miss Re
was a member,
000. A bequest o
to Smith College ton and $10,000
Boston University
dents in the gra
ment of liberal a
Miss Reynolds
quests of $5,000 e
They went to:
Methodist Church
her grandmothe
Knowles Reynolds
versity Women's Club, the scholar
Mary A. Burnha
Northampton, Bro
Nurse Assn., Colle
arship fund of Bro ton Chapter of A Cross, Wales Ho
Women, Boston S
chestra, Boston
Massachusetts Ho
ciety, Massachuse
sociation researc mouth County C tional Foundation
Paralysis; Massa
sion of the Blind
Memorial.
Miss Reynolds'
were cousins. She to Mrs. Beatrice brook and $2,000 other cousins, M
Deane of Greenfi
H. Moore of Balls
Mrs. Abbie J. P
Bridgewater, Mr
Bisbee of Brock
Dorothy P. Taylo
She left $3,000
chian Mountain to build a cam property at Po named "Marion."
Church of North willed $3,500 in Reynolds' grand
Chandler Phillips
Bequests of $3
made to the R Association, Lin
tional Church, C
Brockton and Sa
Brockton. The W
Brockton was be in memory of other $2,000 beq
bert B. Torrence appreciation of nesses.
The will speci thing remaining after payment bequests, taxes divided equally College and th phony Orchestra had been an a of the orchestr concerts regul years.

195

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 47,397

A[illegible] 1965

College, Symphony Receive Bulk of Retired Teacher's $900,000 Estate

PLYMOUTH. — A retired spinster school teacher from Brockton has left an estate of nearly $900,000, making $155,000 in specific charitable bequests and dividing the remainder of the estate between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Smith College.

Probate Court Records here show that Miss Marion S. Reynolds of Brockton died Jan. 18, 1964, leaving a personal estate of $896,701 and real estate worth $1,600.

Miss Reynolds, who lived at 91 Highland St., Brockton, was the daughter of Bion F. Reynolds, a shoe manufacturer. A Smith College graduate, she taught school in Arlington and Plymouth before retiring in 1940.

Her specific bequests were headed by $25,000 to the Brockton Hospital. She willed $5,000 to the city of Brockton to establish a scholarship in memory of her father and left $5,000 to the Porter Congregational Church in memory of her father and mother, Ida.

Paul Revere Lodge, AF&AM, of which Miss Reynolds' father was a member, was willed $10,000. A bequest of $15,000 went to Smith College of Northampton and $10,000 was willed to Boston University to assist students in the graduate department of liberal arts.

Miss Reynolds made 14 bequests of $5,000 each.

They went to: Pearl Street Methodist Church in memory of her grandmother, Sarah Knowles Reynolds; Boston University Women's Graduates Club, the scholarship fund of Mary A. Burnham School of Northampton, Brockton Visiting Nurse Assn., College Club scholarship fund of Brockton, Brockton Chapter of American Red Cross, Wales Home for Aged Women, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston College Club, Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Massachusetts Heart Association research fund, Plymouth County Chapter of National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis; Massachusetts Division of the Blind and Morgan Memorial.

Miss Reynolds' only survivors were cousins. She willed $5,000 to Mrs. Beatrice A. Hunt of Holbrook and $2,000 each to five other cousins, Mrs. Eunice G. Deane of Greenfield, Mrs. Dora H. Moore of Ballston Spa, N. Y., Mrs. Abbie J. Packard of East Bridgewater, Mrs. Dorothy M. Bisbee of Brockton and Mrs. Dorothy P. Taylor of Brockton.

She left $3,000 to the Appalachian Mountain Club of Boston to build a camp at the club property at Ponkapoag to be named "Marion." The Methodist Church of North Easton was willed $3,500 in memory of Miss Reynolds' grandmother, Susan Chandler Phillips.

Bequests of $3,000 each were made to the Reynolds Family Association, Lincoln Congregational Church, Garden Club of Brockton and Salvation Army of Brockton. The Woman's Club of Brockton was bequeathed $2,000 in memory of her mother. Another $2,000 bequest went to Albert B. Torrence of Brockton in appreciation of his many kindnesses.

The will specified that everything remaining in the estate after payment of the specific bequests, [illegible] and expenses be divided equally between Smith College and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Reynolds had been an ardent supporter of the orchestra, attending its concerts regularly for over 50 years.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 144,855

APR 12 1965

Spain Salutes Symphony, Vice Versa

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Today in Society

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the best in the United States, perhaps in the world," said new Spanish Consul Victor Sanchez-Mesas, at the Midtown Motor Inn over the week-end.

He said he and Signora Sanchez-Mesas "danced for joy" at being assigned to Boston after completing a Philadelphia assignment.

Boston Symphony violinist and speaker Harry Ellis Dickson urged music lovers to appreciate the pure Spanish styles in music, as well as its universal appeal and adaptation in the music of all other countries.

He traced the Spanish impact on music from 4th Century monastic singing through Visi-Gothic and Gregorian chants. He also honored Spain's contribution to polyphonic, sacred, organ and lute styles to prevailing influence of Spanish guitar artists such as Albenez Granados and Segovia; cellist Pablo Casals and soprano Victoria de Los Angelos.

The world bears witness, Dickson said to their influence, as well as that of the enduring appeal of da Falla, and Lalo, with whom composers from Mozart, Charbriet, Chopin and Stravinsky found common cause.

Spain today supports 16 major orchestras, 25 conservatories and eight operas, with festivals around the seasons.

Descendant of Spanish musicians and poets, Mrs. Stephen Gillman, sat with Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, luncheon hostess and Mr. and Mrs. Francisco Fernandez Longoris at the head table with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Ehrlich, Mr. and Mrs. Gael Mahony, Mrs. Stanford Calderwood, Mrs. William Sieglaff and Mrs. Endicott Peabody.

Mrs. Robert Saltonstall and Mrs. E. G. Parker sat together. Mrs. A. C. Titcomb had as her guests Mrs. Vcevevold Strekalovsky, Mrs. John Thayer, Mrs. Richard Overholt, Mrs. George Thompson and Miss Lillian Surette.

Symphony-goers interested in Spanish music also included Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham and her sister; Mrs. Magy Rubinoff and Mrs. H. K. Cross.

Sharing the enthusiasm of Mrs. Richard Ely were her guests, Mrs. Marshall Dwinnell, Mrs. Thomas Chesterton, Mrs. George Philbrick, Mrs. Cyril Shelvey and Mrs. John K. Whittaker.

Others saluting Spain's double eagled flags and the red carnations and gold tulips which complemented a Spanish menu of Paella Valenciana, salad Jarez, and Spanish cream dessert included Mrs. J. C. Boas, Mrs. John Cushman, Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Mrs. Philip Mather, Mrs. C. H. S. Merril, Mrs. Charles Kefauver, Mrs. Gordon Thayer, Mrs. George A. Lewis, Mrs. Robert Morris, Miss Gretchen Clifford, Mrs. Newbury Ware, Mrs. Alden McIntyre, Mrs. Roger Preston and Mrs. Howell Stevens.

PIANIST Josette Roman (right), back in Boston from sold-out European tour, visits Symphony Hall with Mrs. Arthur Brooks Jr. and Anthony Kutten. (Globe Photo by Sam Hammat)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Catholic Observer
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 19,831

APR 23 1965

Boston Symphony Names Catholic Pastor Trustee

BOSTON (RNS) — A prominent Catholic pastor here was named a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of trustees.

MSGR. EDWARD G. Murray, pastor of Sacred Heart Church, is believed to be the first priest elected as a trustee of the 84-year-old orchestra. He also serves as a trustee of the Boston Public Library.

Msgr. Murray is one of the city's most prominent proponents of ecumenical affairs and served as a peritus (expert) at the Second Vatican Council's third session.

Before he became pastor of Sacred Heart Parish in 1951, Msgr. Murray was an assistant chancellor of the Boston archdiocese and rector of St. John's Seminary. He holds the rank of chevalier in the French Legion of Honor and Cavaliereal Meriot della Repubblica of Italy.

HENRY B. CABOT, president of the symphony orchestra's trustees, also announced the appointment of Robert Gardiner of Milton, Mass., as a board member.

Other long-time trustees include Dr. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Holy Trinity (Episcopal) Church, and the Rev. Palfrey Perkins, retired Unitarian minister who is a member-emeritus.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,304

MAY 13 196

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,483

MAY 11 1965

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 202,711

MAY 11 1965

New Trustee

Andrew Heiskell, chairman of the board of Time, Inc., magazine publishers, has been named a trustee of the Boston Symphony. He replaces the late C. D. Jackson, former senior vice president of Time. The announcement was made by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra. Two other trustees were recently named. They are Robert Gardiner and Rt. Rev. Edward Murray.

Heiskell has been with Time since 1937 when he joined the staff of Life magazine as science and medicine editor. He was elected to Time's board of directors in 1950 and became chairman in April 1960. Born in Naples, Heiskell was educated in Europe, attended the Harvard Business School, and was a reporter for the New York Herald Tribune prior to joning Time Inc. He serves on the boards of several organizations in the arts and educational fields including the Visiting Committee of the Joint Center for Urban Studies of M.I.T. and Harvard University and the board of the Actors Studio Theater.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune
D. 307,674 SUN. 385,268

OCT 31 1965

Boston: The More It Changes...

by Alan Rich

Last winter I found myself in Boston over a weekend and managed, not without difficulty, to wangle a pair of tickets for a Saturday night concert by the Boston Symphony. After the first movement of the opening work the lights went on to allow latecomers to be seated, and I took advantage of the stir to whisper something about the hall to my companion. "Shusssh" said the man in back of us.

Then I remembered. You don't talk at Symphony Hall, not even when the lights are up. You don't even go to hear Mr. Leinsdorf, or Brahms, or the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In Boston, you "go to Symphony." Once there, you are swept up in a timeless ritual and you act accordingly. You no more talk during a performance, or even shift in your seat, than you show up at opening night of the Metropolitan Opera with unmatching socks.

This fall the Boston Symphony is celebrating its 85th birthday—85 years of being a Way of Life for all fortunate enough to attend its concerts. It is not the oldest orchestra in the country, nor has it always been the best (although it has held that rank more often than not). As a phenomenon of both social and cultural significance, however, it is unique. No other city in the world regards its resident orchestra with quite the hushed reverence. In no other city is the orchestra the absolute center of the cultural life.

Here in New York, this attitude is difficult to understand. The Philharmonic has its glamour, and occasionally it becomes of passing importance. The Boston comes down for its annual series, which is invariably sold out. Its Philharmonic and Carnegie Hall concerts are always worthwhile, but they are not surrounded with the atmosphere that permeates Symphony Hall and are not accorded any sort of special awe on the part of the audience. We don't have the time, or the patience, to become that sentimental.

The special Boston mystery was largely the creation of the late Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the orchestra for a quarter of a century beginning in 1924. Nobody in our time has ever borne himself with the sublimity that Koussevitzky radiated from the moment he entered the hall. He was an Olympian, some one whose feet touched the ground only because his one great failure in life was not getting the laws of gravity repealed.

During my years as a second-balcony usher at Symphony Hall I always made it a point to rush backstage in time to watch Koussevitzky emerge after his inal bow. It was one of the great sights of the century o see the great man leave the stage. His valet Victor, standing by the door holding an enormous black cape in a microscopically precise position, dropped it onto the maitre's shoulders at the exact moment and the great man, oblivious to its presence and without breaking pace, seemingly floated up the stairs to the Green Room.

In view of this spectacle, it is somewhat beside the point, perhaps, to observe that Koussevitzky's musical gifts were somewhat less than Olympian. He read the German classics as if he hoped to find on the next page of each some brooding Slavic anti-hero. He played a lot of new American music, far more than any other conductor of his time, but many composers had to acquiesce to having their scores cut or otherwise distorted. As a colorist he was untouchable, however, and it showed in performances of such works as Daphnis et Chloe and La Mer, in standards that have yet to be challenged.

Serge Koussevitzky

"... Under Erich Leinsdorf, there is an entirely new instrument on the stage of Symphony Hall ... And yet, the legend that was formulated in the Koussevitzky days persists ..."

This didn't matter, not even in the great intellectual center that Boston still believed itself to be in the Koussevitzky era. What mattered is that he moved among Bostonians like a legendary personage, and that he imparted this quality to the orchestra. And its playing, although often misapplied, was indeed legendary.

With Koussevitzky's passing, there died the last of the great legends. Toscanini? For all the effort of record companies and radio networks to build a Toscanini legend, his magnetism remained rooted in the musical strength of his performances. Stokowski? Too human, too approachable. You can't make movies for Walt Disney or marry a Vanderbilt and expect to be mistaken for a god.

What really proves the validity of the Koussevitzky legend is the way it has persisted. Today, 16 years after his retirement, the orchestra is still the center of a cult, mystical and arcane.

It has remained that way, even though its basic musical philosophy has undergone drastic changes. Charles Munch, even though he came from somewhat the same background as Koussevitzky and radiated the same air of refinement, was a far humbler personage in most respects, and his musical talents were also more modest. He gave better performances of a wider range of repertory than Koussevitzky had; his classics were, if not dazzling, at least undistorted. But the incandescence that emanated from the Koussevitzky podium, the hypnosis that could make an audience believe that Mozart really was a Russian, was also gone.

Even so, there are plenty of people who mourn the passing of Munch, because his retirement was the end of the Boston Symphony as the embodiment of all in music that is comprehended by elegance. Under Erich Leinsdorf, there is an entirely new instrument on the stage of Symphony Hall.

The change was, perhaps, inevitable. The audience, too, had changed; Grandmother Saltoncabot, whose black bombazine used to rustle down the aisles on Friday afternoon (and up the aisles as well, whenever those dreadful moderns were played) had passed on, her Beacon Hill aerie converted into efficiency apartments. People now came to concerts with scores, aware (thanks to records and the radio) of the breadth of the symphonic repertory and the essentials of classical style.

Leinsdorf is an intelligent, painstaking musician who plays it clean, reduces the orchestra when Mozart demands it, and digs around in Schumann and Mahler instead of in the minor Russian and French composers so loved by Koussevitzky and Munch. Under him the programs are substantial and balanced, with an appeal to the intellect as well as the emotions. He has brought the orchestra, in other words, into the 20th century.

And yet, the legend that was formulated in the Koussevitzky days persists. With all its new look, the Boston Symphony remains an object of love and reverence to its audiences. Even though Mr. Leinsdorf walks with his feet on the ground, says "hello" to people and even shakes hands, once he is on the podium the Olympian clouds gather around him, and nobody stirs in his seat until he has been dismissed. It will always be that way in Boston.

RECORDINGS

197

BEETHOVEN: PIANO CONCERTO # 5.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800

OCT 2 1 1964 Burrelle's

★★★★ Beethoven: Emperor Concerto—Rubinstein, Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor]. Artur Rubinstein remains one of the incredible pianists of our century. At an age (72) when most performers' physical powers and dexterity ebb, his are as superb as ever. His way with the Emperor is as masterful as any in the catalog—noble, propulsive, poetic, and deeply felt. Leinsdorf's accompaniment is not only in rapport with Rubinstein's approach, but also sculptures the orchestral phrases in a way that illuminates the piano detail rather than overwhelming it (as some conductors are wont to do).

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 344,575 SUN. 569,578

OCT 4 1964 Burrelle's

New Recordings

By THOMAS B. SHERMAN

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN continues to be one of the most engaged—and most engaging—pianists of our times even though he is more than 75 years old. His recorded performance of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto is not wholly satisfactory, in my opinion, but for reasons that cannot be attributed to lack of vitality. On the contrary he is as fresh as a new boy wonder who has just made a smashing debut. No uncertainty of fingering or phrasing is ever audible at any stage of the proceedings and the only murky passages in the whole work must be charged to the accompanying Boston Symphony Orchestra or to the sound engineers.

Yet the performance lacks a monumental boldness that is due, in my belief, to the very qualities of the soloist in playing the lyrical sections. They are tonally beautiful and they flow with the ease of a well placed and well controlled human voice. But the onset of the first theme, following the cadenza-like flourish of the piano, is not at all aggressive and much the same is true of the entrance into the third movement. Moreover a listener may easily get the impression that the interpretation has been planned for the sole purpose of showing off Rubinstein's talent for lyricism.

So it all comes down to a solo performance by a pianist with an expensive orchestra employed for background purposes. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Orchestra. (RCA-Victor, Dynagroove-Stereophonic, one record)

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.

SEP 2 6 1964 Burrelle's

BEETHOVEN: Emperor Concerto—Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony/Leinsdorf—RCA Victor LM 2733

Artur Rubinstein's performances of a Beethoven work is always a welcome addition to the catalog of classical literature, and this superb execution of the Concert No. 5 (Emperor) is especially welcome. The pianist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, matches the mastery of the composer with his own brilliant interpretation. Past recordings of this work by a variety of artists may easily be set aside in favor of this one.

ALBANY N.Y.
EAU
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday September 27, 1964

Record Turntable

Rubinstein and Leinsdorf Make a Stereo Era Classic

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

One of the great recordings of the stereo era is the newest versions of the Beethoven Fifth Piano Concerto as performed by the Arthur Rubinstein with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf. Musically virtuous and tonally opulent, the piano part is played with a brilliance and clarity hard to imagine, and Leinsdorf makes the most of his magnificent orchestrra.

Furthermore, RCA's constantly improving Dynagroove techniques capture the proceedings with uncommon realism. Rubinstein has committed this work to discs before (and in stereo, too), but this is the version to own. Beethoven: Concerto No. 5—Emperor (Arthur Rubenstein, piano; Boston Symphony-Erich Leinsdorf) RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2733, Mono LM 2733.

Several other Beethoven concerti have been given new phonographic treatments as well.

Citizen Patriot
MICH.
38,922

64 Burrelle's

Among the Classics

Eminent Pianists Record Beethoven

Two of the most eminent of currently practicing piano virtuosos are on records with their newest feelings about Beethoven concertos — Artur Rubinstein concerning the 5th ("Emperor") and Rudolf Serkin concerning the 3rd.

The music is big enough and also so multi-faceted these feelings can and do change, and with listeners as well as performers. With Rubinstein, as he plays the "Emperor" with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, you would say his feelings are now more positive and more mellow.

He now has it "made," in his view. And so there is no rushing, no straining, but a great deal of architecture with a judicious weighing and choosing among permissible shades of tempos and dynamics. His is the "Emperor" for the relaxed listener (RCA Victor-2733).

Seattle
Post-Intelligencer
D. 196,459 SUN. 243,338

OCT 5 1964 Burrelle's

ANOTHER PIANISTIC GIANT—Artur Rubinstein—is represented in two compelling albums from RCA Victor—a new recording of Chopin's waltzes (LSC-2726) and a fine collaboration with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (LSC-2733).

In the latter, Rubinstein, with noble assistance, scales the heights of this masterpiece, and, although one might think that Rubinstein would have nothing new to say in the beloved Chopin waltzes that he has been interpreting so splendidly and singularly for so long, it would merely proe that one does not really know the genius of Rubinstein.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

OCT 1964 Burrelle's

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat ("Emperor"); Artur Rubinstein (piano); Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM-2733, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2733, $5.98.

ⓈTO the parade of great (and lesser) pianists whose performances of the Emperor are listed in the Schwann Catalog the return of Artur Rubinstein—only a month after the deletion of his collaboration with Krips—will be welcome indeed. The familiar nickname of the Concerto makes real sense in this instance, for it is played with sovereign majesty, ease, and command. Very few artists retain as much spontaneity and excitement in their ripest years as Mr. Rubinstein still has. But with these qualities he combines a wonderful assurance and repose of soul. The opening phrases of the piano roll out with proud splendor. In the slow movement Rubinstein does not give us the rapt vision of some inner world that certain interpreters of this music have disclosed; his is a more direct and less introspective approach, although profoundly sensitive. But in the Finale, which bursts so dramatically from its introductory hesitant measures, he fairly dances along with that rhythmic impetus that never fails him. Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are in top form and RCA Victor's sound is admirable. —R.S.

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 132,711 SUN. 196,874

SEP 2 0 1964 Burrelle's

A NEW 'EMPEROR'

Artur Rubinstein teams up with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in a performance of the Beethoven Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) that is just about all that this combination ought to be.

Rubinstein has recorded this concerto at least once before in a very good album of all the five concertos, and one might wonder why he should go at this Olympian work again. Probably for the reason that tempts all mountain climbers — because there is always something different to be seen about it.

It is, of course, a superb performance, with soloist and orchestra apparently vying to bring out all that Beethoven wanted from it. The work is a concerto in the finest sense — a meshing of piano and orchestra into cascades of sound that makes for a logical, coherent unity. Rubinstein, now in his seventies, never sounded more youthful or enthusiastic.

Richmond Times-Dispatch
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
D. 143,437 SUN. 192,499

SEP 2 7 1964 Burrelle's

Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf in LSC-2733 play the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) in a splendid new version. Rubinstein's sympathy for Beethoven's style in this work is as acute as it was for Chopin's widely varying style. Most remarkable is the tenderness of the slow movement and the out-and out joy of the glittering finale, no less than the substantial seriousness of the opening.

The cleanness of Rubinstein's articulation and the balance of his hands form an object lesson in piano playing. Leinsdorf's accompaniment is firm and judicious. One may observe the lovely sound of the Boston string at the start of the slow movement. Piano and orchestra are in ideal relation in this dynagroove recording.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 283,236 SUN. 296,860

SEP 1 2 1964 Burrelle's

* * *

RCA VICTOR and Artur Rubinstein have a wonderful thing going for them in a new release of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto.

The pianist says: "I love my recordings when I make them because I make them with utter enthusiasm and with all my heart." But here's the bone-crusher (for record collectors) as he adds: "But I must admit that about three or four months after the record has been issued I can't listen to it anymore because I change. The record doesn't. And that's the terrible tragedy; one wants to make everything over again."

Fortunately, Victor goes along with this. There's another advantage. We get to hear this artist in Dynagroove sound, which is one of the best things that ever happened to sound production.

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of "The Emperor" that will satisfy this listener a good deal longer than it will Rubinstein. Note the unmuddied bass and exquisite treble response. Stereo, mono.

RECORDINGS

BEETHOVEN: PIANO CONCERTO # 5.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800

OCT 2 1 1964 Burrelle's

★★★★ Beethoven: Emperor Concerto—Rubinstein, Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor]. Artur Rubinstein remains one of the incredible pianists of our century. At an age (72) when most performers' physical powers and dexterity ebb, his are as superb as ever. His way with the Emperor is as masterful as any in the catalog—noble, propulsive, poetic, and deeply felt. Leinsdorf's accompaniment is not only in rapport with Rubinstein's approach, but also sculptures the orchestral phrases in a way that illuminates the piano detail rather than overwhelming it (as some conductors are wont to do).

Jackson Citizen Patriot
JACKSON, MICH.
D. 37,400 S. 38,032

OCT 4 1964 Burrelle's

Among the Classics

Eminent Pianists Record Beethoven

Two of the most eminent of currently practicing piano virtuosos are on records with their newest feelings about Beethoven concertos — Artur Rubinstein concerning the 5th ("Emperor") and Rudolf Serkin concerning the 3rd.

The music is big enough and also so multi-faceted these feelings can and do change, and with listeners as well as performers. With Rubinstein, as he plays the "Emperor" with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf, you would say his feelings are now more positive and more mellow.

He now has it "made," in his view. And so there is no rushing, no straining, but a great deal of architecture with a judicious weighing and choosing among permissible shades of tempos and dynamics. His is the "Emperor" for the relaxed listener (RCA Victor-2733).

Seattle
Post-Intelligencer
D. 196,459 SUN. 243,338

OCT 5 1964 Burrelle's

ANOTHER PIANISTIC GIANT—Artur Rubinstein—is represented in two compelling albums from RCA Victor—a new recording of Chopin's waltzes (LSC-2726) and a fine collaboration with the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto (LSC-2733).

In the latter, Rubinstein, with noble assistance, scales the heights of this masterpiece, and, although one might think that Rubinstein would have nothing new to say in the beloved Chopin waltzes that he has been interpreting so splendidly and singularly for so long, it would merely proe that one does not really know the genius of Rubinstein.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
D. 344,575 SUN. 569,578

OCT 4 1964 Burrelle's

New Recordings

By THOMAS B. SHERMAN

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN continues to be one of the most engaged—and most engaging—pianists of our times even though he is more than 75 years old. His recorded performance of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto is not wholly satisfactory, in my opinion, but for reasons that cannot be attributed to lack of vitality. On the contrary he is as fresh as a new boy wonder who has just made a smashing debut. No uncertainty of fingering or phrasing is ever audible at any stage of the proceedings and the only murky passages in the whole work must be charged to the accompanying Boston Symphony Orchestra or to the sound engineers.

Yet the performance lacks a monumental boldness that is due, in my belief, to the very qualities of the soloist in playing the lyrical sections. They are tonally beautiful and they flow with the ease of a well placed and well controlled human voice. But the onset of the first theme, following the cadenza-like flourish of the piano, is not at all aggressive and much the same is true of the entrance into the third movement. Moreover a listener may easily get the impression that the interpretation has been planned for the sole purpose of showing off Rubinstein's talent for lyricism.

So it all comes down to a solo performance by a pianist with an expensive orchestra employed for background purposes. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Orchestra. (RCA-Victor, Dynagroove-Stereophonic, one record)

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

OCT 1964 Burrelle's

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 5 in E flat ("Emperor"); Artur Rubinstein (piano); Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM-2733, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2733, $5.98.

ⓈTO the parade of great (and lesser) pianists whose performances of the Emperor are listed in the Schwann Catalog the return of Artur Rubinstein—only a month after the deletion of his collaboration with Krips—will be welcome indeed. The familiar nickname of the Concerto makes real sense in this instance, for it is played with sovereign majesty, ease, and command. Very few artists retain as much spontaneity and excitement in their ripest years as Mr. Rubinstein still has. But with these qualities he combines a wonderful assurance and repose of soul. The opening phrases of the piano roll out with proud splendor. In the slow movement Rubinstein does not give us the rapt vision of some inner world that certain interpreters of this music have disclosed; his is a more direct and less introspective approach, although profoundly sensitive. But in the Finale, which bursts so dramatically from its introductory hesitant measures, he fairly dances along with that rhythmic impetus that never fails him. Mr. Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are in top form and RCA Victor's sound is admirable. —R.S.

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 132,711 SUN. 196,874

SEP 2 0 1964 Burrelle's

A NEW 'EMPEROR'

Artur Rubinstein teams up with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in a performance of the Beethoven Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) that is just about all that this combination ought to be.

Rubinstein has recorded this concerto at least once before in a very good album of all the five concertos, and one might wonder why he should go at this Olympian work again. Probably for the reason that tempts all mountain climbers — because there is always something different to be seen about it.

It is, of course, a superb performance, with soloist and orchestra apparently vying to bring out all that Beethoven wanted from it. The work is a concerto in the finest sense — a meshing of piano and orchestra into cascades of sound that makes for a logical, coherent unity. Rubinstein, now in his seventies, never sounded more youthful or enthusiastic.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.

SEP 2 6 1964 Burrelle's

BEETHOVEN: Emperor Concerto—Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony/Leinsdorf—RCA Victor LM 2733

Artur Rubinstein's performances of a Beethoven work is always a welcome addition to the catalog of classical literature, and this superb execution of the Concert No. 5 (Emperor) is especially welcome. The pianist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, matches the mastery of the composer with his own brilliant interpretation. Past recordings of this work by a variety of artists may easily be set aside in favor of this one.

ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK
STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, September 27, 1964
047

Record Turntable

Rubinstein and Leinsdorf Make a Stereo Era Classic

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

One of the great recordings of the stereo era is the newest versions of the Beethoven Fifth Piano Concerto as performed by the Arthur Rubinstein with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf. Musically virtuous and tonally opulent, the piano part is played with a brilliance and clarity hard to imagine, and Leinsdorf makes the most of his magnificent orchestrra.

Furthermore, RCA's constantly improving Dynagroove techniques capture the proceedings with uncommon realism. Rubinstein has committed this work to discs before (and in stereo, too), but this is the version to own. Beethoven: Concerto No. 5—Emperor (Arthur Rubenstein, piano; Boston Symphony-Erich Leinsdorf) RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2733, Mono LM 2733.

Several other Beethoven concerti have been given new phonographic treatments as well.

Richmond Times-Dispatch
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
D. 143,437 SUN. 192,499

SEP 2 7 1964 Burrelle's

Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf in LSC-2733 play the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) in a splendid new version. Rubinstein's sympathy for Beethoven's style in this work is as acute as it was for Chopin's widely varying style. Most remarkable is the tenderness of the slow movement and the out-and out joy of the glittering finale, no less than the substantial seriousness of the opening.

The cleanness of Rubinstein's articulation and the balance of his hands form an object lesson in piano playing. Leinsdorf's accompaniment is firm and judicious. One may observe the lovely sound of the Boston string at the start of the slow movement. Piano and orchestra are in ideal relation in this dynagroove recording.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 283,236 SUN. 296,860

SEP 1 2 1964 Burrelle's

RCA VICTOR and Artur Rubinstein have a wonderful thing going for them in a new release of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto.

The pianist says: "I love my recordings when I make them because I make them with utter enthusiasm and with all my heart." But here's the bone-crusher (for record collectors) as he adds: "But I must admit that about three or four months after the record has been issued I can't listen to it anymore because I change. The record doesn't. And that's the terrible tragedy; one wants to make everything over again."

Fortunately, Victor goes along with this. There's another advantage. We get to hear this artist in Dynagroove sound, which is one of the best things that ever happened to sound production.

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of "The Emperor" that will satisfy this listener a good deal longer than it will Rubinstein. Note the unmuddied bass and exquisite treble response. Stereo, mono.

198

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

OCT 1964

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 5, in E flat, Op. 73 ("Emperor")

Artur Rubinstein, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond.
- • RCA VICTOR LM 2733. LP. $4.98.
- • • RCA VICTOR LSC 2733. SD. $5.98.

Artur Rubinstein's stereo version of this work (with Josef Krips conducting) was one of the first in the two-channel medium. One is startled to think that it should be regarded as ready for replacement, but it was released way back in 1957, and Rubinstein at seventy-five is obviously a more mature and experienced artist than Rubinstein at sixty-eight. We've got to give these kids a chance to mature.

As a matter of fact this is a more mature performance, at least if you associate maturity with a spaciousness and breadth of phrase that put the expressive manipulation of the line ahead of any ostentatious show of virtuosity. Beethoven's final piano concerto is a transitional work. You can see it as the last of the great classical concertos or the first of the great romantic concertos—a choice of perspective that either has you looking backward to the harpsichord or forward to the grand piano literature as treated by Liszt, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky. In Rubinstein's hands, this is a grand piano concerto, and it gets a recording with nine-foot quality fully represented in the listening room.

It is the most completely satisfying Beethoven performance I know from this remarkable artist, combining the characteristic Rubinstein bravura with a deeper awareness of the Beethoven style than I recall hearing from him at any time in the past. For those brought up in the Schnabel tradition it will probably continue to be criticized as "too romantic," but Schnabel himself remarked that this literature was "so total and universal" that no one performance was adequate to exhaust the content of any of these scores. Rubinstein sees this music in the special light of a wise old virtuoso with lots of heart, and that's the way he plays it. The result is a performance with the technical fireworks of his earlier version, but with far greater depth and more lasting appeal.

Leinsdorf cannot be the star of this show, but he provides an accompaniment that mirrors the soloist in manner and rivals him in effect. Naturally seven years of progress in recording technique does make a difference in the sound. The current stereo engineering conveys a far more convincing likeness of both the pianist and the orchestra than was possible in the earlier album. R.C.M.

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 200,516 S. 160,166

AUG 28 1964

Rubinstein also has teamed up with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony to do the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto for Victor Dynagroove. A notable performance all around.

Leinsdorf makes a major contribution to the catalogue with his Boston Symphony recording of the Mahler Symphony No. 5 and excerpts from Alban Berg's opera "Wozzeck" (Dynagroove). Phyllis Curtin, a superior soprano, is heard in the Berg. An eight-page booklet of notes about Mahler, the man and musician, by Neville Cardus, Manchester Guardian critic, comes with the album.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 333,636 S. 377,788

SEP 13 1964

Classical Records

ALTHOUGH I have, in the past, had some reservations about the pianism of Artur Rubinstein, there can be none concerning his two most recent R. C. A. Victor releases—a de luxe boxed disc containing all 14 Chopin Waltzes, and a new recording of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

These albums seem to me to be much more than just additions to the long list of Rubinstein recordings. He has done the waltzes and the "Emperor" before for R. C. A., but it must not be supposed that the new issues offer updated sound alone.

First of all, though he is 75, Rubinstein's matchless technique shows no signs of deterioration. Indeed, his playing of the opening theme of the finale of the Beethoven is the clearest I have ever heard—and there is no lack of vigor. But Rubinstein has always played with sparkling clarity and vitality.

The significance of these records, for me, is in their eloquent simplicity. Aided by Leinsdorf, whose no-nonsense approach to Beethoven suits me fine, Rubinstein has turned out an "Emperor" of intense power expressed without affectation.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

SPT 5 1964

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

A BILLBOARD PICK

BEETHOVEN: "EMPEROR" CONCERTO

Artur Rubinstein; Boston Symphony Orchestra (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2733 (M); LSC 2733 (S)

Rubinstein, Leinsdorf and Beethoven—an unbeatable combination at the record counter. The "Emperor" has been frequently recorded by the greats of classical music. However, the combination of R & L and the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be enough to sell many more "Emperor" albums.

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W 72 607

OCT 31 1964

RECORDS

Youth and Age

Bernard Shaw's statement about the refined and subtilized art of Verdi's last works – that it was something age gave in exchange for Verdi's early spontaneity and fertility and power – seemed so reasonable and acute that it took me a long time to realize that Verdi operates with the same spontaneity and fertility and power in the refined and subtilized vocal and orchestral writing of the Requiem, Otello and the Te Deum as in the cruder writing of the early works. What made Shaw's contention seem so reasonable was the fact that I knew it to be correct about performers. I had observed how the need of using an aging voice with care had brought a new continence and coherence in Lotte Lehman's phrasing of songs. Flagstad had deployed her beautiful voice in flawlessly shaped phrases right from the start; and so her subtler inflection of phrase in later years could be taken to represent a maturing of her musicianship; but it too served the needs of an aging voice that had to be used with care and skill. And great as Schnabel's post-war recorded performances of Beethoven's concertos were, they revealed losses of some of the spontaneity, grace, continuity of tension and outline of the pre-war performances – age in this instance having brought a lessening of the powers of the musician as well as the pianist. All this has been brought to mind by Artur Rubinstein's performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf, on RCA Victor LM- and LSC-2733. Rubinstein's case is like Verdi's: recently he has, in his seventies, amazed us not only with the tempering of his flamboyant style that has given his performances a new continence, repose, refinement and plastic coherence, but with the continuing technical powers that have produced the fine gradations of his beautiful tone, the clarity and accuracy of his rapid passage-work. All these, which we have heard in his recent performances of Chopin, we hear in the performance of the Beethoven concerto; and whereas his playing in Beethoven's Concerto No. 3 with Toscanini twenty years ago was made unsatisfying by its unsuitable Chopinesque elegance and melodic inflections, his playing this time – now powerful, now delicate and sensitive – adds up to a highly effective statement of the music. The orchestral context that Leinsdorf provides with the Boston Symphony is good.

Victor LM- and LSC-2732 have given me my first hearing of the young violinist Erick Friedman, a pupil and protégé of Heifetz, in a performance of Prokofiev's fine Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf. It is presumably Leinsdorf who sets the tempos for the second and third movements that are slower and less effective than those in other recorded performances, including the one conducted by Prokofiev himself for Oistrakh on Period 739; and in the orchestral context provided for him Friedman plays superbly. On the reverse side the young pianist Lorin Hollander operates in Prokofiev's Concerto No. 5 with the spectacular brilliance this uninteresting work calls for.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 219,257 SUN. 312,266

SEP 27 1964

Artur Rubinstein has made another recording of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 5 in E Flat Major, Op. 73", this time with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf (RCA LSC 2733, $5.98).

THE PERFORMANCE fails to convey the majesty of the score, and there are many other interpretations superior to this, including those by Cliburn, Curzon and Serkin to mention only a few. Despite the claims of superior reproduction on the record jacket, the sound quality is thin and brittle for the soloist, constricted and dull for the orchestra.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES
W. 98 864

DEC 11 1964

A shade less effective than Rubinstein's Chopin is his Beethoven, represented this month in a new recording of the Concerto No. 5 in E flat, Op. 73 ("Emperor") with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (RCA Victor LSC/LM 2733). Better than his 1957 version with Krips and the Symphony of the Air, the present disc still seems deficient in the craggy grandeur that Schnabel, for one, finds in the work. Beside Schnabel's thin-sounding but matchless interpretation, Rubinstein sounds somewhat detached. The disc stands up well, however, against the best of its stereo competition — Backhaus, Fleisher, Kempff and Serkin — and will probably be accepted by all but the diehard Schnabelians for the beautiful, mellow reading that it is. Stereo sound and orchestral work: excellent.

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,654

JAN 3 1965

Of a more noble and majestic character is the reading of Beethoven's Concerto No. 5 in G major, "The Emperor," by the venerable Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on an RCA Red Seal Dynagroove recording (LSC 2733).

This is a view of Beethoven's most monumental keyboard concerto which emphasizes its sense of grandeur and proportion, and at the same time is able to capture its quality of intimacy.

The opening four bars hint at the characteristics of Rubenstein's approach throughout the concerto: expansive, quiet and songful, yet firm of meter and crystalline in the balance of each of the notes in the repeated chords.

Throughout the performance, Leinsdorf is a sensitive accompanist, the tone color of the orchestra one of strength but of a subtly controlled transparency of line, the phrasing rhythmically precise and vigorous, yet always immediate in its acquiescence to the slightest improvisatory element in Rubinstein's declamation. The recorded sound is brilliant and clear.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

NOV 29 1964

"Emperor"

Mr. Rubinstein had recorded Beethoven's Concerto No. 5 in E flat "Emperor" for Victor in stereo several years ago, and now comes a new version, this time with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (LM 2733; stereo LSC 2733).

Again, there is nothing very new about this performance as far as the piano part is concerned. Mr. Leinsdorf gives beautiful backing and the recording of the Boston Symphony makes the most of a rich yet silky string sound that is not always so apparent in the flesh. Mr. Krips led the now defunct Symphony of the Air in the previous recording and hearing it makes one lament its demise, for the orchestra did have personality and superior solo players.

The best recording of the "Emperor" for this reviewer is still the Schnabel one made in 1947 with the Philharmonia Orchestra of London under Alceo Galliera. The sound on the Angel disk (COLH 5), which is part of its Great Recordings of the Century series, is understandably primitive but the amount of delicacy heard—the bravura and fire come through well — is surprising. And the way Schnabel shaded his playing provided just the right degree of sensuous beauty to the rock-like music.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

OCT 1964

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 5, in E flat, Op. 73 ("Emperor")

Artur Rubinstein, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2733. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2733. SD. $5.98.

Artur Rubinstein's stereo version of this work (with Josef Krips conducting) was one of the first in the two-channel medium. One is startled to think that it should be regarded as ready for replacement, but it was released way back in 1957, and Rubinstein at seventy-five is obviously a more mature and experienced artist than Rubinstein at sixty-eight. We've got to give these kids a chance to mature.

As a matter of fact this is a more mature performance, at least if you associate maturity with a spaciousness and breadth of phrase that put the expressive manipulation of the line ahead of any ostentatious show of virtuosity. Beethoven's final piano concerto is a transitional work. You can see it as the last of the great classical concertos or the first of the great romantic concertos—a choice of perspective that either has you looking backward to the harpsichord or forward to the grand piano literature as treated by Liszt, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky. In Rubinstein's hands, this is a grand piano concerto, and it gets a recording with nine-foot quality fully represented in the listening room.

It is the most completely satisfying Beethoven performance I know from this remarkable artist, combining the characteristic Rubinstein bravura with a deeper awareness of the Beethoven style than I recall hearing from him at any time in the past. For those brought up in the Schnabel tradition it will probably continue to be criticized as "too romantic," but Schnabel himself remarked that this literature was "so total and universal" that no one performance was adequate to exhaust the content of any of these scores. Rubinstein sees this music in the special light of a wise old virtuoso with lots of heart, and that's the way he plays it. The result is a performance with the technical fireworks of his earlier version, but with far greater depth and more lasting appeal.

Leinsdorf cannot be the star of this show, but he provides an accompaniment that mirrors the soloist in manner and rivals him in effect. Naturally seven years of progress in recording technique does make a difference in the sound. The current stereo engineering conveys a far more convincing likeness of both the pianist and the orchestra than was possible in the earlier album. R.C.M.

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 200,516 S. 160,166

AUG 28 1964

Rubinstein also has teamed up with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony to do the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto for Victor Dynagroove. A notable performance all around.

Leinsdorf makes a major contribution to the catalogue with his Boston Symphony recording of the Mahler Symphony No. 5 and excerpts from Alban Berg's opera "Wozzeck" (Dynagroove). Phyllis Curtin, a superior soprano, is heard in the Berg. An eight-page booklet of notes about Mahler, the man and musician, by Neville Cardus, Manchester Guardian critic, comes with the album.

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 333,636 S. 377,788

SEP 13 1964

Classical Records

ALTHOUGH I have, in the past, had some reservations about the pianism of Artur Rubinstein, there can be none concerning his two most recent R. C. A. Victor releases—a de luxe boxed disc containing all 14 Chopin Waltzes, and a new recording of Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

These albums seem to me to be much more than just additions to the long list of Rubinstein recordings. He has done the waltzes and the "Emperor" before for R. C. A., but it must not be supposed that the new issues offer updated sound alone.

First of all, though he is 75, Rubinstein's matchless technique shows no signs of deterioration. Indeed, his playing of the opening theme of the finale of the Beethoven is the clearest I have ever heard—and there is no lack of vigor. But Rubinstein has always played with sparkling clarity and vitality.

The significance of these records, for me, is in their eloquent simplicity. Aided by Leinsdorf, whose no-nonsense approach to Beethoven suits me fine, Rubinstein has turned out an "Emperor" of intense power expressed without affectation.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

SPT 5 1964

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BEETHOVEN: "EMPEROR" CONCERTO

Artur Rubinstein; Boston Symphony Orchestra (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2733 (M); LSC 2733 (S)

Rubinstein, Leinsdorf and Beethoven—an unbeatable combination at the record counter. The "Emperor" has been frequently recorded by the greats of classical music. However, the combination of R & L and the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be enough to sell many more "Emperor" albums.

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W 72,607

OCT 31 1964

RECORDS

Youth and Age

Bernard Shaw's statement about the refined and subtilized art of Verdi's last works – that it was something age gave in exchange for Verdi's early spontaneity and fertility and power – seemed so reasonable and acute that it took me a long time to realize that Verdi operates with the same spontaneity and fertility and power in the refined and subtilized vocal and orchestral writing of the Requiem, Otello and the Te Deum as in the cruder writing of the early works. What made Shaw's contention seem so reasonable was the fact that I knew it to be correct about performers. I had observed how the need of using an aging voice with care had brought a new continence and coherence in Lotte Lehman's phrasing of songs. Flagstad had deployed her beautiful voice in flawlessly shaped phrases right from the start; and so her subtler inflection of phrase in later years could be taken to represent a maturing of her musicianship; but it too served the needs of an aging voice that had to be used with care and skill. And great as Schnabel's post-war recorded performances of Beethoven's concertos were, they revealed losses of some of the spontaneity, grace, continuity of tension and outline of the pre-war performances – age in this instance having brought a lessening of the powers of the musician as well as the pianist. All this has been brought to mind by Artur Rubinstein's performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 (Emperor) with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf, on RCA Victor LM- and LSC-2733. Rubinstein's case is like Verdi's: recently he has, in his seventies, amazed us not only with the tempering of his flamboyant style that has given his performances a new continence, repose, refinement and plastic coherence, but with the continuing technical powers that have produced the fine gradations of his beautiful tone, the clarity and accuracy of his rapid passage-work. All these, which we have heard in his recent performances of Chopin, we hear in the performance of the Beethoven concerto; and whereas his playing in Beethoven's Concerto No. 3 with Toscanini twenty years ago was made unsatisfying by its unsuitable Chopinesque elegance and melodic inflections, his playing this time – now powerful, now delicate and sensitive – adds up to a highly effective statement of the music. The orchestral context that Leinsdorf provides with the Boston Symphony is good.

Victor LM- and LSC-2732 have given me my first hearing of the young violinist Erick Friedman, a pupil and protégé of Heifetz, in a performance of Prokofiev's fine Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf. It is presumably Leinsdorf who sets the tempos for the second and third movements that are slower and less effective than those in other recorded performances, including the one conducted by Prokofiev himself for Oistrakh on Period 739; and in the orchestral context provided for him Friedman plays superbly. On the reverse side the young pianist Lorin Hollander operates in Prokofiev's Concerto No. 5 with the spectacular brilliance this uninteresting work calls for.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 219,257 SUN. 312,266

SEP 27 1964

Artur Rubinstein has made another recording of Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 5 in E Flat Major, Op. 73", this time with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf (RCA LSC 2733, $5.98).

THE PERFORMANCE fails to convey the majesty of the score, and there are many other interpretations superior to this, including those by Cliburn, Curzon and Serkin to mention only a few. Despite the claims of superior reproduction on the record jacket, the sound quality is thin and brittle for the soloist, constricted and dull for the orchestra.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES
W. 98,864

DEC 11 1964

A shade less effective than Rubinstein's Chopin is his Beethoven, represented this month in a new recording of the Concerto No. 5 in E flat, Op. 73 ("Emperor") with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (RCA Victor LSC/LM 2733). Better than his 1957 version with Krips and the Symphony of the Air, the present disc still seems deficient in the craggy grandeur that Schnabel, for one, finds in the work. Beside Schnabel's thin-sounding but matchless interpretation, Rubinstein sounds somewhat detached. The disc stands up well, however, against the best of its stereo competition — Backhaus, Fleisher, Kempff and Serkin — and will probably be accepted by all but the diehard Schnabelians for the beautiful, mellow reading that it is. Stereo sound and orchestral work: excellent.

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 188,356 SUN. 325,664

JAN 3 1965

Of a more noble and majestic character is the reading of Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G major, "The Emperor," by the venerable Artur Rubinstein, accompanied by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on an RCA Red Seal Dynagroove recording (LSC 2733).

This is a view of Beethoven's most monumental keyboard concerto which emphasizes its sense of grandeur and proportion, and at the same time is able to capture its quality of intimacy.

The opening four bars hint at the characteristics of Rubenstein's approach throughout the concerto: expansive, quiet and songful, yet firm of meter and crystalline in the balance of each of the notes in the repeated chords.

Throughout the performance, Leinsdorf is a sensitive accompanist, the tone color of the orchestra one of strength but of a subtly controlled transparency of line, the phrasing rhythmically precise and vigorous, yet always immediate in its acquiescence to the slightest improvisatory element in Rubinstein's declamation. The recorded sound is brilliant and clear.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 603,574 SUN. 1,283,785

NOV 29 1964

"Emperor"

Mr. Rubinstein had recorded Beethoven's Concerto No. 5 in E flat "Emperor" for Victor in stereo several years ago, and now comes a new version, this time with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (LM 2733; stereo LSC 2733).

Again, there is nothing very new about this performance as far as the piano part is concerned. Mr. Leinsdorf gives beautiful backing and the recording of the Boston Symphony makes the most of a rich yet silky string sound that is not always so apparent in the flesh. Mr. Krips led the now defunct Symphony of the Air in the previous recording and hearing it makes one lament its demise, for the orchestra did have personality and superior solo players.

The best recording of the "Emperor" for this reviewer is still the Schnabel one made in 1947 with the Philharmonia Orchestra of London under Alceo Galliera. The sound on the Angel disk (COLH 5), which is part of its Great Recordings of the Century series, is understandably primitive but the amount of delicacy heard—the bravura and fire come through well — is surprising. And the way Schnabel shaded his playing provided just the right degree of sensuous beauty to the rock-like music.

1964 Burrelle's

§ ■ BEETI
5, in E-flat, Rubinstein (
Iestra F
LSC 273

N: Piano Concerto No.
3 ("Emperor"). Artur
Boston Symphony Orchestra
orf cond. RCA VICTOR
I 2733, $4.98.

Rubinstein
y dry

Artur Rub of the Beeth to two dozen able versions tween piano with conduct to what he with Josef n the finale in the slow r first moveme fication with Beethoven w music's antic glitter will
I find the and Kempff listening.
mended for t somewhat n
RCA's rec the orchestr sonics seem second stereo recording mperor" Concerto brings umber of currently avail-for improved balance bechestra, his reading here ch Leinsdorf adds little plished some years ago

There is splendid brio refined lyrical sensitivity ents, but the monumental ier lacks a genuine identi-assically hewn heroics that nto the score. For all the n of Liszt, mere Liszt-like t by here. For that reason, s by Fleisher, Backhaus,
l up best under repeated Serkin-Bernstein recom-who want their "Emperor" ramatic.
l sound is full and solid in epartment, but the piano trifle dry and close-miked.

D. H.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N Y
W 339 455

SEP 26 1964 Burrelle's

Beethoven: Concerto in E flat (Op. 73). Artur Rubinstein, piano, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM 2733, $4.98; stereo LSC 2733, $5.98.

